

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

RULES OF PRACTICE IN THE SUPREME COURT.

RULE 1. Counsel for the plaintiff shall number the pages of the petition in error, and the transcript, before filing the same; and the clerk shall prepare for the court a copy of the same, numbering the pages as in the original.

RULE 2. Counsel shall file a written or printed brief in each case for each justice before commencing argument thereon; and the brief must refer specifically to the page of the transcript which counsel desires to have examined.

RULE 3. No case shall be docketed, nor process issued thereon, except where the state is appellant, until the plaintiff in error or appellant shall pay the clerk five dollars advance fees; nor shall any civil case be docketed until security for costs shall be given, approved by the clerk of the supreme court, or of the district court of the county from which the cause is brought, conditioned for the payment of all costs for which the plaintiff in error may be liable.

Execution on a judgment for costs having been returned unsatisfied, the clerk may give said securities, or their executors or administrators, notice of such return, and that, unless said costs are paid within 10 days after receipt of said notice, a motion will be made for a judgment against them; and if good cause shall not be shown why the same ought not to be done, judgment may be entered against said securities, or their executors or administrators, for the amount remaining unpaid, for which said plaintiff in error may be liable, and execution may be issued on such judgment as in other cases.

RULE 4. If the plaintiff in error fail to file the brief required of him by Rule No. 2, before the case is reached for hearing, the judgment below may be affirmed as of course.

RULE 5. On being admitted to practice in this court, each attorney who has not heretofore been admitted to the supreme court of the state of Kansas shall pay three dollars to the clerk, who shall furnish such attorney a certificate of admission, and a printed copy of the rules.

RULE 6. Any case may be submitted on behalf of either or both parties, at any time, whatever may be its place on the docket.

RULE 7. Causes will be taken up for decision in their order upon the docket, except as otherwise provided by law; but a cause may be taken out of its order, and assigned for argument or decision, for special reasons set forth in a motion filed.

RULE 8. In all cases disposed of in which the supreme court has original jurisdiction, a full record shall be made. In all other cases, no full record shall be made, except at the request and costs of the party desiring the same to be done.

RULE 9. The papers in all cases disposed of shall be filed and labeled in packages, on which shall be indorsed numbers corresponding with numbers on the margin of the journal where the final orders, respectively, are made.

RULE 10. No record or paper filed shall be taken from the custody of the clerk, unless by order of the court, or by written consent of the attorneys of record for all the parties.

RULE 11. Counsel for plaintiff in error shall furnish a copy of his brief to counsel for defendant in error, in each case, at least 15 days before the time set for the argument thereof; and the counsel for defendant in error shall furnish a copy of his brief to the counsel for plaintiff in error at least five days before the time set for the argument thereof. A compliance with this rule is essential to entitle a party to be heard in oral argument; and in case of a failure to comply, the court may in addition continue the case, or affirm or reverse the judgment.<sup>1</sup>

RULE 12. One hour only, except with the consent of the court, shall be consumed in the oral argument of a case, by counsel for either party.

RULE 13. A motion for an order to revive an action or complete a transcript, except where counsel for both parties consent to the order, shall be filed, setting forth the grounds, and notice thereof given to opposing counsel, at least one day before being heard by the court.

SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF KANSAS. •

BOARD OF EDUCATION OF CITY OF ATCHISON v. WILLIAM SCOVILLE and others.

January Term, 1874.

1. Interpleader: Action. An action in the nature of a bill of interpleader may be maintained under our system of practice whenever a proper case is made therefor, and whenever the plaintiff has no adequate remedy in the nature of an action at law.
2. Remedies: Equity: Election of. There is no rule that requires a party to resort to one equitable remedy in preference to some other equitable remedy, where both remedies are equally applicable to the facts constituting the cause of action or defense, and where both are equally available to the parties.
3. Interpleader: Several Claimants. The owner of a building owes the contractor for erecting the same a certain sum of money, (the amount thereof not being disputed.) Various other persons claim to have liens upon the fund which the owner of said building owes to the contractor, as follows: Certain persons claim as subcontractors, and that they have mechanics' liens on said building to secure their respective claims; others claim that they are creditors of the contractor, and have garnishment liens on said fund by virtue of attachment proceedings in a justice's court; others claim that they are judgment creditors of the contractor, and have garnishment liens on said fund by virtue of proceedings in aid of execution before a judge pro tem. of the district court. Each of these various persons claims that his own claim is prior and paramount to that of any other person; and in the aggregate these claims amount to vastly more than the amount which the owner of the building owes to the contractor, and the owner of the building cannot well pay any of said claims without great hazard to himself, and several of said claimants are proceeding, and about to proceed, against the owner of the building, to collect in separate actions their respective claims. Held, in such case, that the owner of the building has a cause of action for interpleader against the various claimants of said fund.

4. ———: Concurrent Remedies. The remedy given by section 43 of the Civil Code does not supersede the action of interpleader; but in cases where such remedy might be substituted for the action of interpleader the two remedies are concurrent.
5. Execution: Proceedings in Aid of: Not a Judgment. An order of a judge pro tem. of the district court in a proceeding in aid of execution under section 490 of the Civil Code, that a garnishee shall pay over to the judgment creditor certain money which the garnishee owes to the judgment debtor, is not a final determination of the liability of said garnishee to pay said money to said judgment creditor.<sup>1</sup>
6. Garnishment: Order not Final. An order of a justice of the peace in an attachment proceeding pending before such justice under section 42 of the justices' act, that a garnishee shall pay into court certain money which the garnishee owes to the defendant in the action, is not a final determination of the right of the plaintiff in the action to said money. [Fitch v. Manhattan Fire Ins. Co., 23 Kan. 369.]

Error from Atchison district court.

The Board of Education of the City of Atchison, brought suit against William Scoville, H. T. Smith, and William C. Smith, as partners, M. M. Trimmer and John F. Thompson, as partners, D. P. Blish and John B. Silliman, as partners, A. B. Decker, and Sarah A. Baker, and also against Clark & Co., and eight others as defendants. The petition recited that there was in plaintiff's possession the sum of $700.91, due to Clark & Co. or their creditors, being a balance due for building a certain school-house; that there was also due the further sum of $92.47½ for extra work done thereon, which the plaintiff believed was due to Clark & Co. or their creditors, but of which defendants Trimmer & Thompson (who are creditors) claimed $80.47½; that at November term, 1872, of said district court the defendants Scoville & Smith obtained a judgment by confession against Clark & Co. for $748.58, and afterwards, on proceedings in aid of execution, they obtained an order that plaintiff pay over to them the sum of $527.22 within thirty days; that before said time had expired Trimmer & Thompson brought an action in the district court against the plaintiff for $428 of said money, claiming that they were entitled to priority of payment, and they also brought an action before a justice for $80.47½ for extra work, and both of said actions were pending and undetermined; that Blish & Silliman and A. B. Decker had also obtained judgments against Clark & Co. before a justice, and on proceedings in garnishment had obtained orders for the plaintiff to pay, in the former case $124, and in the latter case $45.16; that S. A. Baker had obtained judgment against Clark & Co. before a justice for $45.75 and costs, and threatened to proceed against plaintiff as garnishee, and that all the other defendants were creditors of Clark & Co., as subcontractors on said work, and they were claiming mechanics' liens for labor or materials, and were all threatening proceedings against the plaintiff for payment out of said fund; that plaintiff had insisted in each of said proceedings that it ought not to be held to pay any of said claimants until all parties should be brought into court, so that their respective rights thereto might be adjudicated together; that plaintiff was not indebted to any of said defendants except as growing out of said contract with Clark & Co., for building said school-house; that plaintiff had not colluded with any of the defendants; and praying that plaintiff be allowed to bring the amount due into court, that all the parties be required to interplead together, and that plaintiff might be discharged from further liability on payment into court of the amount due for the benefit of such of the parties as should appear to the court to be entitled thereto, and that in the mean time the defendants be enjoined and restrained from further proceeding against plaintiff. The petition also showed that the claims of the defendants joined as creditors of Clark & Co. aggregated $1,726.76. This petition was verified by affidavit. To this petition the defendants demurred, and the court, at *20 the March term, 1873, sustained the demurrers, and rendered judgment in favor of the defendants for costs.

D. Martin, for plaintiff in error.

1. Does the remedy of interpleader exist in this state? The remedy of interpleader in cases of this nature is familiar in equity practice. 2 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 806, 807, et seq.; Van H. Eq. Dr. 204, 205, et seq.; Adams Eq.; Story, Eq. Pl. § 291 et seq. By the Code, the forms of actions only are abolished, but the same redress may be had as before the adoption of the Code. Gen. St. 631, § 10; Nash, Pl. & Pr. 3; Kimball v. Connor, 3 Kan. *430; Fitzpatrick v. Gebhart, 7 Kan. *42. But if no other provision of the Code sanctions an interpleader by a plaintiff, such a remedy is fully authorized in this case by section 727 of the Code. In states having Codes like ours it has been held in numerous cases that the remedy of interpleader still exists, notwithstanding the remedy allowed to defendants to bring in new parties. Chamberlain v. O'Connor, 8 How. Pr. 45, 46; Beck v. Stephani, 9 How. Pr. 193, 196, 197; Pepoon v. White, 2 Code R. 109; Sherman v. Partridge, 11 How. Pr. 158, 159; Patterson v. Perry, 14 How. Pr. 507.

Is this a proper case for interpleader? The petition shows that the plaintiff has in its possession a certain sum of money belonging to Clark & Co., the contractors, or to their creditors, the other defendants, who were subcontractors and material-men; that plaintiff is not indebted to any of said defendants except on said transaction for building a school-house; that each of the defendants has either actually commenced proceedings, or threatened such, against the plaintiff, to compel payment in full, without any regard to the rights of the claimants, and although plaintiff can only pay each of them in full with great loss to itself, being compelled to pay a great deal more than it owes; that plaintiff is a disinterested party as between the different creditors of and claimants under Clark & Co.; that no judgment has yet been obtained against plaintiff; that plaintiff has not colluded with any of the defendants; that it does not know *21 which of the defendants is *legally entitled to said money, and therefore cannot safely pay it to any one of them, unless they are all made parties to the action, offering to bring the money into court to be paid as shall be decreed by the court after hearing all the claimants as to their respective rights thereto. The petition contained all the averments that are material in such a case. As to the propriety of the remedy in this case we refer to 2 Van Santv. Pl. 349, 351; 1 Wait, Pr. 165 et seq.; Richards v. Salter, 6 Johns. Ch. 445.

In the garnishee proceedings, the plaintiff was not a defendant, and therefore was not entitled to relief under section 43 of the Code. It was not a party, and could neither prosecute nor defend. All that it could do was to answer under oath all questions put to its officers, and further it could not go. It was only a witness. It answered because under the law it was bound to do so. All reference to the plaintiff having suffered any default, or being guilty of any laches, is out of place and without foundation. Has the plaintiff's right to compel the defendants to interplead been barred or concluded by any adjudication? The court below held that the proceedings in aid of execution in the case of Scoville & Smith v. Clark & Co. were an adjudication which bound the plaintiff herein; that while the order was not a judgment, it was in the nature of a judgment; and that it was too late to interplead after that order was made. The court below held that the orders made by the justice in the proceedings in garnishment were not in the nature of judgments, and therefore that they constituted no bar or objection to an interpleader. We contend that the effect and force of each of these orders is the same, and that none of them are judgments against the plaintiffs, nor "in the nature of judgments." And it has frequently been decided that the order made in the proceedings in aid of execution is not a judgment, and that the creditor of the judgment-debtor is not concluded by the proceedings. Union Bank of Rochester v. Union Bank of Sandusky, 6 Ohio St. 254; Edgerton v. Hanna, 11 Ohio St. 823; Welch v. Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co., Id. 569. And this court has held that no execution can issue on such order. Arthur v. Hale, *22 6 Kan. *161. Neither is *the plaintiff concluded by the proceedings in garnishment. Rice v. Whitney, 12 Ohio St. 358. The fact that Trimmer & Thompson commenced suit before this action was brought is no valid objection to this case, but is a circumstance in its favor. It shows that injury to the plaintiff was imminent, and not merely prospective. It is not usual to commence a case of interpleader until the plaintiff is actually in litigation, although it may be proper to do so. In such case, in this state, the party seeking relief from the conflicting claims may elect to bring an action like this, or proceed under section 43 of the Code. The remedies are concurrent, and he may have his election. 1 Wait, Pr. 166, 174. In this case the former was the only adequate remedy, as an injunction is part of the remedy of interpleader, and an injunction was necessary in this case to protect plaintiff from vexatious litigation.

W. R. Smith, Everest & Greenawalt, Horton & Waggener, Thos. Metcalfe, and J. L. Berry, for defendants.

We contend that the court below committed no error in sustaining said demurrers, or in refusing to grant an injunction, as prayed for by plaintiff. Admitting that, under the Civil Code of this state, a bill of interpleader would lie in certain cases, we contend that the case at bar, as shown by plaintiff's petition, is deficient in every essential legal element to authorize or constitute such an action. The true origin of jurisdiction of a bill of this nature is that there is no remedy at law at all or the legal remedy is inadequate in the given case. And the bill always supposes that the plaintiff is a mere holder of a stake or fund, which is equally contested by the other party, and that the respective claims against him are all of the same nature or character; and if the bill shows that any one defendant has a legal right paramount to that of any other, it is demurrable, and is especially so where there is no privity (between the parties defendant and plaintiff) of contract or duty. For the true doctrine, supported by *23 authority, is that in cases of adverse independent title, the *party holding the fund must defend himself as well as he can at law, for otherwise it would be asking a court to exercise equity jurisdiction upon a controversy between different parties where there is no privity of contract between them and the plaintiff who calls for the interpleader; and where the claimants assert their rights under adverse titles, and not in privity, and where their claims are of different natures, the bill is not maintainable. And the bill would be equally defective if it did not admit and show a title in each of the claimants; for if it in anywise appears from the bill itself that any one of the defendants is clearly entitled to the debt, or any portion thereof, in exclusion of the other, then it is demurrable, and no such bill should be filed except where the plaintiff cannot otherwise be protected from unjust litigation, and then it should be filed immediately after or before the commencement of proceedings against the plaintiff, and should not be delayed until any of the claimants have obtained any legal right as against the plaintiff.

The petition shows that the plaintiffs made a contract with Clark

& Co. for the erection of a school-house; that they never complied with the terms of said contract, and that the plaintiff completed the building itself; that the claim of defendants Trimmer & Thompson is based entirely upon an independent cause of action against the plaintiff to the amount of $80.47, and not by reason of any funds in plaintiff's hands which any of the other defendants make any claim upon. The petition shows that certain defendants are seeking to enforce their claims against the plaintiff under the mechanics' lien law; that the defendants Scoville & Smith have obtained judgment on their claim against Clark & Co., and, by proceedings in aid of execution, obtained an order of said court against plaintiff before the filing of plaintiff's petition herein; and that said judgment and order now remain of full force. These defendants certainly show a legal right to the payment of a certain sum paramount to that of any other of the defendants; and of this the plaintiff had full knowledge long before the commencement of the action at bar. The *petition *24 shows that defendants Trimmer & Thompson have commenced an action in the court below against plaintiff, as defendant therein, claiming the sum of $428 on account of an agreement with plaintiff and defendants Clark & Co., by which Trimmer & Thompson were to receive payment of their sum directly from plaintiff, and that said action was commenced before the petition was filed in this action, and is yet undetermined, and that plaintiff had full knowledge thereof before the commencement of this action. The petition shows that defendants Blish & Silliman, before the commencement of this action, had obtained judgment against Clark & Co. for the amount of their claim, which certainly shows that as to these defendants, they could make no claim against plaintiff on this specific fund. The petition shows that defendant A. B. Decker obtained judgment against Clark & Co. for the amount of his claim, and had instituted proceedings in garnishment, and obtained an order for the payment of his claim against plaintiff before the commencement of this action. The petition also shows that defendant Sarah A. Baker obtained a judgment against Clark & Co. for the amount of her claim, of which plaintiff had full knowledge before commencing this action herein. Now, can it be said by this court that the respective claims of the defendants are of the same nature or character, and that each of the defendants claims a right to the identical fund of $700.91? Can it be said that there is a privity, between all the defendants and the plaintiff, of contract or duty in regard to this special fund? Does not the petition show that most of the defendants found their claims upon independent titles and rights? and does not the petition admit that defendants Scoville & Smith have a legal claim upon this fund to the amount of $527.22, paramount to that of any of the other defendants?

If the right to file a bill of interpleader as an independent action is recognized under the Civil Code, then the same rules must exist as were formerly recognized, and which obtained in chancery in such cases. Washington Life Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 28 How. Pr. 435. It would *seem clear that the plaintiff had a perfect and speedy remedy under the provisions of the Civil Code, and that it was not necessary for it to have resorted to any of the ancient land-marks, or to have navigated its legal craft in the ancient and muddled waters of English equity jurisprudence. It is sufficient for this court to see that the questions involved in this action are fully contemplated and met by our own Civil Code; for, in the absence of a statute, a bill of interpleader does not ordinarily lie as an independent action except when there is a privity of some sort between all the parties, and where the claim by all is of the same nature and character. Lincoln v. Ruthland & B. R. Co., 24 Vt. 639. The plaintiff, after the commencement of the action of Trimmer & Thompson against it, had a perfect remedy under the provisions of the Civil Code, upon making affidavit, and obtaining an order upon all parties to appear and maintain or relinquish their claims against it. Code, § 43. This is a substitution for the ancient bill of interpleader, and provides a summary mode of relief in the same cases in which a bill of interpleader was allowed in chancery. This is undoubtedly the remedy that the plaintiff should have resorted to, (Vosburgh v. Huntington, 15 Abb. Pr. 254; Wilson v. Duncan, 11 Abb. Pr. 3; Sherman v. Partridge, 1 Abb. Pr. 260; Mechanics' B. Ass'n v. Kiersted, 4 Duer, 640;) and the plaintiff, under any circumstances, must not by its own act, as in the case at bar, have placed itself in a position to be sued, and must have been ignorant of the rights of the defendants, (U. S. v. Vietor, 16 Abb. Pr. 153; Bell v. Hunt, 3 Barb. Ch. 391.) The doctrine of interpleader has certainly no application under the mechanic's lien law, which doctrine is applicable to all the defendants in this action, who are proceeding to enforce their claims against the owner of the school building. Chamberlain v. O'Connor, 8 How. Pr. 45; Dry-dock M. E. Church v. Carr, 2 Barb. 60. Certainly the bill of interpleader will not lie in favor of the plaintiff as against such of the defendants as had obtained rights, by service of a notice in garnishment or attachment upon it against the property of Clark & Co., (U. S. Trust Co. v. Wiley, 41 Barb. 477;) and, there being a defect of parties in this action, the demurrer was properly sustained.

*26 *VALENTINE, J. That an action in the nature of a bill of interpleader may be maintained under our system of practice, whenever a proper case is made therefor, and whenever the plaintiff has no other adequate remedy, we have no doubt. And we think the action may be maintained whenever the plaintiff has no adequate remedy in the nature of an action at law. The first and main question, then, for our consideration is whether a proper case for interpleader has been made out in this particular case. Involved, however, in this main question are several minor questions which we shall consider as we proceed. The court below decided, upon various demurrers to the petition, that the petition did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action as against any of the defendants; and this petition in error is now instituted for the purpose of having that decision reversed. Now, if the petition in the court below did state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in favor of the plaintiff, and against any two or more of the defendants, the decision of the court below must be reversed as between the plaintiff and those two or more defendants.

The action of interpleader is undoubtedly an equitable remedy, and for that reason principally it cannot be maintained in any case where the party seeking it has another plain and adequate remedy in the nature of an action at law. Indeed, as a rule, the action of interpleader cannot be maintained where another plain and adequate remedy has been given by statute; for, as a rule, the remedy given by statute is considered as a legal remedy, in contradistinction to an equitable remedy. But the remedy given by statute may sometimes be an equitable remedy, and, when it is, then it does not supersede some other previously existing equitable remedy unless it has been expressly so enacted, but the second remedy is merely cumulative, and the two remedies are in effect concurrent. There never has been any rule in equity that we are aware of requiring a party to *27 *resort to one equitable remedy in preference to some other equitable remedy where the two remedies are equally applicable to the facts constituting the cause of action or defense, and where both are equally available to the parties; and we think no such rule has ever existed.

In the present case the plaintiff is a school-district. It employed the defendants Clark & Co. to build a school-house. Clark & Co., with the assistance of several subcontractors, built the school-house. The school-house now owes Clark & Co., the contractors, $793.38½. This amount does not seem to be disputed. Clark & Co. claim the whole of it. Other defendants claim the same, or portions thereof, by virtue of being subcontractors who furnished labor and materials for the school-house, and by virtue of having mechanics' liens thereon. Other defendants claim said fund, or portions thereof, by virtue of being creditors of the contractor, and by virtue of garnishment liens obtained in attachment proceedings against him in a justice's court. And still another defendant claims the larger portion of said fund by virtue of a garnishment lien obtained in the district court before a judge pro tem., in a proceeding in aid of execution. Clark & Co. (the contractors) claim directly from the school-district. All the other defendants claim under and through Clark & Co., except as to a portion of Trimmer & Thompson's claim, of which we shall speak hereafter; but each defendant claims that his right to said fund is paramount to that of any other defendant. The amount which the defendants claim in the aggregate is vastly more than the plaintiff owes to Clark & Co., and therefore the plaintiff could not well pay the claim of any one of the defendants without great hazard to itself. For the purposes of this case, we shall assume that mechanics' liens may be taken upon school-houses, and such other public buildings; also, for the purposes of this case, but without expressing any opinion thereon, we shall assume that the action of interpleader does not lie in favor of the owner of a building to compel the holders of mechanics' liens thereon (contractors and subcontractors) to interplead with each other, and with *the contractor, and thereby have determined the extent and priority of their respective liens. And yet there may be cases where the action ought to lie.

Under our statutes a promissory note may be given for the amount covered by the mechanic's lien. Laws 1871, p. 253, § 1; Laws 1872, p. 294, § 1. And in such a case it is not necessary for the holder of the note to commence an action to enforce the lien until after the note becomes due, (Laws 1872, p. 297, § 4,) although the note may not become due for ten or twenty or any other number of years. Now, suppose that there are twenty or more subcontractors holding notes for various sums, due at various times, and the aggregate amount of these notes is vastly more than the owner of the building owes the contractor, or is liable for to the contractor and subcontractors taken together; and suppose the contractor disputes all these notes, and that each subcontractor claims that his own note is valid, unpaid, and secured by a lien upon the building, but disputes the notes and supposed liens of all the others. Suppose, also, that it is claimed that some of the notes were not given for labor or material furnished for the building; that some of them were obtained fraudulently; that some of them are paid; that some of the supposed liens were obtained irregularly or fraudulently; that some of the holders of the notes are not the real owners of the same, etc.; and suppose the holder of each note intends to contest the lien of every other holder of a note. Must the owner of a building keep his money five, ten, fifteen, or twenty years, until some one is ready to sue him, although his debt to the contractor is all the time due and drawing interest, which interest he will eventually have to pay? The action or defense given by the mechanic's lien law, and by section 43 of the Civil Code, is hardly an adequate remedy in such a case.

For the purposes of this case, and for that only, we shall also assume the following, to-wit: (1) A party who has a debt coming to him secured by a mechanic's lien may abandon or waive the mechanic's lien, commence an ordinary action for the debt, sue out an attachment, and garnish any debtor of his debtor. (2) A garnishment lien may be ob*tained upon a fund already subject to a mechanic's lien held by some other person, but of course the mechanic's lien will remain prior in right to the garnishment lien. (3) When a party has two claims, one of which is secured by a mechanic's lien and the other is not, he may sue out an attachment and garnish a fund subject to said mechanic's lien, and to various other mechanics' liens held by other parties, to secure one or both of his said claims; but, in such a case, he of course waives his mechanic's lien unless he commences a regular action to foreclose the same. We shall also, for the purposes of this case, assume (and this is probably a correct assumption) that a garnishee cannot require an attaching creditor and the debtor (his creditor) to interplead with each other as to who shall receive the amount due from the garnishee to the debtor; and yet, if there were other persons claiming to hold prior liens on the fund due from the garnishee to the debtor in attachment, the only adequate remedy for the garnishee to protect himself from these conflicting claims would be an action of interpleader. The garnishment lien attaches when the garnishee is served with notice, (Gen. St. 667, § 206; Id. 787, § 51,) and continues until the attachment is dissolved or the plaintiff's claim is satisfied; and there is no provision for the determination of the extent, force, validity, or priority of this kind of lien in an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien. Laws 1871, p. 255, § 5. Indeed, the garnishee in such a case would have no adequate remedy except by the action of interpleader; and hence, in such a case, the action would lie.

It is claimed, however, that section 43 of the Civil Code furnishes an adequate remedy. We do not think so. Under that action the holder of the fund is not entitled to any remedy until he is sued, and the commencement of the suit may be postponed almost indefinitely. If the holder of the fund has no remedy except the one given to him by section 43 of the Civil Code, he may be compelled, for an almost indefinite period of time, to hold said fund always ready to pay the same to the person entitled thereto, and to pay it at any

*30 *time when called upon, with accumulated interest, although the holding of the same may be no benefit to him. His debt due to the contractor, in a case like the one at bar, does not stop drawing interest because others have obtained supposed liens thereon. Sometimes undoubtedly the remedy given by said section 43 of the Code is an adequate remedy; but even then we do not think that the legislature intended that it should take the place of the action of interpleader. In such cases it was probably intended that the two remedies should be concurrent. Such seems to be the opinion of Mr. Wait as he gathers it from the New York authorities. 1 Wait, Pr. 166, 167, 174. The remedy given by section 43 of the Code, as applied to cases like this, is, in its nature, an equitable remedy; and we know of no rule that requires that one equitable remedy should supersede or take precedence of another equitable remedy, where both are equally applicable to the case. But it is claimed that the plaintiff in this action (the school-district) had already been sued by the defendants, Trimmer & Thompson, and that therefore the plaintiff as defendant in that suit, had a right, under said section 43 of the Code, to have all the other parties brought in and have them inter-plead as to who should receive said fund, and as to how much each should receive; and, therefore, that the plaintiff had another adequate remedy.

But if this were true, still the remedy given by said section is an equitable remedy as applied to this case, and, therefore, the plaintiff still had no adequate remedy at law. But it cannot be that said section was intended absolutely to supersede the action of interpleader, even in a case like the one at bar. If such were so, it would lead to insuperable difficulties in practice. Suppose that twenty or more different persons should each claim to be entitled to a particular fund, and suppose that one of these persons should sue the holder of the fund for the recovery of the same, and should, in the same suit, set up twenty or more separate and distinct causes of action, and ask judgment on the whole of them: would the holder of the fund be bound to forego his action of interpleader, and in its stead *31 resort to his remedy under *said section 43 of the Code?

Would he be bound to bring in as co-defendants with himself all the adverse claimants to said fund, and have them litigate their right to said fund while he was at the same time in the same suit on the same trial litigating with the plaintiff the questions arising in the other twenty separate and distinct causes of action in which himself and the plaintiff alone were interested? But suppose there were various other persons, not claimants to said fund, but interested in the subject-matter of some one or more of these various other causes of action set up by the plaintiff against the defendant: must these other persons also all be brought in so that their claims may also all be determined in this same suit? And so on, ad infinitum. Each of these different causes of action set up in said petition may be concerning a fund, to each of which there may be twenty or more different claimants. Now, suppose that each adverse claimant to one of these funds should commence an action against the holder thereof at about the same time: would the holder be bound under said section 43 to bring in all the adverse claimants into each suit, or could he bring them into one suit only and have the other suits enjoined? And if he could bring them into one only, and have the others enjoined, into which should he bring them, and which should he have enjoined? If these suits were brought in various counties, or in various courts, they could not well be consolidated. Or, if there were various other matters to litigate in each one of these suits, they could not well be consolidated, although they might be brought in the same court. Now, if it be agreed that the holder of the fund may enjoin the litigation concerning this fund in all the suits but one, why not in that one too, and allow him to bring an original action divested of all extraneous matters, and have it determined in that action to whom the fund belongs? After a careful consideration of the whole question we have come to the conclusion that wherever, under the former chancery practice, a bill of interpleader would lie, an action in the nature of a bill of interpleader will now lie.

*32 With respect to a portion of Trimmer & Thompson's claim *it would seem that the school-district has made itself absolutely liable; or at least Trimmer & Thompson so claim; and hence, with respect to this portion of said claim, the action of interpleader will not lie. This portion of said claim must be litigated in another suit.

There are two other questions involved in this case: First. Is an order of a judge pro tem. of the district court in a proceeding in aid of execution, under section 490 of the Civil Code, that a garnishee shall pay over to the judgment creditors certain money which the garnishee owes to the judgment debtor, a final determination of the liability of said garnishee to pay said money to said judgment creditor? Second. Is an order of a justice of the peace in an attachment proceeding pending before him, under section 42 of the justices' act, that a garnishee shall pay into court certain money which the garnishee owes to the defendant in the action, a final determination of the right of the plaintiff in the action to said money? We must answer both of these questions in the negative. Neither of said orders is a judgment. The making of them is not an adjudication between the parties. It does not determine their ultimate rights. It simply gives to the creditor the same right to enforce the payment of the money from the garnishee that the debtor previously had. It is in effect only an assignment of the claim from the debtor to the creditor. The creditor gains no more or greater rights than the debtor had, and the garnishee loses no rights. And the payment of the money can be enforced from the garnishee to the creditor only by an ordinary action. It is not necessary that an order, under section 490 of the Civil Code, be made by the court as a court. It may be made by a judge of the court, at chambers; and, in the present case, it was made by a judge pro tem. Now, can it be possible that a proceeding for the recovery of money may be determined finally, without parties plaintiff or defendant, without pleadings, before a judge at chambers, and without a jury? Final jurisdiction is always conferred upon courts, and not upon judges at chambers. Besides, in proceedings *33 for the recovery of money, a man's *rights can be determined against his will only by a jury. "The right of trial by jury shall be inviolate." Const. Bill of Rights, § 5. And no legislative act can abridge or impair that right. But suppose said order is an adjudication, a final determination, of the rights of the parties: then there should be some way of directly enforcing it,—either by execution against the property of the garnishee, or by imprisonment of his person. Now, it has already been decided in this court, and well decided as we think, that an execution is not allowable in such a case. Arthur v. Hale, 6 Kan. *161, *165. And we think it is equally clear that the order cannot be enforced by imprisonment of the garnishee. Union Bank of Rochester v. Union Bank of Sandusky, 6 Ohio St. 254;

Edgerton v. Hanna, 11 Ohio St. 323; Welch v. Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co., Id. 569. "No person shall be imprisoned for debt except in case of fraud." Const. Bill of Rights, § 16. Now, suppose the garnishee owes a debt to the judgment debtor, as is claimed in the present case. He is ordered to pay it into court, or to the judgment creditor. He is unable to do it, or indeed he may even refuse to do it. May the court, or judge at chambers, imprison him therefor? If they can, then they may not only imprison him for debt, but they may imprison him forever therefor, or at least until he pays the debt; for there is no provision for his discharge before he pays the debt. Would not this be imprisonment for debt, with a vengeance? But the statute does not seem to authorize the court or judge to order the garnishee to pay the money into court, or to the judgment creditor. It simply provides that the court or judge may order the money "to be applied towards the satisfaction of the judgment." Civil Code, § 490. Under this order the money may be paid voluntarily by the garnishee, or it may be collected from him by an ordinary action. This is the view taken of the question by the supreme court of Ohio. Edgerton v. Hanna, 11 Ohio St. 323, and other cases above cited. Section 490 of our Code is the same as section 467 of the Ohio Code, except that immediately after the words above quoted the following words are inserted *in our Code and omitted in the Ohio Code, to-wit: "and may enforce the same by proceedings for contempt in case of refusal or disobedience." Now, these words probably do not mean that the court may imprison a garnishee for not paying money which he owes (a debt) into court, or to the judgment creditor; but if they do, then we think that they are unconstitutional to that extent. Union Bank of Rochester v. Union Bank of Sandusky, 6 Ohio St. 254, 260-262. Section 473 of the Ohio Code is the same as section 498 of our Code; and both read as follows: "If any person, party, or witness disobey an order of the judge or referee, duly served, such person, party, or witness may be punished by the judge as for a contempt." This section is about as strong as the new words inserted in section 490 of our Code, and yet with this section the supreme court of Ohio made the decisions above cited.

With regard to the order made by the justice in the attachment and garnishment proceedings, we would say that the plaintiff in such proceedings has his remedy to enforce the payment of the money due from the garnishee by an ordinary action under section 43 of the justices' act, and perhaps also by an action or proceeding under section 44 of the justices' act; but he has no other remedy. Rice v. Whitney, 12 Ohio St. 358.

In conclusion we would say that we think the petition shows a good cause of action for interpleader. It shows that there are several persons claiming the same thing from the plaintiff; that the plaintiff has no beneficial interest in the thing claimed; that some of the defendants have already instituted proceedings therefor against the plaintiff, and that others threaten so to do; that the plaintiff cannot determine to whom it belongs without great hazard to itself; that the plaintiff has no adequate remedy at law, nor indeed any other adequate remedy; that while the thing in dispute is a debt to Clark & Co., one of the defendants, yet there is no dispute about the amount of the debt; and that while some of the defendants *35 do not claim the whole of the debt, yet that Clark & Co. do, and the others, in the aggregate, claim vastly more than the debt.

The judgment of the court below is reversed, and cause remanded, with the order that the demurrer to the petition be overruled, and for such other proceedings as may be proper in the case.

NOTE.

Orders made in garnishment proceedings can seldom be considered as final adjudications, Muse v. Lehman, 30 Kan. 519; S. C. 1 Pac. Rep. 804; in an action subsequently brought against the garnishee by a judgment creditor to enforce an order to pay over money or deliver property, a garnishee may answer, and show whether he had money or property in his possession belonging to the judgment debtor, or was indebted to him, and, if so, what the character of such property or indebtedness was, or any other fact affecting the question of his liability as garnishee, *Mull v. ## AMERICAN BRIDGE CO. v. TIMOTHY MURPHY.

January Term, 1874.

1. New Trial: Verdict: Weight of Evidence. Where the verdict of a jury has been rendered upon oral testimony, and the testimony tending to support the verdict would be sufficient therefor if it was not contradicted by other testimony, and the district court has approved the verdict by refusing to set it aside and to grant a new trial, the supreme court will not reverse the judgment of the district court and order a new trial where the only ground therefor is that the verdict is not sustained by sufficient evidence.
2. Evidence: Receipt. A receipt for money is only prima facie evidence of the truth of the statements therein contained.<sup>1</sup>
3. Payment: Receipt: Estoppel. Where a debtor pays a portion of his debt, which portion he admits to be due at the time he pays it, but claims that it is all that is due, and that it is the whole of the debt, and the creditor receives the same and signs a receipt in full therefor, but at the same time claims that it is only a portion of the debt, and that the other portion still remains due, held, that the creditor is not estopped by his receipt from afterwards suing the debtor and recovering the balance of the debt not yet paid.

Error from Leavenworth district court.

Action by Murphy to recover a balance alleged to be due him on a written contract for the boarding of persons in the employ of the bridge company. The answer set up an accounting, and payment of balance found due on such accounting. The evidence for the *36 plaintiff was the oral testimony *of the plaintiff and Preston Kuhn. The evidence for the defendant was the receipt of Murphy, and the oral evidence of Helm, Thorn, and Gates. Murphy's receipt is as follows:

"LEAVENWORTH, April 24, 1872.

"Received of G. Gates, agent for the American Bridge Company, $134.41, (exclusive of $53.00 left in Justice GOULD's court, as garnished in case of Gordon & Bro. v. T. J. Murphy, subject to order of said court,) the same being in full for all money due on board of hands with said Murphy.
T. J. MURPHY."

Gates, a witness for the bridge company, testified: "I claimed all that was due the plaintiff was the amount named in the receipt in full, given me by plaintiff. Murphy claimed there was a larger amount due." And Helm, on the same side, testified that the parties came to his office "to settle," and "the question was discussed as to the amount due Murphy," and "finally Murphy concluded to take the money and give the receipt. After they had looked the matter over, I read and explained the receipt to him." The jury found in favor of Murphy, and they also returned four special findings as follows: "(1) The defendant did not settle with the plaintiff on or about the twenty-fourth of April, 1872. (2) On the twenty-fourth of April, 1872, Murphy signed and delivered to the defendant a receipt in full for all moneys due, but did so under protest. (3) The receipt was signed and delivered by Murphy to the company after he had consulted with his attorney, and after the attorney had explained to him the effect of the receipt. (4) No settlement found." Judgment on the verdict in favor of Murphy; at February term, 1873.

Stillings & Fenlon, for plaintiff in error.

The weight of the evidence was clearly against the plaintiff below, to such a degree as to make a trial by a jury a mere farce, if the verdict can be upheld. Prima facie, at least, the receipt was good against Murphy, and he was bound to overthrow it by sufficient and competent evidence. He admits that he and the agent of the bridge *37 company were *engaged in settling and accounting at the time of the receipt, but claimed he signed it under protest; but his attorney wrote the receipt for him under his direction. Mr. Kuhn's testimony shows they were at the time making a settlement of disputed accounts, and this is substantially all of the evidence tending to impeach the receipt. On this testimony alone it would be a mockery of common sense to say the receipt should be overthrown; but when taken in connection with the defendant's evidence, it would also be an outrage on justice to permit the verdict to stand. First for the defense is the receipt itself, by the language of which Murphy acknowledged the payment of $134.41, "the same being in full for all moneys due on board of hands." Next was the testimony of Helm that the parties came to his office to settle; that they looked the matter over; that he read and explained the receipt; that Murphy concluded to take the money and give the receipt. Then Gates, the agent of the company, says the subject had been a matter of talk with him and Murphy for several days; that he (Gates) claimed that all that was due was the amount expressed in the receipt; that the receipt was read to Murphy, and the money paid him. And on this evidence the jury, the palladium of our liberties, found that no settlement had been made! If juries can be permitted to perpetrate such diabolical outrages on common sense, and steal one man's money to give to another, by the brute power of their verdict, it is about time our constitution was changed, so that this beneficent institution transmitted to us by King John, of holy memory, might depart in peace like the other relics of barbarism.

The second and third special findings are inconsistent with the general verdict. Can a man, upon a disputed account, after days of discussion in regard thereto, deliberately give his receipt "in full thereof," after being fully aware of the contents and effect, without fraud or deceit on the part of him securing it, still be entitled to recover an additional amount on the claim so receipted in full?

*38 Chit. Cont. 834, *note; Bonnell v. Chamberlin, 26 Conn. 487; Fuller v. Crittenden, 9 Conn. 401; Tucker v. Baldwin, 13 Conn. 136; Hurd v. Blackman, 19 Conn. 177; Steph. N. P. 1616.

Pendery & Goddard and J. W. Taylor, for defendant in error.

As we understand it, the plaintiff in error claims that, before and at the time of the execution of said receipt, there was an unsettled and disputed account existing between the parties; that the parties finally settled said account by plaintiff in error paying to defendant in error the sum mentioned in said receipt, and the defendant in error accepting the same in full, and executing the receipt. In other words, that plaintiff in error claimed that there was due to defendant in error on said account the sum mentioned in the receipt; that defendant in error claimed that there was several hundred dollars more than that sum due to him, and this difference was compromised by the payment of the amount mentioned in the receipt, and the execution of the receipt; that there being a dispute as to the amount due, it furnished a valuable consideration for said compromise; and that defendant in error, by making the compromise and executing the receipt, barred himself from recovering on said account. There is no controversy as to the fact that had said receipt not been given the defendant in error would have been entitled to recover the amount found by the jury. We submit that the receipt was not conclusive; that it was simply a receipt for so much money, and is only prima facie evidence of anything; and that Murphy was not bound thereby, but could show by parol evidence that no settlement had been made. 2 Pars. Cont. (6th Ed.) 555; Dutton v. Tilden, 13 Pa. St. 46; Bell v. Bell, 12 Pa. St. 235; Kirkpatrick v. Smith, 10 Humph. 188; Cole v. Taylor, 22 N. J. Law, 59; Ryan v. Ward, 48 N. Y. 204. As between the parties a receipt is always open to explanation. Frink v. Bolton, 15 Ill. 343; 32 Ill. 558; Elder v. Hood, 38 Ill. 533.

The plaintiff in error gave nothing more than it admitted to be justly due. The defendant in error received nothing more than was admitted to be his due. There was no controversy or dispute as to that fact,—the plaintiff in error simply paid what it admitted *39 to be a just claim; the defendant in error executed his receipt for the same. What consideration then passed from plaintiff in error to defendant in error to compensate defendant in error for giving up anything, or compromising anything? Will the plaintiff say it would not have paid the defendant the amount mentioned in the receipt had he not agreed to accept it in full? Such a position cannot be maintained. It admitted that it owed that amount to the defendant; and, irrespective of the question whether it owed any larger amount or not, it was bound to pay that amount, and by paying it it only performed its duty. Bright v. Coffman, 15 Ind. 371; Wheeler v. Wheeler, 11 Vt. 66. A receipt in full of a sum less than the amount due, in no way discharges the right to recover the balance. Dusenbury v. Dusenbury, 48 N. Y. 205; Masterton v. Beers, 31 N. Y. 409; Curtiss v. Martin, 20 Ill. 558.

But, for the sake of argument, should we admit that Murphy would be barred by the receipt, if the same was executed by him of his own free will at a time when he possessed the capacity to make the same, and without any fraud practiced by plaintiff in error, yet the same would be liable to be set aside on the ground of fraud, or on the ground of the lack of capacity on the part of defendant in error to contract at time of executing the same. There was evidence in the case below that Murphy, at the time he executed said receipt, was drunk, and that Gates, the agent of the plaintiff in error, knew that he had been drinking; and the question was fairly submitted to the jury, whether at the time he signed the receipt he knew what he was doing, and whether there was fraud practiced by the agent for the plaintiff in obtaining the receipt. Where the party, when he enters into a contract, is in such a state of drunkenness as not to know what he is doing, the contract is void altogether. 1 Pars. Cont. (6th Ed.) 383, note b; Gore v. Gibson, 13 Mees. & W. 623; Pitt v. Smith, 3 Camp. 33. And a person who takes an obligation from another under such circumstances is guilty of actual fraud. Mitchell v. Kingman, 5 Pick. 431; Gerrish v. Towne, 3 Gray, 90; Grant v. Thompson, 4 Conn. 203; Lang v. Whidden, 2 N. H. 435.

Every legal presumption obtains to support the verdict of a jury, and it is incumbent on the plaintiff to show affirmatively that *40 there was error, before this court will disturb the *verdict. If there was evidence before the jury tending to prove every fact necessary to be found by the jury, in order to support the verdict, this court will not reverse the judgment below. The instructions of the court not being presented, it will be presumed that the law was correctly given by the district court.

There having been evidence before the jury on the trial below tending to prove the incapacity of defendant in error to contract at the time of executing said receipt, on account of drunkenness, and tending to show fraud on part of defendant in error in obtaining said receipt, and it not appearing to the contrary, it will be presumed that the jury found every fact necessary to support their verdict.

VALENTINE, J. Where the verdict of a jury has been rendered upon oral testimony, and the testimony tending to support the verdict would be sufficient therefor if it were not contradicted by other testimony, and the district court has approved the verdict by refusing to set it aside and to grant a new trial, this court will not reverse the judgment of the district court and order a new trial to be granted where the only ground therefor is that the verdict is not sustained by sufficient evidence. This principle has already been decided in Luke v. Johnnycake, 9 Kan. *511, *519; Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Montelle, 10 Kan. *126, *127; Davenport v. Elliott, Id. *587; St. Joseph & D. C. R. Co. v. Chase, 11 Kan. *47; Brewster v. Hall, 12 Kan. *161; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Stanford, Id. *354.

2. A receipt for money is only prima facie evidence of the truth of the statements therein contained.

3. Where a debtor pays a portion of his debt, which portion he admits to be due at the time he pays it, but claims that it is all that is due, and that it is the whole of the debt, and the creditor receives the same and signs a receipt in full therefor, but at the same time claims that it is only a portion of the debt, and that the other portion still remains due, the creditor is not estopped by his receipt from afterwards suing the debtor and recovering the balance of the debt not yet paid.

In support of these last two propositions we would refer to the cases of Ryan v. Ward, 48 N. Y. 204; Bright v. Coffman, 15 Ind. 371; Wheeler v. Wheeler, 11 Vt. 60, 66; Curtiss v. Martin, 20 Ill. 558, 577; and other cases cited in briefs of counsel.

The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

KINGMAN, C. J., concurring; BREWER, J., dissenting.

JOHN T. BRADY and others v. ISAAC SWEETLAND and others.

January Term, 1874.

Officers: De Facto: School-District. The office of school-district treasurer was in dispute between two persons, one of whom was in possession and the other not, but both claimed to be legally entitled to the office. The claimant not in possession commenced an action of quo warranto against the other to obtain possession of the office. The clerk of said school-district, and the disputant in office, who was really treasurer de facto, if not treasurer de jure, hired a school teacher. The director and the other claimant hired another teacher. These three persons last mentioned took possession of the district school-house, and prevented the other three from occupying, using, or controlling the same. Held, that injunction will lie in favor of the clerk and the treasurer de facto to restrain the director, and the other two persons acting with him, from further interfering during the pendency of said action of quo warranto with the right of said clerk and treasurer de facto (they being a majority of the school-district board, and acting for the board) to take charge of and use and control said school-house.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup>When the power is vested in a district board of a school-district, composed of three, to contract with and hire a teacher for and in the name of the district, and a written contract is signed by two members of the board in the absence of each other, without consultation with each other, or with the other member, and

Error from Nemaha district court.

Injunction brought by John T. Brady, as treasurer, and Nathaniel Slosson, as clerk, of school-district No. 51 of *Nemaha county, against Isaac Sweetland, as director of said school-district No. 51, and Lawrence R. Wheeler and D. L. Anderson. The district judge granted a temporary injunction, and afterwards, September 13, 1878, on motion, dissolved such injunction.

Nathan Price, for plaintiffs in error.

The petition states a good cause for an injunction. The custody of the school-house is given to the district board, (Gen. St. c. 92, § 43;) and said board are given the right to contract with and hire qualified teachers, (Id. § 45.) When a power or right is vested in a number of persons by law, that power may be exercised by a majority of them, unless there is some statute restrictive of such power. The petition in this case shows that a majority of the school board had exercised the power of hiring a qualified teacher, and that the director and defendant Wheeler, who was not in office at all, but was endeavoring to get into the office of treasurer, attempted to usurp the powers of the board, and with the defendant Anderson took possession of the school-house, and run a school. Certainly, on the facts shown, they are trespassers, and an injunction will always be granted to restrain a trespass when the case is of that nature that full compensation cannot be had in damages. Wil. Eq. Jur. 381, 382, 405; Daniell, Ch. 1639, 1650, 1653; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 927; St. Joseph & D. R. Co. v. Dryden, 11 Kan. *186.

C. W. Johnson, for defendants.

The plaintiffs in their petition do not show any cause of action in this: that they do not show the contract with the Philbrooks (teacher) was in conformity to law. Gen. St. 921, § 27.

An action of quo warranto was brought by Wheeler, as plaintiff, against Brady, as defendant, and is now pending. *There is no law authorizing an injunction in favor of a defendant against a plaintiff during pendency of suit. It is the defendant who is enjoined, not a plaintiff. Injunction is a provisional remedy, except when it is the final relief demanded, and a defendant has no right to invoke it. In a case where injunction is the only relief sought, and is the final order to be obtained, it cannot be granted in vacation, because that is to force a trial of the merits of the action in vacation. The validity of the school contract could not be tried at chambers, where the district was no party; neither could the right of office between Wheeler and Brady, though that was what was sought; that is, to try the validity of a contract and an election in a collateral proceeding at chambers. The injunction was granted without any meeting of the district board, upon the application of a party seeking to be employed as a teacher, such contract is not binding upon the school-district. Dassler, Comp. Laws 1885, p. 826, c. 56; Aikman v. School-district, 27 Kan. 129.

without notice, in violation of section 241 of the Code. Wheeler set out his cause of action in a petition, and Brady seeks to enjoin Wheeler without himself answering Wheeler's petition.

What interest had these plaintiffs in what, at most, was a trespass to the real estate of the school-district? There is no law giving the treasurer and clerk a right to sue the director for possession of the school-house. The defendant Anderson was in possession, teaching a school. Instead of suing him in forcible entry and detainer, plaintiffs seek to oust him by injunction, and close the public school,—a result they accomplished by injunction, and continued by appeal,—a proceeding more likely to injure them than plaintiffs are to be injured. Hil. Inj. § 13.

VALENTINE, J. The plaintiffs in error, who were plaintiffs below, filed a petition in the district court, asking for a certain injunction to restrain the defendants from committing certain acts which the plaintiffs alleged the defendants were then committing and about to commit. The district judge granted a temporary injunction to restrain the defendants from committing said acts, but afterwards, on motion of the defendants, dissolved the same, solely on the *44 ground that the *petition did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. No evidence was used on the hearing of said motion to dissolve the injunction except the petition, which was sworn to, and made an affidavit as well as a petition. For the purposes, then, of this case we must consider the facts stated in said petition as true; and upon such consideration, did the judge of the court below err? The material facts stated in said petition are, substantially, as follows: The plaintiff John T. Brady was the treasurer of school-district No. 51 of Nemaha county; the plaintiff Nathaniel Slosson was the clerk of said district; and the defendant Isaac Sweetland was the director of the same. These three persons, by virtue of their offices, constituted the school-district board of said district. The defendant Lawrence R. Wheeler, however, claimed to be entitled to the office of treasurer of said school-district, and had previously instituted an action in the nature of quo warranto to have his rights determined, and to obtain possession of said office. This action was still pending. During the time this office was in dispute the plaintiffs, Brady and Slosson, hired teachers for said school-district. About the same time the defendants Sweetland and Wheeler also hired a teacher for said school-district, to-wit, the defendant D. L. Anderson. The defendants then took possession of the school-house of the district, and refused to permit the plaintiffs to have charge or control thereof, and refused to permit the teachers hired by the plaintiffs to teach therein. The injunction prayed for is to restrain the defendants from further interfering with the plaintiff's management and control of said school-house.

We think the injunction ought to be granted. Admitting, for the sake of the argument, that Wheeler is legally entitled to the said office of treasurer, and still, as the office is occupied by another person who claims to be holding it rightfully and legally, Wheeler has no right to interfere therewith until some court, in a proper proceeding therefor, determines in his favor. He cannot, while he is merely *45 claiming the office, employ teachers, and take charge and control of the property of *the district, nor can he even unite with one of the members of the school board for such a purpose.

He has no right to attempt to take forcible possession of the office. He may prosecute his action of quo warranto to a final determination, and then, if it be determined in his favor, the court will put him in possession of the office. Gen. St. 760; Code §§ 656, 657. But if the action should be determined adversely to him, he will, of course, never get possession of the office. And pending the litigation concerning Wheeler's or Brady's right to hold said office, Brady, as treasurer de facto, claiming to hold the office as treasurer de jure, will have the right to hold and perform all the functions thereof unmolested by Wheeler or any one else. State v. Durkee, 12 Kan. *308. The power to hire teachers, and to take charge of and control the property of the school-district, belongs exclusively to the school-district board, (Gen. St. 925;) and any two members of the board may act for the board, (Gen. St. 999, § 1, subd. 4.)

The judgment of the court below must be reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings.

THOMAS E. TUTT and others v. P. S. FERGUSON and others.

January Term, 1874.

1. Judgment: Action to Enjoin: Laches and Negligence: Defense.

Where a party prosecutes an action to perpetually enjoin the collection of a judgment previously rendered against him, on the ground that at the time of the rendition of said judgment he had a good defense to the action in which said judgment was rendered, of which defense he was at the time ignorant; and where neither the petition, the evidence, nor the findings of the court below in the action to enjoin said judgment tend to show any diligence on the part of said party in ascertaining said defense so as to set it up in the action in which said judgment was rendered; but, on the contrary, where the record shows that said defense

*46 arose nearly four years before said judgment was rendered, and over six years before said *action to enjoin said judgment was commenced; and where all the circumstances of the case tend to show that said party should have known of said defense when said judgment was rendered, and that he was guilty of gross negligence in not knowing it,—the action to perpetually enjoin the collection of said judgment cannot be maintained.<sup>1</sup>

2. ———: Judicial Sales: Irregularities: Action by Sheriff. A sheriff sold certain real estate on execution. Afterwards the sale was confirmed. Afterwards the sheriff refused to pay to certain persons their share of the proceeds of the sale. These persons then sued the sheriff and his sureties, and recovered a judgment against them for the amount due to said persons. Afterwards the sale was ordered to be set aside by the supreme court on the ground of an apparent irregularity in the notice of sale. The notice was in fact regular, but it appeared to be irregular on account of a false return made by the sheriff. The said parties who obtained said judgment were not parties to the proceeding in the supreme court. The question of whether the sale shall be set aside is now pending upon additional evidence in the district court. Held, in an action brought by the sheriff and his sureties and others to perpetually enjoin the collection of said judgment, that neither the said irregularity in said sheriff's return, nor the order of the supreme court concerning said sheriff's sale, nor both together, are sufficient to authorize the plaintiffs to maintain said action.

Error from Wyandotte district court.

Action brought by Pembroke S. Ferguson, James A. Cruise, John E. Zeitz, Isaiah Walker, Moses M. Brodwell, and Allison B. Bartlett, as plaintiffs, against Thomas E. Tutt, Dent G. Tutt, John F. Baker, Wilkins F. Wheatley, Thomas F. Thatcher, and Edmund Terry, as defendants, to enjoin the Tutts and Baker from collecting a judgment recovered by them against said Ferguson and his sureties on his official bond as sheriff of Wyandotte county, at the June term, 1869, for $2,350 and costs. Said judgment was rendered against Ferguson and his sureties on the ground that he had sold certain real estate in Wyandotte county, on an execution issued on a judgment rendered October 10, 1865, in favor of Edmund Terry against Wheatley & Thatcher, which sale had been confirmed by the court, and then refused to pay the money in accordance with the decree and order of the court. At the June term, 1872, the district court decreed a perpetual injunction.

*47 **D. B. Hadley*, for plaintiffs in error.

Can equity interfere to enjoin a judgment at law on the ground that the defendants had neglected to avail themselves of a defense which existed at the time of the trial? It seems well settled that it cannot. Amer. Ch. Dig. 642; Dodge v. Strong, 2 Johns. Ch. 230; Clute v. Potter, 37 Barb. 199; Truly v. Wanzer, 5 How. 141; Creath's Adm'r v. Sims, Id. 192.

Has the supreme court set aside the sale made by Sheriff Ferguson, July 14, 1866, and the confirmation thereunder? This question is determined in the negative by a simple examination of the facts.

Who were the parties to the sale, and the judgment and decree of the court in which the sale was made? The plaintiffs in that action were Michael Dively, Edward C. McCarty, and Edmund Terry, and the defendants were Wilkins T. Wheatley, Thomas F. Thatcher, Moses M. Brodwell, the Great Republic Fire Insurance Company, of St. Louis, Thomas E. Tutt, Dent G. Tutt, John F. Baker, John M. Chrysler, Gabriella F. Wheatley, Mary Thatcher, and Isabella Chrysler. Who were the parties in the case taken to the supreme court on the motion which was overruled at the June term of the Wyandotte district court? Edmund Terry was named as plaintiff, and Wheatley and Thatcher alone as defendants. By reference to the case in 6 Kan. 427, it will be seen that the judgment of the district court was reversed on two grounds: (1) The sale was made on a day not named in the notice published by the sheriff; (2) the lot sold was not the one described in the notice. But the record here shows that these errors in the sheriff's notice did not exist. Before the district court took any action under the mandate, further than to file it, under an order of court the Tutts and Baker gave said Dively, McCarty, and Terry, and all the other defendants, notice that they would, on the first day of March term, 1871, file evidence of a correct publication of said sheriff's sale. The proof was filed at the same *48 term, showing that the publication on which the *sale was made was correct, but by mistake the sheriff had attached to his return an erroneous publication. Clearly, with all this evidence before the court, it would not sustain the motion to set aside the sheriff's sale. The cause set out in the motion for setting aside the sale did not exist. It would have been overruled whenever called up and the evidence presented to the court. The sale and confirmation, then, stand to-day as valid and effective as before the decision in the supreme court. That decision was made upon an untrue statement by the parties presenting the case. Again, the Tutts and Baker were not parties to the proceedings in the supreme court, and had no opportunity of being heard. It is submitted that it was a most palpable error for the court to find that the supreme court had set aside the sheriff's sale.

James F. Mister, also for plaintiffs in error.

The principle of res adjudicata is invoked in behalf of the judgment obtained by Thomas E. Tutt and others v. P. S. Ferguson and others, and affirmed by this court, and is certainly decisive as to Ferguson, Cruise, Zeitz, and Walker, which settles the case, as the other parties have no interest whatever in the controversy. When any tribunal has jurisdiction of the subject-matter of, and the parties to, any controversy, and renders a judgment thereon, such judgment is conclusive between the parties. Anthony v. Halderman, 7 Kan. *50; Norton v. Graham, 7 Kan. *166.

After a sheriff's sale has been confirmed, and the sheriff and his sureties sued for the purchase money, they cannot raise any question of irregularity in the confirmation of the sale, or in any of the prior proceedings. Wheatley v. Terry, 6 Kan. *427; Ferguson v. Tutt, 8 Kan. *370.

Judgments at law will not be opened or set aside except for fraud, or to relieve grievous hardships not otherwise remediable. They will not be opened to favor a payment which the complainant neglected to establish at a trial at law. • Schlatter v. Hunt, 1 Mo. 654; Sumner v. Whitley, Id. 708; Ford v. Circuit Court, 2 Mo. 145; Matson v. Field, 10 Mo. 100.

The right of Tutt & Co. to the balance of the proceeds of the sale under the execution on the foreclosure suit obviously depends upon their ownership of the equity of redemption in the premises sold at the time of the decree. This was the position in which they stood. They had purchased under their attachment sale, and the confirmation of their purchase was not set aside until long afterwards. This was the position set up by them in their answer in that suit. They claimed to be owners of the property under their purchase at the sale under the attachment suit. They now claim that the decree requiring the balance of the purchase money to be paid to them was made in their favor as attaching or judgment creditors. This is obviously an after-thought, inconsistent with their answer in the foreclosure suit, and inconsistent with their subsequent claims to the possession. It is also inconsistent with a proper decree in the foreclosure suit. If they had then appeared as attaching or judgment creditors only, the court would have ordered their debt to be paid out of the money remaining from the proceeds of the sale, after satisfying the mortgage, if sufficient, not that the whole of the money so remaining should be paid to them. Ball v. Ryers, 3 Caines, 84; Van Nest v. Yeomans, 1 Wend. 87.

It is only by regarding Tutt & Co. as owners of the equity of redemption that the decree in the foreclosure suit can be sustained; and when a decree or judgment is susceptible of more than one explanation, that one will be adopted which sustains the judgment. Since that decree, however, their standing as owners of the equity of redemption has been taken away by the action of this court in setting aside the sale and confirmation in the attachment suit under which they purchased. They stand, then, in the attitude of attempting to enforce a judgment against the sheriff for money charged to have been collected by him, after their right to that money is gone.

*50     The right of Tutt & Co. to recover against the sheriff *and his sureties depends upon the validity of the execution under which he acted, and his acts and return to such execution. While it is true that a sheriff cannot defend himself from paying money collected on the ground of irregularity in the prior proceedings, these proceedings being sufficient to protect him in executing the writ, yet it is equally true that if he has collected money on void process, he may defend himself from such payment; otherwise he would be liable to pay the money to the person who claimed it under the process without right, and to refund the money to him from whom it had been acquired.

The execution in the foreclosure suit, issued at the instance of Tutt & Co., and under which the sale was made to Bartlett, was void, and conferred no title on the purchaser, and imposed no duty of collecting the money upon the sheriff. Tutt & Co. being defendants, and owners of the equity of redemption in the premises, had no right to sue out an execution to sell their own land, and the order of sale, so sued out at their own instance, was void. 1 Freem. Ch. 392. The evidence clearly shows that the judgment of foreclosure had been fully paid before this execution was issued. When a judgment has been satisfied, either by payment or by operation of law, no further execution can be issued on it, and such execution, if issued, will not give the officer holding it any right to levy upon, hold, or sell property under it, (Reed v. Pruyn, 7 Johns. 427; Hammatt v. Wyman, 9 Mass. 137; Cliver v. Applegate, 5 N. J. Law, 479;) and a sale under such an execution passes no title, (Woodcock v. Bennet, 1 Cow. 711; Swan v. Saddlemire, 8 Wend. 676; Jackson v. Anderson, 4 Wend. 474; Jackson v. Bowen, 7 Cow. 21.) A court of equity will interfere by injunction to stop proceedings under an execution on a judgment that has been paid or otherwise satisfied, and prevent the collection of such judgment. Parish's Heirs v. Ferris, 6 Ohio, 430; Brinkerhoff v. Lansing, 4 Johns. Ch. 69.

The sale under the foreclosure suit made to Bartlett has been set aside on petition in error to this court, and all rights acquired by such sale, either by the purchaser Bartlett, or by those who are to receive the purchase money, fall with it. 6 Kan. *427. The defendants below in this case strongly insist that this sale has not been set aside, because they, Tutt & Co., were not parties to the motion made for that purpose, and the finding of the court that it was so set aside constitutes the principal error assigned in this court. It is a sufficient reply to this objection to say that the motion to set aside the sale follows, in this respect, the writ under which the sale was made. All the parties named in the execution are parties to the motion to set aside the proceedings under it. If the execution is valid, not naming all the parties to the judgment on which it is issued, the motion is valid also; and if the motion is defective, the execution is also, but this defect would be fatal to any rights of the defendants Tutt & Co. under it.

But since the mandate of this court has been filed in the district court, reversing the action of the latter court in refusing to set aside the sale to Bartlett, Tutt & Co. have appeared in that court, and filed evidence to sustain the sale. They are therefore, by their own act, parties to the motion which they claim is still pending in the district court. According to their own showing, the question whether the sale to Bartlett shall stand, is yet pending and undetermined. They clearly have no rights under that sale until it is settled whether it is valid or not. The sale is either good for all purposes or bad for all purposes. It cannot be good enough to compel the sheriff to collect the purchase money, and yet not good enough to be confirmed by the court. It is submitted that the true test of the sheriff's liability is his right to compel Bartlett to pay the amount of his bid. He cannot be required to pay over what he has no legal right to collect.

Can the sheriff compel Bartlett to pay the amount of his bid? Not when the sale to him has been set aside, or while, as defendants below contend, the question whether it shall be or not is yet pending and undetermined; nor after it appears that the judgment on which the execution issued had been fully paid, before the execution was sued out or the sale made. Either of these defenses would be available to Bartlett, if sued by the sheriff for the amount of his bid; *52 and they are *equally available to the sheriff in an action on his bond for not collecting it.

The sheriff and his sureties could not avail themselves of the defense that their judgment of foreclosure had been paid before execution, and the execution was therefore a nullity, when sued on their bond, for the reason that neither they nor their attorneys knew the fact that such payment had been made. Still less could the sheriff or his sureties have set up the fact that the sale to Bartlett had been set aside. The suit against them was instituted in February, 1868, and the decision of this court was rendered at the July term, 1870, and the mandate was filed in the district court, March 21, 1871. Under these circumstances, the sheriff and his sureties have the right to claim the interference of a court of equity. The general principle is that where a judgment has been recovered in an action at law, and defendant has a good defense, which it was impossible for him to interpose at the trial, as when the circumstances which create the defense have arisen since the trial, or where the facts constituting such defense were unknown to the defendant at the time of the trial, and could not, with reasonable diligence, be ascertained, a court of equity will interpose by injunction, and prevent the plaintiff from collecting or proceeding with his judgment. Gainsborough v. Gifford, 2 P. Wms. 424; Jarvis v. Chandler, 1 T. & R., 320; Farquharson v. Pitcher, 2 Russell, 81; Mosby v. Leeds, 3 Call, 439; Nomaque v. People, 1 Breese, 147; Union Bank v. Geary, 5 Pet. 99.

VALENTINE, J. Portions of this litigation have been brought to this court at least six times. Four cases have been reported, to-wit: Wheatley v. Tutt, 4 Kan. *195; Wheatley v. Tutt, Id. *240; Wheatley v. Terry, 6 Kan. *427; and Ferguson v. Tutt, 8 Kan. *378. One case was dismissed, to-wit, Bartlett v. Wheatley, and this is the sixth case. Other cases were litigated in the court below which have not been brought to this court. In this opinion we shall mention *53 such cases only as have some bearing upon *the case now before us. In the investigation of this case it will be necessary to examine more particularly the rights of said Thomas E. Tutt, Dent G. Tutt, and John F. Baker, than those of most of the others, as they are the real parties in interest in asking to have the judgment of the court below in this case reversed.

The record upon which this reversal is asked shows as follows: On September 9, 1861, an action was commenced by Thomas E. Tutt, Dent G. Tutt, and John F. Baker against Wilkins T. Wheatley and Thomas F. Thatcher. An attachment was issued therein, and levied on lot 5, in block 6, in the city of Wyandotte. Judgment was rendered in the case on April 10, 1863, in favor of Tutts and Baker, and against Wheatley & Thatcher, for $1,483 and costs, and said lot was ordered to be sold. Afterwards the undivided half of said lot was sold at sheriff's sale to Tutts and Baker for the sum of $1,667, and the sale was confirmed October 5, 1863. Tutts and Baker took a sheriff's deed for said undivided half of said lot, and the sheriff returned the writ for the sale of said property satisfied. Afterwards the confirmation of said sale was reversed by the supreme court, (Wheatley v. Tutt, 4 Kan. *195,) and the mandate from the supreme court was filed in the district court at the January term, (so the record shows, but quære,) 1867. Nothing seems to have been done with said case, or concerning it, since. Hence we suppose Tutts and Baker have lost their judgment lien, (Code 1859, § 434; Code 1868, § 445,) and have also lost their interest in the lot, (Code 1859, § 458; Code 1868, § 467.)

On May 20, 1865, another suit was commenced in which Michael Dively, Edward McCarty, and Edmund Terry were plaintiffs, and Wilkins T. Wheatley, Thomas F. Thatcher, Moses M. Brodwell, the Great Republic Insurance Company, Thomas E. Tutt, Dent G. Tutt, John F. Baker, John M. Chrysler, Gabriella H. Wheatley, Mary Thatcher, and Isabella Chrysler were defendants. This action was on a note given by Wheatley & Thatcher to Brodwell, and indorsed by Brodwell *54 (waiving presentment, notice, etc.,) to Terry. The *action was also to foreclose a deed of trust given by Wheatley and wife (to-wit, Gabriella Wheatley) to Dively & McCarty, trustees, on the undivided half of said lot 5, to secure the payment of said note. Hence, Terry was the real plaintiff, and Dively & McCarty were merely nominal plaintiffs. The defendants Tutt & Tutt and Baker seem to have set up their claim against said Wheatley & Thatcher, and their interest in said lot 5. Judgment was rendered October 10, 1865, in favor of Terry, and against Wheatley & Thatcher, for $2,317.90, and costs. The court found that Terry's lien on said lot was prior to that of Tutts and Baker, and ordered that if said judgment was not paid in ten days said undivided half of said lot should be sold to pay, first, the costs, next, Terry's judgment of $2,317.90, and interest, and then that the remainder should be paid to Tutts and Baker, and that all the parties' interests in said undivided half of said lot should be forever afterwards barred and foreclosed. It seems from the record that on October 20, 1865, (precisely ten days after the judgment was rendered,) Brodwell paid to Terry, in New York city, the precise amount of Terry's judgment, (less costs and interest,) to-wit, $2,317.90. Yet, strange as it may seem, nobody knew of this payment, except possibly Brodwell and Terry, until about six years afterwards. After this supposed payment, Terry's counsel, to-wit, Bartlett, filed a præcipe in the district court for an execution on said judgment. The clerk of the district court, said James A. Cruise, issued it; and the sheriff of said county, said P. S. Ferguson, sold the said property under it to said M. M. Brodwell, the person who, it is said, paid said judgment. But Brodwell failed, however, to make payment on said sale, and the sheriff therefore returned no sale. Upon this execution, however, the sheriff collected from Chrysler about $125, which was sufficient to pay all the costs. An alias execution was then, on May 24, 1866, issued by said clerk (on the præcipe of Tutts and Baker) to said sheriff, and the sheriff then sold said property, (the undivided half of said lot,) on *55 July 14, 1866, to said Bartlett, for $4,500. The sheriff returned that said amount of $4,500 was paid by Bartlett, although in fact it never was paid. The sale was confirmed on November 1, 1866. No sheriff's deed was ever executed to Bartlett under this sale, although it seems that Bartlett afterwards claimed to own the property, and afterwards, on January 21, 1868, sold the property to one John Arthur for $4,500. Arthur still claims and has possession of the property. Bartlett now claims "that he did have an interest in said property derived from another source, in no way connected with this matter."

On June 16, 1869, counsel for Wheatley & Thatcher, to-wit, J. P. Usher, moved the district court to set aside said sale, and to set aside said confirmation, on the ground of irregularities, to-wit, "because said sale was not duly advertised, nor was made in conformity to law." No notice of this motion was given to any one except Bartlett and Ferguson, and no one else appeared on the hearing of the motion. There are some mistakes in this motion in the title of the case, in the number of the case, etc.; but still we are inclined to think it was sufficient as to Bartlett and Ferguson, who voluntarily appeared to answer it, and would perhaps have been sufficient as to any one if notice had been given. The motion was overruled at the June term, 1869, of the district court.

On July 8, 1869, Wheatley & Thatcher alone proceeded by petition in error in the supreme court against said Terry alone for the purpose of reversing the said rulings of the district court. And at the July term, 1870, the supreme court reversed said rulings of the dis-district court. Wheatley v. Terry, 6 Kan. *427. The mandate from the supreme court ordering the reversal was filed in the district court on March 24, 1871. Counsel for Terry, J. P. Usher, (so the record shows, though probably it should have said counsel for Wheatley & Thatcher,) moved the district court to allow said mandate to be filed among the papers of the case, and to set aside the order confirming said sale in accordance with said mandate. The district court, however, never took any action upon the motion or the mandate except to order the *mandate to be filed. Previously, however, to-wit, on *56 March 6, 1871, counsel for Tutts and Baker filed a motion in the district court "for leave to file additional evidence of the publication of the advertisement of the time and place of" said sheriff's sale, etc.; and on the said twenty-fourth of March, 1871, said motion was sustained. Additional evidence was then introduced showing that the sale was regularly made. The notice was all regular, showing that "lot No. 5" would be sold on the fourteenth of July, 1866, and was published regularly for five weeks before the sale, while the notice appended to the sheriff's return, and brought to the supreme court, was an irregular notice that had been previously published for two weeks only, and then discontinued, when the said regular notice was inserted in the newspaper in its place. This irregular notice stated that "lot No. 2" would be sold on June 30, 1866. It should not have been annexed to the sheriff's return, nor should it have been used in the case; and if Tutts and Baker had received any notice of any motion, or any proceeding in any court to set aside said sheriff's sale, they would probably have had said irregular notice stricken out, and the regular one inserted in its place; or if the sheriff had done his duty in the first instance, and inserted the regular notice instead of the irregular one, no such motion or proceeding would have been instituted; or even after said motion was made, if the sheriff, instead of making a voluntary appearance to the motion as he did, and waiving all objections thereto, and consenting that it should be heard instanter, had asked the court to allow him to amend his return in accordance with the facts, said sale would not have been ordered to be set aside by the supreme court, as it was, or by any other court; for the district court would have allowed the sheriff to make such amendment, and then the return would have shown the sale, the notice, etc., to have been regular, and the supreme court would have sustained it. It now seems that Terry and his counsel, (Bartlett and Usher,) and the purchaser, Bartlett, as well as Wheatley & Thatcher, the principal defendants in that action, all wanted

*57 the sale to be set aside. The money for the payment of costs, officers' fees, etc., had already been collected from Chrysler without any sale of said lot. Hence the officers, as well as others entitled to costs, had but very little interest in the matter. This leaves Tutts and Baker as being about the only persons who were particularly desirous that said sale should not be set aside, and yet no notice was ever given to them of any proceeding in either the district court or the supreme court instituted for the purpose of having said sale set aside or vacated. It is a general rule of equity (and the case at bar is an equity proceeding) that he who seeks equity must do equity. Good faith must be practiced as well by the person who seeks equity as by the person from whom equity is sought.

On February 7, 1868, Thomas E. Tutt, Dent G. Tutt, and John F. Baker commenced an action against P. S. Ferguson, sheriff, and John E. Zeitz, Isaiah Walker, and James A. Cruise, sureties on the official bond of said sheriff, to recover from said sheriff and his sureties the amount which said sheriff collected, or ought to have collected, from Chrysler and Bartlett on the last-mentioned judgment, after deducting the amount it would take to pay the judgment in favor of Terry, and costs. In June, 1869, judgment was rendered in this case in favor of Tutts and Baker, and against Ferguson and his sureties, for $2,350, and costs. This case was taken to the supreme court by Ferguson and his sureties, and at the July term, 1871, of the supreme court, the judgment of the court below was affirmed. Ferguson v. Tutt, 8 Kan. *370. In October, 1871, an execution was issued for the collection of this last-mentioned judgment, and following said execution the following proceedings were had: On December 30, 1871, the present action was commenced by Pembroke S. Ferguson, James A. Cruise, John E. Zeitz, Isaiah Walker, Moses M. Brodwell, and Allison B. Bartlett, as plaintiffs, against Thomas E.

Tutt, Dent G. Tutt, John F. Baker, Wilkins F. Wheatley, *58 Thomas F. Thatcher, and Edmund *Terry, as defendants, for the purpose of forever enjoining the collection of the judgment rendered in favor of Tutts and Baker, and against Ferguson and his sureties, on said sheriff's bond; and on June 17, 1872, judgment was rendered in the district court perpetually enjoining the collection of said judgment, as prayed for by the plaintiffs below, (defendants in error in this court,) Ferguson and the others. This judgment was rendered upon the ground solely that said sheriff's sale to Bartlett was void, and the reasons given why it was void are as follows: First, the Terry judgment had been paid before said sheriff sale was made; second, said sheriff sale was ordered to be set aside by the supreme court.

First. The said Terry judgment was paid on October 20, 1865. The judgment on the sheriff's bond, now sought to be perpetually enjoined, was rendered in June, 1869, nearly four years after said payment was made. The judgment in the case at bar perpetually enjoining the last-mentioned judgment was rendered June 17, 1872, nearly seven years after the payment of said Terry judgment, and about three years after the judgment was rendered now sought to be enjoined. Now, if the fact of the payment of said Terry judgment is a good ground for enjoining the said judgment on the sheriff's bond, then, a fortiori, it would have been a good ground for not rendering such judgment on the sheriff's bond. In other words, said payment would have been a good defense to the action in which said judgment on the sheriff's bond was rendered. But it was not interposed in that action. Why not? The principal defendants in the court below, except Ferguson, (who did not testify in the case at bar,) testified that they did not know of said payment at the time said action was pending, nor at any other time since up to about the time of the commencement of this action, which was December 30, 1871, over six years after said payment was made. But why did they not know it? Did they exercise any diligence in hunting up their defenses?

Were they not guilty of the grossest negligence in not knowing *59 of said payment in time *to make it available as a defense to said action? If the sheriff's sale was void because of said payment, then the payment ought to have been known in less than six years. In fact, it ought to have been known before any execution was issued; certainly before the sale or the confirmation of the sale; most certainly before said motion was made to set aside the sale; and beyond all question before said judgment was rendered on the sheriff's bond. The want of such knowledge can only be accounted for on the ground of fraud or gross negligence. Cruise was the clerk of the district court who issued said executions, who made all the entries in the case, and who kept all the papers connected with the case. Ferguson was the sheriff who sold the property, who returned that the money for which the property was sold was paid, and who allowed his said sale to be confirmed. Counsel for defendants in error say that the sheriff did not make return that said money was paid. It is true that he did not make such a return in just so many words. But he did so return by necessary and unavoidable inference or implication. He returned that the property "was then and there duly struck off and sold by me [him] to Allison B. Bartlett for the sum of $4,500, he being the highest and best bidder therefor." He did not return that the money was not paid. It was his duty to collect the money before he made his return. Ferguson v. Tutt, 8 Kan. *370. And in his return he says: "This writ is returned satisfied." See Armstrong v. Garrow, 6 Cow. 465, 467. Besides, we do not think it would be good policy to allow an officer, after he has made a return which, if liberally construed, would show that he did his duty, and after other persons have acted upon such construction, to come in for the purpose of evading another duty, and say, by drawing fine distinctions concerning the construction of his own language, that his return does not show that he did his duty, and thereby, by means of his own ambiguous language, escape and evade the just consequences of his own omissions or laches in other respects.

Bartlett, another plaintiff below in the case at bar, made *60 an affidavit on March 9, 1872, which affidavit *was used as evidence in the case at bar on the trial thereof, and in which affidavit he states, among other things, the following: "He was employed as attorney for the defendants in the suit of Thomas E. Tutt et al. v. Wilkins T. Wheatley et al.;" "that he has been employed in such capacity on one side or the other in all suits and actions that grew out of the proceedings therein; that he was sole attorney of the plaintiffs in the cause wherein Edmund Terry et al. were plaintiffs and Wilkins T. Wheatley et al. were defendants; he had the sole control of the note and trust deed declared upon in said last-named suit, and had the entire control of the judgment rendered therein;" "that he has had frequent and continued correspondence with said Edmund Terry, who recovered the judgment upon the note and trust deed aforesaid;" "that this deponent had no knowledge or intimation from said Terry, or from any other person, by letter or otherwise, that the judgment in favor of said Terry in said cause has been paid until since the last term of this court, and a short time before filing the petition in this cause."

The petition in this cause was filed December 30, 1871, and the said judgment was paid October 20, 1865. Brodwell, who paid said judgment to Terry, is still living, and is one of the plaintiffs below (defendants in error) in this case. It will be remembered that it was nearly a year after said judgment was paid by Brodwell before said sale was made; more than a year before it was confirmed; nearly four years before any attempt was made by any one to set aside either the sale or the confirmation thereof; and more than six years before any attempt was made to avoid the sale on the ground that the judgment had previously been paid. Does this show diligence? Why did not some of the parties inform Terry or Brodwell that there was litigation concerning said sale? Why did not the sheriff (Ferguson) or Terry's counsel (Bartlett) inform Terry of said sale, and inquire of him what they should do with that portion of the proceeds thereof, to-wit, $2,317.90, and interest, belonging to Terry? Why did not some one of the parties now interested in hav-

*61 ing said judgment against the sheriff and his sureties enjoined *exercise some diligence in ascertaining that the Terry judgment was paid? Not one of these questions is answered by the record. Now, as the record does not show that there was any diligence exercised in ascertaining this fact of payment so as to set it up as a defense in the action on the sheriff's bond, we think the judgment rendered on said bond cannot be perpetually enjoined merely because of said payment. Neither the petition in the court below, nor the evidence, nor the findings of the court, show any diligence. In this respect all are defective. None of them show a complete cause of action; and for this reason we think the judgment of the court below ought to be reversed, and a new trial granted. The record shows that a motion for a new trial was made and overruled. In this the court below also erred.

Second. But it is claimed that said judgment should be enjoined because said sheriff's sale was subsequently ordered to be set aside by the supreme court. There are several answers to this: (1) Said sale was ordered to be set aside for a supposed irregularity, which never in fact existed. It was ordered to be set aside purely for the fault of the sheriff himself in making a false return. And can he now take advantage of his own wrong? Is it possible for an officer to create a good cause of action, (as is claimed he can in this case,) or a good defense, (as is claimed he can to the action on the sheriff's bond,) in favor of himself by his own wrongful acts? We suppose not. (2) Tutts and Baker were not made parties, and had no notice of said motion to set aside said sale, and hence the motion was rightfully overruled in the district court as to them. Mitchell v. Milhoan, 11 Kan. *617. Whatever order, however, might have been made on the motion would, under such circumstances, have been immaterial as to them. (3) Tutts and Baker were not made parties to the petition in error in the supreme court, nor had they any notice thereof; and hence said order of reversal could not affect them or their rights. Ferguson v. Smith, 10 Kan. *401; Armstrong v. Durland, 11 Kan. *15; Hodgson v. Billson, Id. *357. No judgment of reversal *62 was ever rendered in the supreme court against Tutts and Baker, nor could there have been any such judgment; for the supreme court has no more power to render a judgment against a party over whom it has no jurisdiction than any other court has. (4) Said sale has never been set aside as against Tutts and Baker. (5) Nor can it now be set aside for a mere irregularity on the part of the sheriff in making his return of the sale, after the sale has been confirmed, after judgment has been rendered against the sheriff and his sureties for refusing to pay over money collected on said sale, so as to benefit the sheriff and his sureties, and to the injury of the parties who obtained such judgment.

The decree of the district court perpetually enjoining the collection of said judgment is reversed, and a new trial awarded.

HENRY C. CAMPBELL v. A. H. BLANKE and others.

January Term, 1874.

1. Continuance: Promise of Witness. A party who relies upon the promise of a witness residing in a county other than that in which the case is pending to be personally present at the trial, and makes no effort to obtain his deposition, does so at his peril, and, if such witness fails to attend, cannot ordinarily have a continuance on account thereof.<sup>1</sup>

2. Pleading: Allegation of Partnership. A bill of particulars in the name of certain parties plaintiffs as partners, which describes them as partners, and alleges that by their firm name, giving it, they drew a draft upon the defendant, which he accepted, and attaches a copy of the draft with the acceptance indorsed thereon, and also alleges that the defendant has not paid the same, and that it is now due said plaintiffs, is sufficient, even though there be no distinct and formal averment that the plaintiffs were partners.

*63 Action brought by "August H. Blanke, Henry W. Blanke, August Hausman, and Frederick W. Blanke, copartners, *doing business under the name of Blanke & Bros., plaintiffs, against Henry C. Campbell, defendant." The plaintiffs had judgment at the March term, 1873, of the district court.

Ayres & Fox, for plaintiff in error.

F. A. Bettis, for defendants in error.

BREWER, J. This was an action on a bill of exchange, brought first in a justice's court, and thence taken on appeal to the district court of Labette county, in both of which courts defendants in error obtained judgment for the amount of the bill and interest. Plaintiff in error insists that the district court erred in overruling his application for a continuance on the ground of absent testimony. We think not. The testimony was that of a witness residing in Cherokee county. The deposition of this witness was not taken, nor any effort made to take it. The affidavit alleges that the witness agreed to be present, but failed, as affiant was informed and believed, on account of sickness. This is not a showing of sufficient diligence. The law will not compel the attendance of a witness from an adjoining county. His attendance is purely voluntary, and a party relies upon such voluntary attendance at his peril. At least such is the general rule, and this case presents no exception. Educational Ass'n v. Hitchcock, 4 Kan. *36.

Again, the plaintiff in error insists that the bill of particulars did not contain a statement of facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The specific objection is that there is no formal allegation of the partnership of the plaintiffs. The bill of particulars is entitled "A. H. B., H. W. B., A. H., and F. W. B., co-partners, doing business under the name of Blanke & Bros., plaintiffs," etc. It com-
 *64 mences with a like recitation, and alleges *that the "plaintiffs, by the name of Blanke & Bros., made their certain bill of exchange," etc.; alleges the acceptance of such bill by the defendant, and attaches a copy; and also alleges that defendant has not paid the same, or any part of it, and that the same is now due said plaintiffs. We think this is sufficient precision and formality for the pleadings of a justice's court at least. Civil Code, § 123; Justices' Act, § 84.

The judgment will be affirmed.

JOHN M. ALEXANDER v. J. P. TOUHY.

January Term, 1874.

1. Landlord and Tenant: Lease: Removal of Buildings. Where a lessee, by the terms of the lease, is to be deemed the owner of the buildings erected by himself on the leased premises, he may sell or remove said buildings from the leased premises during the continuance of the lease; and a provision in the lease that the lessee may remove said buildings at the expiration of the lease does not prevent him from removing them during the continuance thereof.
2. ———: Lease: Covenants: Re-entry: Forfeiture. Where a lease contains a provision that "if default shall be made in any of the covenants herein contained, then it shall be lawful for the 'lessor' to re-enter the said premises, and to remove all persons therefrom;" and default was made by the lessee; but the lessor never re-entered the premises, nor did anything else for the purpose of creating a forfeiture of the lease; but, on the contrary, sued the lessee for the full amount of the rent which would accrue for said premises up to the time when the lease would expire by the force of its own limitations, although that time had not yet arrived: held, that the lease must be considered as still subsisting, in full force and operation, at the time of the commencement of said suit.

Alexander brought suit against William C. Eagles, J. P. Touhy, and Alexander Repine, as defendants, to recover certain mon-
 *65    eys alleged to be due under a lease from Alexan*der to Eagles, to replevy certain personal property, and to enjoin Touhy from removing from the leased premises a certain building erected thereon by Eagles, the lessee, and sold to him by Eagles. To this petition Touhy demurred. At the May term, 1873, the district court sustained the demurrer, and dissolved and discharged the temporary injunction previously granted as to said Touhy.

Clough & Wheat, for plaintiff in error.

The parties to the lease made an express stipulation as to when and under what circumstances Eagles, the lessee, might remove improvements, which express stipulation was to the effect "that at the expiration of the term of seven years," ending on the thirtieth of June, 1873, Eagles might, if he had previously fulfilled all his covenants in that lease contained, remove such improvements as he might have erected on the premises during said term. By thus expressly contracting as to when and under what circumstances Eagles might remove improvements, all such rights of removal as he would otherwise have had are negatived by the contract, and he was limited as to right of removing improvements, and under that contract he could of course exercise only such right of removal at the expiration of the lease and not before,—at least not until he had fully complied with the terms thereof. "The express mention of one thing implies the exclusion of another." Broom, Leg. Max. 626-642; Parker v. Goddard, 39 Me. 144; Adams v. Goddard, 48 Me. 212. There cannot be any implied contract where, or on a subject as to which, an express contract has been made. Walker v. Brown, 28 Ill. 383; Chit. Cont. 24, notes; New Orleans & J. R. R. v. Pressley, 45 Miss. 66; Roach v. Hulings, 16 Pet. 319; Bigelow v. Jones, 4 Mass. 448; Galloway v. Holmes, 1 Doug. (Mich.) 330; Drake v. Dodsworth, 4 Kan. *160; Bird v. Morrison, 12 Wis. 163. These authorities are, we submit, conclusive that any such implied right of removal as Eagles would have had if the clause in relation to that matter had not been in the lease, did not exist, and could not be exercised by him. The *66 petition shows that he had not complied, and that the circumstances did not exist under which the contract would, if he had fully performed the lease on his part, have permitted him to remove; and by the demurrer Touhy not only admitted non-payment of rent; and non-compliance with the lease by Eagles, but also admitted that Eagles was insolvent, and was about to remove the improvements for the purpose of defrauding the plaintiff. In view of the cases above cited, we suppose it will be conceded that neither Eagles, nor any one claiming under him, had any right to remove buildings, improvements etc., without having first, on his part, fully complied with and performed that contract,—the terms of the lease, on his part; and it stands for true on demurrer that Eagles had not done so. Of course, Touhy had no greater right than Eagles, and held whatever interest, if any, he purchased from Eagles subject to the same terms and conditions as Eagles. Maddox v. White, 4 Md. 72; 1 Hil. Mortg. 227.

The last quarter's rent of the entire term came due before the suit was brought, as the rent after the first year was to be paid in advance, in equal quarter-yearly payments, and therefore plaintiff had a cause of action against Eagles to recover all of the unpaid rents, which cause of action was fully stated in the petition; and the default of Eagles to set out and keep the trees, and his default in paying taxes, each operated to forfeit the lease, without demand, because of which plaintiff could re-enter without demand. Davis & Burrell, 5 E. L. & Eq. 417; Byrane v. Rogers, 8 Minn. 281, (Gil. 247.)

Though we do not consider it necessary in this case to determine whether the lease was forfeited or not, as we think plaintiff had his cause of action and right to sue whether the lease was or was not forfeited, that suing for rent does not operate to waive a forfeiture, even though the suit was to recover the rent for the non-payment of which the lease was forfeited. Campbell v. McElevey, 2 Disney, 574; Gillilan v. Spratt, 41 How. Pr. 27; Tayl. Landl. & Ten. § 499; Hartshorne v. Watson, 4 Bing. (N. C.) 178; Hartshorne v. Watson, 33 E. C. L. 657; Doe v. Batten, Cowp. 243. But whether there had or had not been a forfeiture is immaterial in this case. The suit is *67 to recover *rent, and to keep the security for the payment thereof where the parties to the contract agreed it should remain until Eagles had performed the requirements of the lease on his part.

Green & Foster, for defendant in error.

There was no error in sustaining the demurrer of defendant in error. By the contract of lease it clearly appears that in contemplation of the parties the improvements which Eagles might put on the premises should be his personal property; otherwise reference would not have been made to their removal at the end of the term; nor would the parties have provided for the assessment and taxation of the improvements separately from the realty, if it had been intended that they should have become a part thereof. Gen. St. 543, c. 56, § 31. The improvements, then, being Eagles' personal property, it was competent for him to sell them, and make a good title, or they might have been sold on execution, and the purchaser have acquired a perfect title; so that in whichever way Touhy obtained his interest, his right of removal was complete. Tayl. Landl. & Ten. § 551; Keogh v. Daniell, 12 Wis. 163.

The petition does not show any forfeiture of the lease, but, on the contrary, treats the tenancy as still subsisting pending the litigation, by suing for the whole rent due up to the end of the term; and a lessor cannot avoid a lease for a breach of the covenant when, by his own act, subsequent to the breach, he treats the tenancy as still subsisting. Garnhart v. Finney, 40 Mo. 449. And, in order to show a forfeiture for non-payment of the rent, the lessor must allege and prove a demand for the rent on the day it becomes due. Tayl. Landl. & Ten. §§ 297, 493, 495; Meni v. Rathbone, 21 Ind. 454; Smith v. Whitbeck, 13 Ohio St. 471; Boyd's Lessee v. Talbert, 12 Ohio, 212; Bowman v. Foot, 1 Amer. Law Reg. (N. S.) 352.

The mere fact of the non-payment of rent does not work a forfeiture of the lease, but demand must be made at the proper time for the rent, and the ten-days' notice must be given as required by section 7 of the landlord and tenant act, (Gen. St. 540,) before the lease *68 can be determined; and no such demand or notice is alleged, and the petition is therein insufficient. Chapter 131, § 4, Comp. Laws 1862, under which the lease was made, gave the remedy of ten days' notice only against tenants at will and from year to year.

The statutes give no lien to the landlord except in the single case of rent due for farming land; and provides specifically that rents shall be collected as other debts; and there is no more a landlord's lien than a vendor's lien.

The tenant has a right to remove any improvements placed by him on the premises for his enjoyment during the term. Tayl. Landl. & Ten. 546; Van Ness v. Packard, 2 Pet. 137; Johnson v. Carter, 16 Mass. 444; Brown v. Lillie, 6 Nev. 244; Antoni v. Belknap, 102 Mass. 193; Perkins v. Swank, 43 Miss. 349; Meigs' Appeal, 62 Pa. St. 28; Northern Cent. Ry. Co. v. Canton Co., 30 Md. 347. And the provision in the lease that the lessee might remove at the expiration of the term does not abridge the lessee's rights to remove during the term, but rather enlarges, so as to allow a removal at the expiration of the term.

VALENTINE, J. The plaintiff, Alexander, leased to William C. Eagles two certain lots in Leavenworth city for the term of seven years, commencing on July 1, 1866. Eagles covenanted to pay certain rent, to set out and take care of certain trees, and to pay all taxes that might be levied on the improvements made by himself. The following stipulations are contained in said lease, to-wit: "And it is agreed that if any rent shall be due and unpaid, or if default shall be made in any of the covenants herein contained, then it shall be lawful for the said party of the first part to re-enter the said premises, and to remove all persons therefrom." "And it is agreed that at the expiration of said term of seven years the said party of the second part, having previously filled all his said covenants herein contained, may remove from said premises any and all improvements which he may have erected thereon during said term. It is further understood that said party of the second part shall pay all taxes, general or special, that may be assessed against any and all improvements that may be put on said premises during said term."

*69 *Eagles did not perform all of his said covenants, and in May, 1873, the plaintiff commenced this action against Eagles and the other defendants, Touhy and Repine. The action was—First, to recover $350, including the following items, to-wit: $150 for rent not paid, $150 as damages for not setting out and taking care of said trees, and $50 for taxes levied on said improvements and paid by the plaintiff; second, replevin for a house removed from said premises, and placed on other premises; third, for an injunction to restrain the defendants from removing other buildings from said premises. It seems from the petition below that the defendant Eagles had erected six buildings on said premises. The petition below set up all of these facts, and other facts. The only allegation, however, relating particularly to the defendant Touhy reads as follows: "The said plaintiff further avers that the said J. P. Touhy claims to have purchased one of the said buildings, which he threatens to remove from said premises, and which he is now preparing to remove from said premises."

Touhy demurred to this petition on the grounds—First, that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against him; second, several causes of action were improperly joined. The court below sustained the demurrer on the first ground, and to reverse that ruling the plaintiff now brings the case to this court. We think, however, that the demurrer was rightfully sustained. The lease evidently contemplated that Eagles should be the owner of all the buildings erected by himself on said premises. He was to pay the taxes on them. He was to have the privilege of removing them at the expiration of his lease. There was nothing in the lease to prevent him from removing them sooner, and there was no provision giving the plaintiff any lien upon them prior to the termination of the lease; and if the buildings belonged to Eagles, he of course had the right to sell them or to remove them, or to authorize any one else to remove them, at his pleasure. There is no law to prevent him from so doing, and the provision in the lease that he may remove them at the expiration *70 of the lease can hardly be construed as preventing him from removing them or selling them during the continuance of the lease.

It will be noticed that the only provision in the lease that contemplates in any degree a forfeiture of any kind is the one which provides that "if default shall be made in any of the covenants herein contained, then it shall be lawful for the" plaintiff "to re-enter the said premises, and to remove all persons therefrom." A default alone does not create a forfeiture; it only gives the plaintiff the right to demand a forfeiture. He must "re-enter the premises, and remove all persons therefrom," or demand a removal, in order to create a forfeiture. But nothing was ever done under this provision for the purpose of creating a forfeiture. On the contrary, the plaintiff sued the defendants for all the rent that would accrue for said premises up to the time when said lease would expire by the force of its own limitations, although that time had not yet arrived; thereby ratifying and confirming the continued existence of said lease. The lease was therefore subsisting in full force and operation when this action was commenced. For the same reasons that the demurrer was rightfully sustained the injunction against Touhy was rightfully dissolved.

CITY OF TROY v. ATCHISON & N. R. Co. and others.<sup>1</sup>

January Term, 1874.

1. Municipal Corporation: Power to Contract. Where a city has made a valid subscription of $50,000 to a railroad company, and issued $25,000 of its bonds in payment of one-half the subscription, it can make a valid contract whereby, in consideration of its stock in the company and $6,000, it is relieved of any liability for the remaining $25,000 of its subscription; and this, whether it has issued its bonds for said $25,000 or not.
- *71 *2. ———: City Ordinance: Evidence: Estoppel. Where a city fails to provide any book for the record of its ordinances, but its ordinances, after their passage and approval, are placed and kept on file in the office of the city clerk, and a third party obtains a duly-certified copy of an ordinance so placed and kept on file, and acts in good faith upon such ordinance, and is induced partly thereby to make a large expenditure of money, in a subsequent controversy between such city and such third parties or their assigns, the rule of equitable estoppel will apply to such city, and the due passage and existence of said ordinance may be shown by parol testimony.

Motion for a rehearing.

This case was brought to this court on error from Doniphan district court, and was heard and decided at the July term, 1873, and is reported in 11 Kan. *519. This court affirmed the judgment of the court below. After the opinion was filed, the plaintiff in error, the City of Troy, filed a motion for a rehearing.

Nathan Price, in support of said motion.

W. W. Guthrie, in opposition.

BREWER, J. Counsel presses earnestly on our attention, upon a motion for rehearing, two principal points: First, he claims that the court erred in its statements as to the issue of $25,000 of city bonds, and hence erred in its judgment as to the power of the city to make the contract referred to. There was a slight error in the statement of facts in the opinion filed in this case, (11 Kan. *526,) though the facts are correctly stated in the opinion filed when the case was here on error to reverse the temporary injunction order. Atchison & N. R. Co. v. City of Troy, 10 Kan. *517. The error is this: The city subscribed for $50,000 of stock, to be paid for with $50,000 of its bonds. The opinion states that $25,000 of these bonds had *72 been issued, and the remaining $25,000 were *placed in the hands of trustees as security only for the payment of $6,000. The facts are, as a re-examination of the record shows, that no bonds were issued except the $25,000 placed in the hands of the trustees as security. But this certainly cannot alter the power of the city. A valid contract of subscription having been made, it was entitled to $50,000 of stock, and owed $50,000 of bonds. The issue of these bonds could have been enforced by mandamus. It could in like manner have compelled the issue of the stock. With the legal rights and obligations existing by virtue of this contract of subscription, it can contract in reference to those rights and obligations as well as it could in reference to the bonds and stock when already issued. It sold its right to the stock, and was released from its obligation to issue the bonds, for the sum of $6,000,—a contract it had the same right to make that it would have had, in case both bonds and stock had been issued, to have purchased its outstanding bonds by the sale of its stock and the payment of a difference of $6,000. We regret the error in the statement of the facts, and are grateful to counsel for calling our attention to it. But we cannot see that the change in the facts affects in the slightest the question as to the power of the city.

It was not an error that affected the nature of the original contract of subscription, or the later one of sale, but only the extent to which the original contract had been carried into effect by one party to its terms.

The other, and really the important, point is that the court sustained the introduction of parol testimony to show the passage of an ordinance. A careful re-examination of the question does not satisfy us that we were wrong in the views expressed in the opinion, and those views we reaffirm. It may, perhaps, be proper to state, in order to guard against misapprehension, that we do not by any means hold that a party may, independent of any question of equitable estoppel, and without other and corroboratory circumstances, introduce parol proof of the passage of an ordinance, and found thereon *73 any claim against the city. *Here the findings show that the railroad company had, on the strength of the acts of the city, and relying on the certified copies of the ordinance and other proceedings of the city council, duly attested, been to an extra expenditure of a large sum of money,—facts presenting a strong foundation for the application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel. A certified copy of the ordinance, duly attested by the proper officers, is in evidence. Record evidence is before the court also of the passage by the council of resolutions, and of other proceedings of the council, which imply the previous passage of such an ordinance, and are meaningless without it. An election, which is a matter of public notoriety, is shown to have been held,—an election which implied the existence as well as required the authority of a prior ordinance, and public notice of which is shown to have been posted about the city. The ordinance itself is produced from the files of ordinances kept by the city register. The testimony of the city officials is that they had no book in which to record the ordinances, and that they were thus kept on file, waiting till some book should be purchased in which to record them; and also that the proceedings of the council were kept on slips and pieces of paper. Under all these corroboratory circumstances, and with the pressure of the equitable estoppel, we cannot say that the district court erred in admitting parol proof that the ordinance did, as a matter of fact, pass the council, and receive the approval of the mayor.

The distinction which counsel presses between acts which are within the scope of the ordinary powers of a city and those which belong only to its extraordinary powers, does not seem to us to be material in this case.

The motion will be overruled.

*74      *D. W. POWERS and others v. AMOS KINDT.

January Term, 1874.

1. Supreme Court: Error must be Specified. Only such alleged errors as are specifically pointed out by counsel will be considered by this court. When counsel claim that the testimony does not support the findings, without pointing out which finding is objected to, or wherein the testimony fails to support it, this court will not ordinarily look through a lengthy record to see if there be not some particular fact unsupported by testimony.
2. Trespass: Fences: Damages. In an action for damages by cattle to growing crops, proof that the growing crops were not inclosed by a legal and sufficient fence will not defeat the action, when it appears that the cattle were driven upon the premises by their owners, and that the latter were guilty of a wanton and willful want of care.<sup>1</sup>
3. ———: Apportionment of Damages. Where growing crops are destroyed by trespassing cattle belonging to two parties, trespassing repeatedly through the season; and where, in the nature of things, it is impossible to distinguish between the trespass of one lot of cattle and that of the other, or to determine the actual amount of damage done by either separately; and where the district court apportioned the damage according to the number of cattle belonging to the respective parties, and allowed the owner of the crops to recover in an action against one of the parties only the proportion of the damages given by such apportionment: held, that such party had no grounds to complain of the amount of the judgment.

Error from Saline district court.

The case is stated in the opinion.

John G. Spivey, for plaintiffs in error.

The conclusions of fact by the court are not findings as conclusions of fact from the testimony, but merely a report on the evidence, and insufficient to sustain the judgment, and *said conclusions of fact are not sustained by the evidence, and do not sustain the judgment.

The court having found that defendant in error had no legal fence or inclosure around his premises, and failing to find (as the evidence clearly fails to show) that plaintiffs in error were guilty of driving and herding their cattle on the premises of defendants in error, as alleged, is fatal to the judgment of the court.

The finding of the court that the cattle of witness Hughes and others, jointly with cattle of plaintiffs in error, caused certain portions of damages complained of, is fatal; and the more clearly so because the evidence of defendant in error and others shows that the cattle of other parties, and even of Kindt, defendant in error, did damage to said crops and premises.

The testimony showing that plaintiffs in error were the owners of premises used as a cattle ranch, adjoining those of defendant in error; and also showing that plaintiffs in error employed men to keep their cattle from the crops and premises of defendant in error,—surely does not render them liable in damages as having driven and herded their cattle on premises and crops of defendant in error, or sustain such allegation, when they (plaintiffs in error) would not have been liable if they had turned their cattle loose, and they had roamed on premises of defendant in error, and destroyed his crops, if that had been alleged.

The testimony does not show any just or true rule for measuring damages of defendant in error.

E. W. Hodgkinson and Case & Putnam, for defendant in error.

The court's findings are gross negligence, and wanton and willful trespass, on the part of Powers & Co., and the amount of damages; and that Kindt was guilty of negligence in not having a legal fence only, except as to corn in crib, and in that respect had a legal fence. If the testimony warrants such findings, there is no error in the case.

That it does, there is no doubt. And this court has decided *76 that where a *trespass is wantonly and maliciously committed, the injured party may recover, (Larkin v. Taylor, 5 Kan.
*445, *446;) and in the case at bar the evidence clearly shows wanton and malicious trespass.

BREWER, J. Defendant in error brought his action in the district court, and recovered a judgment for damages to his growing grass and corn, done by the cattle of plaintiffs in error during the years 1869, 1870, and 1871. Several points are presented by counsel for plaintiffs in error in his brief, some of which we do not feel called upon to notice; as, for instance, where he claims that the conclusions of fact are not sustained by the evidence, without specifying which particular finding he objects to, or wherein the testimony fails to support it. With the increasing pressure of business in this court, we have not time to notice any but such objections as are specifically and clearly pointed out.

It is insisted that because the findings show that Kindt had no legal fence or enclosure around his premises he was not entitled to recover. But the court also finds that Powers' cattle were driven and herded upon the premises of Kindt against his wishes and consent, and while so driven and herded destroyed the property as alleged; and as a conclusion of law, from the various facts found, that Powers was guilty of a wanton and willful want of care. This brings the case within the rule laid down in Larkin v. Taylor, 5 Kan. *433, *446. It is claimed that because the plaintiffs in error employed herders to watch their cattle, and keep them off from other parties' crops and premises, they could not be held liable where they would not have been held liable if they had simply turned them loose, and they had roamed upon Kindt's premises, and done the damage complained of. This ignores the fact that the court finds that these cattle were driven and herded upon Kindt's premises, which brings in the element of gross negligence, or wanton and willful want of care.

It is true, the testimony is conflicting on this point; but there •77 is positive testimony to *support the finding, and of course this must be taken as conclusive.

Another objection is that, as to one item of damage, it was not done by the cattle of plaintiffs in error solely, but that other cattle were with theirs, and assisted in the destruction. The finding is that in 1870 Powers' cattle, to the number of 600, were driven and herded upon Kindt's premises, and that they, with 25 head of cattle belonging to one Hughes, ate up and destroyed 100 acres of grass of the value of one dollar an acre. The total amount of damage would then be one hundred dollars, caused by 625 head of cattle. There is nothing in the findings or testimony tending to show how much of this damage was done by any specific cattle, and, in the nature of things, it could not well be shown. The cattle, as appears from the testimony, were off and on the premises, sometimes but two or three, and sometimes all of them together. It would be impossible, under such circumstances, to show what damage each particular steer or number of steers did. Would the plaintiff thereby lose all redress? Clearly not. The court apportioned the damage according to the number of cattle belonging to the respective parties. Finding that 625 cattle had destroyed one hundred dollars' worth of grass, the owners of 600 head were held responsible for $96 of the damages. We do not mean to decide that this rule of apportionment is one that ought always to be enforced, but we do hold that the plaintiffs in error have no ground to complain of it. These are the only questions that seem to demand especial notice, and, no error appearing in them, the judgment will be affirmed.

*WILLIAM J. LARIMER v. FANNY KELLY.

January Term, 1874.

New Trial: Misconduct of Jurors: Intoxicating Liquors. Where a case has been submitted to the jury, and the jury have retired to consider of their verdict, but afterwards have separated by permission of the court, and with the consent of both the parties, the mere drinking of intoxicating liquor by one of the jurors while the jury are thus separated will not of itself have the effect to require that the verdict afterwards rendered by the jury shall be set aside, and a new trial granted.<sup>1</sup>

Error from Woodson district court.

This case was here twice before. 10 Kan. *298, *307. On filing the mandate in the court below (Allen county district court) a change of venue was taken to Woodson county, where the case was tried at the June term, 1873. Verdict and judgment in favor of Kelly for $285.50.

H. W. Talcott and L. W. Keplinger, for plaintiff in error.

W. A. Johnson, for defendant in error.

VALENTINE, J. The record shows that this case was regularly tried before a jury in the court below. The jury retired to consider of their verdict. Afterwards one of the jurors became sick, and the court, with the assent of both parties, allowed the jury to separate till next morning at 8:30 o'clock. At about 8 o'clock the next morning one of the jurors took a drink of intoxicating liquor. Afterwards the court convened, and the jury again retired to consider of their verdict, and subsequently returned into the court-room, and rendered their verdict in favor of the plaintiff below, (defendant in error,) and against the defendant below, (plaintiff in error,) for the sum

*79 of $285.50. Afterwards the defendant below moved for a new trial on the ground, among others, for misconduct of jury. The court overruled the motion, and rendered judgment for the plaintiff in accordance with said verdict. The only question now presented for our consideration is whether the drinking of said intoxicating liquor by said juror was sufficient to invalidate the verdict of the jury, and whether the court erred in refusing to set aside said verdict, and to grant a new trial for that reason. We must answer this question in the negative. There is nothing to show that the plaintiff below furnished said liquor, nor who furnished it. It may have been furnished by the defendant below. There is nothing to show that the liquor had any influence on the juror's mind, or that it had any influence upon him in any respect, or that it rendered him any the less competent to render a correct verdict. There is nothing to show how long the liquor was drank before the verdict was rendered. The liquor was drank at about 8 o'clock in the morning. The verdict may have been rendered at 8 o'clock in the evening. The only question, then, is whether the mere drinking of intoxicating liquor by a juror, where the liquor does not appear to have had any appreciable influence upon the juror or his conduct, is sufficient to require that the verdict rendered by him, and eleven other jurors against whom no objection is made, shall be set aside. We have already decided that the verdict of a jury cannot be set aside in such a case where the liquor was drank before the jury retired to consider of their verdict, (Perry v. Bailey, 12 Kan. *539,) and we cannot see that the drinking of the liquor after the jury have retired to consider of their verdict, but while separated, can make any difference.

The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

*80      *H. JENNINGS and others v. STATE OF KANSAS.

January Term, 1874.

1. Recognizance: Pleading. In an action upon a forfeited recognizance, given upon the continuance of a criminal cause from one term to another, an allegation of the filing of an information, an order of continuance, etc., is sufficient, without averring a prior arrest and a preliminary examination, or a waiver of it.<sup>1</sup>
2. Process: Commitment. The warrant of commitment issued upon such continuance is a process of the court, and should be under the seal of the court, and signed by the clerk, and should not be under the hand of the judge.
3. Information: Record: Presumption. Where the information is not preserved in the record, it will be presumed that it sufficiently and fully charged a crime of which the court had jurisdiction; and then a warrant which refers to the filing of the information, and states generally the character of the crime, without stating the particular facts and circumstances of the case, or the county in which the crime is charged to have been committed, will be held sufficient.
4. Recognizance: Omission of Record. An omission to file and record the recognizance, as required by section 144 of the Criminal Code, before the forfeiture, is not such an omission as will defeat a recovery.
5. Courts: Description of District Court. A description of the district court of Cloud county as the "Twelfth judicial district court, sitting in and for the county of Cloud," is not a misdescription, though perhaps unnecessarily full.

<sup>1</sup>Sufficiency of petition, in actions of forfeited recognizances, determined. See Swerdsfeger v. State, 21 Kan. 477, and cases there cited. See Gay v. State, 7 Kan. 246, and note.

6. Recognizance: Rules of Decision. Section 154 of the Criminal Code has made radical and sweeping changes in the rules of decision in actions on forfeited recognizances, and under it the old decisions are of little value as authority in this state.

Error from Cloud district court.

An action was instituted by the county attorney in the name of the State against Hezekiah Jennings, B. C. Sanders, Milo Stevens, and Richard Werst, upon a recognizance taken in a criminal action, executed by said Jennings as principal and the other defendants as sureties. The defendants demurred to the petition. At the May term, 1873, the district court overruled the demurrer. The defendants then filed a general denial, the case was tried, and judgment *81 was given against *the defendants.

L. J. Crans, for plaintiffs in error.

The court erred in overruling the demurrer. The second ground of demurrer was that the petition did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The petition sets out that "Hezekiah Jennings, one of the defendants above named, was, at the May term of the said district court, in the year 1872, sitting in and for said county of Cloud, by the county attorney of said county, charged with grand larceny, as appears from the information filed in said case at said term of court; whereupon it was ordered," etc. The county attorney could not file an information against any person, for any offense, until such person had had a preliminary examination therefor, as provided by law, unless such person waived his right to such examination. Gen. St. 832, § 69; State v. Barnett, 3 Kan. *250. There is no averment of an arrest, nor of a preliminary examination, nor of waiver thereof. These averments are necessary, and must be proved. The petition does not show that the principal defendant was legally in custody, charged with a public offense. Gen. St. 844, § 154; Id. 647, § 87.

The petition avers: "It was ordered by the court that this cause be continued, and the defendant held to bail in the sum of $800 for his appearance at the next term of said court; and in default thereof he stand committed to the common jail of Cloud county; and if there be no jail in Cloud county, then that the defendants be committed to the jail of the county of Riley, there to remain until he be discharged by due course of law; which order of commitment was duly issued by said court, and delivered to the sheriff of Cloud county, a copy of which commitment is hereto attached, and made part of this petition." There is no such commitment, as is averred, attached to the petition. The paper attached to said petition was not duly issued by the court, and is not a proper commitment. It was not duly issued.

*82 "The mittimus must be in writing, and under the hand and seal of the magistrate, and show the time and place of making it." 2 Hale, 122; 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 109; 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16, § 13. The mittimus is not signed by the magistrate. The certificate is made by a person styling himself "clerk of the Twelfth judicial district," (an office unknown to the law;) and he signs it thus: "W. E. REM, Clerk District Court." Clerk of what district court? of what county? of what state, or country? "Where a recognizance is taken by a sheriff, his attestation must show the county for which he is sheriff, otherwise the recognizance will be void." State v. Austin, 4 Humph. 213. A glance at our statutes shows it was the duty of the judge to sign the mittimus. "It shall be the duty of the magistrate to commit to prison until he find the same, specifying in the warrant the cause of commitment, and the sum in which security was required." Crim. Code, § 10. "When such person shall fail to recognize, he shall be committed to prison by an order under the hand of the magistrate." Id. § 47. "If the defendant is committed to jail the magistrate shall make out a written commitment, signed by him, which shall be delivered to the jailor by the officer who executes the order of commitment. He shall indorse upon the order of commitment the sum in which bail is required." Id. § 56. "Warrants authorized by law to be issued in criminal cases may be under the hand of a magistrate issuing the same, and shall be as valid and effectual in all respects as if sealed." Id. § 310. These sections, as well as sections 258, 280, and 302, show that it is the duty of the judge to sign the commitment.

A jail is required to be kept at the county-seat of each county, (Gen. St. 254, § 4,) and it is the duty of the jailor to receive in custody under his charge any person lawfully committed to such jail, (Gen. St. 358, § 189.) The magistrate can only commit to the county jail, and the commitment should name the place of imprisonment. Rex v. Smith, 2 Strange, 934; Rex v. Fell, 1 Ld. Raym. 424. The mittimus here sets out, "Hezekiah Jennings is required to be safely kept and confined in the jail of Riley county, in the state of *83 Kansas." The paper *is addressed to the sheriff of Cloud county, directing him to imprison in another county. There is authority under our statutes to imprison in a different county from the one in which the arrest was made, or the hearing or commitment was had; but, in the first place, the commitment must be to the county jail of the original county, and then, on the application of the sheriff, in case there is no sufficient jail in the county, the committing magistrate or judge of the district court or criminal court of such county may order any person charged with crime, and ordered to be committed to prison, to be sent to the jail of the county nearest having a sufficient jail. Gen. St. 532, § 16.

The clerk of the court had no authority to issue a warrant of commitment. Section 135, c. 82, might, at first sight, seem to imply such right, but that section applies to warrants of arrest, provided for by section 126, directing warrants to be issued on filing of informations; and this section is to be so construed as to mean informations legally filed; that is, in all cases where the court has jurisdiction to try offenses on information without preliminary examination, or in such extreme cases as section 71 provides for. There are but few instances in which the clerk is authorized to issue warrants or orders in criminal cases. These are found in section 126, to issue warrants of arrest after information filed; in section 247, after conviction, when the defendant is not present, and when his attendance is necessary, to issue warrants of arrest; and in sections 254, 255, and 256, after conviction, in certain cases, to certify sentences, which shall be a sufficient authority to the sheriff or officer. These are the only sections in the Statutes which confer authority on the clerk; and as they do not provide for the issuing by him of such a paper as the one called a "mittimus," the paper was not a mittimus, nor could the jailor receive or hold a person thereunder.

Again, said paper, as well as the petition, simply says that Hezekiah Jennings was charged with grand larceny. They do not allege when or where the offense was committed, and that the court had *84 jurisdiction thereof. "It should set forth *the complaint on which it was founded." Com. v. Ward, 4 Mass. 497; Brady v. Davis, 9 Ga. 73; 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 111.

The petition further alleges that the defendants entered into a "recognizance, a copy of which is attached and made a part of this petition." The plaintiff makes profert of a recognizance, and produces a bond. The paper commences as a bond,— "Know all men by these presents;" not as a recognizance,— "Be it remembered." It sets out, as a bond, that the makers "are held and firmly bound in the penal sum of," not that the parties "acknowledged themselves to owe." It concludes as a bond, and was so considered by the officer when he wrote at the foot thereof: "This bond as to amount," etc. "A recognizance is an acknowledgment of record of a pre-existing debt owing by the cognizors to the state, not as sureties, but as principals." Gay v. State, 7 Kan. *394. "A writing in the form of a bond, with collateral conditions, is not such an instrument as carries with it any of the evidence which in law distinguishes a recognizance from other obligations." State v. Floyd, 9 Ark. 313. "When the statute requires a recognizance, a bond will not answer," (Laturner v. State, 9 Tex. 451;) "nor will a deposit of money," (Butler v. Foster, 14 Ala. 323.) Our statutes allow money to be deposited. This alleged recognizance was not acknowledged. The officer wrote at the foot these words: "This bond, as to amount and sureties, approved this twentieth day of May, 1872." "An acknowledgment signed and sealed by the accused and two others, at the foot of which the judge wrote the words, 'attested and approved,' was not a recognizance, but was unauthorized and void." State v. West, 3 Ohio St. 509. It was not taken before a person properly qualified to take it, the sheriff having no legal warrant or mittimus authorizing him to arrest or hold the party. "An instrument of writing in the form of a recognizance in a criminal proceeding, but which was taken before the clerk of the district court, acknowledged before him, and approved by him is void." Morrow v. State, 5 Kan. *563; S. C. 6 Kan. *228. "A recognizance ought to state the ground on which it was taken, so that it may appear that the magistrate *taking it had jurisdiction and authority to demand and receive it." State v. Smith, 2 Greenl. 62; Com. v. Downey, 9 Mass. 520; Com. v. Daggett, 16 Mass. 447.

The paper on which this action was founded was not filed; and said paper, it is admitted, "was never in the possession of the clerk of the district court of Cloud county, nor filed by him, prior to the twelfth of November, 1872, nor ever recorded in the Recognizance Docket of said court." Filing was essential to give the paper force as a recognizance. "Every recognizance taken by any judge, justice of the peace, sheriff, or other officer must be certified by him forthwith to the clerk of the court to which the defendant is recognized. The clerk must thereupon record the recognizance in the Recognizance Docket, and from the time of filing it has the same effect as if taken in open court." Gen. St. 642, § 144. The recognizance must be filed and made a record of the court to sustain a suit, (Morrow v. State, 5 Kan. *563,) and this must be averred in the declaration, (McAllister v. Reab, 4 Wend. 487.) "A declaration upon such recognizance will be bad unless it aver that such return and memorandum were made." Sargeant v. State, 16 Ohio. St. 267. "The recognizance must contain all the essential parts, both of the obligation and condition, and none of the essential parts can be supplied by oral testimony. A memorandum is not a recognizance." "A recognizance which is defective in any particular which by law is essential to its validity cannot be aided by oral testimony." Dennard v. State, 2 Ga. 137. This bond does not show to what court the accused was recognized, or, at least, shows a different court from the one in which the forfeiture was declared. It says: "Shall be and appear before the district court aforesaid." The word "aforesaid" applies to the language: "The Twelfth judicial district court, sitting in and for the county of Cloud, in the state of Kansas." There is no such court in Cloud county. The court in which the forfeiture was made was "The district court of Cloud county." This is the proper title of the court. Gen. St. 304, §§ 1, 3, 4; Id. 822, § 9; Const. art. 2, § 18; Id. art. 3, §§ 1, 5, 6, 7, 10, 13. "The recognizance must show on its face the court to which the defendant is bound to appear." State v. Rye, 9 Yerg. 386. "A recogni*zance requiring a defendant, in a criminal case, to appear before the circuit court of a county (there being no such court) cannot be enforced against the recognizers by virtue of forfeiture taken in the district court." Sherman v. State, 4 Kan. 570. A recognizance should fix the time for appearance, and cannot be forfeited at a subsequent period. State v. Sullivan, 3 Yerg. 281; Com. v. Bolton, 1 Serg. & R. 328; Com. v. Cayton, 2 Dana, 138; People v. Derby, 1 Parker, Crim. Rep. 392.

The petition sets up a recognizance, "entered into by said Hezekiah Jennings, with B. C. Sanders, Milo Stevens, and Richard Werst, as sureties," and the exhibit shows a bond, naming Hezekiah Jennings as principal, and Hezekiah Jennings, B. C. Sanders, Richard Werst, and Milo Stevens as sureties. If the latter had been offered in evidence under a declaration upon the former it would have been held a fatal variance. 1 Chit. Pl. 334, 336.

The petition should have contained a "statement of the facts constituting the cause of action." Code, § 87. "Whatever circumstances are necessary to constitute the cause of complaint must be stated in the pleading." 1 Chit. Pl. 245. The petition failed to allege such facts as would authorize the sheriff to take a recognizance,—that the officer had the principal defendant legally in custody, charged with a public offense; that he was discharged therefrom by reason of giving the recognizance; that an obligation was entered into having the essential requisites of a recognizance; that the same was filed before forfeiture, so as to give it the effect of a recognizance taken in open court; that it was recorded as required by law in the Recognizance Docket, or that the court to which the accused was recognized declared the recognizance forfeited. For these reasons the court should have sustained the demurrer of the defendants. 2 Chit. Pl. 472, note h; Id. 473, notes l, p; Id. 479, notes d, e.

At the trial the court erred in admitting in evidence the papers copies of which are attached to plaintiff's petition. This trial occurred on the third day of May, 1873, the alleged forfeiture on the eleventh of November, 1872; and when the objections were *87 urged against the reading of the papers the *one called the recognizance was not yet filed and made a paper of the court; nor was it filed until after the court had found for the plaintiff; nor had it been recorded in the Recognizance Docket. Crim. Code, §§ 136, 137, 144, 147, 148, 150. The papers clearly were not evidence. "In an action upon such an instrument it is error for the district court to permit the same to be introduced in evidence, whatever the other evidence in the case may have been." Morrow v. State, 5 Kan. *563. The reasons urged in support of our demurrer show that this evidence should have been rejected.

The court erred in finding the issues for the plaintiff. The case made sets forth all the evidence offered in the court below. There was no evidence to show that Jennings was ever in custody, legally or otherwise; that he was charged with a public offense; that he was discharged from custody by reason of giving a recognizance. There was no evidence that the paper read in evidence was ever taken by the sheriff; he simply approved the bond as to amount and sureties. Such is his return,—no more, no less. There was no proof that either of the defendants subscribed their names to the paper called the "recognizance." This was necessary. Crim. Code, § 136. There was no allegation in the petition of the execution of a written instrument which, under section 108 of the Civil Code, would, through failure to verify the answer, cause the same to be taken as true. It says that "the said Hezekiah Jennings entered into a recognizance with B. C. Sanders, Milo Stevens, and Richard Werst, his sureties." Nowhere does it declare that Jennings and his sureties entered into a recognizance to or with "the state of Kansas." Without such an averment the plaintiff does not show capacity or title to sue. Had the alleged recognizance been offered and read without objection, the want of proof of execution and signature would have been dispensed with. We having objected, such proof was required. The evidence which the plaintiff produced, coupled with the admission of plaintiff's counsel, was proof beyond doubt that the paper read in evidence never was certified to the clerk of the district court, and never *88 filed or *recorded so as to make it what a recognizance is,— "an obligation of record." The plaintiff having failed to show that there was "an obligation of record," that the conditions of such obligation had not been complied with; and that the court in which said obligation was recorded had legally forfeited the recognizance,— the court below should have found for the defendants instead of the plaintiff, on the evidence.

H. A. Hunter and E. J. Jenkins, for the State.

It was not necessary to allege in the petition in this case that there was a preliminary examination, or waiver thereof. State v. Finley, 6 Kan. *366. In the criminal prosecution the defendant might plead such fact (if it existed) against the information; but when the petition in this case states that Jennings was in said information "charged with grand larceny," and said information being filed in the proper court, it alleged that he was charged with a public offense; for grand larceny is a public offense under the statute.

No matter how a person comes before a court, whether by warrant, or whether brought before the court without process, or by his voluntary appearance. When there, the court has an undoubted right to inquire into any charge against him, as to the cause of his detention, and to admit him to bail, and take recognizance of him and his sureties, if in the judgment of the court the case requires such a course. Mix v. People, 26 Ill. 34. The court ordered Jennings to be committed, in default of bail, to the jail of Cloud county, if there be a jail in said county; and if there be no such jail, then in the jail of Riley county, which the court could properly do. Gen. St. c. 53, § 16. The recognizance was properly taken and approved by the sheriff. Jennings being in the custody of the sheriff under the commitment on which the amount of bail was fixed by the court, the sheriff could approve the recognizance or "bond," and discharge the defendant. Crim. Code, § 143; Ingram v. State, 10 Kan. *630.

*89 No particular form of the recognizance or certificate was necessary; and it is not material what language is used, so *that it appears that the parties gave, and the officers took and accepted, the recognizance for the purposes contemplated by law. 17 Ill.

174; Crim. Code, § 154; Gay v. State, 7 Kan. *404; McLaughlin v. State, 10 Kan. *581. The rule of the common law requiring strict construction of recognizances has been changed and modified by statute. Crim. Code, § 154.

The failure to file the recognizance with the clerk, or to record the same in the Recognizance Docket, did not invalidate the recognizance as between the cognizors and the state. Benham v. Conklin, 3 Ohio St. 509; State v. Williams, 14 Ohio St. 140. The statute requiring the filing and recording of a recognizance is only directory; and, as between the cognizors and the state, has no more to do with the validity of the recognizance than a failure to record a deed between the grantor and grantee. If the cognizors signed the recognizance, and delivered it to the sheriff, it did not change their rights for the sheriff to hold the recognizance instead of delivering it to the clerk, and the clerk recording it as required by law. The object of requiring the recognizance to be returned to the clerk, and recorded in the Recognizance Docket is merely to prevent the same from being lost or destroyed. Benham v. Conklin, supra; Crim. Code, § 154.

BREWER, J. This was an action in the district court of Cloud county upon a forfeited recognizance. As the record fails to show affirmatively that all the evidence is preserved, we must presume that there was sufficient to sustain the general finding in favor of the plaintiff; so that the only questions before us arise on the overruling of a demurrer to the petition, and the effect of a fact admitted by the county attorney upon the trial.

The petition alleges no proceedings prior to the information. It alleges the filing of an information charging Hezekiah Jennings with the crime of grand larceny. It does not aver a prior arrest, a preliminary examination, nor a waiver of one. Hence counsel claim that the petition fails to show that the principal defendant *90 *was legally in custody, or that any recognizance could lawfully be required of him. This is a mistake. Under some circumstances an information may be filed without prior proceedings. Gen. St. 832, §§ 69, 71; Laws 1871, p. 279, § 2. If a party pleads to an information, and goes to trial upon it, he cannot thereafter claim a discharge from custody, or an arrest of judgment, because of the want of a prior examination. So, where a petition alleges the filing of an information by the proper officer, in the proper court, the continuance of the case, and an order of the court requiring the defendant to give bail or be committed to the custody of the sheriff, it will be presumed that the information was filed under such circumstances as warranted its filing. Greater fullness seems unnecessary. Mix v. People, 26 Ill. 32.

A second objection is that the warrant to the sheriff is not signed by the judge, but is signed by the clerk, and attested by the seal of the court. It is right as it is, and would not be right if it were as counsel claims it ought to have been. The order is the order of the court, and not of the judge. The warrant is the process of the court, and should be under the seal of the court, and signed by the clerk. Gen. St. 768, § 700; Id. 770, § 716; Id. 840, § 126.

Again, it is urged that the warrant does not show where the crime was charged to have been committed, nor, indeed, does that fact appear anywhere in the petition. The information is not copied into the record, and we must therefore presume that it sufficiently and fully charged a crime of which that court had jurisdiction. The warrant might properly refer to the filing of the information, and then a mere statement of the character of the crime charged would be sufficient. It is not necessary that each paper in a criminal case show all the proceedings in a cause, or disclose the facts necessary to give the court jurisdiction. Redmond v. State. 12 Kan. *172.

A fourth objection is that the instrument sued on is in form a *91 penal bond, rather than a recognizance. This ques<sup>*tion</sup> has already been settled in this court. Ingram v. State, 10 Kan. *630. It was admitted by the county attorney that the recognizance had not, at the time of the forfeiture, been filed or recorded, as required by section 144, Crim. Code, (Gen. St. 842.) This omission did not invalidate the instrument. It is an irregularity merely,—one which under section 154 of the Criminal Code would clearly not affect the right of recovery.

Again, it is objected that the recognizance is void because of a misdescription of the court. It is described as “the Twelfth judicial district court, sitting in and for the county of Cloud.” The only possible objection we can see to this description is that it is unnecessarily full. It describes the court correctly, though it would probably be sufficient to call it “the district court of Cloud county.”

There are some other points urged by counsel, but we think, under the liberal rule prescribed by section 154 above cited, none of them are sufficient to defeat a recovery upon this recognizance. Counsel for plaintiffs in error has been very diligent, and collected numerous authorities, and presented his points with clearness and force, and under the old rules which obtained prior to the enactment of said section 154 might properly have expected a different decision from this court. But language could hardly be more sweeping and comprehensive than that of section 154. It has at one blow swept away, so far as this state is concerned, nearly the entire accumulation of authorities on the matter of recognizances. It has, as we think, introduced a truer and better rule, and one which will tend to promote the interests of justice.

The judgment will be affirmed.

*92 *J. W. H. GOLDEN and another v. ROBERT J. ELLIOTT and others.

January Term, 1874.

Mandamus: When Refused: Discretion of Court. Where, in a county lately opened to settlement, and into which population has been recently and rapidly flowing, an application to the district court for a mandamus to compel the county officers to remove their offices from one town to another is overruled; and where the only facts disclosed in the application are that, at a county-seat election, held more than two years before, the returns showed that the latter place had received a majority of the votes, without any explanation of the delay in the application; and where it also appears that immediately after such election, and before any canvass of the votes, the district court had, in a proper proceeding, issued a restraining order enjoining the canvass, the proclamation of the result, and the removal of the county offices, on the ground that such apparent majority was the result of fraudulent votes; and that such restraining order remains unreversed and in full force: held, that this court will not reverse the ruling of the district court refusing the writ of mandamus.<sup>1</sup>

Error from Labette district court.

Golden and four others, electors and tax-payers of Labette city, on the fourth of April, 1873, filed their petition for a mandamus to compel Elliott and the other county officers to remove their offices, records, etc., from Oswego to Labette city, alleging that the county-seat of Labette county had been located at Labette city at an election held February 28, 1871. The record shows that at said election there were 2,508 votes cast, of which 1,200 were cast in favor of Oswego, and 1,308 in favor of Labette city; that on the third of March, 1871, in action instituted by J. Q. Cowell and others, electors and tax-payers of Oswego, against W. H. Carpenter and others, county commissioners, the district judge had granted an injunction restraining the board of county commissioners from canvassing the votes cast at said election of February 28, and proclaiming the result thereof, on the ground that a large number of fraudulent votes had been cast in favor of Labette city at said election, and that a majority of the legal votes of said county had not been given in favor of removing the county-seat to said Labette city. Said injunction does *93 not *appear to have been vacated, modified, dissolved, or reversed. The district court, at the March term, 1873, refused to award the mandamus.

W. P. Lamb, for plaintiffs.

The petition in this case is sufficient. All the facts are stated in the petition to authorize an alternative writ of mandamus to issue.

<sup>1</sup>See State v. Anderson Co., 28 Kan. 70. Also, Evans v. Thomas, 83 Kan. 469; S. C. 4 Pac. Rep. 838. When mandamus will or will not lie. See Hussey v. Hamilton, 5 Kan. 278, and note; State v. Stockwell, 7 Kan. 64, and note.

Gen. St. 1868, p. 298, c. 26; Laws 1871, p. 191, c. 79. The court erred in refusing the alternative writ of mandamus.

H. G. Webb and W. C. Webb, for defendants.

The petition in this case purports to be a petition for a mandamus, brought by Golden and others as plaintiffs, against Elliott and others as defendants; but it contains as an exhibit a transcript of the record of a proceeding in an action for an injunction, wherein Cowell and others were plaintiffs, and Carpenter and others were defendants. If this transcript shows or proves anything, it proves that the election under which Golden and others claim was fraudulent and void, and, because it was fraudulent and void, the board of county commissioners had been enjoined from canvassing the votes and declaring the result. No appeal was taken from the order of the district court granting said injunction, and said injunction has not been dissolved. To award a mandamus in this proceeding is, in effect, to reverse or vacate said injunction in a collateral proceeding, and without notice to either party to the injunction suit.

More than this: Said election was held February 28, and the canvass thereof was enjoined March 3, 1871. This application for a mandamus was not instituted until April, 1873,—more than two years afterwards. The injunction remains; no canvass of the votes has been made; and the plaintiffs here, and all others, must be deemed to have acquiesced in the decision in the injunction case. The *94 plaintiffs have slept *upon their rights too long. People v. Seneca C. P., 2 Wend. 264; Fish v. Weatherwax, 2 Johns. Cas. 217, note 14; King v. Stainforth & K. C. Co., 1 Maule & S. 32; King v. Commissioners, 1 Barn. & Adol. 378, 380.

Error does not lie from the order refusing a mandamus. The writ of mandamus is essentially a prerogative writ. Applications therefor are addressed to the discretion of the court, and, whether allowed or denied, the order of the court is not reviewable. State v. Marston, 6 Kan. *537; Briggs v. Vandenburg, 22 N. Y. 467; Commercial Bank v. Canal Com'rs, 10 Wend. 30; Ex parte Fitzgerald, 23 Wend. 648; Fish v. Weatherwax, 2 Johns. Cas. 217, note 63; People v. Rensselaer C. P., 3 How. Pr. 165; Griffin v. Griffin, 23 How. Pr. 189, 191.

The affidavit on which the application for the writ was made was entitled and should not have been read or considered. People v. Tioga C. P., 1 Wend. 291; Haight v. Turner, 2 Johns. 371; People v. Sage, 2 How. Pr. 60; 3 Dew. 54, 55. The practice is still the same, notwithstanding the Code. People v. Dikeman, 7 How. Pr. 124.

The petition does not show that the plaintiffs are entitled to the relief claimed, but shows affirmatively they are not. It shows that the vote was not canvassed, nor proclamation of result made. The county officers have twenty days after "such proclamation" for preparation and removal. This proclamation of the result of the canvass is the test and evidence of duty and authority to remove, and is akin to the ordinary certificate of election. Gen. St. 298, §§ 8, 9; Jones v. State, 1 Kan. *273, *280.

BREWER, J. On the fifteenth of February, 1871, a county-seat election was held in Labette county. No place received a majority of all the votes, and on February 28, 1871, a second election was held to decide between the two places having the highest number of votes. At such election the returns showed a majority in favor of Labette city. On the third of March, 1871, the judge of the district court issued a restraining order against the commissioners of said county, restraining them from canvassing the votes, proclaiming the result, or removing the county offices to Labette city. The petition therefor alleged fraudulent voting in favor of Labette city at both *95 elections. Such restraining order yet remains *undisturbed and in full force. In April, 1873, certain electors of Labette city presented to the district court of said county a petition for a writ of mandamus to compel the different county officers to remove their offices to Labette city. Such petition simply alleged the two elections, the result of the votes, and the failure of the commissioners to canvass and declare the result. The district court refused the writ, and now plaintiffs in error seek a reversal of that order.

Several questions are discussed by counsel in their briefs. We rest our affirmance of the ruling below upon one point. The writ of mandamus, originally a prerogative writ, and solely within the discretion of the court, still so far partakes of its original nature that the court may exercise a considerable degree of discretion in granting or refusing it. State v. Marston, 6 Kan. *537. Can we say that the district court abused its discretion in refusing this writ? Immediately after a county-seat election an injunction is issued restraining any canvass of the votes, and any removal of the county offices, on account of the fraudulent manner of the election, and the fraudulent voting in favor of the apparently successful place. For more than two years the whole community seems content with that decision. Even the citizens of the place apparently successful claim no rights by virtue of such election. This seems very strange, considering the eagerness with which ordinarily a county-seat is sought, and the vehemence of the efforts made to secure or retain it. The records of this court abundantly show how important this question is considered. Such remarkable indifference argues either a consciousness of the truth of the charges, or a conviction that the changes of population, or of the facilities of travel, render it for the best interests of the county, as a whole, that the county-seat remain where it is. We do not mean to assert that this lapse of time has operated like a statute of limitations, and absolutely cut off all rights; nor that a similar lapse of time in an older and more permanently settled community ought to have the same influence upon the discretion *96 of a court. It must be remembered that *this county has been but lately opened to settlement, and that population has recently and rapidly been flowing into it. Less than two years may have materially altered the centers of population and wealth, as well as the means and facilities of communication, and it may well be that the community generally prefer that the county-seat remain undisturbed. At any rate, when the local court, familiar with the condition of the county, refuses a writ of mandamus to remove the county offices, and nothing but the naked facts of the election appear in the application therefor, without explanation of the delay, and the restraining order appears undisturbed, we cannot hold that there was an abuse of discretion in refusing the writ.

EVANDER LIGHT v. D. W. POWERS and others.

January Term, 1874.

1. Bills and Notes: Contract to Accept Draft: Pleading. A petition which states a contract to accept drafts, and a breach of such contract, states a cause of action, and a demurrer to it should be overruled.
2. Contract: Bills of Exchange. Such a contract is valid though not in writing.

Error from Saline district court.

Action brought by Light against Powers and two others, as partners. Defendants demurred to the petition, and the district court, at the May term, 1873, sustained the demurrer.

Mohler & Garver, for plaintiff in error.

*97 The petition in this case is, perhaps, capable of two different constructions: One, that the first cause of action is *founded upon the promise of defendants to pay the costs and expenses necessary in filling certain government contracts,—to pay them by accepting and paying drafts that might be drawn upon them for that purpose. The other construction is that the promise of defendants was simply to accept and pay drafts, checks, etc., that might be drawn on them. The petition alleges a breach by defendants of their agreement, (whichever it is,) and the consequent damages to plaintiff. Without any particular violence to the grammatical or legal construction of the petition, we think either meaning can be drawn from it, and in such cases the rule is that, where a pleading is capable of different meanings, that should be taken which will support the pleading, and not the other which would defeat it. 1 Chit. Pl. 237. If the first meaning is drawn from the petition, there is no doubt that it states facts sufficient to show a good cause of action; and that, with the second meaning, there is a good cause of action stated, we think equally clear. The statute provides (section 8, c. 14, Gen. St.) that "no person within this state shall be charged as an acceptor of a bill of exchange unless his acceptance shall be in writing, signed by himself or his lawful agent;" yet it is not necessary for the petition to allege that the promise to accept was in writing,—that is matter of evidence only. 1 Chit. Pl. 303, 304, 221; Elting v. Vanderlyn, 4 Johns. 237; Nelson v. Dubois, 13 Johns. 177. Even though the petition had alleged that the promise was not in writing, still it would state facts sufficient to sustain an action for damages under section 12 of the chapter before referred to.

The facts stated in the second cause of action are amply sufficient to sustain an action against the defendants. There is alleged a simple contract, by which the plaintiff agrees to do certain things, and the defendants promise to pay certain moneys in consideration of it. The plaintiff performs his part of the contract, and the defendants refuse to perform theirs, by which plaintiff is damaged. The demurrer is to the petition as a whole,—to both causes of action considered together. If either is good, the demurrer should have been *98      *overruled. 1 Chit. Pl. 664; Martin v. Williams, 13 Johns. 264; Monell v. Colden, Id. 396, 402; People v. Enoch, 13 Wend. 169.

BREWER, J. The error alleged in this case is the sustaining of a demurrer to the petition. The petition contains two counts. The demurrer is general to the whole petition, so that if either count be good it ought to have been overruled. The first count is for damages for failing to accept and pay certain drafts drawn by plaintiff upon defendants. It alleges that defendants, "for a good and valuable consideration, promised plaintiff to accept and pay all drafts drawn by him on them on account of certain government contracts in which they were interested, and the costs and expenses of which they had promised to pay by accepting and paying plaintiff's drafts as above;" that he drew certain drafts, describing them, on account of and for said costs and expenses; that the same were not accepted or paid by said defendants, and he was compelled to pay the several payees thereof the amounts of the drafts, with costs of protest and damages; of all of which defendants had notice, and, though often requested, had failed to repay plaintiff. This, it will be perceived, is not an action on the drafts, nor an attempt to charge the defendants as acceptors by virtue of a previous promise to accept. It seeks to make them responsible for damages for breach of a contract to accept. The distinction between the two is obvious, and is well pointed out in the case of Boyce v. Edwards, 4 Pet. 111. See, also, Carnegie v. Mor-ri son, 2 Metc. 381. For breach of such a contract a party would be entitled to at least nominal damages, and more, if more were alleged and proved. It follows, therefore, that a petition stating such a contract, and the breach of it, states a cause of action, and a demurrer to it should be overruled. There is nothing in the statute nor in the law-merchant that requires such a contract to be in writing. Our statute, by implication, plainly recognizes such a cause of action.

Gen. St. 116, § 12.

*99 The judgment of the district court will be reversed, and *the case remanded for further proceedings in conformity with the views herein expressed.

GEORGE BARTLETT and others v. STATE OF KANSAS.

January Term, 1874.

1. Quo Warranto: Parties. Where an action in the nature of a quo warranto has been commenced by the county attorney, in the name of the state of Kansas, for the purpose of ousting from office certain persons who have unlawfully usurped certain offices, there is no defect of parties plaintiff. [State v. Marion Co., 21 Kan. 432.]
2. ———: City Officers: Action in Name of State. In such a case, when the offices into which said persons have unlawfully intruded are the offices of mayor, police judge, and city council of a city of a third class, the state has such an interest in the subject-matter of the action that the action may be prosecuted in the name of the state as plaintiff.
3. ———: Who may Prosecute. And in such a case, where the action is prosecuted in the name of the state, the county attorney may commence and prosecute the action for the state.

Error from Cloud district court.

Quo warranto, instituted by the county attorney of Cloud county. The title of the action was, "The State of Kansas, Plaintiff, against George Bartlett, Peter McCrea, Frank McNulty, S. M. Ransopher, Harry Dobbs, A. W. Campbell, and Moses Heller, Defendants." The petition set forth and alleged "that the city of Clyde, in said county and state, is a city of the third class, under and by virtue of the general laws of said state; that by the same laws there has been created and exists in said city, for the purpose of good government thereof, and for the purpose of promoting the general welfare of the inhabitants thereof, the offices of mayor, five councilmen, and police

*100 judge; that on or about the third of April, 1873, at and *within said city, and within the jurisdiction of this court, the said defendant Bartlett did unlawfully usurp and intrude himself into the said office of mayor of said city of Clyde, the said defendants McNulty, Ransopher, Dobbs, Campbell, and Heller did then and there unlawfully usurp and intrude themselves into the said offices of councilmen, and the said McCrea did then and there unlawfully usurp and intrude himself into the said office of police judge; and each and every of said defendants from thence hitherto have continued unlawfully to hold and exercise the said offices respectively so as aforesaid usurped by them respectively, the said offices then and there being public offices under and by virtue of the laws of said state, the said defendants from the date last aforesaid to the present time having unlawfully usurped the city government of said city; and that said defendants, from the date last aforesaid to the present time, have respectively continued, and still continue, unlawfully to hold and exercise the said offices so as aforesaid respectively unlawfully intruded into by them; and the plaintiff further shows that no other person or persons is or are by law entitled to hold or exercise any of said offices. Wherefore the plaintiff demands judgment that the said defendants be ousted from said offices so by them respectively unlawfully held and occupied." To this petition the defendants demurred. The district court, at the August term, 1873, overruled the demurrer.

E. J. Jenkins, for plaintiffs in error, submits:

The county attorney can only commence an action in the nature of quo warranto of his own motion in cases—First, when directed to do so by competent authority; second, when the defendant, as a public officer, or an officer de jure, has done, or suffered any act to be done, or omitted to perform some duty, which by the provisions of law works a forfeiture of his office, when he has been elected or appointed as such officer; third, against a corporation illegally incorporated; fourth, against a corporation or association for abuse of power, or any act that amounts to a surrender or forfeiture of their rights and privileges. Laws 1871, pp. 276, 277, §§ 1, 2.

*101 The county attorney was not authorized by any competent authority, and the state and county had no interest in the offices in the city of Clyde; and this being a civil action, should have been commenced in the name of the real party in interest. Code, § 26; People v. Cook, 8 N. Y. 71. The state can only be made a party when the action is brought against an officer or a corporation for doing some act, or refusing to perform some duty, that amounts to a forfeiture of the office, or the rights and privileges of the corporation; but the state cannot be made a party when the action is brought against a party for usurping or intruding into an office created by law. Laws 1871, p. 277, § 2; State v. Cobb, 2 Kan. *32.

The county attorney cannot legally, of his own motion, commence the action against a defendant for usurping an office without bringing the action in the name of the party entitled to the office. If an office has been usurped by the defendant, some other person is entitled to hold or occupy that office, and the action must be commenced in the name of that party. Laws 1871, p. 277, § 2. The petition alleges that Clyde is a city of the third class, and as such city there have been created and exist in said city the offices mentioned in the petition; and the city is certainly entitled to have the offices occupied and held by some persons. The plaintiff is therefore estopped from alleging that no persons are entitled to hold said offices, and if said offices were usurped by the defendants below, the persons entitled to hold said offices should have been made parties plaintiff. There is, then, a defect of parties plaintiff. The petition is inconsistent, and does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

VALENTINE, J. This was an action in the nature of quo warranto, brought by the county attorney of Cloud county in the name of "The State of Kansas," to have determined by what authority certain persons were attempting to exercise the functions of certain city offices of the city of Clyde, Cloud county. The city of Clyde is a city of the third class. Said persons were attempting to exercise the functions of the offices of mayor, police judge, and city council of said city. These facts, together with others, were set out in full in the petition filed by the county attorney. The defendants demurred to this petition on the following grounds, to-wit: (1) There is a defect of parties plaintiff; (2) the petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in favor of said plaintiff and against said defendants. The court overruled said demurrer, and the defendants below, plaintiffs in error, now assign that ruling for error.

1. Whenever any person usurps an office, and attempts to hold it wrongfully and without any legal authority, as the county attorney alleges that the defendants have done and are doing in this particular case, then we suppose that not only the state, but also any individual who may be entitled to hold the office, may maintain an action in the nature of quo warranto to oust such usurper from such office. But each has a separate action, and the two together do not have a joint action. Neither is a necessary party when the other commences the action. Hence, although the state is the only plaintiff in this case, and the persons entitled to hold the different offices are not made parties thereto, still there is no defect of parties plaintiff. But, as we shall state more fully hereafter, the petition shows that no person is entitled to hold any one of said offices.

2. It is claimed that the petition below does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and the only reason given therefor is that the action is not prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest. Now, as we have before stated, any individual in this state entitled to hold an office has such an interest therein that he may maintain an action in the nature of quo warranto to oust any intruder therefrom, and he may maintain the action in his own name, and not in the name of the state. Laws 1871, p. 277, § 2.

*103 But this right of action on the part of *the individual does not oust the state from its right of action. Their separate rights of action are founded upon separate and distinct interests. The individual may prosecute the action because he is interested in the emoluments of the office, and entitled to receive the same. The state may prosecute the action because it is interested in the good government and general welfare of all its citizens. It is the duty of the state to see that no intruder shall usurp and hold an office that should be legally filled by some other person; and the protecting care of the state extends to cities of the third class, as well as to any other portions of its territory. In this particular case, however, it is not shown that any person is entitled to hold any one of said offices. On the contrary, the petition shows that no one is entitled to hold or to exercise the functions of any one of said offices. Why this is so, is not stated. Perhaps the persons elected to fill said offices have refused to qualify, or have died, or resigned, or removed from the city. But whatever may be the reason, and whether the reason is sufficient or not, still the power of the state to remove intruders from office is ample. Where there is some person entitled to hold the office, the county attorney may commence the action in the name of the state, but in such a case "he shall set forth in the petition the name of the person rightfully entitled to the office, and his right or title thereto." Laws 1871, § 2. But where no person is entitled to hold the office, he may still commence the action in the name of the state, but simply stating, as the county attorney has done in this case, that no person is entitled to hold the office. We suppose it will hardly be claimed that where there is no individual who can commence an action to oust an intruder from office that the state is also powerless in the matter; we suppose it will hardly be claimed that where there is no individual who is competent to bring the action, the people of a city may be governed by usurpers and intruders without any legal means for relief.

3. It is claimed that the county attorney has no right to com-
 *104 mence or prosecute this action. We think he has. Section 136 of the act relating to counties and county officers provides that "it shall be the duty of the county attorneys to appear in the several courts of their respective counties, and prosecute or defend, on behalf of the people, all suits, applications, or motions, civil or criminal, arising under the laws of this state, in which the state or their county is a party, or interested." Gen. St. 284. And section 654 of the Civil Code provides that "when the action [in the nature of quo warranto] is brought by the attorney general or the county attorney of any county, of his own motion, or when directed to do so by competent authority, it shall be prosecuted in the name of the state," etc. Laws 1871, p. 277, § 2. The county attorney in a case like this may prosecute the action upon his own motion. If he cannot do so, who is there to authorize him to do so?

Of course, we know nothing of the facts of this case except as they are stated in the petition of the county attorney, and, for the purposes of this case, such statements must be taken as true.

The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

JOHN F. HOUSER and another v. D. J. S. PEARCE.

January Term, 1874.

Damages: Measure of: Breach of Contract: Instructions. In an action to recover damages for the breach of a contract to harvest oats, where the petition alleges that by reason of such breach the oats were entirely lost and destroyed, and where none of the evidence is preserved, this court cannot say that there was any error in refusing to instruct the jury that the measure of damages was the difference between the contract price and what it would have cost to have had the work done by others, and in instructing them that if the plaintiff took all reasonable precaution, and still lost the oats through the defendants' failure to perform their contract, he might recover the value of the oats lost.<sup>1</sup>

Action by Pearce against Houser and another to recover damages for an alleged breach of contract. Verdict and judgment for plaintiff, at the September term, 1873, of the district court.

John T. Voss, for plaintiffs in error.

The petition simply calls for simple damages, without setting out any special damages whatever. Now, we contend that under this pleading (and we asked the court to so instruct the jury) that all the plaintiff below could possibly recover would be the difference between the contract price for cutting the grain and what it would cost to employ other and necessary means to do the work. This is the true measure of damages under the pleadings, and no other damages ought to be allowed. Field v. Kinnear, 4 Kan. *476; also McCubbin v. Graham, Id. 397. It nowhere appears by the allegations of the petition that the parties to the contract, at the time thereof, had in view the entire value of the oat crop; yet the trial court absolutely instructed the jury that the measure of damages was the full value of the oat crop, less the expense of cutting. See Johnson v. Matthews, 5 Kan. *113; Walker v. Stetson, 14 Ohio St. 100. The court will presume, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, that all the proof and instructions were given to sustain the material allegations of a pleading, but nothing more. The court squarely told the jury that the defendants agreed to pay plaintiff for his oat crop unless they harvested it. This is not what plaintiff tells us in his petition. We asked the court to tell the jury that if defendants had made a contract, and failed to perform it, the immediate and proximate damages resulting therefrom would be the proper damages; but the court refused to do this, and for such error we ask a reversal of the judgment.

*106 *BREWER, J. Defendant in error recovered a judgment in the district court of Crawford county for damages for breach of a contract to cut, bind, and stack certain oats. This judgment plaintiffs in error now seek to reverse. The testimony is not preserved, and but a single question is presented, and that upon the refusal of an instruction as to the measure of damages. Plaintiffs in error asked the court to charge that the measure of damages was the difference between the contract price and what it would have cost to have gotten the same work done by other parties. This the court refused, and charged that the plaintiff was entitled to recover such damages as he actually sustained by reason of the failure, provided he did what he could to protect himself from loss; that if he, relying upon the contract with the defendants, made no other provision for cutting the grain, and did not become aware that defendants would fail in their contract until it became so late that he could not get these oats harvested by others until they were ripened and destroyed, he was entitled to recover the value of the oats so lost and destroyed as they stood in the field. While the instruction refused states what perhaps would be the ordinary rule for the measure of damages, still we think that given states the rule as applicable to some cases. If the plaintiff, after using all reasonable precautions, lost his crop by reason solely of the failure of defendants to perform their contract, he was clearly entitled to recover the amount of such loss; and to that extent the instruction goes, and no further. We must presume that the evidence, it not being before us, warranted the instruction. The petition clearly does, for it alleges specifically that, by reason of the breach, the oats were entirely destroyed and lost to the plaintiff.

The judgment will be affirmed.

*107 *ROBERT T. FURROW and another v. SALLY M. CHAPIN.

January Term, 1874.

1. Supreme Court: Question not Made in Trial Court. Where the parties to an action of replevin file a full set of pleadings, and go to trial upon the merits of the action, and a verdict and judgment are rendered for the plaintiff, the supreme court will not entertain a question raised for the first time in the supreme court that no affidavit for the order of replevin was ever made.
2. Replevin: Officer: Party: Judgment: Costs. In an action of replevin against an officer for property seized by him on execution, the plaintiff in the execution is afterwards made a party defendant, but not in lieu of nor substituted for the officer, and the petition is not amended so as to allege anything against said new party, and said new party does not in his answer set up any ground for nor ask any affirmative relief. Held, that a judgment rendered jointly against said officer and said new party for $225, and costs, is erroneous against said new party. [Palmer v. Meiners, 17 Kan. 479.]
3. Execution: Husband and Wife. An officer who holds an execution against the property of the husband has no authority by virtue of the execution to seize the property of the wife.
4. Married Women: Action. A married woman may maintain an action in this state in her own name. [Miner v. Pearson, 16 Kan. 27; Dickson v. Randal, 19 Kan. 214.]
5. Witnesses: Competency of Wife. Where a married woman replevies property, she may testify in the case, although the defendant may claim that he, as an officer, seized and now holds the property as the property of her husband, and that he seized the same by virtue of an execution issued against the property of her husband.
6. Sales: Presumption: Place of Purchase. Where a purchase of property is made, but the evidence does not show where, it will be presumed that the purchase was made under laws similar to our own.<sup>1</sup>
7. Married Women: Separate Property. A married woman may purchase horses with her own money if she chooses to do so.

Error from Nemaha district court.

Replevin brought by Sally M. Chapin against Furrow, to recover the possession of two horses. Furrow gave a bond, and retained possession of the property. Furrow's answer was a general denial. Afterwards William P. McCubbin petitioned for leave to be joined as a co-defendant, alleging that he was the real party in interest. He was so joined by order of the court. Trial at the April term, 1873, *108 of the district *court. Verdict and judgment for plaintiff for $225.

Joseph Sharpe, for plaintiffs in error.

The petition in the court below was filed on the fifteenth of April, 1871, without the said Sally M. Chapin, or any one as her agent, first having filed with the clerk of said district court an affidavit as required by section 177 of the Civil Code. This is manifestly erroneous, and the whole proceedings were without jurisdiction, and void.

On the twenty-seventh of April, 1872, William P. McCubbin was permitted, by order of the court, to come in and defend the said action as a party in interest. He first demurred to said petition, and the demurrer was overruled. This was error, as the petition nowhere mentions the name of the defendant McCubbin; nor is there in it a single allegation that the said Sally had suffered any wrong by the said McCubbin, or had any claim of any sort or nature against him. McCubbin then answered, showing that the property was taken by Furrow on an execution in favor of McCubbin against the husband of said Sally.

The district court should have set aside the verdict and granted a new trial, because it appeared, after all the evidence was in, and from the pleadings, that the defendant Furrow was a deputy-sheriff, and as such was not liable to be sued in this action. The action should have been brought against the sheriff of said county. The acts of the deputy as such are the acts of the sheriff, and he alone is answerable in law for the acts of his deputy. Pond v. Leman, 45 Barb. 154; Curtis v. Fay, 37 Barb. 64. No joint or several judgment could legally be entered up against Furrow for wrongfully detaining the horses as deputy-sheriff; and certainly none against McCubbin without some allegation of wrong against him.

Could Sally M. Chapin bring this action in her own name, admitting she had a separate property in the horses sued for? The authorities say she could not. Willis v. Underhill, 6 How. Pr. 396;

Woods v. Thompson, 11 How. Pr. 184. This objection can be *109 taken at any stage of the proceeding, and was urged on the motion to set the verdict aside, and for new trial.

The deposition of said plaintiff, Sally M. Chapin, was offered and admitted in evidence against the objections of the defendants. Section 1, c. 165, Laws 1872, enacts that husband and wife shall be incompetent to testify for or against each other. The testimony and pleadings show that Sally M. Chapin is the wife of D. M. Chapin, and that the horses claimed in this suit by the said Sally, and which she swears in her deposition are hers, were levied upon by Furrow as the property of her husband, and sold by said Furrow as deputy-sheriff to pay the debt that said D. M. Chapin owed to McCubbin. That being so, was she not giving evidence in favor of, or against the direct interest of, her said husband?

But admit the deposition of Sally M. Chapin, and it does not show that she is the legal owner of the horses claimed by her. She deposes that she purchased said horses in some place not in the state of Kansas, as she sent them to Kansas about three years before the making of the deposition, and after her marriage with D. M. Chapin. There is no evidence that the laws of the state or country where she so purchased the horses gave a married woman during coverture the right to purchase personal estate, and hold it as her separate estate from her husband. In the absence of such proof, the rule of law is that the common law must be in force in the state or country where such purchase was made. If the common law was in force, she could not buy or hold the horses claimed here as her separate estate; but in the purchase she would be held to be the agent of her husband, and the title would immediately vest in him, and they might have been taken in execution immediately to pay the debts of her husband, even had she purchased them with her own money that she had earned in any business. Story, Conf. Laws, c. 8, p. 322; Savage v. O'Neil, 42 Barb. 378.

Section 1, c. 62, Gen. St., commonly called the "Married Women's Act," does not contemplate that a wife during coverture shall *110 turn out horse-trader, and buy and sell horses, *etc., but has carefully set down what shall be the separate estate of a wife. Said section 1 defines that all the property a woman may have before her marriage,—all property that may come to her by devise, descent, or bequest, or by the gift of any person other than her husband,—may be and remain her separate property, and hold the same separate from her husband. This is the only way that a married woman can acquire or hold property as her separate estate from her husband in this state. It can scarcely be claimed that Sally M. Chapin came by the horses she now claims in this action by any of the methods pointed out in the above statute. On the contrary, she expressly deposes that she purchased them and paid for them, and they were no gift.

J. E. Taylor, for defendant in error.

McCubbin was made a party defendant on his own motion, long after Furrow had given a bond to retain the property, and he and McCubbin had sold the same. Furrow was a proper party defendant, as he was the party in possession, and detained it from defendant in error. Besides, his giving a bond and selling the property admitted the fact. The bond took the place of the property. No question as to parties was raised in the court below. McCubbin never set up by answers any interest in the property.

Mrs. Chapin, and not her husband, was the owner of this property, under the laws of Kansas. The law of Illinois on the question of the property of married women is similar to ours.

The clerk below may have failed to copy the affidavit. No question as to it came before that court. Furrow could not claim that he was prejudiced after giving his bond and selling the property. McCubbin was the real party in interest. A judgment against one or both would be good.

VALENTINE, J. This was an action of replevin. Full plead-

defendant in error, and judgment was rendered accordingly. The defendants below now bring the case to this court, and ask a reversal of said judgment. No affidavit for the order of replevin is copied into the record brought to this court; and the question is now raised for the first time that no such affidavit was ever made. The plaintiffs in error are too late in raising the question. If no such affidavit was in fact made, they should have raised the question in the court below, and before they went to trial on the merits of the action. The court below never heard nor decided the question, and of course could not have erred in any ruling thereon.

2. The property replevied was taken from the plaintiff by the defendant below Furrow, as deputy-sheriff, on an execution issued against the property of D. M. Chapin, the husband of the plaintiff below. The defendant McCubbin, who was plaintiff in the execution, afterwards came in, and was made a party defendant. The petition, however, was not amended; and it at no time stated any cause of action against McCubbin. Indeed, it did not even mention his name. McCubbin answered, but he did not state in his answer any ground for affirmative relief,—asked for none. He simply denied “each and every allegation in said petition alleged against him,” which really amounted to nothing, as nothing was alleged against him. His answer also alleged “that the property in the goods and chattels was not in the said plaintiff, but was in one D. M. Chapin, and taken in execution of his property by the said defendant, R. P. Furrow, deputy-sheriff of said Nemaha county, before the commencement of this suit, and was sold by the said deputy-sheriff at sheriff’s sale to the highest bidder long before the commencement of this suit.” This was the whole of McCubbin’s answer. The judgment was rendered jointly against Furrow and McCubbin for $225 and costs.

This, we think, was erroneous. Such a judgment should not *112 have been rendered *against McCubbin. No issue was made up between the plaintiff and McCubbin, as might have been done under section 42 of the Code. McCubbin was not made a defendant in lieu of Furrow, as he might have been under sections 43 and 44 of the Code; nor was McCubbin substituted for Furrow, as he might have been under section 45 of the Code. Gen. St. 637, 638. McCubbin was simply a supernumerary defendant, as the pleadings were made up, and there was nothing to try as between him and the plaintiff. The judgment should also have been rendered in the alternative. Hall v. Jenness, 6 Kan. *357, *365; Copeland v. Majors, 9 Kan. *104, *106; Wilson v. Fuller, 9 Kan. *177, *193. But as no question has been raised in this court with reference thereto, we shall say nothing more concerning it.

3. The defendant Furrow is unquestionably liable in this action. The execution against the property of D. M. Chapin did not authorize him to seize the property of Sally M. Chapin.

4. A married woman may maintain an action in this state in her own name. "A woman may, while married, sue and be sued in the same manner as if she were unmarried." Gen. St. 563, § 3; Id. 636, § 29. It seems strange that counsel should raise such questions as the last two. (We are now following the brief of counsel for plaintiffs in error.) Some of the questions which we shall hereafter notice have but little better foundation than the two last mentioned.

5. Where a married woman replevies property, she may testify in the case, although the defendant may claim that he, as an officer, seized and now holds the property as the property of her husband, and that he seized the same by virtue of an execution issued against the property of her husband. In the present case the defendant did not testify orally; but a deposition of hers was read on the trial. When the deposition was offered to be read on the trial the defendants objected. But they gave no reason why they objected, (Simpson v. Kimberlin, 12 Kan. *579; Luke v. Johnnycake, 9 Kan. *511, *113 *518;) and when the objection was overruled, as it was, by the court, the defendants did not except to the ruling of the court, (Small v. Douthitt, 1 Kan. *335, *338.)

6. The plaintiff purchased said property with her own money. This is shown beyond all controversy. But she purchased it after she was married, and it is claimed by the plaintiffs in error that she purchased it outside of Kansas, and that we must presume that the common law prevailed where she purchased it, and that the property became at once the property of her husband. Now, in the first place, the evidence does not show where she purchased the property; secondly, we are not bound to presume that the common law prevails everywhere or anywhere outside of Kansas, but, in the absence of proof, we should presume that laws similar to our own exist everywhere throughout the civilized world; and, thirdly, even if we should presume that the common law was in force where the plaintiff purchased said property, still we should also presume that the rules of equity were also in force, and when the property was brought to this state the courts, under their equitable jurisdiction, would protect the wife's equitable rights. See Going v. Orns, 8 Kan. *85, *88, *89. This property was probably purchased by the plaintiff in Illinois, where their statutes are similar to our own. See Gross, St. Ill. 439; Emerson v. Clayton, 32 Ill. 493. In the present case we shall presume that the purchase was made under laws similar to our own.

7. A married woman may purchase horses with her own money if she chooses to do so. Gen. St. 563, §§ 2, 4.

This cause will be remanded, with the order that the judgment of the court below be modified in accordance with the views expressed in this opinion.

*114                      *C. H. GRAHAM v. HENRY E. COWGILL.<sup>1</sup>

January Term, 1874.

1. County Treasurer: Removal. In the absence of any judgment against a county treasurer on his official bond, the board of county commissioners cannot remove such county treasurer from office, and fill his place by the appointment of some other person.<sup>2</sup>
2. ———: How Office Vacated. Where a county treasurer has, by acts and omissions, forfeited his right to further hold the office of county treasurer, (within the meaning of section 180 of the act relating to counties and county officers,) the office does not thereby become vacant, but becomes vacant only by the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, in an action in the nature of quo warranto, instituted for the purpose of effecting the removal of such county treasurer from office.

Original proceedings in quo warranto.

The case is stated in the opinion.

Ruggles & Sterry, for plaintiff.

Allison & McConnell, for defendant.

VALENTINE, J. This is an action in the nature of quo warranto, brought originally in this court by C. H. Graham as plaintiff, against Henry E. Cowgill, to have determined their respective claims to the office of county treasurer of Coffey county. The material facts are, in brief, substantially as follows: On the fifteenth of November, 1873, the plaintiff was the duly elected, qualified, and acting county treasurer of said Coffey county. On that day the board of county commissioners of said county declared said office vacant. On the seventeenth of November, 1873, said board appointed Henry E. Cowgill treasurer of said county to fill said supposed vacancy. Said Cowgill gave bond, duly qualified, and on the twenty-first of November, 1873, took possession of said office. Upon these facts, who is entitled to the said office of county treasurer? We think that the plaintiff is unquestionably entitled to the office. The county board had no right in such a case to declare said office vacant. They can do so only where a judgment has been rendered against the treasurer on his official bond. Gen. St. 294, § 179, sub. 8. No such judgment was ever rendered in this case; nor is it claimed that any judgment of any kind has ever been rendered against treasurer. It is not claimed that said office had become vacant under section 179 of the act relating to counties and county officers, (Gen. St. 294;) nor is it claimed that it became vacant under any other law except section 180 of said act, (Gen. St. 294.) That section provides that "if any * * * county officer shall neglect or refuse to perform any act which it is his duty to perform, or shall corruptly or oppressively perform any such duty, he shall forfeit his office, and shall be removed therefrom by civil action, in the manner provided in the Code of Civil Procedure."

Now, for the purposes of this case, we shall assume that the plaintiff neglected and refused to perform certain acts, and that he corruptly and oppressively performed certain other acts, whereby he forfeited his said office. But the office did not thereby become vacant. He simply forfeited his right to further hold said office; and the state (and no one else) had a right, by a civil action under the Code, in the nature of quo warranto, to remove him therefrom, (Gen. St. 759, 760, 761; Laws 1871, pp. 276, 277;) and until he should be removed therefrom by such civil action no vacancy would occur. The vacancy occurs only by the judgment of some court of competent jurisdiction. A county officer cannot be ousted from his office for any supposed neglect of duty until after he has had a fair trial, before some court of competent jurisdiction, and judgment has been rendered against him.

Judgment in this case will be entered in favor of the plaintiff.

*116      *CHARLES W. WOLF v. SAMUEL W. FOSTER.

January Term, 1874.

1. Payment: Pleading and Evidence. Under an answer alleging generally payment to the plaintiff, it is not error to admit proof of payment to an agent of the plaintiff.
2. —: Receipt: Parol Evidence. Parol evidence of the actual payment of money due may be received, although it appears that at the time of payment a receipt was given, which is not produced, and whose loss or destruction is not so accounted for as to admit secondary evidence of its contents. [Stainbrook v. Drawyer, 25 Kan. 385.]<sup>1</sup>
3. Instructions: Repetition. The court is under no obligation to repeat the law as given in the general charge, in the special instructions asked by counsel.

Error from Neosho district court.

Action brought by Wolf to recover $186.12 for certain goods sold by him to Foster in 1868. At the time of the sale Wolf was doing business at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and Foster was residing at Wabasha, Minnesota. The answer was payment, defendant alleging that he "had paid said plaintiff the full amount of said demand before the commencement of this action." Reply, general denial. On the trial, at the April term, 1873, Foster testified that all his business transactions with plaintiff "were had with the agent and traveling salesman of said plaintiff, one Jake Weinberg." He further testified: "I had a settlement in full with said plaintiff through his man Weinberg some time either in February or March, 1869, and I paid to Weinberg all I owed to plaintiff, and took a receipt in full." Verdict and judgment for defendant.

Stillwell & Baylies, for plaintiff in error.

There is no allegation contained in the answer of any transaction whatever by defendant with Weinberg as agent of plaintiff, or otherwise. Under the established rule of pleading, under the Code, as well as at common law, a party to an action must, in some sufficiently legal form, plead or give notice, or suggest upon the record, *117 the substantive facts he *will offer to establish by evidence at the trial, else be barred of making proof, on the trial, of any facts not so stated. It was not competent for defendant, who assumed the affirmative of the issue at the trial, to give proof of any facts dehors the record, or which were not put in issue by the pleadings. A substantial reason for that rule is to avoid surprise to the adverse party.

The court also erred in its ruling that defendant might establish the fact of payment by parol evidence, independent of the written receipt.

The plaintiff requested the court to specially instruct the jury as follows: "The burden of proof is upon the defendant to satisfy you by a preponderance of the evidence that he had actually paid for the goods before the commencement of this action; and, unless he has so satisfied you of the fact of such payment by such preponderance of evidence, it is your duty to find for the plaintiff." This instruction was refused. The general instructions upon this point were loaded down with qualifications and additions, and it was error to refuse the instruction as asked by plaintiff.

J. R. Woodsworth, for defendant in error.

The Code does not, nor did the common law, require that pleadings should contain evidence of the facts and legal circumstances which the parties intend to prove. The pleadings are only a statement of the facts constituting the cause of action or defense, in plain and concise language, and without repetition. Civil Code, § 87. "Payment to plaintiff" was alleged. Payment to the agent is payment to the principal. Proof of payment to the agent sustained the answer.

It was not necessary to plead the receipt; nor to produce it on the trial. Payment being the fact alleged as the defense to the action of the plaintiff, it is competent to establish such fact by oral evidence.

A receipt but admits payment, and is no better evidence than direct oral evidence of the same fact.

*118 *BREWER, J. Plaintiff in error, as plaintiff below, brought his action on an account for goods sold. Defendant filed an answer alleging that before the commencement of the action he "had paid said plaintiff the full amount of said demand." A reply was filed denying payment, and upon these pleadings the case went to trial.

One ground of error is that, under the allegation in the answer of payment to the plaintiff, defendant was permitted to prove payment to an agent of the plaintiff, the one from whom he made the purchase of the goods specified in the petition. We see no error in this. Payment to an agent is in legal effect payment to the principal. And it is enough to allege payment to the principal, without specifying the particular party or agent who received the money.

A second alleged error is that after it had appeared in evidence that at the time of payment a receipt therefor was given, which was not produced, and whose loss or destruction was not so accounted for as to permit secondary evidence of its contents, the court permitted the defendant to give parol testimony as to the fact of payment. This was right. The receipt is good as an admission of payment, but it is only at best prima facie evidence, and susceptible of explanation or contradiction. The fact of payment can always be shown, independent of any admission by receipt or otherwise.

The third objection is that the court refused certain instructions asked. In the general charge the court laid down the law substantially as asked, and was therefore under no obligations to repeat it. It is true this addition or modification was made: "You are the exclusive judges of all the facts in the case, and you will carefully consider all the evidence submitted, giving such weight to the same as it is entitled to, taking into account all the surrounding *119 circumstances, and thus determine where the preponderance lies, and decide accordingly;" but as this is a correct statement of the law, the plaintiff has no cause of complaint.

We see no error in the record as presented. The question in the case was simply one of payment,—one of fact for the determination of the jury, and not for the examination of this court.

The judgment will be affirmed.

STATE OF KANSAS v. HILLIARD MORROW.

January Term, 1874.

Homicide: Verdict: Weight of Evidence. Where a criminal prosecution for murder in the first degree has been tried by a jury, and the jury has found the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree, and the court trying the cause has sustained the verdict, and where the evidence introduced on the trial is conflicting and contradictory, but where the evidence tending to show the defendant's guilt is sufficient if it were not contradicted by other evidence, and if it were allowed to have its full force and effect, to prove beyond all reasonable doubt every material fact necessary to be proved in the case, and every essential element of murder in the first degree, the verdict will not be disturbed by the supreme court merely upon the ground that it is not sustained by sufficient evidence.

Appeal from Davis district court.

Morrow was charged with murder in the first degree, for the alleged killing of Buck Overbee, in June, 1873. He was tried at the June term, 1873, of the district court, and found guilty as charged, and sentenced to imprisonment and death. From such conviction and sentence Morrow appeals to this court, alleging that the verdict is not sustained by the evidence.

McClure & Humphrey, for appellant.

H. H. Snyder and J. H. Austin, for the State.

*120 *VALENTINE, J. This was a criminal prosecution for murder in the first degree. The defendant was found guilty, and sentenced to be imprisoned in the penitentiary, and then to be executed in accordance with the present law. Laws 1872, pp. 336, 337. From this sentence the defendant now appeals. The only question raised in this court by the defendant is whether the verdict of the jury in the court below is sustained by sufficient evidence. Indeed, the only substantial question is whether the evidence sufficiently shows that there was such deliberate and premeditated design on the part of the defendant to kill the deceased as will constitute the killing murder in the first degree. The evidence was conflicting and contradictory; and while it is possible that the jury may have erred in weighing it, while it is possible that they may not have given to every portion of the evidence its due weight, while it is possible that they may have erred in finding from said evidence that every element of murder in the first degree was proved beyond all reasonable doubt, yet still there was evidence to sustain every material fact necessary to be proved in the case, and evidence to prove every essential element of murder in the first degree. That the defendant killed the deceased, that he did it in the manner and form charged in the information, and that he did it willfully and maliciously, we suppose there can be scarcely any doubt. The only question is whether he did it deliberately and premeditatedly. The jury has found that he did; the court below has sustained and approved that verdict; and it is not now our province to retry the case upon its merits. It is not our province to weigh the conflicting and contradictory evidence, and determine the force and value of each portion thereof. Nor is it our province to determine from the whole of the evidence whether the defendant's guilt is shown beyond all reasonable doubt. The only question that we are to determine is whether there is sufficient evidence, if it were uncontradicted by other evidence, and if *121 it were allowed to have its full force *and effect, to prove beyond all reasonable doubt that the defendant is guilty of the offense charged against him.

The following facts, as shown by some of the evidence, tend to prove that the offense was committed deliberately and premeditatedly, and therefore that the offense was murder in the first degree: The wife of the deceased was and is the aunt of the defendant. A child of the deceased and a sister of the defendant (both children) had a fight. The wife of the deceased chastised the sister of the defendant therefor. This was the exciting cause of all the trouble that afterwards ensued. The defendant was on that day sawing wood at the post-office. He quit sawing wood about 2 or 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and went to the house of Mrs. Fox, where his sister-in-law lived, and got his revolver. He told his sister-in-law he wanted to sell it. He told Mrs. Fox he wanted to ship it. He went out of the back door of the house, through the alley near the Hale House, and to the house of the deceased. He met the wife of the deceased in the street, and immediately commenced to quarrel with her. He wished to know why she had whipped his sister. The deceased came out of the house, and entered into the quarrel. He found that the defendant had a pistol, and then he went back into the house and got his, and then came out again, but at the request of his wife went back into the house again and put up his pistol. He then returned without weapons, in his shirt-sleeves, and his hands open. The defendant all the time kept his hands in his pockets, and his right hand probably on his pistol. At one time he partly drew his pistol out of his pocket, and then put it back again. "He said he came for revenge." "He said he would shoot who he damn pleased." "He said he had been mad some time, and was going to have his revenge, and might as well have it that day as any other." He shot the deceased at a time when the deceased had no weapons, was in his shirt-sleeves, and had his hands open. The deceased then caught the defendant and threw him down. One witness says: "I think defendant was trying to fire again." There were three loads *122 in the *defendant's revolver at the time the shooting was done, but who put them in, or when they were put in, the evidence does not show. One witness says of the defendant: "I heard him say, after the shooting, that he had got his revenge, and was going to give himself up." The defendant had a friend who lived with him, who was sawing wood with him, who followed him to the house of Mrs. Fox, who then followed him from the house at a convenient distance until the shooting was done, and then joined the defendant near by. His friend says that they quit sawing wood about 2½ o'clock p. m. Mrs. Fox says that the defendant was at her house between 3 and 4 o'clock p. m., and that the shooting was done about 15 minutes afterwards. All this transpired on June 12, 1873. There are some other suspicious circumstances. For instance, the defendant testified that when he said he would have his revenge he meant he would have the deceased arrested by the city marshal. This was all done in Junction City. Several other attempted explanations of the defendant's conduct rather tended to cast suspicion upon it, and to show his guilt.

The jury undoubtedly believed that the defendant intended, when he got his pistol, to have a row, and to kill any person who might interfere with him, and particularly the deceased. It can hardly be supposed that he got his pistol merely to sell it, or to ship it, or to defend himself from a supposed assault to be made by his aunt. He was a full-grown man, and she was a woman. And, besides, if he had stayed away from his aunt, she would not have molested him. In fact, it can hardly be supposed that he got his pistol merely for the purpose of killing his aunt, for men seldom kill women. He must have got it with the intention of having a row, and of killing his uncle if he interfered. There is another circumstance which we had almost overlooked, and which tends to show ill feeling between the two families. One witness testifies that during the quarrel the wife of the deceased said to the defendant: "Your wife went up to my house and whipped my boy."

We think there is sufficient evidence to sustain the verdict of the jury. The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

*123      *AMOS BOBB v. HARVEY BANCROFT and others.

January Term, 1874.

1. Contract: Agreement between Debtors and Creditors: Construction of. A firm composed of four members was indebted to several parties. The creditors signed an agreement, which commenced with a recitation that they made, with the members of the partnership, "the arrangement following for the settlement of their claims, respectively, against said partnership and its members." It then provided that the partners should at once transfer to a trustee named certain specified property in trust for said creditors; that the trustee should proceed without delay to convert the same into money, and, after paying the expenses of the trust, pay the same pro rata to the creditors "until the satisfaction of their claims," and the residue return to the partners; also that one of the firm should execute a mortgage on certain specified property to said trustee in trust for the creditors, conditioned that he would, in three equal annual payments, pay said creditors, or said trustee for said creditors, "any balance of their said claims which the said other property and assets and the proceeds thereof should be insufficient to pay," and then closed with this stipulation: "The foregoing conditions being complied with, we agree to extend the time of payment of our claims one-third in one year, one-third in two years, and one-third in three years." Held, that the firm, having performed all the conditions prescribed on its part, was entitled to claim from the creditors simply an extension of the time of payment of its indebtedness, and that there was no agreement, express or implied, on the part of the creditors to release any of the firm, or to look first to the property in the hands of the trustee, and secondly only to the mortgage security for the satisfaction of their claims; and, further, that three years having elapsed from the date of the agreement any creditor could maintain his action against the firm for the unpaid portion of his claim.

2. Contract: Rules of Construction. Where a contract is clear and unambiguous in its terms, it is the best evidence of the intention and agreement of the parties, and an allegation in a pleading thereon that the parties by that agreement intended something different from the plain import of its language, may, at least when there is no claim of mistake, fraud, or imposition, be disregarded.
5. Pleading: Bills and Notes: Sufficiency of Answer. A defense in an answer to an action on a promissory note, which alleges that the plaintiff has received from a certain trustee large sums of money in part payment of the note, and in excess of the amounts credited, and that the amount thus paid is unknown to defendants, and known only to the trustee and the plaintiff, should be held good on demurrer, although no amount thus paid is specified.
4. Bills and Notes: Action on. A party holding the note of a firm, for whose payment and security such provision has been made as specified *124 *in the agreement heretofore described, may maintain an action thereon, without first returning the money received from the trustee, and not credited on the note, or releasing, assigning, and returning all right, title, and interest he may have in the property transferred to such trustee.
5. ———: Defenses. The fact that the property conveyed to such trustee was and is of value sufficient to pay all the expenses of the trust, as well as all the indebtedness of the firm, constitutes no defense to an action on such indebtedness.

Error from Lyon district court.

Amos Bobb, as plaintiff, brought suit against Harvey Bancroft, Carlos N. Bancroft, Robert E. Sheldon, and Robert D. McCarter, partners as Bancroft Bros. & Co., as defendants, declaring against the defendants on a promissory note executed by the defendants in their partnership name, "Bancroft Bros. & Co." Harvey Bancroft and McCarter alone were served, and they answered, setting up nine defenses. Judgment was given for defendants, at the September term, 1873, of the district court. Another action was brought by Isaac M. Bobb, as plaintiff, against the same defendants, and involving the same questions. The two actions were heard and decided in this court together.
 v.13k—7

Orrin Miller, for plaintiff.

R. M. Ruggles, for defendants.

BREWER, J. Plaintiff in error (plaintiff below) brought his action against the defendants upon a promissory note. The petition was in the ordinary short form. The defendants, or rather the two of them who were served, filed an answer with several defenses. To these a demurrer was filed, which was overruled as to the second, third, fourth, sixth, and seventh defenses. To reverse this ruling on the demurrer plaintiff brings this proceeding in error.

*125 *The second defense, which presents the substantial merits of the controversy, is as follows. It appears from the petition, it should first be stated, that the defendants were partners under the firm name of Bancroft Bros. & Co.; that the note sued on was a partnership note, dated December 28, 1868, and due in one year. Now, the second defense in the answer alleges that this note was the only indebtedness of the defendants to the plaintiff; that in March, 1870, the firm entered into an agreement with all their creditors, including the plaintiff, which agreement is then recited in full. It is this in substance: The creditors make with the members of the partnership "the arrangement following for the settlement of their claims, respectively, against said partnership and its members:" The partners shall at once transfer to a trustee certain specified property in trust for said creditors. The trustee shall proceed without delay to convert the same into money, and, after paying the expenses of the trust, pay the same pro rata to the creditors, "until the satisfaction of their claims," and the residue return to the partners. Harvey Bancroft, one of the firm, shall also at once execute a mortgage on certain specified property to said trustee in trust for said creditors, conditioned that he will in three equal annual payments pay said creditors, or said trustees for said creditors, "any balance of their said claims which the said other property and assets, and the proceeds thereof, shall be insufficient to pay;" and then follows this stipulation: "The foregoing conditions being complied with, we agree to extend the time of the payment of our claims, one-third in one year, one-third in two years, and one-third in three years,"—which agreement was signed by all the creditors. The defense also alleges that defendants conveyed the property to the trustee as required; that the trustee received the property and accepted the trust; and that Harvey Bancroft executed the mortgage as stipulated in the agreement. The question then arises as to the effect of this agreement. Was it simply an extension of time by the creditors, or did it change the form of the debt, and the person of the debtor?

*126 Counsel for de*fendant in error claim that the intention of the parties, as expressed by the instrument, was "(1) that the defendants should convey certain property, specifically described in the instrument, to the trustee therein named; (2) that the defendant Harvey Bancroft and his wife should make and deliver to this trustee a mortgage upon certain property mentioned and described, which was to be conditioned that the defendant Harvey Bancroft should pay all of the indebtedness of the partnership which the property transferred to the trustee should be insufficient to pay; (3) that the creditors (including plaintiff in error) would thereupon release their several claims as against the defendants, respectively, and look only to the trust fund in the hands of the trustee for the payment of their several claims, and to Harvey Bancroft for any balance that might be due to them on their claims after the trust fund had been exhausted in the payment of their claims; (4) that the trustee should dispose of the property thus to be transferred to him without delay, and apply the proceeds pro rata to the payment of the various claims of their creditors until such claims should be satisfied; (5) that in case this trust fund should be insufficient to pay the full amount due to each creditor out of it, the creditors should postpone the payment of this deficiency so that Harvey Bancroft would be obliged only to pay one-third of it in one year, one-third in two years, and the remaining third in three years." Counsel also alleges in this second defense that such was the understanding and agreement of the parties.

The contract speaks for itself. The parties have reduced their agreement to writing, and that writing is the best evidence of their agreement. True, if the contract is fairly susceptible of more than one construction, that which is alleged to be the true construction and the intention of the parties will be taken to be correct when the question arises on demurrer. Craft v. Bent, 8 Kan. *328. But this rule does not apply when the contract is clear and unequivocal. Then an allegation that so and so was the intention and understanding of the parties will be held for naught, as against the obvious import of the language. Now, we fail to see in this contract anything *127 *which directly or by implication contains any such stipulation as appears in the third paragraph of the quotation from counsel's brief. There is certainly no express stipulation to release any one, or to look to any particular fund or funds for payment. On the contrary, the simple agreement of the creditors is to give an extension of one, two, and three years. That which the debtors were to do is plainly stated, and then as plainly is it said: "The foregoing conditions being complied with, we agree to extend the time of the payment of our claims," etc. That which each party was to do appears as clearly and plainly as language can make it. The one was to secure, the other extend.

Counsel lays some stress on the use of the word "settlement" in the first clause of the agreement, which is as follows: "The undersigned, creditors of the late copartnership of Bancroft Bros. & Co., of Columbus, Ohio, make with the members of said partnership the arrangement following for the settlement of their claims, respectively, against said partnership and its said members;" and argues that, as it could not mean arrangement of accounts so as to ascertain the balance due, it must mean payment in full. The word "settlement" is not necessarily used with either signification. There would be no impropriety in its use in reference to just such a transaction as is disclosed here. The creditor extends time and obtains security. He may properly say he has thus settled his claim. He has made a new arrangement in reference to it. But whatever force the word "settlement" might have, standing by itself, it is here qualified by preceding language. The creditors make "the arrangement following for the settlement," etc. This refers us to the stipulations following to ascertain what kind of a settlement they did make. It is to them we must look to determine the nature of the agreement and the rights of the parties.

Counsel claims that such a construction makes the contract strange, harsh, and inequitable. It does not seem so. The defendants were in debt. Some of those debts were due. As to the others we *128 are not advised. They had some property *which was liable for those debts. It was their duty to pay them, and to use their property therefor. To convert property into money by judicial proceedings always involves considerable waste. They surrendered certain property absolutely, and gave other as security,—whether adequate or not we are not advised,—and obtained a considerable extension of the time of payment. This is certainly no small consideration to men in business. The contract might or might not be a generous one on the part of the creditors. If the value of the property surrendered and mortgaged was but a small per cent. of the indebtedness, then the contract was a very liberal one; if greater than the indebtedness, not so much so. But it is useless to speculate as to which party profited by the agreement. It is enough for us that both parties entered into it, and are bound by its terms.

We think the contract clear and unambiguous; that the claim sued on was not extinguished or released as to any of the debtors; that the only stipulation of the creditors was to grant an extension; and, as this action was not commenced until more than three years after the date of the agreement, nothing in this second defense discloses any defense, and the demurrer to it should have been sustained.

In the third defense of the defendants' answer they set up that, by the terms of the written agreement set out in the second defense of their answer, all of the creditors of the defendants, including the plaintiff, Amos Bobb, expressly agreed with defendants that upon defendants' complying with the terms of said agreement that the creditors (parties to said agreement) would thereupon cause William Jamison, the trustee mentioned in said agreement, to sell and dispose of all the property, notes, and accounts, and all the merchandise assigned to him, and to pay the proceeds thereof pro rata to all of said creditors, including the plaintiff; and that the plaintiff and the other creditors agreed to accept and receive any and all such pro rata payments, and apply the same as a full payment to the amount of such pro rata payments; and that said creditors, including the plaintiff, would in no event *and under no circumstances attempt to enforce the payment or collection of their claims until after Jamison should have sold all of the assets transferred to him, and applied the proceeds of such sales pro rata to the payment of all said creditors; and that the said creditors, including the plaintiff, have "failed, neglected, and refused to have or compel the said Jamison to sell and dispose" of the assigned property, or collect the bills and accounts, and apply the proceeds thereof pro rata to the payment of said claims, and that said Jamison has wholly failed, neglected, and refused to convert said property into money, and apply the proceeds upon said claims, and all this without any fault on the part of the defendants, or either of them. This, it will be seen, simply sets up another statement of the intention of the parties to the agreement previously recited,—an intention of which we fail to gather any intimation from the agreement itself. Surely we search in vain to find in that instrument any express agreement to wait till the trustee has fully executed his trust, or to supervise his conduct and compel him to execute the trust, or even to be responsible for his negligence, delay, or misconduct. Whatever implications there might be, there is nothing expressed. The demurrer was improperly overruled.

In their fourth defense the defendants allege that the plaintiff has received from Jamison large sums of money as pro rata payments on the note, in addition to the amounts for which the plaintiff has given credit to the defendants, and that the plaintiff has neglected and refused to credit such payments upon the note. The plea further alleges that the amounts of such payments are wholly and solely within the knowledge of the plaintiff and Jamison. We see no objection to this defense, at least none that can be considered on a demurrer. It alleges partial payments in excess of those admitted, and, if true, reduces the amount to be recovered. Because the defendants are ignorant of the amount actually paid they are not thereby deprived of the benefit of such payments, or the right to prove as large an amount as possible. The demurrer to this count was properly overruled.

*130 *The sixth defense in the defendants' answer alleges that the plaintiff must first deliver and return to the defendants all of the money that he has received from Jamison, and not credited upon the note, and also release, assign, or return to the defendants all right, title, and claim or interest the plaintiff may have in or to any of the property assigned by the defendants to Jamison on the eleventh of March, 1870; or, in other words, the claim is that a creditor, having a note which is secured, must, before he can maintain an action at law on the note, release and return the security. We do not so understand the law. The creditor may ignore the security altogether, and sue upon his note. Of course, whatever money has been realized from the security is a credit on the note; and if after the note, or the judgment rendered thereon, has been fully paid, the creditor still holds any security, he may be compelled to release and return it. Perhaps, also, in some cases, equity might interfere and compel restitution before or at the time of payment, but we doubt whether equity would ever make the release of the security the prerequisite to an action on the debt. The demurrer was improperly overruled.

The seventh plea of the defendants alleges that the property transferred and delivered by the defendants to Jamison was and is sufficient in value to have paid any and all of the indebtedness of the firm of Bancroft Bros. & Co., and also the expenses of carrying out the terms and conditions of the assignment. We need hardly comment upon this defense. For reasons already fully suggested it was insufficient, and the demurrer to it ought to have been sustained.

The judgment of the district court in overruling the demurrer to the second, third, sixth, and seventh defenses set up in the answer will be reversed; and in overruling the demurrer to the fourth defense will be affirmed. The costs of this court will be divided.

It is understood that the same questions are in the succeeding case of Israel M. Bobb against same defendants, and the same order will be made in that as in this.

*STATE OF KANSAS v. ABRAM CUTLER.

January Term, 1874.

1. Injunction: Jurisdiction of Judge at Chambers. An injunction may be granted by the judge of the district court at chambers, and a charge for the violation of such injunction may be heard and determined by such judge at chambers.
2. Contempts: Trial for. Where such a charge is tried by the judge of the district court at chambers, and no jury is asked for, and no objection is made nor exception taken to the action of the judge in trying the case without a jury, held, that such judge does not commit error in trying said charge without a jury. And, semble, (but not decided,) that a party charged with contempt is not entitled to a trial by jury in any case.<sup>1</sup>

3. Injunction: Contempt: Who Liable for. Where an injunction is issued against a railway company, its assigns, agents, employes, and any one acting by its authority or in its behalf, but not against the present defendant by name; and the present defendant is the president of the railway company and owns a majority of its stock, and has by contract with the railway company full control of all the property, franchises, and privileges of the railway company; and where the present defendant afterwards, with notice of said injunction, does what the company is prohibited from doing: held, that he may be prosecuted for a violation of said injunction.

4. ———: Proceeding. The proceeding for the violation of an injunction is a summary proceeding, and the charge may be tried upon the original affidavit filed in such proceeding, and not upon any formal pleadings.

Error from Saline district court.

On the twenty-first of July, 1873, in action then pending in the Saline county district court, wherein Catherine Warry was plaintiff and Republican, Salina & Arkansas Valley Railway Company was defendant, the judge of said district court, at chambers, granted "an injunction against the Republican, Salina & Arkansas Valley Railway Company, restraining said county, its assigns, employes, agents, or any one acting in behalf of said company, from entering upon, converting to its own use, cutting, excavating, digging, or in any way injuring the lands of the said Catherine Warry." Abram Cutler owned a majority of the stock of said railway company, and was the president of said corporation. On the ninth of September, *132 1873, *(said injunction not being dissolved, but remaining in full force,) an affidavit was made and presented to said judge by the agent of said Catherine Warry, alleging that, "in violation of said injunction and order, the said company, by and through the directions of one Abram Cutler, and under his full control, with its employes and workmen, came upon the said lands of the said plaintiff in her petition for injunction above mentioned described, on the morning of September 9, 1873, and did cut, excavate, dig, and otherwise do great injury to the plaintiff's said lands;" and praying that the parties violating said injunction might be arrested for the contempt and violation of said order of injunction. Said judge issued an order to the sheriff, commanding him to arrest said Cutler and to bring him before said judge forthwith, "to answer unto the state of Kansas for a certain contempt alleged against him," etc. Cutler was arrested on said warrant, and taken before the judge at chambers, on the tenth of September. He demurred to the jurisdiction of the judge to try him and render judgment against him for such alleged contempt, at chambers, which demurrer was overruled, and an exception taken. He then moved to be discharged on the grounds that no injunction had been issued against him, and none had been served on him, and that the affidavit for said attachment did not state facts sufficient to constitute a breach of the injunction, which motion was overruled, and an exception taken. And thereupon said judge, without any plea or answer being asked for or entered by Cutler, heard the evidence, tried the case, and adjudged that Cutler pay a fine of $100, and costs.

John Foster, for appellant.

A breach of an injunction is a public offense. Section 2, Crim. Code; section 247, Civil Code. A person charged therewith is proceeded against under the Criminal Code, unless the act is committed in the presence of the court, or judge sitting at chambers, (section 6, Crim. Code;) and he is tried by a jury, *(section 197, Crim. Code; Const. §§ 5, 10, Bill of Rights.) The judge at chambers had no jurisdiction to proceed to a final determination of the cause. Section 247, Civil Code; section 2, c. 28, Gen. St.

There was no injunction against Cutler. It was against the railway company. In the action of Warry against the railway company, Abram Cutler, on his own application, after the order of injunction was granted, was made a defendant. He then moved to dissolve the injunction, but the district judge held that he (Cutler) had no such interest as entitled him to the granting of a motion to dissolve. His arrest for violating said injunction was illegal, and he should have been discharged. Whipple v. Hutchinson, 4 Blatchf. 190; People v. Albany & V. R. Co., 20 How. Pr. 358; Weeks v. Smith, 3 Abb. Pr. 211.

The affidavit on which the arrest was made, which is the only pleading in this case, is insufficient. It sets forth that the injunction was granted by the district judge, and does not allege any injunction against Cutler, or the service of any order of injunction on him. The motion for a new trial should have been granted.

Illegal testimony was admitted. The judgment is not sustained by sufficient evidence. It does not appear that Cutler was even acting for said railway corporation, or that he had anything to do with the act complained of.

Henry Logan and H. G. Sheldon, for the State.

A breach of an injunction is an offense against the dignity of the court or judge issuing the same, to be punished as a contempt exclusively by the same authority, and not to be tried by a jury. Section 247, Civil Code.

The voluntary appearance of a defendant is equivalent to service. Section 67, Civil Code; St. 1868, p. 642. And having thus made his appearance in the civil action, and being made a party, Cutler is as much bound as though originally served with summons.

The injunction of a court of competent jurisdiction must be *134 obeyed, so long as it exists, by all parties upon whom it *has been served. Miller v. Scherder, 2 N. Y. 266; McCardel v. Peck, 28 How. Pr. 120. And even though it has not been served, if the defendant have actual knowledge or information that it has been granted, he is bound to obey it. City of New York v. Conover, 5 Abb. Pr. 251; People v. Sturtevant, 9 N. Y. 278; Thomp. Prov. Rem. 330, § 6. Cutler was connected with and interested in the railway company, and was as much bound by the injunction as his principal. Smith v. Reno, 6 How. Pr. 124; Edmonston v. McLoud, 19 Barb. 361; Davis v. City of New York, 1 Duer, 451; People v. Sturtevant, 9 N. Y. 263; Higbie v. Edgerton, 3 Paige, 258; Sullivan v. Judah, 4 Paige, 444; Rogers v. Paterson, Id. 450.

VALENTINE, J. The defendant, Abram Cutler, was charged with violating an order of injunction. The injunction was granted by the judge of the district court at chambers, and the trial was had before said judge at chambers. The first question raised in this case is with regard to the jurisdiction of the said district judge to hear and determine said charge. The constitution of this state provides that "the several justices and judges of the courts of record in this state shall have such jurisdiction at chambers as may be provided by law." Const. art. 3, § 16. The law provides that the several judges of the district court may, at chambers, grant injunctions, (Gen. St. 675, § 239;) and the law also provides that the several judges of the district courts may, at chambers, punish as for a contempt any person for disobedience of an injunction order, (Gen. St. 676, § 247; Id. 304, § 2.)

But it is claimed that the trial should have been by jury. Now, in the first place, the defendant did not ask for a jury, and he made no objection and took no exception to the action of the judge in trying the case without a jury; and, secondly, we hardly think that the constitution or laws ever contemplated that a jury should be impaneled in a case like this. It is true that this kind of a proceeding is in the nature of a criminal prosecution, and perhaps might come within the words of section 10 of the bill of rights, and section 197 of the Code of Criminal Procedure; but still it can hardly be possible that it was ever intended that a case like this, or any case for *135 contempt, should be tried by a jury. Such a thing *has never been done that we are aware of. We have never heard or read of a judge impaneling a jury to try a proceeding at chambers; and it was never the right of a party to demand a jury to try a charge for disobedience to an injunction order. If a party has a right to demand a jury in this case, then every trial for contempt must be by jury, if a jury should be demanded. We do not now, however, choose to decide that a defendant in a case like this is not entitled to a jury if he should demand it; for the defendant in this case did not demand a jury. All that we now decide is that the judge, under the facts and circumstances of this particular case, did not err in trying the case himself, and without a jury. The proceeding was regularly tried under section 247 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Gen. St. 676.

The injunction was allowed and issued against the Republican, Salina & Arkansas Valley Railway Company, "its assigns, its agents, its employes, and any one acting by its authority or in its behalf," and not against Abram Cutler by name. In fact, he was not a party to the suit when the injunction was granted; but afterwards he became a party thereto on his own motion, and was a party to the suit at the time of the alleged breach of said injunction order. Evidence was introduced showing that he owned a majority of the stock in said railway company; that he was president of the company; that he had leased the road from the company for ninety-nine years; that he had and was to have the full control and management of the same for that period of time; and that he "was to survey and locate the line of road of the said Republican, Salina & Arkansas Valley Railway, and obtain the right of way and depot grounds of and for said railway in the name of the Republican, Salina & Arkansas Valley Railway Company, but under his own full direction and control, and at his own expense." The injunction was granted to restrain the railway company, its assigns, etc., from constructing its road into or through the farm of Catherine Warry. The road was afterwards so constructed, and we think the evidence shows that it was so *136 constructed with the *approbation, the approval, and even by order, and under the direction, of the defendant. The evidence also shows that the defendant had notice of the injunction. The question now arising is whether the defendant, under these facts, can be held guilty of a violation of said injunction, the injunction not having been issued against him personally. We think it can. Persons may often be held liable for the breach of an injunction although not personally named in the injunction, nor even parties to the suit. Thomp. Prov. Rem. 331; High, Inj. §§ 859, 863; and see cases cited in brief for the state in this case.

The proceeding for the violation of an injunction is a summary proceeding, and the charge may be tried upon the original affidavit filed in such proceeding, and not upon any formal pleadings. Civil Code, § 247.

The "illegal testimony" complained of by defendant is not very specifically pointed out; and we have failed to discover any illegal testimony, duly excepted to, prejudicial to the defendant. We think there is sufficient evidence to sustain the finding of the judge of the court below.

There may be some other questions in this case not raised by counsel's briefs, but we do not wish to be understood as deciding anything not specifically mentioned in this opinion.

The judgment of the judge of the court below is affirmed.

STATE OF KANSAS v. C. H. GRAHAM.

January Term, 1874.

Quo Warranto: County Officer: Forfeiture: Abandonment. Where a person has been duly elected to the office of county treasurer, and has duly qualified and taken possession of the office, and has, while in possession of the office, committed certain acts, and neglected and refused to do certain other acts, which work a forfeiture of his right to further hold the office if the state should choose to proceed against him, and where he then, without resigning, and without any judgment having been rendered against him, but with his right to hold the office still complete, abandons the office, held, that an action in the nature of **quo warranto*
 *137 ranto instituted by the county attorney in the name of the state, to terminate his right to further hold the office, may be maintained, notwithstanding his said abandonment of the office.<sup>1</sup>

Original proceedings in quo warranto.

Quo warranto, brought in this court in the name of "the state of Kansas, upon the relation of A. M. F. Randolph, county attorney of Coffey county, against C. H. Graham, county treasurer of said Coffey county," to obtain a judgment of ouster against said Graham, removing him from his said office. [The petition was filed December 24, 1873, and while the action of Graham v. Gowgill, ante, *114, was pending and undetermined.] By a stipulation between the parties, the plaintiff was in any event to have judgment against defendant on the disclaimer set up in the second defense, which judgment was to take effect April 1, 1874. A determination of the questions raised by said demurrer, as to the sufficiency of the first defense to the action, was necessary to fix the liability for the costs of this proceeding.

A. M. F. Randolph and A. L. Williams, for the State.

The respondent, Graham, admits that on the seventh of November, 1871, he was duly elected to the office of county treasurer of the said county of Coffey for the term of two years, to commence on the first Tuesday in July, 1872, and that subsequently he duly qualified for said office. But he shows to the court that at the time of the commencement of this action, and prior thereto, and ever since said time, he has neither been in the possession of said office, nor of any of the rights, franchises, or emoluments appertaining to said office, and that during all the time last aforesaid he has not exercised, nor attempted to use or exercise, any of the functions or rights belonging thereto.

*138 Because of the foregoing admissions, and inasmuch as the respondent does, from and after the first day *of April, 1874, (instead of from and since the commencement of the term of two years, for which he admits that he was duly elected and qualified,) abandon, relinquish, and disclaim all and every right, title, or interest which he may have had or possessed in and to said office, it may safely and very fairly be concluded and taken as a fact to be considered in this cause that during some part of the time from and since the first Tuesday in July, 1872, until the time of the commencement of this action, (December 24, 1873,) the respondent was in actual possession of said office, and in the full use and enjoyment of all the rights, franchises, and emoluments, and in the discharge of the duties thereof.

Has the state a right to remove a county officer from an office to which he has been duly elected and qualified, for a term which has not yet expired, when, at the time of the commencement of the action for that purpose, such officer was not in actual possession of the office, nor of any of its franchises, and was not then exercising, nor attempting to exercise, any of the rights and powers with which the law had invested him, and was not then performing, nor attempting to perform, any of the duties by law imposed upon him, and when said officer had not resigned? We say, of course, that under such circumstances, an action will lie,—particularly when, as in the present case, the respondent seems to have been put by the pleadings into-the predicament of having fallen still-born into said office wherein he has ever since remained quiescent. While the state admits that it is not sufficient in a petition to allege merely that the respondent claims to use or exercise an office or franchise, and that in such a case a plea denying the user is sufficient, yet the facts stated in the defense demurred to show something more substantial than a mere claim on the part of the respondent. Said first defense shows, in substance, that he was duly elected to and qualified for the office of county treasurer of said county for the term of two years, to commence on the first Tuesday in July, 1872, and that he now is lawfully and rightfully such officer for said term, which has not *139 yet expired; *but he confesses generally that he has neglected and refused duly to exercise the rights and powers which the law and his official bond and oath had made it obligatory upon him to use and exercise, and that he has neglected and refused to discharge each and all the duties imposed upon him by law. He confesses his total and complete neglect and abandonment of said office at the time of the filing of relator's petition prior thereto, and ever since said time. Being still the incumbent de jure of said office, he pleads nothing whatever to explain, excuse, or justify his said abandonment, neglect, and non-action in said office, but by his admissions brings himself precisely within the operation of section 180, c. 25, Gen. St., and the second subdivision of section 1, c. 116, Laws 1871. It is a familiar principle that offices, like franchises, may be forfeited by non-user, as well as by misuser. State v. Allen, 21 Ind. 516-522; Page v. Hardin, 8 B. Mon. 666.

R. M. Ruggles, for defendant.

The only question, of course, is, has the state a right to commence an action to remove a county officer from an office when, at the time of the commencement of the action, the officer is not in the use of the office, or any of its franchises, nor attempting to exercise any of the franchises of said office? We, of course, say that under such circumstances the action will not lie. If an officer is not acting as an officer, nor attempting to act as an officer, what is there to remove him from? If the petition disclosed that respondent was not in the possession of the office, and was not using or claiming to use any of its franchises, would it not have been bad on general demurrer? Is it not one of the necessary ingredients, in a petition in the nature of quo warranto, to allege an actual user and occupation? If this is so, is it not necessary to prove the allegations? Is not this a possessory action, brought by the state to recover possession of an office which the defendant is alleged to have forfeited by reason of certain acts? If this is so, is it not necessary to show possession in fact at the time of commencing the action? Is there any other result to be

*140 *accomplished by this action than that of removing the officer from the office? If not, can he be removed from that of which he is not either in the actual or constructive possession or occupation? Has not the defendant, by his own acts in not using or occupying, quires the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction to do so. Graham v. Cowgill, ante, *114. Now, as the plaintiff is entitled to the office, and may take possession of it at any time that he may choose, and as it does not seem from the pleadings that any one else is in possession of the office, is he not constructively in possession of the same? We know, from another case in this court, that another person is in fact in possession of the office; but, as that person has possession of the office illegally, we do not think it would affect our decision of this case even if the fact of such possession had been stated in the pleadings in this case.

Section 180 of the act relating to counties and county officers provides that "if any * * * county officer shall neglect or refuse to perform any act which it is his duty to perform, or shall corruptly or oppressively perform any such duty, he shall forfeit his office, and shall be removed therefrom by civil action in the manner provided in the Code of Civil Procedure." Gen. St. 294. The Code of Civil Procedure provides that "such action may be brought in the supreme court or in the district court, in the following cases: * * * Second, whenever any public officer shall have done or suffered any act which, by the provisions of law, work a forfeiture of his office; * * * fifth, for any other cause for which a remedy might have been heretofore obtained by writ of quo warranto, or information in the nature of quo warranto." Gen. St. 760, § 653, subds. 2, 5; Laws 1871, p. 276, § 1, subds. 2, 6. Sir William Blackstone says that "a writ of quo warranto is in the nature of a writ of right for the king against him who claims or usurps any office, franchise, or liberty, to inquire by what authority he supports his claim, in order to determine the right." 3 Bl. Comm. 262. Sir John Comyn says that "a quo warranto is in the nature of a writ of right for the king, against him who usurps or claims any franchises or liberties, to say by what authority he *144 claims them." Com. *Dig. "Quo Warranto," A. Mr. Stephen, in speaking of the causes for which an information in the nature of quo warranto will and will not be granted, says: "But that which constitutes a sufficient user depends upon the nature of the office or franchise claimed. Thus, where it appeared, in the case of a freeman or free burgess of a corporation, that he had been sworn in, though no act or claim be stated to have been done or made by the defendant, the information was granted; and, though a mere claim to be sworn in is no usurpation, yet a swearing in, though defective in law, may be; and where a defendant had taken the oath in such a way as he thought to be sufficient at the time to make him a free burgess, it was considered to be an user." 3 Steph. N. P. 2441.

In the present case the defendant does not merely claim the office, but he has a present and existing right thereto, and a right to take immediate possession thereof. Although he has in fact forfeited his right to further hold the office, yet that forfeiture has never been judicially declared, and until it is so declared he has a right to hold the office. And no one but the state has any right to ever ask that such forfeiture shall be declared. If the state should never have asked that the forfeiture should be declared, he could rightfully and legally hold his office until the expiration of his term. It is purely in the discretion of the state whether it will press the forfeiture or not. The user is certainly sufficiently shown. The defendant gave bond, was sworn in, took possession of the office, and exercised the functions thereof for more than sixteen months, and still claims to be legally entitled to the office, although he is not attempting to exercise its functions.

The demurrer to the first defense in said answer will be sustained. The judgment will be rendered in favor of the plaintiff, and against the defendant, in accordance with the stipulation of the parties.

KINGMAN, C. J., concurring.

*145 *GEORGE SHEARER v. COMMISSIONERS OF DOUGLAS Co.

January Term, 1874.

1. Eminent Domain: Public Use: Compensation: Waiver. The legislature, in providing for the taking of private property for public uses, may also prescribe the manner in which compensation therefor shall be made, and if such manner be free from any unreasonable requirements, may provide that a failure to seek compensation in that manner shall be deemed an absolute waiver of all claims therefor.
2. ———. Where, on the day of the meeting of the viewers in proceedings to lay out a public highway, the mother of the owner of one of the tracts through which the proposed highway runs, was taken suddenly sick, and in consequence thereof such owner failed to attend the meeting of the viewers, or present any claim for damages, held, that such failure was a waiver of all claims for damages.

Error from Douglas district court.

This case was tried in the district court at the August term, 1873. On the trial it was admitted that the road had been legally laid out over plaintiff's land; that his claim for damages was presented to defendants before they acted on the report of the viewers; that no damages had been allowed plaintiff; and that his damages by reason of said road were $500. Finding and judgment in favor of the defendants.

Thacher & Stephens, for plaintiff.

It is conceded that the power to take private property for public uses is confided to certain tribunals, and that the road in question was a public necessity. This was found through constitutional modes. It will also be conceded that the public cannot take private property without compensation; but it will be claimed, and it is not denied, that this claim for compensation must be made in the manner prescribed by law. Yet it will also be conceded that the law does *146 not demand *an impossible or unreasonable thing, and that, where necessity interposes between a person and the assertion of his claim for compensation, he does not thereby lose his right if he seeks the first opportunity to assert it. The real question, therefore, which the record opens for settlement here is whether any circumstances will waive the requirements of section 5, c. 89, Gen. St., respecting the presentation, by the owner, of a written claim to the viewers for damages to his land by reason of the road; and, if so, whether those detailed in this case are sufficient. We suppose it will hardly be claimed that in case of clear, positive inability of a party, without negligence, to be present at the meeting of the viewers, though duly notified to be present, a total denial of all compensation for damages follows. Equity would always interfere against so unconscionable a result. But the case in question is in no way inferior to the one supposed. The duty of a son to a sick and dying mother presents full as strong an impossibility—at least it ought to—as personal disability. Had plaintiff left his sick mother under the circumstances unfolded in the record, he would have met and deserved the scorn and execration of all right-minded persons. It will be observed that the county board, notwithstanding any report of the viewers, have full control of the question of damages. It is provided in section 7 of the road act: "All allowance for damages as provided in this act shall be subject to revision by said board of county commissioners." It provides further for an appeal from their "award of damages." Were it not for this right of appeal from their award to a court of record with a jury, the act would be unconstitutional. Lamb v. Lane, 4 Ohio St. 167. There is a recent decision in Ohio, (Reckner v. Warner, 22 Ohio St. 275,) which we think fairly, by its reasoning, disposes of this case.

Barker & Summerfield, for defendants.

The real question in this case is, had the plaintiff any standing *147 before the county commissioners? We submit that *he had nothing to complain of there. The commissioners had nothing before them to act upon. The plaintiff has had his day in court. He had due notice that a part of his land would be appropriated for public purposes, and that the viewers would meet on a certain day to take into consideration his application for damages. He failed to appear, either in person, by agent, or attorney. He did not send his application to the viewers, as he could have done in case he was prevented from presenting it in person. He has waived his right to compensation. "All applications for damages shall be barred unless they are presented as provided in this act." Gen. St. 899, § 5. The plaintiff claims that he was prevented by an unavoidable casualty from presenting his claim in time. But the question of unavoidable casualty does not arise in this case. Was it necessary for plaintiff to wait until the last moment to present his claim to the viewers? The viewers were appointed on the eleventh of July, and met on the ninth of August following. The plaintiff's mother was taken sick only on the day the viewers were to meet and did meet. He was not compelled to wait till the last day to prepare his application. He had nearly a month to do it in, and, if he had prepared it in time, how easy it would have been for him to send it to the viewers by some one, even on the last day. He had nearly a month's notice of the appointment of the viewers, and of the time ordered for their meeting, though this notice may have been only constructive; but he had, as he admits, six days' actual notice, which the law (section 4 of the road act) entitles him to, and he could have filed his written application, in accordance with section 5, on any one of those six days. It is not a question of casualty, but of laches.

BREWER, J. This action in the district court was an appeal from the decision of the commissioners of Douglas county, refusing to grant to the plaintiff any damages on account of the laying *148 out and opening of a road through his *farm. The facts are as follows: The proceedings were all regularly had. The plaintiff was a resident of the county, and was duly notified of the time and place of the meeting of the viewers, as required by section 4 of the road act. An agreed statement of facts shows that, "on the morning of the day appointed, the plaintiff, who lived about five miles from where the viewers were to meet, prepared his claim for damages, had his horse saddled, and at the door, to carry him to the place of meeting of the viewers in time to have met the viewers, and present his said claim, and intended so to do; that his mother, a resident of his family, was taken suddenly and dangerously ill with a congestive chill, which in a few days terminated in death; that plaintiff was called upon and stopped from meeting with said viewers to be with his mother in her illness, was with her at her bedside attending upon her, and that had it not been for his mother's illness, as stated, he would have presented his claim for damages to the said viewers, and said viewers would have allowed plaintiff his damages, and reported favorably on laying out said road; that plaintiff appeared before the defendants, before they had acted on the report of the said viewers, and presented his claim for damages in writing, and made known to them the above facts," etc. We have made this lengthy statement from the admitted statement of facts, that the case may be clearly presented. It is not questioned by counsel for plaintiff but that defendants were entitled to judgment unless the circumstances as detailed above were sufficient to waive the requirements of section 5 of the road act respecting the presentation by the owner to the viewers of a written claim for damages to his land by reason of the road. The section declares that "all applications for damages shall be barred unless they are presented as provided in this act." Gen. St. 899, § 5.

The application was not presented as provided, and hence, by the plain language of the statute, was barred. No exception is named in the statute. No authority is given to the courts to declare one. And while it cannot be denied that the facts of this case present a *149 strong appeal,—show a case, indeed, which of *right there should be an exception,—still we do not feel authorized to interpolate into the statute a proviso or exception which the legislature has seen fit to omit. The power to take private property for public uses is clear. The power to name the tribunal to award compensation for the property taken, and to prescribe the manner in which claims therefor shall be made is equally clear; and, if the manner prescribed is free from any unreasonable requirements, it seems to us also clear that the legislature may provide that a failure to make the claim for compensation in such manner shall be deemed an absolute waiver thereof, and that, having made such provision, the waiver is not in any given instance avoided by proof that the claimant failed to pursue the prescribed remedy in obedience to the dictates of friendship, or the obligations of filial or social duty.

We do not think the case of Reckner v. Warner, 22 Ohio St. 275, conflicts with the views herein expressed.

Regretting that our views of the law do not enable us to give to the plaintiff the relief he asks, we are constrained to order an affirmance of the judgment.

COMMISSIONERS OF JEFFERSON Co. v. J. B. McCLEARY.

January Term, 1874.

County Superintendent: Salary: Cities. The amount of the salary of each county superintendent of public instruction is to be determined from the number of children of school ages within his county; but all incorporated cities, including cities of the third class, are to be excluded in taking the enumeration of the school children for such a purpose.

Error from Jefferson district court.

• McCleary presented to the county board of Jefferson county
• *150 his claim for balance of *salary claimed to be due as county superintendent, to the amount of four hundred dollars, which claim was disallowed by the county board, from whose decision he appealed to the district court. The county board claimed that McCleary was entitled to only $1,200 per year, and had been paid in full at that rate. He claimed $1,500, and this action was for the difference between these sums for sixteen months. The district court, at the May term, 1873, gave judgment in favor of McCleary.

Henry Keeler, Co. Atty., for plaintiff in error.

J. B. Johnson, for defendant in error.

VALENTINE, J. Counsel for defendant in error (plaintiff below) says that "there are but two questions in this case: First, what salary is the county superintendent of public instruction entitled to in Jefferson county from September 1, 1871, to January 1, 1878? Second, was the claim presented by defendant in error to the county board 'for all his dues in full,' and, if so, can the verbal agreement of plaintiff and defendant that it should not be in full be offered in evidence?"

1. The defendant in error was county superintendent of public instruction for Jefferson county from September 1, 1871, to January 1, 1878, and for that time the county board paid him as salary $1,600, or at the rate of $1,200 per annum. The county board claims that this was all that the defendant in error was entitled to receive, but he claims that he was entitled to receive a salary at the rate of $1,500 per annum. The statute provides that "county superintendents of public instruction of counties reporting three thousand and less *151 than five thousand children over the age of five, and *under the age of twenty-one, years, shall receive a salary of twelve hundred dollars per annum; and county superintendents of public instruction of counties reporting five thousand children and over, of school ages, shall receive a salary of fifteen hundred dollars per annum: provided, that in the above enumeration incorporated cities shall be excluded." Laws 1869, p. 174. It seems to be admitted that, under the above proviso, cities of the first class and cities of the second class are to be excluded from the enumeration in determining the salaries of county superintendents; but it is claimed that cities of the third class are not to be so excluded. The reasons for this claim seem to be as follows: (1) There were no cities of the third class when the act fixing the salaries for county superintendents was passed and took effect; (2) when cities of the third class were organized, they still remained under the superintendency of county superintendents.

If cities of the third class are to be excluded from said enumeration, then the defendant in error is entitled to receive only $1,200 salary per annum; but if such cities are to be included in the enumeration, then he is entitled to receive $1,500 salary per annum. We think they are to be excluded. The salary act provides that all "incorporated cities shall be excluded." Now, cities of the third class are unquestionably "incorporated cities." They are as much so as any other class of cities. They are not only so by virtue of the powers, privileges, franchises, and immunities granted to them, but they are so by virtue of positive and specific enactment. The act incorporating them provides that "each city governed by the provisions of this act shall be a body corporate and politic." Laws 1869, p. 80, § 4; Laws 1871, p. 122, § 13. The first act incorporating cities of the third class was passed by the same legislature that passed the act fixing the salaries of county superintendents; and it was passed three days earlier. Hence the legislature must have known, at the time they passed the act fixing the salaries of county superintendents, that "incorporated cities" of the third class would soon come *152 into existence; *and hence, as they used language in said proviso broad enough to exclude all incorporated cities, they must have intended to exclude cities of the third class, as well as other cities, from said enumeration. It can hardly be supposed that the legislature, when they used said language excluding all incorporated cities, had forgotten what they had done only three days before that time. We suppose it will hardly be urged seriously that said proviso had relation to such cities only as were in existence at the time when the act in which said proviso is found was passed; for, if such construction should be put upon said proviso, then all cities of the second class organized since the passage of said act would have to be included in the enumeration in determining the amount of the salary of county superintendents. Besides, upon general principles of construction said proviso could not be so construed. It does not purport to have been passed for the present only. Its operation is not limited by the language in which it is couched to things as they existed at the time of its passage. On the contrary, it was clearly enacted for the future. It was clearly intended to operate upon things as they should exist when its operation could be called practically into effect; and laws are generally passed for a future state of things, and not for the present merely. If the salaries of the county superintendents of some of the western counties of this state were to be determined by the number of school children within their respective counties at the time said act was passed, instead of at the present time, their salaries would certainly not be very large. But such a construction cannot be put upon said act.

We suppose it is hardly necessary to consider the other question raised in this case. The defendant in error having been paid in full for his services as county superintendent, we suppose it will make but little difference whether he and the county board had a verbal understanding or not that he was not paid in full.

The judgment of the court below is reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings.

*LUMON H. REED v. JOSEPH C. WILSON.

January Term, 1874.

New Trial: Unavoidable Casualty and Misfortune. An averment, in a petition to vacate a judgment, that certain glaring errors occurred at the trial, that the trial closed on the third and the term of court on the fifth of the same month, and that, owing to their press of business, these errors were accidentally omitted by counsel from the motion for a new trial, does not disclose any "unavoidable casualty or misfortune," within the meaning of the statute.

Error from Labette district court.

Reed filed a petition in the district court, under section 568 of the Civil Code, to vacate a judgment previously given by said court against him and in favor of Wilson, and for a new trial of said action, on the alleged ground that "by reason of unavoidable misfortune" Reed was "prevented from properly defending" said action. To this petition Wilson demurred; and at the July term, 1873, the district court sustained the demurrer.

F. A. Bettis, for defendant in error.

BREWER, J. The defendant in error was sheriff of Labette county, and had seized certain cattle upon execution. Plaintiff in error claimed that the cattle belonged to him, and not to the defendant in the execution. He brought an action of replevin, and was beaten.

A motion for a new trial was made and overruled, and judgment rendered against him for *$1,000, the value of the property as found by the jury. Thereafter he filed a petition to vacate such judgment. A demurrer thereto was sustained, and of this ruling he now complains. We think the ruling of the district court was correct. The authority for this mode of procedure is found in section 568 of the Code, (Gen. St. 742,) and the particular clause under which this petition was filed is the seventh, "for unavoidable casualty or misfortune, preventing the party from prosecuting or defending." Now, we think the petition comes far short of showing any "unavoidable casualty or misfortune." It alleges that upon the trial the court admitted certain evidence of the continuance of a partnership, which his counsel had advised him was not admissible, and which he was not therefore fully prepared to rebut, and that there was no sufficient evidence of the value as found by the jury; that the trial closed on the third, and the term of court on the fifth, of April, and that owing to their press of business these points were accidentally omitted by his counsel in the motion filed for a new trial. Clearly this does not show "unavoidable casualty or misfortune," within the meaning of the statute. It is for the interest of the public, as well as of the parties, that there be a speedy end of any litigation. After trial and verdict, motion for a new trial, and judgment, the proceedings should not be disturbed, and the litigation reopened, except upon a clear showing that the rights of the defeated party have been lost by unavoidable casualty or misfortune.

The judgment of the district court will be affirmed.

1. Amendments: Not Error to Refuse. Where an action is brought upon a promissory note indorsed by the payee thereof to H. and then indorsed by H. to the plaintiff, and, after the case is called for trial upon the issues made by the petition, answer, and reply, the defendants ask leave of the court to allow them to amend their answer by verifying the same so as to put in issue the indorsements on said note, but said defendants do not make any showing of diligence or merits, nor, indeed, any showing, held, not error for the court to refuse to allow said amendment.<sup>1</sup>

3. Mortgages: Foreclosure: Amending Petition: Personal Judgment.

In an action on a promissory note, and to foreclose a mortgage given to secure said note, it is not error for the court to render a personal judgment against a defendant who is both a party to the note and mortgage, although the petition merely asks that the mortgage be foreclosed, and the mortgaged property sold to pay the debt, costs, etc., and that execution issue for the balance. Where the prayer of the petition is no more defective than this, it may be amended at any time, without costs, so as to make it formal; and upon petition in error it will be considered as so amended.

4. ———: Liquidated Damages: Attorney's Fees. Where a mortgage contains a stipulation that the mortgagor shall pay, not only the debt secured by the mortgage, and interest thereon, but also, in case of foreclosure, the costs, "and fifty dollars as liquidated damages for the foreclosure of the mortgage," held, that the stipulation for the payment of said fifty dollars as liquidated damages is void, and that a judgment rendered under such a stipulation for fifty dollars as attorney's fees is erroneous. [Dorman v. Crozier, 14 Kan. 227.]

Error from Pottawatomie district court.

Action by Sprague against C. C. Foote, Susan Foote, and Samuel Cooper, to foreclose a mortgage. The mortgage was executed *156 by C. C. Foote, and Susan, his wife, to secure a *note given by said C. C. Foote and said Cooper. A personal judgment was rendered on the note against the makers thereof, at the August term, 1873, of the district court, and a decree of foreclosure and for the sale of the mortgaged premises was entered against Foote and wife.

R. S. Hick, for plaintiffs in error.

The district court erred in refusing leave to the defendants below to amend their answer by verifying the second paragraph thereof, denying the indorsement of the note. Had such leave been granted, it would have thrown the burden upon the plaintiff below of proving the alleged indorsement by Lewis to Hafer. The defendants were permitted to introduce evidence touching the indorsement for the purpose of letting in the plea of usury, and Lewis and Hafer were examined as witnesses by defendants on that point. But if the burden of proving the indorsement had been thrown upon the plaintiff, (as it would have been by the amendment,) these witnesses must have been made his, instead of the defendants', and the defendants would have had a right to cross-examine them, to discredit their testimony by proving contradictory statements, etc.,—advantages which they did not and could not have when compelled to make them their own witnesses.

The court erred in rendering judgment against Cooper as a principal debtor. The defendant in error alleges in his petition that Cooper signed the note as surety, and prays for a judgment against him as surety only.

The court erred in rendering a personal judgment against C. C. Foote. No judgment was prayed for against him in the petition.

The petition recites the conditions of the mortgage, and it does not appear that any attorney's fee was stipulated for therein; yet the court rendered judgment against C. C. Foote and Cooper *157 for $50 as an attorney's fee. This, also, was error. *If it be claimed that the attorney's fee was provided for in the stipulation for "liquidated damages," the answer is that "liquidated damages" are not attorney's fees. No judgment was asked for "liquidated damages," and none rendered, and none could rightfully have been rendered had it been prayed for. The evidence shows clearly that more than 12 per cent. interest was contracted for, without including any damages, "liquidated" or unliquidated. Kurtz v. Sponable, 6 Kan.*395. But whether it was error not to render judgment against Foote for an attorney's fee, it certainly was to render such judgment against Cooper, who was not a party to the mortgage. Case & Putnam, for defendant in error.

VALENTINE, J. This was an action on a note and mortgage brought by the defendant in error, as plaintiff below, against the plaintiffs in error. Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff below. The plaintiffs in error say, in their brief, that "the district court erred in refusing leave to the defendants below to amend their answer by verifying the second paragraph thereof denying the indorsement of the note." Said paragraph does not deny said indorsements. It simply denies that the indorsements were made "for value received," as stated in the petition, and then admits the indorsements in the following language, to-wit: "But the said alleged indorsements and assignments were made by the said John Augustus Lewis and W. B. Hafer without consideration, and only for the purpose and with the intent to prevent the defendants from setting up and maintaining their defense to any action that might be brought on said note or mortgage, or either of them, as the plaintiff at the time well knew." John Augustus Lewis was the payee of the note, and the mortgagee. He indorsed the note and assigned the mortgage to W. B. Hafer; and W. B. Hafer indorsed the note and assigned the mortgage to D. V. Sprague, the plaintiff below, (defendant in error.) *158 The defendants set up the defenses that *the plaintiff below was not the real party in interest, and that the note was given in part for usurious interest. Upon the trial the defendants attempted to prove these defenses; but it was not only shown by the evidence that Lewis and Hafer indorsed said note as alleged in the plaintiff's petition, but that each did it for a full and sufficient consideration; that Hafer and Sprague were bona fide purchasers of the note, without any knowledge on their part that it was tainted with usury, and that Hafer purchased the note of Lewis before the same became due. But even if the defendants had in said paragraph denied said indorsements, still the district court would not have erred in overruling the application of the defendants below for leave to amend their answer. It seems to be admitted that the answer was filed within the time prescribed by law. But said application to amend the answer by verifying said paragraph was not made until long after the proper time for filing the answer had elapsed; and, indeed, it was not then made until the case was called peremptorily for trial upon the issues made by the petition, answer, and reply. And when it was made it was not founded upon any showing of diligence or merits. There was no attempt made to show why the defendants did not verify their answer, when they could have done so without leave of the court, or why they did not make their application for amendment sooner, or why they did not give to the plaintiff notice that they would make such an application. We suppose that it is well known that defendants have no absolute right to amend their answers whenever they may choose to do so. We suppose that it is well known that they can amend only upon leave of the court, and upon such terms as may be just, and that the court may refuse to allow any amendment of a pleading unless it is first shown by proper evidence that it would work injustice to do so.

2. The defendants Cooper and C. C. Foote executed said note as though they were both principals, and neither of them as a surety for the other. But the pleadings show that Cooper was in fact only a surety for C. C. Foote; and *plaintiff, in the prayer of his petition, asks for judgment against Cooper only as a surety. No issue, however, was ever made on this subject. Cooper never asked the court to render judgment against himself only as a surety. Indeed, it does not seem that the attention of the court was ever called to the fact that Cooper was only a surety. And hence the court rendered judgment against Cooper, as well as against Foote, as though they were both principals. In this we do not think the court erred. The court was not bound to render the judgment against Cooper, merely as a surety unless Cooper himself first asked that it should be done.

3. The plaintiffs in error also complain that the court below rendered a personal judgment against the defendant C. C. Foote, although it is claimed that the petition below does not ask for such a judgment. Now, if the petition does not ask for such a judgment, we think it comes very near doing so. It asks that the mortgage shall be foreclosed; that the mortgaged property shall be sold to pay the debt evidenced by the note, and to pay the costs, attorney's fees, etc.; and that execution shall be issued for the balance. And, besides, this is the kind of judgment that the law requires shall be rendered in such cases as this. Laws 1870, p. 175, § 13. We think the court did not commit any substantial error in this respect. Where the prayer of the petition is no more defective than the one in this case, we think it may be amended at any time, without costs, so as to make it formal; and upon petition in error we will consider it as so amended.

4. The petition recites the conditions of the mortgage, which show that the mortgagors agreed to pay, not only the principal of the debt secured by the mortgage, and interest thereon, but also, in case of foreclosure of the mortgage, costs, "and fifty dollars as liquidated damages for the foreclosure." The petition then prays for a judgment that the mortgaged property be "ordered to be sold, and the proceeds applied to the payment of said debt, costs, attorney's *160 fees, etc." The court rendered a *judgment for fifty dollars as attorney's fees for the foreclosure of the mortgage, in addition to the debt, interest, and costs. This the plaintiffs in error claim was erroneous. Upon this question we are inclined to think the plaintiffs in error are correct. The case seems to fall within the decision made in the case of Kurtz v. Sponable, 6 Kan. *395. The stipulation in the mortgage in this case, as it was in that, is for a certain sum to be paid by the debtor as liquidated damages over and above the debt and interest and all legitimate costs. Now, what was the term "liquidated damages," in this mortgage, designed to cover? If it was designed to cover attorney's fees, why did not the parties say so in the mortgage? If it was designed to cover any legitimate charge or expense, why did they not say so? Why did not the parties state precisely and definitely just what it was designed to cover,—just what the damages were intended to be for,—so that the courts could see whether the damages were such as could be allowed by law or not? If the damages were for usurious interest, then, of course, they could not be allowed. And would it be proper to allow an issue to be framed, and a trial had, to determine whether these "liquidated damages" were intended to cover some legitimate charge or expense, or to cover usurious interest? The two cases of Kurtz v. Sponable, supra, and Tholen v. Duffy, 7 Kan. *405, show nearly what the opinion of the court is upon this question. If the stipulation in the mortgage is for the payment of something which the court can see is legal, and a valid and legitimate charge or expense, then the court will uphold the same; but if the stipulation is so indefinite that the court cannot tell whether the payment was intended to be for something legal or illegal, then the court will not uphold the stipulation. We think the stipulation is void, and therefore the mortgage is the same as though there were no such stipulation contained in it, and therefore the judgment for fifty dollars as attorney's fees is erroneous. Stover v. Johnnycake, 9 Kan. *367.

This disposes of all the points made in the case. The cause *161 will be remanded, with the order that the judgment of *the court below be modified so as to correspond with this opinion; and, although we do not think that the court below erred in rendering judgment against said Cooper as principal instead of as surety, yet, if the said Cooper so desires it, the judgment may still be further modified so that the judgment may be against him as a surety only.

C. M. ALBINSON and others v. J. ROBERTS.

January Term, 1874.

Appeal: Pleadings on. Where a judgment of a justice of the peace is taken to the district court on error, and reversed, and the case retained for trial, and no order for pleadings is entered, and the amount in controversy is less than $100, it is not error to overrule a motion to dismiss the case for want of a petition.

Error from Cloud district court.

Roberts brought an action in a justice's court against Albinson and two others, which was removed by petition in error to the district court. The district court reversed the judgment, and retained the action for trial. At the August term, 1873, of the district court, the defendants moved that the action be dismissed because no petition had been filed, which motion was overruled, and an exception taken. A trial by the court was then had. The court found for the plaintiff, and rendered judgment in his favor for $70.87½ and costs.

L. J. Crans, for plaintiffs in error.

The court erred in overruling the motion to dismiss for the reason that no petition had been filed.

*162 The court erred in trying the action without the inter*vention of a jury, a jury trial not having been waived by the plaintiffs in error or their counsel. Const. § 5, Bill of Rights; Civil Code, §§ 266, 289. There was no written consent in person or by attorney filed with the clerk, or oral consent in open court entered upon the journal conferring such right on the court. There was no issue joined, (Tarleston v. Brily, 3 Kan. 433; Goff v. Russell, Id. 212,) and until issue joined between the parties there was nothing to try, and no form of trial to waive. The filing of a justice's transcript on appeal in the district court merely gives jurisdiction without service of summons, but presents no issue whatever.

The court erred in rendering a judgment, there being no verdict or legal finding on which to found the same. When the proceedings of a justice of the peace are reversed, "the same shall be retained by the court for trial and final judgment as in cases of appeal." Gen. St. 742, § 566. As the Code nowhere determines what the words, "as in cases of appeal," mean, we must seek the meaning of the legislature elsewhere. This we find in section 107, c. 121, Comp. Laws 1862, p. 635, then in force regulating appeals: "The parties shall proceed in all respects in the same manner as though the action had been originally instituted in the said court." The Code provides what proceedings shall be had in the district court in actions originally instituted there. This court construed section 107 in Tarleston v. Brily, 3 Kan. *433. In construing statutes we are compelled to examine others in pari materia. Section 566 can only be explained by reference to section 107, c. 121, Comp. Laws 1862, and the latter section is as much a part of the former as though it had been textually inserted therein. The legislature, when it passed the Civil Code, intended that error cases held for trial should be tried as appeals were according to laws then existing. It could change the mode of trial of either. It has seen fit to change the mode of trial on appeals. If section 107 had been textually inserted in section 566, the amendment of section 124 of the justices' act (Laws 1871, p. 184) could not in anywise change section 566. To give such force *163 to the amendment of said section 124 as the *district court gave, is in contravention of section 16, art. 2, of the constitution.

Noble & Gray and C. W. McDonald, for defendant in error.

It was not required that the plaintiff should file new pleadings when the cause had been placed on the docket for trial as on appeal. Laws 1870, § 7, p. 184; Civil Code, § 566.

As to a jury being waived, no error appears affirmatively on the record. The cause came on to be heard, and the defendant failed to plead, answer, or demur. It was a case on default. There is no evidence that the defendant's attorney was present at the trial. When the defendant fails to appear, it is not necessary that the record shall show that plaintiff waived a jury. Civil Code, § 289; Cohen v. Hamill, 8 Kan. *621.

BREWER, J. Defendant in error obtained judgment before a justice of the peace against the plaintiffs in error, which judgment was reversed on petition in error by the district court. The case was there retained for trial, and subsequently judgment again rendered in favor of the defendant in error. To reverse this second judgment this proceeding in error is instituted. The first ground of error is the overruling by the district court of the motion to dismiss for want of a petition. The Civil Code (Gen. St. 742, § 566) provides that a case reversed shall be retained for trial and final judgment "as in cases of appeal." Now, counsel claims that by the law as it stood at the time of the enactment of the Code, under the decision of this court in Tarleston v. Brily, 3 Kan. *433, pleadings were required in cases of appeal, and hence argues that pleadings were also essential in cases of error. Counsel has overlooked the fact that in 1867, and subsequent to the decision in Tarleston v. Brily, the legislature expressly declared that no pleadings should be necessary in appeal cases where the amount in controversy was less than one hundred dollars. Laws 1867, *164 p. 78, § 9. The amount in controversy *here is less than one hundred dollars. Hence, by the counsel's own argument, no pleadings were essential in this case, and the court did not err in overruling the motion to dismiss for want of a petition. We may say that independent of the line of argument pursued by counsel, and appropriated by us, we think the court did not err in overruling the motion to dismiss for want of a petition.

It is also objected that the record does not show any waiver of a jury, and that therefore a trial by the court was erroneous. The action was on a promissory note. No denial under oath was filed. The defendants were in default. They did not demand a jury. The plaintiff makes no objection to the record. We see no error.

The judgment will be affirmed.

JOHN S. HOOK and others v. WILLIAM N. BIXBY.

January Term, 1874.

1. Limitation: Rule of Construction. Where lumber is sold on the nineteenth of February, 1870, and the debt thereby created becomes due on that day, but is not paid, the party to whom the debt is payable may bring his action therefor on the nineteenth of February, 1873.
2. ———: Computation of Time. In such a case the time within which the creditor may commence his action is computed by excluding the first day and including the last.
3. Witness: Survivor of Contracting Parties. Where certain persons purchase lumber on credit from a firm composed of three persons, and afterwards one of the members of the firm dies, and another member of the firm becomes the owner of the partnership assets, including said debt for lumber, and the last-named member of said firm sues the purchasers of said lumber for said debt, held, that neither of the defendants can testify in such suit in his own behalf concerning any transaction or communication had personally by such defendant with the deceased member of said firm.<sup>1</sup>

*165 *Error from Doniphan district court.

Action by Bixby against Hook and three others, on an account originally accruing in favor of a firm composed of said Bixby and William D. Beeler and John S. Beeler. Said William D. Beeler died before the trial, which was had at the March term, 1873, of the district court. Finding and judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $208.68.

F. M. Keith and Nathan Price, for plaintiffs in error.

Upon the facts the court should have held the action barred by the statute of limitations. The action clearly comes within the second subdivision of section 18 of the Code, and by its terms must be brought within three years from the time the right of action accrued. This right of action clearly accrued on the nineteenth of February, 1870, and by our law if the plaintiffs did not pay on that day, but left defendant's mill with the lumber, he could immediately have commenced an action by attachment against them. Now, the action must be brought within three years from the time the right accrues. The term "within," as defined by Webster, means that which is inside of certain limits. Now, what time is within a year, bearing in mind that the law takes no cognizance of fractions of a day? Suppose this lumber had been brought by plaintiffs in error on the first day of January, 1870, when would the year expire? Certainly, on the thirty-first of December following. The year begins on the first of January and ends on December 31st, says the almanac. Then how can any other time be within the year? and can the case be altered if the right of action accrues on the nineteenth of February instead of the first of January? And we think the authorities fully sustain this view. See Ang. Lim. § 44. There are some authorities which would seem to view the law differently, but these rest upon a different state of facts; as where the party to whom the right of action accrues was not privy to the facts. Ang. Lim. §§ 47, 49; The St. Lawrence, 9 Cranch, 120.

*166 *The court erred in the exclusion of the testimony of Springer and the other witnesses as to the settlement with Beeler. The only authority for excluding this testimony is section 322 of the Civil Code. That section would exclude these witnesses if Bixby had acquired title to the cause of action immediately from Beeler, deceased; but in this case a part of this claim always was in Bixby. He only derives a third interest in it from his deceased partner. The court went beyond the letter of the law in excluding this testimony, and we do not believe that the ends of justice are promoted by courts going beyond the law to suppress the truth.

The third objection is that on the facts shown plaintiffs in error were not individually liable. Their evidence shows that there was a church organization in White Cloud, known as the Christian Church; that they were erecting a church building, and had appointed a building committee, consisting of plaintiffs in error and Beeler, the deceased partner of Bixby; that said deceased partner was the treasurer of said committee, and made the collections of the money which had been subscribed to aid in the erection of the building. Now, when this building was completed, to whom would it belong? Certainly to the Christian Church of White Cloud. If any of these plaintiffs in error the next morning after the completion of the building had been guilty of any violation of the rules of the church, could they not have been kicked out? and could any one of them claim that he had any right or interest in the church building? It certainly seems to us that in addressing a court so familiar with church discipline as this, it is useless to refer to authorities; but we would cite the court to Chase v. Cheney, 10 Amer. Law Reg. (N. S.) 295, and to Gartin v. Penick, 9 Amer. Law Reg. (N. S.) 210; Gartin v. Penick, 5 Bush, 110; Chase v. Cheney, 58 Ill. 509.

Advantage was sought to be taken of the statute of limitations by a motion to dismiss. Defendant in error submits that advantage can only be taken of the statute (1) by *demurrer; (2) by answer; or (3) by an objection to the introduction of testimony under the petition, which is in fact a demurrer. Ang. Lim. § 285; Zane v. Zane, 5 Kan. *134. Under the earlier decisions, an action accruing on the nineteenth of February, 1870, could not be sued on the nineteenth of February, 1873; but the weight of modern authorities is that the first of these days should be excluded in the count, and the last included. See Ang. Lim. §§ 43-50, and authorities cited in notes to section 50. By our statute the first day is to be excluded in the count. Civil Code, § 722.

Upon the question of the admissibility of testimony offered by defendants below, we submit that the testimony was properly excluded. Bixby was surviving partner and assignee of the firm of W. D. Beeler & Sons, of which firm W. D. Beeler had deceased. Under section 322 of the Code the proffered testimony was properly excluded.

VALENTINE, J. This was an action on an account. It was commenced in a justice's court, appealed to the district court, and then brought on petition in error to this court. It is uncertain what questions are really presented to us for our consideration. No case was made for the supreme court, as might have been done under the statutes enacted for that purpose, (Gen. St. 737; Laws 1870, p. 169; Laws 1871, p. 274;) and hence it would seem that the whole record should have been brought to this court. But the pleadings, however, are not brought to this court. The record does not purport to contain all the evidence; and while a motion was made to set aside the findings of the court below, and for a new trial, yet the record brought to this court does not show upon what ground such motion was founded, or upon what ground the new trial was asked. The trial in the court below was before the court without a jury. The court made a general finding for the plaintiff below, defendant in error, and made no special findings; nor was the court asked to make special findings.

*168 The judgment was rendered in accordance with said *general finding. Now, we cannot reverse said judgment on the ground that it is not sustained by sufficient evidence when we have not got all the evidence, and when no motion was ever made to set aside said judgment or finding on the ground that it was not sustained by sufficient evidence.

It is claimed that the cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations; but the only way in which the question was raised in the court below was by a motion made to dismiss the action. Now, if any item of the account sued on was not barred, then this motion should have been overruled. In fact, unless the plaintiff's pleading showed affirmatively upon its face that every item of the account was barred, the motion could not be sustained. This motion was made in the district court after a trial had already been had upon the merits of the action in the justice's court; and after the motion was overruled both parties again proceeded to a trial upon the merits of the action in the district court. But the cause of action was not barred; or at most, the last items thereof were not barred. The cause of action accrued, as is claimed and admitted, on February 19, 1870, and the action was commenced on February 19, 1873. Our Code of Civil Procedure provides that "civil actions, other than for the recovery of real property, can only be brought within the following periods after the cause of action shall have accrued, and not afterwards: * * * Second, within three years, an action upon contract, not in writing, express or implied." Gen. St. 633, § 18. And the same Code provides that "the time within which an act is to be done shall be computed by excluding the first day and including the last; if the last day be Sunday, it shall be excluded." Gen. St. 771, § 722. The action in the present case was founded upon an account for lumber sold. Now, suppose the lumber to have been sold on any hour of the day of February 19, 1870, and suppose the action to have accrued on the very hour that the lumber was sold. Then, according to the letter of the statute of limitations, the plaintiff would *169 have had until the same hour of the day of February 19, 1873, within which to commence his action, for the three years could not expire sooner. If, for instance, the lumber was sold at noon of February 19, 1870, the plaintiff would have, according to the letter of the statute, until noon of February 19, 1873, within which to commence his action, for three years could not elapse before that time. Now, as the plaintiff in the case supposed has a half of the first day in which to sue, and a half of the last day in which to sue, the statute for the computation of time comes in and says that the time within which the plaintiff may sue shall be computed by excluding the whole of the first day and including the whole of the last; that is, he may have the whole of the last day within which to sue instead of the half or any other part of that day only. This is reasonable, and it is in accordance with the statutes, and it is probably in accordance with the weight of authority. See 2 Pars. Con. 662-664; Ang. Lim. §§ 42-50, and cases there cited. Any other rule would shorten the statute of limitations. But in the present case, although the lumber was sold on February 19, 1870, yet it is not very clear that the debt thereby created became due on that day. Probably, however, it did.

This action was on an account for lumber sold by William D. Beeler & Sons to the defendants. The firm of William D. Beeler & Sons was composed of William D. Beeler, John S. Beeler, and William N. Bixby. There was evidence introduced tending to show the following facts, to-wit: William D. Beeler died, and his interest in the assets of the firm, including said account, was sold at public sale to the plaintiff below, defendant in error. It seems to be admitted that the plaintiff is now the owner of the whole of said account, but how he became the owner of the interest of John S. Beeler is not definitely shown; nor is it shown who sold the interest of William D. Beeler, deceased. We suppose, however, that the sale was all regular, as no question has been raised concerning it in this court.

After the foregoing evidence was introduced, then one of the *170 defendants was put *upon the witness-stand, and it was attempted to be proved by such witness that the defendants had a settlement with said William D. Beeler in his life-time, and that according to that settlement the defendants owed only $34 on said account, instead of $172.47, as claimed by the plaintiff. The plaintiff objected to the evidence on the ground that it was incompetent under section 322 of the Civil Code, (Gen. St. 691,) and the court sustained the objection. The defendants claim that this ruling was erroneous. We are inclined to think, however, that the ruling was correct. Said section provides as follows:

"Sec. 322. No party shall be allowed to testify in his own behalf in respect to any transaction or communication had personally by such party with a deceased person, when the adverse party is the executor, administrator, heir at law, next of kin, surviving partner, or assignee of such deceased person, where they have acquired title to the cause of action immediately from such deceased person; nor shall the assignor of a thing in action be allowed to testify in behalf of such party concerning any transaction or communication had personally by such assignor with a deceased person in any such case; nor shall such party or assignor be competent to testify to any transaction had personally by such party or assignor with a deceased partner or joint contractor in the absence of his surviving partner or joint contractor, when such surviving partner or joint contractor is an adverse party. * * *

The construction given to said section by the court below certainly comes within the spirit of said section, and we are inclined to think that it also comes within the letter of the section. Of course, a different construction might be given to said section, for it is manifestly ambiguous in two or three respects, but the true construction is, we think, the one given it by the court below.

The third point made in the brief of counsel for plaintiffs in error is not presented by the record brought to this court. The remarks we made at the beginning of this opinion will apply to that point, and will be a sufficient discussion thereof.

Judgment affirmed.

*JULY TERM, 1874.

D. S. McINTOSH v. COMMISSIONERS OF CRAWFORD Co.

July Term, 1874.

1. Judgment: Bad Faith: Vacating. Where both parties to a suit pending in the district court agree to a continuance to the subsequent term, notify the clerk of this agreement, and direct him to make a journal entry thereof; and, relying thereon, the defendant leaves the court and returns home, while the plaintiff, in his absence, and in violation of this agreement, proves up his claim and takes judgment: held, that there was no error in the court thereafter, and at a subsequent term, upon motion, vacating and setting aside the judgment thus obtained.
2. Evidence: Judicial Notice: Rules of District Court. This court does not take judicial notice of the rules of the district court.
3. Record: Insufficient for Review. Where a motion involving questions of fact outside of the record is made and overruled, and the "case made" or bill of exceptions shows that one affidavit was used in support thereof, but fails to show that no other affidavits or other evidence was used, and also fails to show upon what ground the district court overruled the motion, held, that it was impossible to affirm that the district court erred in overruling the motion.
4. Instructions: Immaterial Error. An error in an instruction bearing simply upon the amount that the plaintiff ought to recover, if he recover anything, and not affecting his right to a recovery, may be disregarded when the verdict is for the defendant.<sup>1</sup>

Error from Bourbon district court.

The case is stated in the opinion.

*172 **Frank Playter* and C. O. French, for plaintiff.

Only two methods are known to our Code for vacating a judgment and granting a new trial. The one is by motion, the other by petition. No petition was filed to vacate the judgment rendered at the September term, 1871. The only attempt to vacate it was by motion, and that attempt was successful. This motion was filed February 26, 1872, and heard at the succeeding March term. Six months had elapsed, and the December term, 1871, had intervened between date of judgment and filing of the motion without any attempt to reverse or vacate the judgment. By reason of lapse of time, and intervention of a term of court, the judgment ought not to have been vacated upon "motion." Under section 308 of the Code the "motion" is only allowed at the same term judgment is rendered, and in all cases must be within three days after judgment, except for newly-discovered material evidence, and even for this you cannot go beyond the term. If you wish to attack the judgment after the term, it must be by petition. Under sections 568 and 569 of the Code the "motion" is only allowed (1) "in proceedings to correct mistakes or omissions of the clerk, or irregularities in obtaining a judgment; (2) to vacate a judgment because of its rendition before the action regularly stood for trial." If the motion was sustained for either one or the other of these reasons, it was error. It ought not to have been entertained by reason of lapse of time. It does not seek to correct anything. It is a motion, as its title indicates, for "the vacation and setting aside the judgment heretofore rendered in the above-entitled cause." True, it says "the *173 amendment to plaintiff's bill of particulars *was never filed by the clerk, and that such amendment was permitted by the judge of said court without any notice to defendants," etc., but does not say that the amendment was not deposited in the clerk's office. A deposit in the clerk's office, with the clerk, of a paper in a case, constitutes a legal filing, although not marked "filed." Again, after appearance in the case by the defendants, and after answer filed, or, as defendants say in their motion, "after issue joined," the Code does not require notice of amendment. It is only required before answer filed. Code, § 136. There was no irregularity in obtaining judgment by reason of omission of clerk to enter agreement to continue the case from the September to the December term. The affidavit in support of motion does not show an agreement, either in open court or in writing, to so continue the case, while the rules of the district court provide: "No verbal agreement of counsel or parties with each other, or an officer of the court, concerning the progress or management of a cause or proceedings, will be enforced, unless made in open court." The clerk had no authority to enter the agreement spoken of upon record.

Section 569 of the Code relates only to clerical mistakes which can be amended on motion. Nash, Pl. & Pr. 699, 670. It does not reach far enough to cover this motion and affidavit. In any view of the case, the motion ought not to have been entertained. But, for the argument, suppose the case presented came within section 569, and a motion could be made: was there such notice to the adverse party or his attorney as would justify the court to act upon the motion? The notice is directed to E. M. H., who accepts a copy of same as "of counsel for pltf.," and at the same time tells the defendants' attorney that he had nothing to do with the case, or (in the language of the affidavit) "that at the time of accepting the notice he had no employment as attorney in said case, and so notified the attorney of defendants." The court might have been justified in acting upon the motion, upon the notice as accepted by H., had there been nothing further presented; but when the case was heard upon *174 the motion, the *court had full knowledge of the facts, and it was error to sustain the motion as upon default of plaintiff. The court should have ordered a sufficient notice to the plaintiff, especially as the record showed the judgment assigned to Playter. The only remedy of defendants was by petition and summons under section 570 of Code. Hence it was both error to vacate the judgment rendered at September term, 1871, as well as to overrule the motion of plaintiff to vacate and set aside the order granting a new trial, based upon the motion and affidavit filed by defendants.

The court erred in allowing testimony of the actions and doings of the county commissioners outside of their record to be introduced in evidence.

The court erred in its instructions to the jury. The court says: "The court instructs you that the plaintiff cannot recover in this action a larger amount than the bill filed and sworn to before the county board, for the reasons mentioned in section 28, c. 25, Gen. St. 259," (which section was read by the court to the jury.) In plaintiff's amended petition, in addition to the items in the bill filed before the county board, there are charges for furnishing lamps and oil for county offices 17 months, at $2 per month, $34; and to furnishing fuel to county offices for 9 months, at $5 per month, $45. By this instruction the court virtually instructed the jury that the plaintiff could not recover for the lamps, oil, and fuel so furnished, because the items were not filed before the county board. It is true, the instruction says the plaintiff cannot recover a larger amount than filed, yet the instruction is so worded as to mislead the jury, and limit them to the items filed. The court erred in limiting them to any amount, provided they did not exceed plaintiff's demand in his amended petition. There is nothing to distinguish an appeal case from the county board to the district court from any other appeal case. In fact, section 31, c. 25, Gen. St. 1868, says: "Such appeal shall be entered, tried, and determined the same as appeals from justices' courts;" while section 124 of the justices' act provides that "the plaintiff in the court *175 below shall be *plaintiff in the district court, and the parties shall proceed in all respects in the same manner as though the action had been originally instituted in the said court." Had this suit been originally instituted in the district court, there could have been no question, after issue joined, of plaintiff's right to amend, even to claim a fabulous sum, and recover it, if proved. Such amendments, as in this case, being simply a question of costs, are in the discretion of the court.

F. Danford and A. H. Wilkinson, for defendants in error.

BREWER, J. Plaintiff in error, plaintiff below, presented an account [for $419] to the board of county commissioners of Crawford county for rent of offices, etc. The board disallowed the account. He appealed. By change of venue the case was transferred to the Bourbon district court.* On September 19, 1871, both parties appeared in open court, and, by consent, a journal entry was made postponing the case for two days, and until September 21st. On September 21st the defendants failed to appear, and judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff. On January 22, 1872, the judgment was assigned by assignment on the margin of record to F. Playter. On February 26, 1872, defendants filed their motion, supported by affidavit, to vacate and set aside such judgment. Of this motion notice was served on E. M. Hulett, the attorney of record of said plaintiff, and service accepted by him as such attorney. When the motion came on to be heard neither the plaintiff nor his attorney appeared, the motion was sustained, and the judgment vacated and set aside. At a subsequent term plaintiff made his motion to set aside said order vacating and setting aside the judgment. This motion was overruled. New pleadings were filed, the case tried, and judgment rendered for defendants. To reverse this judgment plaintiff now brings this proceeding in error, and the principal question for our consideration is the action of the court in vacating and setting aside the *176 judgment of September, 1871. The application therefor was by motion. It was made under the third clause of section 568 of the Code,—the section that authorizes district courts to vacate or modify their judgments at or after the terms at which they are rendered. This third clause reads: "For mistake, neglect, or omission of the clerk, or irregularity in obtaining a judgment or order." A subsequent action provides that an application under this clause shall be by motion. The facts, as disclosed by the motion and accompanying affidavit, are that at the September term, and prior to the taking of the judgment, the plaintiff and defendants agreed upon a continuance of the case to the subsequent term, communicated this agreement to the clerk, and instructed him to make a journal entry thereof; and that, relying upon such agreement, the defendants' attorney left the court and returned home. Judgment was, notwithstanding such agreement, and in the absence of the defendants, taken by the plaintiff. It will hardly be doubted that a court might properly set aside a judgment rendered under such circumstances. Counsel for plaintiff in error insists that there is a rule of the district court which provides that "no verbal agreement of counsel or parties with each other, or an officer of the court, concerning the progress or management of a cause or proceeding, will be enforced unless made in open court." No such rule appears in the record, and we do not take judicial notice of the rules of the district courts. Even with such a rule, it would not follow that a court was bound to tolerate so gross a breach of faith. The rules are designed to prevent injustice, not to further and accomplish it. The question is not whether the court would have erred after notice of such a parol agreement in compelling the plaintiff to go to trial, but whether a party after making such an agreement can be allowed in a court of justice to profit by breaking it.

Counsel insists that no sufficient notice was given of this motion.

The notice was served on E. M. Hulett, who was counsel of *177 record for plaintiff, and service was accepted by *him in writing as such counsel. There was no appearance of plaintiff to the motion. Prior to the service of notice the judgment had been assigned of record to Frank Playter. Upon the motion to set aside this order vacating the judgment, the affidavit of E. M. Hulett was filed, stating that when he accepted service of notice of the prior motion he told the defendants' attorney that he was not attorney in the case, and that when the motion was called he stated to the court that he had no employment of record in the case, and would not appear to the motion. Mr. Hulett's name appears signed to the petition as attorney for the plaintiff; nor do we understand the affidavit as asserting that it was wrongfully there, or that he did not appear at the trial as the plaintiff's attorney. We understand, rather, that since the assignment he did not consider himself as attorney in the case, or as representing the assignee of the judgment, the real party in interest. This, it is true, is not stated in the affidavit, but seems to us the explanation most consistent with the good character of the parties concerned. It might be a question, under the statute, whether any further notice was requisite, notwithstanding Mr. Hulett's disclaimer, and whether notice to the assignee was essential. But we do not care to investigate that question. The facts may not be all before us. The record fails to show that this affidavit of Mr. Hulett was the only evidence used on the motion. It may have been clearly shown that the assignee had actual notice of the motion, or, indeed, that he appeared to the motion, or that the assignment was not bona fide, or for value, or that Mr. Hulett was in fact fully authorized to appear for the assignee. It is useless, however, to speculate. It is enough that we can see that there might have been at least one satisfactory answer to the facts stated in the affidavit. Backus v. Clark, 1 Kan. *303; Altschiel v. Smith, 9 Kan. *90. Subsequent to these proceedings amended pleadings were filed, both parties appeared by their counsel, a full and fair trial was had before a jury, and a verdict returned for the defendant. We are not willing to set *178 aside a judgment rendered after such a trial, in which both *parties participated, and affirm one based upon an ex parte hearing, unless upon a clear showing of error.

Complaint is also made of the proceedings upon the trial, of the admission of evidence, of the instructions, and that the verdict is against the evidence. None of these objections are well taken. There was no error in the admission of the testimony. The county commissioners were allowed to testify as to what oral propositions had been made to them by plaintiff. No action of the board was thus shown, but simply the statements of the plaintiff. And whenever any parol testimony was sought as to the action of the board upon such propositions, it was promptly ruled out. We think this amounted to nothing more than showing the statements and admissions of plaintiff, and as such was competent. It is urged that the court misdirected the jury as to the amount that the plaintiff might recover under the pleadings and testimony. As the jury found for the defendants, this error, if error it were, cannot have wrought any prejudice to the plaintiff. Branner v. Stormont, 9 Kan. *51. There was testimony sufficient to support the verdict.

The judgment will be affirmed.

JOHN LORING v. LEWIS ROCKWOOD.

July Term, 1874.

1. Trespass: Jurisdiction of Justice: Bill of Particulars. A bill of particulars stated that the defendant set fire to prairie grass, and that the fire continued to burn and spread until it reached and burned the hay, posts, and rails, and growing peach trees of the defendant, and that such burning occasioned great damage to the defendant, to-wit, the amount of one hundred and sixty-one dollars and forty cents, the value thereof. Held, that the justice of the peace erred in dismissing the action on the ground that the cause of action stated in the bill of particulars was one for trespass on real estate, and beyond his jurisdiction.

*179 *2. Costs: Reversing Justice's Judgment. On reversing, upon petition in error, the judgment of a justice of the peace, it is the duty of the district court to render judgment against the defendant in error for all costs that have accrued up to that time.

Error from Howard district court.

The case is stated in the opinion.

Fay & Milton, for plaintiff in error.

The justice's transcript contains all that is shown of Rockwood's cause of action. Section 6 of the justice's act is conclusive upon the question of jurisdiction. Rockwood must affirmatively show a cause of action in which the justice had jurisdiction. It must appear in the record. Nothing will be presumed in favor of the jurisdiction of an inferior court. The district court erred in reversing the judgment of the justice unless the record affirmatively shows that the justice had jurisdiction. We submit that the record does not show such a cause of action. If the statement of the cause of action in the justice's transcript leaves it doubtful as to whether said stated cause of action is trespass to real estate, then that construction most favorable to the adverse party must be given. Certainty is one of the common general rules of pleading, and it requires, in setting forth the cause of action, that every fact without which there would appear to be no cause of action, or an incomplete ground of action, should be distinctly averred in a traversable form. Growing peach trees are real property, in any ordinary sense of the language. Trees growing are in the ground, or attached to the realty,—a part of it. This is the reasonable construction. The court will not go off in search of *180 unusual definitions where certainty is positively required. *If a party enters the close of another, and cuts down and carries away the trees, can an action be maintained for the damage before a justice of the peace, where more than $100 is claimed? If so, then the statute limiting the jurisdiction of the justice is nugatory,—a meaningless farce. Joining a trespass to personal property with a trespass to real property, and claiming damage for more than $100, is fatal to the jurisdiction of the justice.

The judgment of the district court does gross injury to plaintiff in error. As defendant before the justice he had a trial by jury, and a verdict in his favor, and a judgment thereon for costs of suit. On Rockwood's motion a new trial was granted, and then the justice dismissed the action for want of jurisdiction. But the district court adjudged Loring to pay all the costs of both trials. This is an injury which law and justice should not sanction.

A. L. Williams; for defendant in error.

The bill of particulars shows that the action is not for trespass to real estate. The trespass mentioned in section 6 of the justices' act is the common-law trespass. 3 Bl. Comm. 209. To constitute such a trespass, the wrong-doer must actually break and enter the premises of the plaintiff, and the injury done must be the immediate and not the remote result of the act complained of. The act which led to the injury must of itself have been an illegal one. The plaintiff must have been the owner and in possession of the premises. None of these things appear in this case. It does not appear, even by inference, that the property destroyed was upon the premises of the plaintiff. All of the property (except the trees) was personal property, and the trees may have been personal property also, for all that appears in the record. This action was brought, and properly too, under section 2, c. 118, Gen. St. 1122, and the justice had jurisdiction in the case. Laws 1870, p. 181.

The costs were properly taxed. Civil Code, § 566. The fact *181 that there had been a trial before a justice of the peace *resulting in favor of the plaintiff in error is immaterial. The justice had a right to grant a new trial, (section 110, Justices' Act,) and having done so, the case stood as though it had never been tried.

BREWER, J. Rockwood brought his action before a justice of the peace. The bill of particulars is stated in the record to have been, in substance, "that the said John Loring, on or about the twelfth of November, 1872, at the county of Howard and state of Kansas, did then and there set the prairie grass on fire, and the said prairie continued to burn, and said fire continued to spread, until it reached and burned the hay, posts, and rails, and growing peach trees of the said Lewis Rockwood, which hay, posts, and rails, and growing peach trees were in said county of Howard and state of Kansas. The burning occasioned great damage to the said Lewis Rockwood, to-wit, the amount of one hundred and sixty-one dollars and forty cents, the value thereof." The justice held that this was an action of trespass on real estate, and, the damages demanded exceeding one hundred dollars, that it was beyond his jurisdiction, and dismissed it. On petition in error, the district court reversed the judgment of the justice, and retained the case for trial. Plaintiff in error now seeks to reverse the judgment of the district court. We think the district court was right. It nowhere appears that Rockwood was in possession, either personally or by tenant, of the premises upon which the property destroyed was situated, or in any position to maintain an action for trespass on real estate. The property destroyed was personal property, or at least may have been, and there is nothing to show that it was so attached to the ground as to be part of the realty. This is clearly so as to the hay, posts, and rails. As to the growing peach trees, they may have been growing in a nursery, and part of its stock. The action is for the destruction of this property, and not for the injury to the realty.

The case was tried once before the justice with a jury, and *182 *judgment rendered for the defendant, Loring. The justice set aside this judgment upon motion. A change of venue was then taken to another justice, by whom the case was dismissed. On reversing this judgment the district court rendered judgment against Loring for all the costs that had accrued up to that time. This was right, and in obedience to the plain direction of the statute. Gen. St. 742, § 566.

The judgment will be affirmed.

THACHER and another v. COMMISSIONERS OF JEFFERSON Co.

July Term, 1874.

Counties: Power of County Commissioners to Employ Counsel. H. G. T. commenced an action of mandamus in the supreme court of the state of Kansas against H. S. W., J. D. R., and H. O., the board of county commissioners of the county of Jefferson, to compel said board to submit to the qualified voters of Rock Creek township, in said county, the question whether stock should be taken in the name of said township in the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad Company, and the bonds of the township be issued in payment for such stock. The said county board then employed the plaintiffs in error as attorneys and counselors at law to de-defend said suit. The plaintiffs in error performed said services, the action of H. G. T. was defeated, and this action is now brought to recover compensation for said services. Held, the county commissioners had power to employ the plaintiffs in error to perform said services, and therefore that this action can be maintained.<sup>1</sup>

Error from Jefferson district court.

The case is stated in the opinion.

*183 **Thacher & Stephens*, plaintiffs, for themselves.

Sections 136, 138, c. 25, Gen. St., define the duties of the county attorney, and by neither of them is it incumbent upon him to defend the county commissioners when sued outside of the county. Was it the duty of the county board to defend itself when brought into court, or had it the right to do so? If it had the right, or it was its duty, then, of course, it must do so through attorneys, and of course its duty to pay therefor clearly follows. And we conceive the question to be solely whether the board was called upon to defend itself, and not, as is insisted on the other side, whether it was legally or properly sued. If the board was brought into court to answer for any purpose whatsoever, the lawyer who made that answer for it, at its request, is entitled to compensation therefor. In this case it appears that the board made a successful defense, and that the services of the plaintiffs for the board in that behalf were worth $265, and that they were duly employed to render the services.

If it be said that the board were sued in the supreme court about a matter on which it had no right to defend itself, the answer is that the supreme court took another view of the case, and decided it had a right to defend itself, and on a final hearing gave judgment in its favor. If it be said that the subject-matter in the suit in the supreme court affected only one township in the county of Jefferson, and so the burden of protecting its interests should fall on it rather than the whole county, the answer is that the board is bound to defend each township's interests in matters confided to it, just as much as it is the whole county; and the decision of the supreme court was that its action in refusing to submit to that township the question whether it would burden itself with a bonded debt was right. (It is possible there may be a duty on the part of that township to reimburse the county board for its expenditures in its behalf, though it would seem that this apparent inequality of burdens is, after all, an inci-

*184 dent of the relation between the townships and their representative in these matters, the county board.) At all events, the county board were brought into the supreme court as an official body, appointed by the law to discharge specific duties, with respect, among other things, to each township in the county, and its official action was sought to be coerced in that behalf. Now, either the board should or should not have defended itself. The supreme court decided its action, which was sought to be changed, to have been correct. Therefore it had a good defense, and, in presenting it through the plaintiffs, its action was in good faith, and the plaintiffs in this action are entitled to their just reward.

If it shall be said that the board was only the agent of the township in submitting the vote for aid in issuing bonds, or refusing to do either, then for what moneys it expends for its principal it may recover of it; but there is no privity of contract between the plaintiffs and the township. Our contract was with the county board as such, and not with it as officers of a township. Moreover, in doing this business for the township, the county board in no sense changes its relations or official character. It draws pay from the county treasury for the time of its members while engaged in this business; it pays the county clerk for his work in the same behalf from the county funds; it draws money from the same general fund to pay for printing or engraving the bonds when issued; and we know of no power authorizing it to charge up these matters to the township.

That the county board is authorized to defend itself when sued can hardly be seriously disputed. But, if so, then it is liable for attorney's fees in defending the suit. Gillespie v. Broas, 23 Barb. 379. The county board, being liable to an action to compel their official action, would be derelict in its duty were it to fail to exhibit to the court its reasons for not performing the desired action; and if by such failure to defend its action, or failure to act, a decree should be entered against it injurious to others, why would not the individual members of the board be liable to the injured parties?

Section 6 of chapter 90 of the Laws of 1870 (this being the law *185 under *which the county board were called upon to act) expressly provides for the payment of all officers acting under the law, and subjects them to an action for non-compliance, the same as in other cases. But in all other cases the officers are paid by the county for their services. There are other cases in which the county board act for each township, and out of which litigation for or against the board may arise; as, for example, prohibiting stock from running at large at night. Now, can it be contended that the county board can be called on to act in these matters without legal advice? If the county board had the power to be sued in respect to issuing bonds for a township, it has the power to defend itself, and hence employ counsel; and having employed counsel, it is liable to pay such counsel for their services.

Henry Keeler, for defendants in error.

In the absence of any statutory requirements or authority therefor, a county cannot assume payment of costs, nor attorney's fees, except in those cases in which the county, or some one for it, may appear in court to prosecute or defend. Now, the only kinds of cases in which such appearance may be made on behalf of the county are those mentioned in section 136, p. 287, Gen. St. It is true that this section applies only to cases within the courts of the county, but it covers, and was intended to cover, all kinds of cases in which the county can appear in court; and the people, by the election of a county attorney, are given the exclusive right to choose the attorney who shall appear for the county therein. Clough v. Hart, 8 Kan. *487.

In the absence of any direct statutory provision therefor, it cannot be held that a county can appear in courts outside of the county in any other or different kinds of cases than those mentioned in section 136. There is neither reason, statute, nor authority for allowing the corporate power and wealth of the county to be used as a backer for other people's lawsuits over matters in which the county has no interest. Now, in the action of Turner v. Walsh, the county *186 was not a party. It was an action against the county commissioners, as public officers, to compel them to do an act affecting Rock Creek township only. Under our statute the corporate name of the county is the same as that of the tribunal transacting county and other business, and in some cases it may be necessary to look at the nature and cause of the action to determine who is sued. A similarity of names does not always constitute identity of parties. If the legislature had provided (which it might with propriety have done) that the corporate name of the county, or the name in which it might sue and be sued, should be "The County Treasurer of _____ County," it would not follow that the county would be a party whenever the county treasurer was sued for a real or assumed neglect of duty. In the case of Turner v. Walsh the cause of action was that Walsh and others, as county commissioners, refused to comply with a demand made by Turner that said commissioners should call an election, for local purposes, in Rock Creek township, and the nature of the action was a mandamus proceeding to compel those officers to comply with that demand. The county, as a corporation, had no duty to perform in that matter,—neither its decision nor its action was or could be invoked. The county board (if agent at all in the matter) was the statutory agent of the election petitioners and Rock Creek township only. County officers have various duties to perform for the benefit of different persons and corporations other than the county, and in the performance of those duties are the agents of the respective persons and corporations for whom they act, and the county is not liable, and cannot assume any liability for their acts or omissions therein. State v. County of Leavenworth, 2 Kan. *61. The county had no interest in the matter in dispute between Turner and Walsh. The voting or not voting of the bonds of Rock Creek township would not, in any way, affect the county as a corporation. If the county was interested in the matter, by reason of the township being a component part of the county, then, upon the same principle, the county is interested in any action against any one of its

board, wide as its powers are, could not certainly involve the county in such lawsuits. Its powers are limited by statute to such things as were deemed by the legislature to be sufficient for the public good, and compatible with the public safety. The powers given are described, and it has no power except such as are given by the statute. The county not being a party to the action of Turner v. Walsh, nor interested in it in any way, the county board had no legal authority to bind the county in a contract to pay attorney's fees therein. Such contract is void, and the county is not liable for any attorney's fees or other costs or expenses in that action. Halstead v. Mayor of N. Y., 3 N. Y. 430; Brady v. Supervisors of N. Y., 2 Sandf. 460; People v. Lawrence, 6 Hill. 244; Hodges v. City of Buffalo, 2 Denio, 110; Chemung Canal Bank v. Supervisors, 5 Denio, 517; Paine v. Spratley, 5 Kan. *545. The fact that Walsh and others made a successful defense is totally immaterial. The county board had no more authority to bind the county to pay the expense of the winning than the losing side of a lawsuit in which the county is not a party, and has no interest. Its power to employ attorneys for the county is not at all contingent on the result of the litigation. The entire claim of Thacher & Stephens is an illegal one, and they are not entitled to recover anything thereon.

VALENTINE, J. This was an action brought by the plaintiffs in error, Thacher & Stephens, against the defendants in error, the board of county commissioners of the county of Jefferson, for services rendered by plaintiffs in error as attorneys and counselors at law. It appears from the record that one H. G. Turner commenced an action of mandamus in the supreme court of the state of Kansas against H. S. Walsh, J. D. Rollins, and Henry Ogle, the board of county commissioners of said county of Jefferson, to compel said board to submit to the qualified voters of Rock Creek township, in said county, the question whether stock should be taken in the name of said township in the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad Company, *188 and the bonds of the township be issued in payment for *such stock. The said county board employed the plaintiffs in error as attorneys and counselors at law to defend said suit. The plaintiffs in error performed said services, the action of Turner was defeated, and this action is now brought to recover compensation for said services. The case of Turner v. County of Jefferson is reported, and will be found, in 10 Kan. *16 et seq. We suppose the only question in this case is whether the county commissioners, as county commissioners, had power to employ the plaintiffs in error to defend said suit. We think they had. In this state all the powers of a county are exercised by the board of county commissioners, (Gen. St. 254, § 3,) and the county always sues and is sued in the name of the board of county commissioners, (Gen. St. 254, § 5.) In fact, the county commissioners are the general officers or agents of the county; and whenever any duties are imposed upon the commissioners by law, it should be presumed that such duties are imposed upon the commissioners as the agents of the county, unless the contrary clearly appears. In many cases the county is by law constituted the general agent or guardian for the protection of the rights and interests of townships, and of other subdivisions of the county, and may prosecute or defend therefor. Thus, the county, through the board of county commissioners, may maintain an action against the county treasurer for a misappropriation or misapplication of the funds of a township, or school-district, etc., although the county as a corporation can have but little interest in the funds of such township or school-district. County of Jackson v. Craft, 6 Kan. *145. In the matter of taking stock in railroad companies for townships, and of issuing township bonds in payment of such stock, and of levying and collecting taxes for the payment of the bonds, the township officers have nothing to do. Everything is done by the county officers, and nearly everything by the county board. The petition for the election to determine whether the stock shall be subscribed is presented to the county board. Laws 1870, p. 189, § 1.

*189 The *county board alone can determine whether the election shall be held, and such board alone can order the election. Id. 190, § 2. The county board canvasses the returns of the election, and declares the result. Id. §§ 3, 4; also Gen. St. 410, § 28. If the election has resulted in favor of subscribing for said stock, the county board orders the county clerk to make the subscription, and causes the bonds to be issued in payment of said stock, which bonds are "signed by the chairman of the board, and attested by the clerk under the seal of the county." Laws 1870, p. 190, § 5. The county board then annually levies the tax on said township to pay the interest on said bonds, and to create a sinking fund to pay said bonds at maturity. Id. p. 191, § 6. And with the surplus taxes levied and collected for the payment of interest, (if there should be any such surplus,) and with the sinking fund, the county board may at any time cause the treasurer to buy up the outstanding bonds at their market value, not exceeding their par value. Id. § 8. In all this the county, through the county board, seems to be the agent and guardian for the township; and if any litigation should spring up concerning any of these matters, we should think that the county, through the county board, would have ample authority to protect the rights and interests of the township. In this way the county protects the rights and interests of a portion of its own people. For all the foregoing services the county commissioners are paid by the county, (Gen. St. 256, § 14;) and we suppose there can be but little doubt but that the county must pay for the expenses of the election, (Laws 1870, p. 190, §§ 3, 4; Gen. St. 420, 421, §§ 71-74;) and we suppose the county must also pay the expenses of issuing the bonds, etc.

Now, the litigation between Turner and the county commissioners was concerning the foregoing matters. Turner did not sue the county commissioners to compel them to do something merely as individuals, nor even to do something merely as individual commissioners. He sued them to compel them to do something which they could do only as a "board of county commissioners." Laws 1870, p. 189, *190 § 1. *The law is explicit. It does not provide that the persons holding the offices of county commissioners shall call the election, nor merely that the county commissioners shall call the election, but it provides that "the board of county commissioners" shall call the election. Turner, of course, in effect, sued the county commissioners as a board, whether the action was in form against them as individuals or not, for he sued them to compel them to do something which they could do only as a board and as the county board; and when the commissioners are sued as the county board, beyond the limits of their own county, and where the county attorney is not bound to go, may they not then, as the county board, employ counsel to defend the action? We do not think that it is necessary to determine whether said action of Turner against the county commissioners was an action technically against the county or not; for we suppose that no one will claim that the county commissioners can employ counsel in only such cases as these, where the county is technically a party. A suit against the officers of the county is often a suit substantially against the county; and, in this very case, we think the action of Turner was substantially an action against the county as the guardian and protector of the rights and interests of Rock Creek township. And it was also substantially against the county in another respect. It was an action to compel the county commissioners to do something which would incur liabilities against the county; for instance, liability for the county commissioners' services, for the expenses of the election, etc. Suppose an action of mandamus should be commenced in the supreme court of the state to compel the county clerk to enter certain taxes on the tax-list to pay certain supposed liabilities against the county, could not the county commissioners then employ counsel to defend? Or suppose an action should be commenced in the United States circuit court to enjoin the treasurer from collecting a certain county tax, could not the county commissioners then employ counsel to defend? We suppose that whenever the county is interested *191 at all in the result of a suit, either in its own behalf or in *that of some township of the county, and the suit is brought against the legal representatives of the county, and is beyond the limits of the county, the county commissioners may, if they choose, employ counsel to take care of the interests of the county. As throwing some light upon the questions discussed in this case, we would refer to the following authorities: Bancroft v. Lynnfield, 18 Pick. 566; People v. Supervisors of N. Y., 32 N. Y. 473; Brady v. Supervisors of N. Y., 2 Sandf. 460, 472; Gillespie v. Broas, 23 Barb. 379. This case has been ably presented by counsel on both sides, and for additional arguments and additional authorities we would refer to counsel's briefs.

There has been no question raised as to the value of the plaintiffs' services. The parties agreed in the court below that the services were worth $265. The judgment of the court below will be reversed, and cause remanded, with the order that judgment shall be rendered upon the facts agreed to in favor of the plaintiffs below, and against the defendants below, for the sum of $265, and costs.

*CITY OF WYANDOTTE v. HARRIET C. WHITE.

July Term, 1874.

1. Instructions. To determine whether an instruction be erroneous, it must be considered in reference to the facts in the case, as well as in relation to the other instructions.
2. ———: Contributory Negligence. In an action for damages for personal injuries in which the question of contributory negligence is presented, it is not error to give an instruction that the plaintiff's right to recover is not affected by her having contributed to the injury, unless she was at fault in so doing.
3. Verdict: Special Question. While under the laws of 1870 it is the duty of the court, at the request of either party, to instruct the jury.
*192 *in case they returned a general verdict, to find upon particular questions of fact, the court should submit only such questions as bear upon facts material to the issues, and whose answers may in some way control or affect the general verdict.<sup>1</sup>

Error from Wyandotte district court.

Mrs. White brought her action against the city of Wyandotte for personal injuries sustained by reason of a fall occasioned by defects in a bridge over which she was passing, said bridge being a portion of Third street, and a public highway in the city of Wyandotte. Trial at December term, 1872, of the district court. The third instruction to the jury, at plaintiff's request, was as follows: "(3) The plaintiff's right to recover is not affected by her having contributed to her injuries, unless she was in fault in so doing." Verdict and judgment for plaintiff.

W. J. Buchan, for plaintiff in error.

The third instruction asked by plaintiff below, and given by the court, is too sweeping in its language, and was calculated to mislead the jury. Municipal corporations are not insurers against accidents upon their highways; nor are they responsible for every misfortune that may befall travelers thereon; neither is every defect in their streets and sidewalks actionable, though it may have contributed to the injury, if some other circumstance was the immediate cause. Had the horse that frightened Mrs. White, and caused her to turn suddenly round, ran over her, and she been injured thereby, *193 although she was not in fault, it would hardly have been *contended that the city was liable. Yet the impression likely to be drawn from the third instruction as given by the court below is that unless Mrs. White was in fault herself, that the city is liable for any injury she may have received while upon the streets of the city, no matter by what means she is injured. There was no testimony going to show that that portion of the bridge where the injury is alleged to have been received was so defective as to be dangerous for persons using ordinary care.

The court erred in refusing to submit to the jury particular questions of fact at the request of the defendant. The court in this respect has no discretion. The statute is mandatory, (Laws 1870, p. 173, § 7;) and the refusal by the court to direct such special finding of facts prevented a verdict upon material issues in the case. Had the jury found that there was no defect in the Third-street bridge at or near the place of the alleged accident, how could a general verdict for the plaintiff consistently have been found? and, if found, how could it be maintained, (being clearly against the weight of evidence?) At all events, as the testimony was so conflicting, it was an important fact in the cause, and should have been presented to the jury. It will hardly be disputed that whether or not a defect existed at a particular time and place, and what is a sufficient defect to make defendant liable, are questions of fact to be submitted to the jury.

The court should have set aside the verdict on the ground that the special finding of facts was inconsistent and in conflict with the general verdict. In answer to the fourth interrogatory of defendant, the jury found the fact that the plaintiff was not in the exercise of ordinary care at the time of the accident. Hence she could not recover. Their answer finds no circumstance to take this case out of the rule of the want of ordinary care on the part of the plaintiff.

Scroggs & Bartlett, for defendant in error.

The third instruction asked by plaintiff below, and given by *194 the court to the jury, on the subject of contributory negligence, was not erroneous. Pacific R. Co. v. Houts, 12 Kan. 328; Atchison v. King, 9 Kan. *551, *559; Weisenberg v. Appleton, 26 Wis. 56; Kline v. Central Pac. R. Co., 37 Cal. 400.

The court, in its discretion, submitted the questions of fact, which were pertinent issues in the case, and proper questions to be answered by the jury. The court properly refused to submit the first three special findings of fact, (so called,) for the reason that they were not, nor could they by any possibility become, "issues in the case," as required by Laws 1870, p. 173. They were no more pertinent to the "issues in the case," than inquiries concerning the habits of the man in the moon.

BREWER, J. This was an action for damages for personal injuries. The facts as claimed are that defendant in error, crossing Third-street bridge, in the city of Wyandotte, was startled by a runaway horse, and, stepping quickly one side to avoid him, slipped her foot into a hole in the bridge, was thus thrown down, and injured. The jury found for the defendant in error, and assessed her damages at $1,200.

The first error complained of is the giving of this instruction asked for by plaintiff: "The plaintiff's right to recover is not affected by her having contributed to her injuries, unless she was in fault in so doing." Counsel claims that this language is too sweeping; that the city is not an insurer against injuries upon its highways, nor responsible for every misfortune that may befall travelers thereon; and that under this instruction the jury might properly have considered the city liable for any injury Mrs. White sustained while upon its streets, no matter by what means it occurred. We do not think this criticism well founded. Every instruction must be considered in reference to the facts of the case, as well as in relation to the other instructions. Now, that Mrs. White received injuries by a fall upon the bridge is undisputed, she testifying to the fact, and *195 *no one contradicting her. As defenses, it would seem from the testimony offered, and instructions asked, that the city claimed that all the injuries from which she was suffering were not caused by this fall; that there was no defect in the bridge, and that the fall was a mere accident; that if any defect existed, the city had had no notice of it, and had taken all reasonable precautions to keep the bridge in good repair; and also that the negligence of Mrs. White contributed directly to the injury. The jury found specifically, in answer to certain questions, that Mrs. White was injured by a fall caused by a defect in the bridge, and that she was at the time acting in a careful and prudent manner. Even if this instruction were too sweeping, as claimed, it would seem that any error in it was avoided by these answers. But the instruction only refers to the matter of contributory negligence. It does not pretend to declare what constituted the plaintiff's right to recover, or what facts must exist to create it. It simply declared that her right to recover, upon whatsoever facts such right was based, was not affected by the fact that her own conduct contributed to the injury, unless some fault could be imputed to such conduct. If she was guilty of no negligence, her acts contributing to the injury did not destroy her right to recover. In other words, a party injured need not be a passive recipient of the injury in order to establish a right to recover of the wrong-doer for the injury.

Another alleged error is the refusal of the court to submit to the jury three questions of fact presented by the defendant. At the instance of the plaintiff, eight questions were submitted, and at the instance of the defendant, four. Those refused were as follows: "(1) Was the plaintiff injured, if at all, twenty steps from the north end of the bridge, and about four or five feet from the east side thereof? (2) Was there any defect in the Third-street bridge twenty steps from the north end, or thereabouts, showing carelessness or *196 negligence on the part of defendant? *(3) Was the plaintiff frightened at the time the accident complained of happened?"

Since 1870 it is the duty of the court, at the request of either party, to instruct the jury if they return a general verdict to find upon particular questions of fact, to be stated in writing, and direct a written finding thereon. Laws 1870, p. 173, § 7. But it does not follow from this that it is the duty of the court to submit to the jury every question that may be presented, and compel a finding on it. That, in some cases, and with some attorneys, would cumber the record with a fearful mass of useless stuff. Only those questions need be presented that bear upon facts material to the issues, and whose answers may in some way control or affect a general verdict. It is useless to compel a jury to answer a question whose answer, whatever it may be, can have no bearing upon the general verdict. So, also, is it useless to submit a question at the instance of one party which has already been submitted at the instance of the other. In this case the jury were asked, at the instance of the plaintiff, this question, "Was the plaintiff materially injured by falling on Third-street bridge, in the city of Wyandotte, by reason of defect in said bridge, on or about the fifth of August, 1871?" and answered, "Yes." They also answered, in reply to plaintiff's question, that the bridge was defective or unsafe at the time, and that the defect had existed long enough for notice thereof to the city.

The only point in which the questions of defendant differed from those of plaintiff was that in the former the inquiry was limited to a single spot on the bridge, while in the latter it extended to the bridge as a whole. If the jury, having received the excluded questions, had answered them in the affirmative, of course there would be no pretense of conflict; if in the negative, nothing to disturb the general verdict, for if the plaintiff was injured by a defect in the bridge, it mattered nothing that such injury and defect were not at a particular spot thereon. It is true, the plaintiff in her testimony located *197 the place of injury at the spot indicated by defendant's questions; but there was testimony tending to show the existence of defects elsewhere, and a party might easily be mistaken as to the exact point on the bridge at which an injury happened, while perfectly clear that such an injury did happen; so that there would be no such conflict between the testimony and the answers, and general verdict, as would compel the granting of a new trial, and no such conflict between the answers and the verdict as would in any way disturb the latter. Whether the plaintiff was frightened or no, could not affect the verdict in her favor. We think, therefore, the substantial rights of the city were not injured by the refusal to submit these questions.

Plaintiff in error claims that no judgment for costs should have been rendered against the city, because no bill duly verified had been presented to the city council for allowance before suit was brought. The petition alleges, and in answer to one of the defendant's questions the jury find, that such a bill was presented. It is true the bill presented was for only $600, while the amount sued for was $10,000, and the verdict and judgment $1,200. But if the city council fail to allow the amount claimed in the bill presented, we know of nothing to prevent the claimant suing for and recovering all the damages sustained.

While the testimony was conflicting, there was enough to sustain the verdict. The judgment will be affirmed.

*198 *COMMISSIONERS OF JOHNSON Co. v. FRANK R. OGG.

July Term, 1874.

County Attorney: Compensation: Ten per Cent. for Collections. A railroad company commenced an action against the county treasurer and the sheriff of Johnson county, for a perpetual injunction to restrain the collection of certain taxes. The injunction was refused, and judgment was rendered in favor of the officers, and against the railroad company, for costs. The case was then taken to the supreme court by the railroad company, and there the judgment of the court below was affirmed. The county attorney of Johnson county attended to the suit for the treasurer and sheriff as county attorney, but without being employed by any person. The railroad company then paid said taxes, but neglected to pay the 10 per cent. penalty which had at that time accrued thereon. The county attorney then filed a præcipe with the treasurer for a tax warrant to collect said penalty. The treasurer issued the warrant, and delivered it to the sheriff, and the sheriff, by virtue of the warrant, collected said penalty, and paid it over to the treasurer. Held, that said taxes and penalty were collected under the law, and not under said judgment; that said præcipe is unknown to the tax laws, and amounted to nothing more than an opinion of the county attorney; that the treasurer and sheriff collected said taxes and penalty, and not the county attorney; and that the county attorney is not, under the statutes, entitled to 10 per cent. of said taxes and penalty for collecting the same.<sup>1</sup>

Error from Johnson district court.

On the twentieth of February, 1873, Ogg, who was then county attorney, presented to the board of county commissioners the following claim:

"The County of Johnson, to Frank R. Ogg, Dr.

"To $1,318.37, the same being ten per cent. of $13,183.73, collected June 13, 1872, and February 6, 1873, in favor of Johnson county, state of Kansas, in the case of Mo. River, Ft. Scott & Gulf R. Co. against J. Henry Blake, treasurer, and A. J. Clemmans, sheriff of said county of Johnson, and paid to the county treasurer on the day of collection."

This claim was disallowed by the county board, and Ogg appealed to the district court. Trial at the April term, 1873, of said court, and judgment in favor of Ogg, for the amount claimed.

*199 **Devenney & Green*, for plaintiff in error.

We contend that Ogg is not entitled to any compensation, independent of his salary as county attorney, for the alleged services performed. The record shows that the property of the Missouri River & Fort Scott Railway within Johnson county was subject to taxation for the year 1870; that the tax was duly levied for said year; that the proper authorities were about to collect the taxes pursuant to said levy, when on the sixth of January, 1871, said railway company applied for and obtained an injunction against the county treasurer and sheriff, restraining them from collecting such tax. The district court, on demurrer, held that the railroad company had no cause of complaint, and this court affirmed the action of the district court. Ogg, as county attorney, appeared in behalf of the officers,—the treasurer and sheriff,—both in the district court and supreme court, assisted by private counsel employed by the plaintiff in error, to defend the interests of state and county. There was no action brought by state or county against the railroad company; there was no money judgment rendered by the district court against the railroad company; there was no money collected by the sheriff on execution against the railroad company. When this court affirmed the action of the district court, it left the matter of taxes just where it was before the injunction was obtained; and the railroad company then being delinquent, it was the duty of the treasurer to issue his warrant to the sheriff to collect the amount with penalty, without the aid or any action on the part of the county attorney. See chapter 107, § 123, Gen. St. 1868. And the sheriff was required by the same law to collect and pay over to the county treasurer the amount of the tax warrant within sixty days from its date. If the county attorney preferred to be officious, or really believed it to be his duty to file a præcipe with the treasurer for the issuance of a tax warrant, and that, too, after the railroad company had paid $11,985.21 without warrant, he cannot, we submit, by any such means, impose a liability on the county *200 to pay him *therefor. A mere suggestion by the county attorney to the treasurer to issue a tax warrant in such case would clearly be embraced within his general duties as such county officer. There is no claim on the part of Ogg that the board ever employed him to look after the case in the supreme court, independent of his employment as county attorney. The alleged services were voluntary, if not performed as county attorney, and the plaintiff in error is not legally liable for what he did. County of Huntington v. Boyle, 9 Ind. 296.

J. L. Wines, G. W. Wilson, and F. R. Ogg, for defendant in error.

The only question presented for the consideration of the court is whether the evidence shows a "collection" as contemplated by section 139, c. 25, Gen. St. If this question is decided affirmatively, the judgment of the district court must be affirmed. What is the true definition of the word "collected," in the connection in which it is found in the statute? What the legislative intent was must be determined from what the legislature has said, if the language is free from doubt and obscurity. That the legislature has used a word in its usual and ordinary sense is clearly presumed, in the absence of some positive statutory limitation or restriction. If a word is so used by the law-making power, the necessity for interpretation and construction does not arise. We can arrive at the true definition of the word "collected" from an examination of the words "collector" and "collect." "A 'collector' is a person appointed or elected to receive taxes; also a person appointed by a private person to collect the debts due him." 1 Bouv. Law Dict. 241. The definition of the word "collect" is "to gather money or revenue from debtors; to demand and receive; as, to collect taxes; to collect the customs; to collect accounts or debts." Webst. Dict. In view of these definitions, it will not for a moment be contended that there must be an actual, manual handling of the amount realized in order to constitute a "collection." "A 'collection' might be defined to be the payment, after suit, or by reason of the probable commencement of litigation, *201 to any *person authorized to receive, a sum claimed to be due from one person to another, without regard to the question as to whether it was paid upon an express or an implied contract." It might also be added that in case of litigation it is entirely immaterial who is plaintiff or defendant, so the question of liability is settled.

In the case now before the court the defendant in error may not have actually handled the money collected, yet he was, in view of the above definitions, and in view of section 139, before referred to, a collector. The railroad company denied the existence of any liability in favor of the county. On the other hand, the county claimed the right to receive and collect from the railroad company a certain amount. The only question settled by the litigation between the county and the railroad was the one of liability of the one party to pay, and the right of the other party to collect, the amount claimed. In this litigation the defendant in error appeared in his official character, as he was in duty bound to do, to look after the interests of the county. The final decision was against the railroad company, and under this decision the amount claimed was paid into the county treasury. If this was not a "collection," within the meaning of section 139, it is difficult to imagine a state of facts which would constitute a collection. It is true, the action of the railroad company was not prosecuted against the county by name, but it clearly appears from the evidence that the county had a direct interest in the event of the suit, and in all such cases it is made the duty of the county attorney to appear. Section 136, c. 25, Gen. St.

It may also be urged that there was no collection as against the railroad company, so as to entitle the defendant in error to a commission on the amount received, for the reason that there was not a judgment for any given amount rendered in favor of the county. It will be observed, however, from the evidence, that the case was decided upon the demurrer filed by the county of Johnson, and in sustaining that demurrer the court dissolved the injunction, and in that manner the whole question touching the liability of the railroad company was decided. However, we think that in the *202 case of the railroad company against the treasurer and sheriff of Johnson county there was, in the fullest sense of the word, a judgment rendered. A judgment is a contract. Freem. Judgm. § 4. After the decision of this court upon the question of the liability of the railroad company to pay a certain sum to the county, a warrant was issued by the county treasurer pursuant to the order of defendant in error as county attorney. This warrant was placed in the hands of the sheriff of the county. A part of the taxes due was paid after this warrant was issued, before levy made, and the balance was collected by means of a levy and sale of property, as upon execution.

The moment the defendant in error became the county attorney of Johnson county that moment there arose, by virtue of the statute, an express contract between the parties to this proceeding that plaintiff in error should pay defendant in error a 10 per cent. commission on all moneys collected through his official interposition. It is well settled that a contract between the state or county and an individual must be construed as contracts between private parties. Sholes v State, 2 Chand. 182; Meshke v. Van Doren, 16 Wis. 347. It has been decided in this state that a county attorney is not required to go out of his county to look after the interests of the county. If he does, he is entitled to compensation. Commissioners of Leavenworth v. Brewer, 9 Kan. *307.

Defendant in error, as county attorney, is paid a salary under the section of the statute referred to, for the usual, ordinary, and well-known duties of his office. In addition to this salary he is allowed a commission on all moneys collected for the state or county. This is not a certain and well-known compensation, for the reason that it depends upon the amount of a certain kind of professional work there is for him to do. It is entirely uncertain in its character. The object of the legislature, then, evidently was to provide a compensation for the prosecuting officer of the county "for such work as did not fall within the established and settled duties of his office;"

*203 *and with this view it is enacted that he should have 10 per cent. commission on such moneys as should be collected by and through his official action; and we claim that in the payment by the railroad company, and the receipt by the county, of the amount of taxes for the year 1870, paid after a protracted litigation, instituted for the express purpose of deciding the liability of the one party and the rights of the other, was a "collection," within the meaning of section 139 of chapter 25 of the General Statutes of 1868, and that defendant in error, as the county attorney of Johnson county, is entitled to a commission of 10 per cent. on the amount so collected.

VALENTINE, J. On the sixth of January, 1871, taxes were due in Johnson county, for the year 1870, from the Missouri River, Fort Scott & Gulf Railroad Company, amounting to the sum of $11,985.21, and the proper officers of that county were about to proceed to collect the same. The railroad company, however, on that day, commenced an action against J. H. Blake, county treasurer of said county, and A.

J. Clemmans, sheriff of said county, to perpetually enjoin them from collecting said taxes; and on the seventh of January, 1871, the judge of the district court for said county granted a temporary injunction to restrain the collection of said taxes pending the litigation. Afterwards the petition of the railroad company was amended, and on the twenty-eighth of August, 1871, the defendants demurred to the amended petition. The court below sustained the demurrer, rendering judgment for costs against the railroad company, and in favor of said Blake and Clemmans, and dissolved said temporary injunction. The railroad company then brought the case to this court on petition in error, and in this court the judgment of the court below was affirmed. For a report of that case, see Gulf R. Co. v. Blake, 9 Kan. *489. In all the foregoing proceedings the present defendant in error, F. R. Ogg, acted, along with other counsel, as counsel for Blake and Clemmans. He was not, however, employed by Blake or Clemmans, nor by the county commissioners; but he acted in the defense of said suit in the capacity of county attorney of Johnson county. After said suit was determined in this court the railroad company paid said taxes to the treasurer of Johnson county, but neglected to pay the 10 per cent. penalty which had then accrued on said taxes. The defendant in error, Ogg, then, as county attorney, filed a præcipe with the county treasurer for a tax warrant to be issued for the collection of said tax penalty. The warrant was issued by the treasurer of said county to the sheriff, and the sheriff collected the said penalty from the railroad company, and paid it over to the treasurer. The 10 per cent. penalty amounted to $1,198.52, and the taxes and penalty in the aggregate amounted to $13,183.78. The defendant in error, Ogg, now claims that he is entitled to 10 per cent. of the whole amount, to-wit, $1,318.37, for the said services as county attorney. He first filed his claim for that amount with the county commissioners, but they refused to allow the same, or any part thereof. He then commenced this action in the district court for that amount, and the district court, upon an agreed statement of facts, rendered judgment in favor of Ogg, and against the county, for the whole amount claimed, with costs. Is such judgment correct? This is the only question in the case. Ogg does not claim this amount as a part of his salary as county attorney; nor does he claim it under any contract made with the county commissioners. Indeed, he does not claim it under any contract made with any person or persons. He simply claims it under that provision of the statute which says: "County attorneys shall be allowed ten per cent. on all moneys collected by them in favor of the state or county," (Gen. St. 285, § 189;) and he claims this in addition to his salary as county attorney, and in addition to all other fees or compensation allowed by law. Whether all of said taxes belonged to the state and county is not shown by the record, (they may have belonged to some other fund,) but for the purposes of this case we shall assume that they all belonged to the state and county; or, rather, we shall *205 assume that *they all belonged to the county; for if any portion of them belonged to the state, then a very serious question would arise,—whether the county is liable for the whole amount or not; that is, whether the county is liable to pay out of its own fund the 10 per cent. allowed by the statute for collecting the state fund, or whether the state fund should not bear its proportion. Then, with these assumptions, the whole question in this case depends upon whether said payment of said $13,183.73 by the railroad company to the treasurer and the sheriff of said county was a collection of the same, or any part thereof, by the said county attorney, Ogg, within the meaning of said statute; that is, did the county attorney collect the taxes paid by the railroad company to the county treasurer, and did the county attorney collect the penalty paid by the railroad company to the sheriff? The court below decided that the county attorney collected both the taxes and the penalty. We think, however, that the county attorney did not collect either. None of the money ever passed into his hands, or through his hands, and he had no authority to receive it. But he claims that he collected said money by virtue of said injunction suit, and that he collected a portion of the same by virtue of said præcipe.

Now, neither the state nor the county was a party to said injunction suit. No judgment was rendered in favor of or against either the state or said county. Neither the state nor the county employed said county attorney. Indeed, he was not employed at all. The suit was between the railroad company on the one side, and said Blake and Clemmans on the other, and no judgment was rendered even in favor of Blake and Clemmans, except for costs. The judgment did not give Blake and Clemmans, or either of them, any right to collect said taxes, or to collect said penalty. It did not give, or pretend to give, them any rights which they did not have before. They could not have had an execution issued on said judgment for the collection of said taxes and penalty; and they did not even attempt to have any such execution issued. They did not collect, nor attempt to *206 collect, said taxes and penalty by virtue of said *judgment, and they had no authority to do so even if they had so attempted. The taxes and penalty were collected wholly under the statute, independently of said judgment, and were so collected in the same manner (with the exception of said præcipe) that they would have been collected if no such suit as said injunction suit had ever been commenced. Gen. St. 1059, § 123; Laws 1869, p. 251, § 15; Laws 1871, p. 324, § 11. The said præcipe filed by the county attorney with the county treasurer was a nullity; or, at most, it could be treated only as an opinion of the county attorney that a tax warrant should be issued. It is an instrument unknown to the tax laws. It gave to the county treasurer no powers. It could perform no office nor function other than as a mere opinion of the county attorney. It did not make the tax warrant afterwards issued any better or worse than such tax warrant would have been if no such præcipe had ever been filed. It did not make it any more obligatory upon the treasurer to issue said tax warrant than it was before under the law. It simply left the treasurer with just the same rights and powers that he had before the præcipe was filed, and with just the same rights and powers that the treasurer would have had if no injunction suit had ever been commenced. It may be true that said injunction suit determined incidentally that said taxes were legal, and that the treasurer had a right to collect the same; but such a determination could only be incidental. The direct determination was that the railroad company was not entitled to an injunction in the case. This determination might have been for other reasons than that the taxes were legal. Injunction to enjoin the collection of taxes is often refused notwithstanding that the taxes, or some portions thereof, may be illegal. Sleeper v. Bullen, 6 Kan. *300, *306, *309; Ottawa v. Barney, 10 Kan. *270, *279, *280; Gulf R. Co. v. Morris, 7 Kan. *210, *229–*232; City of Lawrence v. Killam, 11 Kan. *499; Gilmore v. Fox, 10 Kan. *509; Hudson v. Atchison Co., 12 Kan. *140. The refusal of the injunction in such a case is simply a negative judgment, and gives to the defendants no *207 affirmative *rights except to collect their costs. The refusal of an injunction to restrain the collection of taxes does not confer any right upon the officers to collect the taxes; it simply leaves the officers with just such rights as they had before.

The judgment of the court below will be reversed, and the cause remanded, with the order that judgment be rendered in favor of the defendant below, and against the plaintiff below, for costs.

COMMISSIONERS OF NEOSHO Co. v. A. B. STODDART.

July Term, 1874.

Counties: Authority to Contract. Neither the district court, nor the sheriff, nor both together, have power, without the consent of the county commissioners, to contract for the county, or to create an indebtedness against the county, for cocoa matting placed, or to be placed, upon the floor of the court room. The county commissioners alone possess such power, and they alone can create such indebtedness.

Error from Neosho district court.

The case is stated in the opinion.

J. R. Woodsworth, for plaintiff in error.

The board of commissioners is the only authority which can make contracts binding upon the county. Gen. St. § 36, p. 261, c. 25; Case v. Shawnee Co., 4 Kan. 511.

The board of commissioners have the right and power to disallow any account, in whole or in part, and the allowance or disallowance of the same is a matter resting entirely in the discretion of the board.

Gen. St. c. 25, § 28.

*208 *The district judge in making the order directing the sheriff to procure the matting at the expense of the county, without the knowledge or consent of the board, acted without authority of law. If the judge could make an order whereby the county became liable for the payment of $65, he could, with equal consistency, make a like order binding the county for as many thousand dollars. He could as well have ordered the sheriff to have erected county buildings at the expense of the county, and to furnish the same in luxuriant style, or, with equal consistency, ordered a railroad built through the county at the county's expense, under the plea that the same was necessary to the comfort and convenience of those wishing to transact business in the district court. The mere fact that the articles are necessary to the "comfort and convenience of attendants upon the court" created no right whereby the order of the district court could bind the county in the matter of expenditures, and the defendant in error, when furnishing the goods upon an order of the district court to the sheriff to procure the same, did so at his own risk.

Hutchings & O'Grady, for defendant in error.

The order of the judge is conclusive of the liability of the county. It is necessary to the very existence of courts that the judges thereof should have such power and authority in and about the arrangement and government of the rooms where they sit for the transaction of business as will enable them to conduct that business with order, convenience, and decency. There are certain powers exercised by all courts that are not expressly delegated by statute, but have been conferred by long use and inherent necessity until they have grown to be a part of the very meaning of the term "court;" and the creation of a court always carries with it, and confers upon its presiding officer, these powers. This is particularly so with reference to the control of the rooms where courts are held, the arrangement of furniture, the positions to be occupied by the jury, the bar, the clerk, the other officers of the court, suitable arrangements to prevent confusion and noise, *and to insure the dispatch of business. Entirely outside and beyond any statutory provision authorizing it, we confidently claim that the creation of a court carries with it the power on the part of a judge to order a proper room to be procured in which to transact business, and to require that such room be furnished with the necessary conveniences for the dispatch business; and that the authority creating, or those for whose benefit the court is created, are liable for all reasonable expenditures so incurred. It is not claimed that an unreasonable or arbitrary order of the court could bind or involve the county in debt, but only such a reasonable and just order as comes within the rule of discipline,—a power which is vital to the very existence of courts. The order of the court in this case is conceded by all parties to be a reasonable one, the execution of which was “indispensable” to the comfort and convenience of all persons having business in the court.

The county, however, is liable on other grounds. We claim, as a general principle of law applicable as well to municipal corporations as to individuals, that where certain articles become necessary to the transaction of one’s business, and such articles are furnished at the request of one’s authorized agent, that there is an implied, if not an express, agreement by the principal to pay the reasonable value of such articles to the person so furnishing them. By law, (Gen. St. 279, § 106,) and by universal custom, the sheriff of the county is made the agent of the county to prepare the court-room for use, and to attend upon and keep order, prevent confusion and noise, and furnish the conveniences necessary to the transaction of business. Section 4, Gen. St. 254, requires that each organized county “shall, at its own expense, provide a suitable court-house.” Now, then, the sheriff being by law and custom the proper officer and agent of the county to attend to preparing the court-room for the use of the district court, and having procured the cocoa matting from defendant in error in order to have a “suitable court-house,” the county is liable whether it was done by order of the court or not.

*210 *VALENTINE, J. On the first of April, 1873, the district court of Neosho county made the following order, to-wit: “Whereas, the health, comfort, and convenience of those who are required to be in attendance upon the session of the district court of Neosho county demand that some suitable carpeting be placed upon the floor of the court-room, therefore it is ordered by the court that the sheriff of said county be, and he is hereby, directed to purchase 51 yards of cocoa matting, at a cost not exceeding $1.10 per yard, and that the same be bound with tin, and placed upon the floor of the court-room on or before Wednesday, April 2, 1873, at 9 o’clock A. M.” On said second of April the sheriff of said county, in pursuance of said order, and without any other authority, purchased in the name of the county, and for the county, from the plaintiff below, defendant in error, fifty-five yards of cocoa matting, at $1.15 per yard, amounting to $63.25, and on the same day placed said matting on the floor of the court-room of said Neosho county. It is agreed that “said matting is indispensable to the comfort and convenience of those having business to transact in said court.” On the twenty-third of said April the plaintiff below duly presented his claim against the county for said matting to the board of county commissioners of said county. On the next day the commissioners examined said claim, and disallowed it. On April 25, 1873, the plaintiff below appealed from the board of county commissioners to the district court. On April 26, 1873, the case was tried in the district court before the court, and without a jury, and judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff below, and against the county of Neosho, for $60.50, and costs. To reverse this judgment the county now appeals to this court.

The only question which we are asked to decide by either party is whether the sheriff had the power to purchase said matting, either with or without said order of the district court, and make the county responsible therefor. We do not think he had any such power.

*211 In this state a county is a **quasi* corporation, with power to sue and be sued, to contract and be contracted with, to purchase, hold, and sell real and personal property, (Gen. St. 253, § 1,) and to build, own, provide, and keep in repair court-houses, etc., at its own expense. Gen. St. 254, § 4, and various other statutes. And the statutes also provide as follows: "The powers of a county as a body politic and corporate shall be exercised by a board of county commissioners." Gen. St. 254, § 3. "The board of county commissioners of each county shall have power at any meeting—First, to make such orders concerning the property belonging to the county as they may deem expedient; second, to examine and settle all accounts of the receipts and expenses of the county, and to examine and settle and allow all accounts chargeable against the county, and, when so settled, they may issue county orders therefor as provided by law; third, to purchase sites for, and to build and keep in repair, county buildings, and cause the same to be insured in the name of the county treasurer, for the benefit of the county, and in case there are no county buildings, to provide suitable rooms for county purposes; * * * fifth, to represent the county, and have the care of the county property, and the management of the business and concerns of the county, in all cases where no other provision is made by law," etc. Gen. St. 256, § 16. And "the boards of county commissioners of the several counties of this state shall have exclusive control of all expenditures accruing, either in the publication of delinquent tax-lists, treasurer's notices, county printing, or any other county expenditures," etc. Gen. St. 261, § 36. The board may allow or disallow any claim, in whole or in part, as the law and justice of each particular case would require. Gen. St. 259, § 28. And "in all suits or proceedings by or against a county, the name in which the county shall sue or be sued shall be 'The Board of County Commissioners of the County of ———,' " etc. Gen. St. 254, § 5. Indeed, every law upon the statute book that has any reference to the subject would seem to indicate that the county board had exclu-

*212 sive control, within the law, of all **county* expenditures; and there is no law upon the statute book that authorizes either the district court, or the sheriff, or both together, to contract for the county, or to create any indebtedness against the county, in any case similar to the one now under consideration. The county commissioners alone possess such power, and they alone can create such indebtedness. It is the duty of the county commissioners, and their duty alone, to furnish a suitable court-room for their county; but if they do not do so, then some other remedy than the one resorted to in this case must be invoked.

The judgment of the court below is reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

JOHN ATYEO v. C. E. KELSEY.

July Term, 1874.

New Trial: Conflicting Testimony; Discretion. Where a cause has been tried before a jury upon contradictory and conflicting evidence, and the court below, upon a motion for a new trial on the ground that the verdict of the jury is not sustained by sufficient evidence, sets aside the verdict, and grants a new trial, the supreme court will not reverse such order granting the new trial, unless the preponderance of the evidence sustaining the verdict is so great as to show an abuse of judicial discretion on the part of the court below making such order. [Germond v. Littleton, 22 Kan. 731; Day v. Harris, 23 Kan. 217; Eagle Chair Co. v. Kelsey, Id. 636; Brown v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 29 Kan. 189.]

Error from Lyon district court.

Atyeo brought suit on a promissory note against T. J. Hankla and P. P. Peter as makers, and L. H. Robinson and C. E. Kelsey as indorsers. Kelsey answered that, being himself the owner and holder of said note, and being about to commence proceedings thereon against said Hankla and Peter, the makers, to enforce payment thereof, *213 the plaintiff, Atyeo, as a friend of Hankla and Peter, *and to avert a suit against them, applied to him (Kelsey) to transfer said note to plaintiff, and paid defendant the amount due on said note; that at plaintiff's request defendant then assigned said note to plaintiff by indorsement, in order to vest in plaintiff the title thereto, and the benefit of a mortgage previously given by said Hankla and Peter to secure the note; and that it was at the time understood and agreed, by both plaintiff and defendant, such assignment and indorsement to plaintiff did not and should not create any liability on the part of defendant, as indorser or otherwise. Plaintiff's reply was a general denial. On this issue the action was tried at the March term, 1873, of the district court. Verdict for plaintiff for the amount claimed.

O. Miller, for plaintiff in error.

The court erred in granting the defendant a new trial. By the issues formed by the defendant's answer the burden of proof was on the defendant to show, by a preponderance of credible testimony, that the statements therein were true. Kelsey says in his evidence that the plaintiff paid the money to liquidate the note for the makers, Hankla and Peter. The plaintiff denies the statement, and plaintiff's denial is strongly corroborated by the testimony of the witness Dougherty. Nor does the testimony of Heritage sustain Kelsey's defense. The jury passed upon the credibility of the witnesses, and upon the weight of the testimony, and it was error to set their verdict aside.

Where a new trial has been granted, the supreme court will require a much stronger case before it will interfere and reverse than where a new trial has been refused. Field v. Kinnear, 5 Kan. *238, where numerous authorities are collected; Owen v. Owen, 9 Kan. *214 *96; City of Ottawa v. Washabaugh, 11 Kan. *124. *Before an order granting a new trial will be reversed, it must affirmatively appear that none of the grounds of the motion are sufficient. McCreary v. Cockrill, 3 Kan. *39; Ryan v. Topeka Bridge Co., 7 Kan. *209.

The district court instructed the jury, in substance, that "on the pleadings, without any testimony, the plaintiff below was entitled to a judgment against defendant, Kelsey;" and that "the burden of proof is on the defendant, Kelsey." Both of these instructions are, as we believe, erroneous, for the reason that plaintiff's petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The petition being upon a note indorsed after maturity, to-wit, December 26, 1872, and demand and protest not being made until January 18, 1873, nineteen days afterwards, we think the demand and notice were not in a reasonable time. The petition states no facts excusing the delay; and while there is some uncertainty in the decisions as to whether what is a reasonable time is a question of law for the court or a question of fact for the jury, yet we think the second instruction erroneous in either view of the case. If it were a question of fact for the jury, the court by its instruction forestalled any inquiry by the jury in that matter; if it were a question of law for the court, then we say that nineteen days is not within a reasonable time, as a matter of law. Seven days have been held too late, and it was said that the demand and notice should have been in one or two days at furthest. Nash v. Harrington, 2 Aik. (Vt.) 9; Aldis v. Johnson, 1 Vt. 136, 140. Two weeks held too late. Keyes v. Fenstermaker, 24 Cal. 329. Thirty days entirely too late. Dumont v. Pope, 7 Blackf. 368. Must be in a reasonable time. Jones v. Middleton, 29 Iowa, 188; Kennon v. McRea, 7 Port. (Ala.) 184; 1 Pars. Notes & Bills, 381, 382, and notes.

The bad pleading might possibly have been cured by the evidence, had any curative evidence been given; but there was none given. The whole evidence shows (and that without any contradicting) that the note was indorsed by Kelsey after maturity, on December 26, 1872, and that payment was demanded and the note protested for non-payment on January 13, 1873; so that it does not change *215 the allegation of the *petition as to the time that elapsed after the indorsement until the protest. And there is no particle of evidence showing, or tending to show, any excuse for the delay; and the parties all resided during all the time, and were doing business, in the city of Emporia, and within a stone's throw of one another. The court will also see from the evidence that defendant, Kelsey, was at the time of the said indorsement, on December 26, 1872, proposing (in the language of plaintiff, Atyeo, in his testimony) "to shave the note," and he was crowding it for collection at that time; and there is no contradiction as to this point. The court will also see from the evidence, and there is no contradiction in it, that said note was secured by a chattel mortgage on property in the possession of Hankla and Peter in the Robinson House, which house, and nearly or quite all the mortgaged property, were destroyed by fire on the third of January, 1873, by which delay (from December 26, 1872, until January 3, 1873) Kelsey lost all his security, if the plaintiff's theory is correct. The evidence does not, therefore, in anywise help out the bad pleading,—does not in anywise tend to excuse the delay in making the demand and protest; but positively, and without contradiction, shows that that delay resulted in a loss of all, or nearly all, the property mortgaged to secure said note. When his mortgage security is gone Atyeo seeks to save himself by resorting to Kelsey's indorsement. If he had expected to rely upon such indorsement, and had used due diligence in making demand and giving notice, Kelsey could have protected himself before the mortgaged property was destroyed. The court, having erred in its instructions, properly granted a new trial.

VALENTINE, J. The only ground assigned for error in this case is that the court below erred in granting a new trial. The motion for a new trial was founded upon the following grounds, to-wit: "(1) Error in the assessment of the amount of recovery, in that it *216 is too large. *(2) That the verdict is not sustained by sufficient evidence, and is contrary to law. (3) Error of law occurring at the trial, and excepted to at the time by said defendant."

Upon which of these grounds the new trial was granted, is not shown by the record. Hence, before we could reverse the order of the court below granting the new trial, it would have to appear affirmatively to us that the new trial could not have been properly granted upon either of said grounds. This does not so appear. The question is discussed in the brief of counsel for plaintiff in error as though the new trial was granted solely upon the ground that the verdict was not sustained by sufficient evidence. Now, the record does not show that the new trial was granted upon this ground alone; but, for the purposes of this case, we will suppose that it was, and still we do not think that we can reverse the ruling of the court below. The evidence was conflicting and contradictory, and while we think the preponderance of the evidence sustains the verdict, still we cannot reverse the ruling of the court below for that reason, (Anthony v. Eddy, 5 Kan. *127; Field v. Kinnear, Id. *233, *238; Owen v. Owen, 9 Kan. *91, *96;) for the preponderance is not great. Before we would reverse in such a case, the preponderance of the evidence would have to be so overwhelmingly great that it would show an abuse of judicial discretion on the part of the court below in setting aside the verdict and granting a new trial. Where a new trial has been granted, both parties have another opportunity of having a fair and impartial trial upon the merits of the action. But where a new trial has been refused, the matter is ended unless a reversal can be had. Hence new trials should be favored instead of being disfavored, wherever any question can arise as to the correctness of the verdict. As a rule, no verdict should be allowed to stand unless both the jury, and the court trying the cause, can say that they believe that the verdict is correct. While the question is before the jury they are the sole and exclusive judges of all questions of fact; but *217 when the matter comes before the court upon a motion *for a new trial, it then becomes the duty of the court to determine for itself whether the verdict is sustained by sufficient evidence or not, (Gen. St. 687, § 306, sub. 6;) and the decision of the trial court in such a case has almost controlling force with the appellate court. The appellate court will in such cases reverse only where the trial court has clearly abused its discretion.

The order of the court below granting the new trial must be affirmed.

C. H. TAYLOR and others v. W. A. THOMAS and others.

July Term, 1874.

1. Escrow: Bills and Notes. A note placed in escrow takes effect the instant the conditions of the escrow are performed, even though the depository has not formally delivered it to the payee.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup>A deed apparently fully executed, and acknowledged, and delivered to the grantee, to become an absolute deed upon some condition, is not an escrow. Johnston v. Winfield, 14 Kan. 898. A bond for a deed, deposited with a disinterested third party, to be by him held until a certain sum of money is paid, and then delivered to the obligee, is an escrow. Roberts v. Mullenix, 10 Kan. 26, and note.

2. ———: Part Performance of Condition. Where a note had been placed in escrow to be given to the payee upon the delivery of 200,000 hedge plants, there must be a delivery of the entire number of plants, or a tender and refusal to accept them, before any title to the note passes to the payee, or any action can be maintained thereon. A delivery of part of the plants gives no right of action on the note for a pro rata amount thereof.

Thomas and two others, as plaintiffs, brought suit on a promissory note for $350, dated April 9, 1873, signed by Taylor and two others, payable to the order of said Taylor, "ten days after date, at the First National Bank, in Wichita." The note was indorsed by Taylor, and by him delivered to Sol. H. Kohn, to be delivered to Thomas & Co.

when Taylor should receive 200,000 hedge plants from one *218 Morris. Trial at the September *term, 1873. Verdict and judgment for plaintiffs.

Tucker & Fisher, for plaintiffs in error.

No action could be maintained on said note, the note not having been delivered to the plaintiffs. Furness v. Williams, 11 Ill. 229; Burson v. Huntington, 21 Mich. 415; Hunt v. Weir, 29 Ill. 83; Foy v. Blackstone, 31 Ill. 538; Hathaway v. Payne, 34 N. Y. 105; Bryant v. Bryant, 42 N. Y. 11; Fay v. Richardson, 7 Pick. 91; Canfield v. Ives, 18 Pick. 253.

The court erred in the instruction given to the jury upon the question of delivery of property sold. The plants were not delivered. O'Keefe v. Kellogg, 15 Ill. 347; Schneider v. Westerman, 25 Ill. 514; 2 Kent, Comm. 496; Dale v. Stimpson, 21 Pick. 384; Russell v. Minor, 22 Wend. 659; Rapelye v. Mackie, 6 Cow. 250.

Sluss & Dyer, for defendants in error.

The pleadings raised an issue of fact,—whether the plaintiff below performed the conditions upon which the note was placed in escrow. If they had, they were entitled to recover, although the note had not actually been delivered to them, (Couch v. Meeker, 2 Conn. 302; Foy v. Blackstone, 31 Ill. 538; 1 Pars. Notes, 51;) and there was evidence to maintain the affirmative of the issue presented by the pleadings.

The instructions are to be taken as a whole, and were evidently so considered by the jury. The court informed the jury that, under the pleadings, if they found that the plaintiffs had delivered and the defendants received under the contract 75,000 of the plants, and refused to take the remainder, they should find for the plaintiffs. This was correct.

BREWER, J. This was an action on a promissory note. The note was originally placed in escrow, to be delivered upon certain conditions. It had never been delivered by the depository. Hence it is claimed by plaintiff in error that no action could be maintained upon it. This is an error. When the conditions of the escrow are performed the title vests in the payee. The title does not hinge on the action of the depositary, but upon the performance of the conditions. *219 "Though *it was not formally delivered over by the depositary to the plaintiff, yet it took effect in his hands the instant the conditions were performed, without any formal act of delivery on his part." SWIFT, C. J., in Couch v. Meeker, 2 Conn. 302; 1 Pars. Notes, 51. The note was placed in escrow, to be given to the plaintiffs on the completion of a contract to deliver 200,000 hedge plants. There was testimony showing a delivery of 75,000, and tending to show an excuse for the non-delivery of the remainder. There was no pretense that any more than the 75,000 had actually been received by the defendants. The court gave this instruction: "The defendants have set up and claimed no set-off or counter-claim against the note sued upon, but rely upon a total failure of consideration, and an utter failure on part of plaintiffs and Morris to comply with their contract to deliver the hedge plants according to their agreement; so that if, under the contract, plaintiffs and Morris have delivered 75,000 of the hedge plants, and Taylor has received them and converted the same to his own use, you must find for the plaintiffs." The jury were also told by another instruction that if they found for the plaintiffs, they must find the full amount of the note. In this instruction we think the court erred. Whatever rights of action the plaintiffs may have had upon the contract, upon delivery of 75,000 plants, they had no right to the note, and could maintain no action upon it until after a full compliance with the conditions of the escrow. Until such time, it is as though no note had ever been signed. A part performance passes no title,—gives no interest in it. The instruction contemplates the note as delivered, and the defendants as interposing defenses to it. The question for the jury was as to the delivery of the note, or that which is tantamount to a delivery. Under that instruction it was hardly possible for the jury to find otherwise than as they did,—for the plaintiffs; but under the testimony it is, to say the least, an open question as to the proper verdict. This is all that it is necessary to decide, in order to dispose of the case here.

It may, perhaps, be proper to say, in view of a future trial, *220 *and the conflicting testimony presented in this record, that before the plaintiffs can recover upon this note they must show a delivery of the 200,000 plants, or a tender of the same and a refusal to accept them; also that the defendants were entitled to live plants, in good ordinary merchantable condition, and the full number contracted for; that, in order to constitute a delivery or a tender, there must be a separation and identification of the plants, or else, in case of a tender, an absolute refusal to take any plants out of the whole mass from which the delivery was to be made.

The judgment will be reversed, and the case remanded, with instructions to grant a new trial.

GEORGE W. MARTIN v. JOHN FRANCIS, State Treasurer, etc.

July Term, 1874.

Public Moneys: Legislative Appropriation. Money belonging to the state, rightfully in the state treasury, and over which the legislature has the rightful control, cannot be drawn from the state treasury except in pursuance of some act of the legislature passed for that purpose within one year prior to the attempted drawing of the money.

Original proceeding in mandamus.

This was an amicable action, instituted in June, 1874, at the instance and under the direction of Ed. Russell, state superintendent of insurance, as a test case. Martin was only a nominal plaintiff. Section 17 of the act creating the insurance department (chapter 93, Laws 1871) provides that insurance companies doing business in this state shall pay certain fees to the superintendent of insurance, and that "all said fees shall be paid by the superintendent into the state treasury for an insurance fund, and shall be used for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the insurance department, *221 and *for no other purpose whatsoever;" and section 4 of said act provides that "all the salaries, payments, and expenditures for said insurance department shall be paid by the treasurer of state, upon the certificate of the superintendent, in the same manner as other like expenses: provided, the amount so paid out shall at no time exceed that collected from the insurance companies, and paid into the state treasury, as provided in this act." Said act (sections 2, 4) provided for the payment of an annual salary to the superintendent, and to a chief clerk, authorized the appointment of other clerks as occasion might require, and authorized the superintendent to furnish suitable rooms at the capitol for the department, and to provide the necessary furniture, stationery, and other conveniences for the transaction of the business of his office. Said act did not make, nor pretend to make, any specific "appropriations" out of the "insurance fund," or otherwise, for the expenses of the department, nor were such appropriations made by any other act for 1871, nor for the year 1872; but the entire expenses for both those years were paid by the state treasurer out of the "insurance fund," upon warrants drawn by the superintendent under the authority given by section 4 of said insurance law above quoted. In 1873 (Laws 1873, p. 60) the legislature passed an appropriation bill for the expenses of the insurance department for that year. In 1874 the ways and means committee refused to report a bill making appropriations for the insurance department. An amendment making such appropriations was offered in the senate to the bill "making appropriations for the executive and judiciary departments," and was adopted, but the house refused to concur, and the senate recessed. Senate Jour. 1874, pp. 476, 480, 481; House Jour. 911, 912. The affidavit for the mandamus in this case alleged that Martin was state printer; that as such officer he had done certain printing which was necessary for the transaction of the business of the insurance department; that such printing had been ordered by the superintendent of insurance, and his bill therefor had been audited and allowed by said superintendent, and that said *superintendent had issued to him a *222 warrant on the state treasurer for $43, the amount of said bill, payable out of the insurance fund; that he presented said warrant to John Francis, state treasurer, for payment, on the twenty-second of June, 1874; that there was at the time of such presentation more than two thousand dollars in said state treasury belonging to the insurance fund; and that said treasurer refused to pay said warrant, assigning as a reason for such refusal that "no appropriations had been made by the legislature of 1874" for the payment of insurance warrants. The affidavit stated that the state treasurer had and made no other legal or valid excuse for refusing to pay said warrant; that no appropriation was necessary to authorize such payment; and praying for a writ of mandamus, etc. The attorney general appeared for the state treasurer, waived process, and demurred to the affidavit.

A. L. Williams, Atty. Gen., in support of his demurrer, and against the allowing of a writ of mandamus, contended: (1) That the insurance law (section 4, c. 93, Laws 1871) did not give the superintendent of insurance any legal right to issue warrants on the state treasury for the payment of money, but merely to "certify" the expenses of his department to the auditor, and that the auditor should issue the proper warrants, (section 29, c. 102, Gen. St.) (2) Section 17 of the insurance law requires the superintendent to pay "into the state treasury" all the fees, etc., collected by him; they are therefore rightfully and legally in the state treasury, and "public moneys." (3) Section 24 of article 2 of the state constitution expressly declares that "no money shall be drawn from the treasury, except in pursuance of a specific appropriation made by law." (4) If no "specific appropriation made by law" is necessary, then the plaintiff has a plain and adequate remedy at law, namely, an action against the defendant to recover *223 the *amount of the warrant by reason of defendant's refusal to pay it on presentation.

W. C. Webb, for plaintiff.

The "warrant" was properly issued by the superintendent of insurance. The insurance act (section 4) declares that the expenses of the department "shall be paid by the treasurer on the certificate of the superintendent." The form of the paper called a "warrant" is sufficient; and whether called a "certificate" or a "warrant," its legal effect is the same, and just what the legislature prescribed. The constitution creates the office of "auditor," but does not prescribe or even designate the character of his duties. But the word "auditor," ex vi termini, imports "an officer appointed and authorized to examine accounts, compare charges with vouchers, allow or reject charges, and state the balance." It is a novel feature in our legislation (section 30, c. 102, Gen. St.) which devolves upon the "auditor" the authority to issue warrants, and more novel still (section 33 of said chapter 102) to require that they be "countersigned" by the officer whose duty it is to pay them. But in the absence of constitutional inhibitions the legislature could devolve, and in some cases has devolved, on the "auditor" new and extraordinary duties not usually covered by the word "auditing." The legislature has made the secretary of state (chapter 28, § 13, Laws 1869) the auditor of all accounts against the state for public printing. His certificate is conclusive, and the "auditor of state" has no duty with respect to the accounts of the state printer except to "draw his warrant" for the amounts allowed (audited) by the secretary of state. So, too, the legislature has made the superintendent of insurance the auditor of accounts and claims on account of the insurance department; and with respect to such expenses the superintendent (and not the auditor of state) is authorized to draw warrants on the state treasurer; and the reasons are quite as strong why the particular duty of "issuing warrants" should be divided between the auditor and superintendent, as those which induced

"There was no appropriation made in 1874 for the payment of this class of warrants." Is an annual specific appropriation, by law, necessary? It is respectfully submitted that it was not necessary. The constitutional provision referred to by defendant (section 24, art. 2) does not cover any funds in the state treasury except such as are raised by "taxation;" that is, pursuant to the general laws of the state, for an annual and uniform assessment and taxation of property. Said section 24 should be read in connection with sections 1, 3, 4, art. 11, thus:

Article 11: "Sec. 1. The legislature shall provide for a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation. * * *"

"Sec. 3. The legislature shall provide each year for raising revenue to defray the current expenses of the state.

"Sec. 4. No tax shall be levied except in pursuance of a law, which shall distinctly state the object of the same, to which object only such tax shall be applied."

Article 2: "Sec. 24. No money shall be drawn from the treasury except in pursuance of a specific appropriation made by law, and no appropriation shall be for a longer term than one year."

Reading and construing these sections together,—and, being in pari materia, they should be so construed, without regard to their particular location in the constitution,—and it is very clear that the "moneys" in "the treasury" which cannot be drawn except in pursuance of an annual "specific appropriation," are the general "revenues," raised annually as "state taxes," to defray the current expenses of the state by a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation of all taxable property, real and personal. Placing said section 24 in the "legislative" article, and omitting from the article on "finance and taxation," cannot give a broader scope to its language. The legislature has never but once (chapter 25, Laws 1873) deemed it necessary to make a "specific appropriation" of moneys other than that raised by taxation as general "revenue," while it has on several occasions indicated that such moneys in the state treasury may

the legislature passed an act "providing for the sale of public lands to aid in the construction of certain railroads." By this act (sections 3-5) the office of "state agent" to sell said lands was created, such agent to hold his office "until all said lands shall be sold," subject to removal by the governor, and to "have a salary of $1,500 per annum payable out of any moneys arising from the sale of said lands." The same section (section 5) which fixes the salary provides that said agent "shall deposit all moneys derived from any sale with the treasurer of state," and that his (the agent's) "salary shall be paid quarterly, upon a warrant drawn by the auditor upon the treasurer." Said section 5 has never been repealed nor amended. Said office of state agent still exists, and has had an incumbent nearly all the time for eight years past, and now has an incumbent, who has drawn his salary quarterly "upon warrants drawn by the auditor upon the state treasurer," and yet the legislature has never at any time made a specific appropriation, nor any "appropriation," for the payment of said salary. The insurance law does not stand alone in this respect. It requires the payment by insurance companies of certain specific "fees," (not taxes upon an equal and uniform assessment of property,) and that such fees shall be paid into the state treasury to constitute a fund for the payment of the expenses of the insurance department, "and for no other purpose." Such fees constitute no part of the "revenue" raised for the "current expenses of the state," (that is, for all the ordinary expenses of the government,) and is not subject to the constitutional provision requiring an annual specific appropriation to draw it from the treasury. The general revenues levied and collected as "state taxes" go into the state treasury as a "general fund," no part of which can be paid out without a specific designation of the amount and the purpose, (denominated an "appropriation;") as, so many dollars for salaries of the governor

*226 and other state officers, so many dollars for salaries for *the judges of the several courts, so many dollars for per diem and mileage of the members of the legislature, so much to maintain one charitable or educational institution and so much for another, and so much to erect the state capitol, or a new asylum, and the like. This is what is meant by a "specific appropriation,"—a legislative enactment designating from the "general fund" a particular amount for a particular purpose, to be drawn from the treasury within a year for such purpose, or not at all. The "insurance fund," like the "railroad fund," is raised in a particular and unusual manner,—the one by fees, the other by the sale of lands. It is raised for a particular object, and deposited for that particular object, "and for no other purpose;" and the expenses of that particular object are limited to the amount so raised, so as not to touch or disturb the general revenues of the state. It is "specifically appropriated" when raised, and does not require another legislative enactment to authorize its application to the payment of insurance warrants. If the insurance law had provided that the superintendent should collect the fees, pay the salaries and other expenses of the department, and deposit the surplus, if any, in the state treasury at the close of the fiscal year, and publish in his annual report a statement of the fees collected, expenses paid, and amount deposited, the validity of the law would not be questioned. To require the superintendent to pay the fees into the state treasury first, and then authorize him to draw them out on his warrants issued for salaries and expenses of the department, does not change the character of the fund, so as to subject it to the constitutional provision under consideration.

The "plain and adequate remedy in the law," suggested by the defendant, is not such a remedy as will defeat or prevent a mandamus. Here, the defendant is a public officer, and in his official capacity he holds moneys collected for the particular purpose of paying this warrant, and other warrants of this class. His duty to pay this warrant out of such fund results from his office, and it is a duty which he may be compelled to perform at any time. The plaintiff will not *227 be *driven to an action against the officer and his sureties for an omission or refusal to perform such duty, but may have his relief by a mandamus compelling its performance.

VALENTINE, J. This is an action of mandamus, brought originally in this court. There are several questions involved in the case, but for the purposes of the case we shall assume that all except one should be decided in favor of the plaintiff, and that one may be stated as follows: Can any money belonging to the state, rightfully in the state treasury, and over which the legislature has the rightful control, be drawn from the state treasury except in pursuance of some act of the legislature passed for that purpose within one year prior to the attempted drawing of the money? We must answer this question in the negative. The question arises as follows: The superintendent of insurance issued a warrant in favor of the plaintiff upon the state treasurer, which warrant reads as follows:

"INSURANCE FUND.

"No. 196.

INSURANCE DEPARTMENT,

TOPEKA, March 10, 1874.

"Treasurer of State of Kansas: Pay to Geo. W. Martin, or order, the sum of forty-three dollars, out of any moneys in the state treasury belonging to the 'Insurance Fund,' as provided by chapter 93 of the Laws of 1871. [Seal.]

"$43.00. Ed. RUSSELL, Superintendent of Insurance."

The plaintiff presented this warrant to the state treasurer for payment; and the state treasurer refused to pay the same, and indorsed thereon the following words, to-wit:

"Presented for payment June 22, 1874. Not paid for the reason that no appropriation was made by the legislature of 1874 providing for the payment of this class of warrants.

"JOHN FRANCIS, State Treasurer."

Now, admitting that everything must be decided against the treasurer except that the legislature failed to make an appropriation for this class of warrants, and then should the treasurer have paid *228 said warrant? We think not. Section *24 of article 2 of the constitution reads as follows: "No money shall be drawn from the treasury except in pursuance of a specific appropriation made by law; and no appropriation shall be for a longer term than one year." This section would seem to be decisive of the question now under consideration. "No money shall be drawn," etc; this would seem to mean that no money that may ever rightfully be in the state treasury shall be drawn therefrom except in pursuance of an act of the legislature specifically authorizing the same to be done, passed within one year prior thereto; and it certainly does mean so, unless some other provision of the constitution may be found which would tend to limit or modify the meaning of the language used. Now, we shall not say that there is nothing in the constitution which would tend to limit or modify the meaning of said language; but we think there is nothing in the constitution that would tend in the least to limit or modify the meaning of said language so far as it has any application to this particular case. The language of said section is broad enough to cover the insurance fund as well as every other fund, and there is nothing in the constitution that we are aware of that would tend to withdraw the insurance fund from its operation. Hence the provisions of said section must apply to the insurance fund, whether they apply to every other fund or not. It seems to be admitted by all parties that said insurance fund belongs to the state, and that it is rightfully in the state treasury. Indeed, this action of mandamus against the state treasurer to compel him to pay a warrant drawn on the state treasurer for money in the state treasury is founded upon such a theory. It is claimed, however, by the plaintiff, that the words "no money," as used in said section 24, should be construed to mean "no money raised by taxation." But if the framers of the constitution had intended to have given to said words such a meaning, we think they would have said so in express terms; or, at least, they would have placed said section 24 in the article on finance and taxation, (article 11,) instead of placing it where they did. The state may and *229 does receive money from various other sources than *that of taxation, and said section being isolated as it is, and broad in its terms, was undoubtedly intended to apply to all money, raised from every source, except such money as may be excepted from the provisions of said section by some other provision of the constitution. As said section 24 was not inserted in the article of the constitution concerning finance and taxation, it would certainly be as reasonable to say that it did not apply to money raised by taxation as to say that it does not apply to the insurance fund. But is not the "insurance fund" raised by a species of taxation?

The writ of mandamus will be denied, and judgment will be rendered for the defendant for costs.

J. H. COSTELLO and others v. JOHN WILHELM.

July Term, 1874.

1. Bills and Notes: Extending Payment: Parol Agreement. In an action on a promissory note the defendants answered that by a parol agreement of the parties afterwards made the note was to be paid at maturity if convenient and practicable, but if not convenient and practicable, then that the time for the payment of the same should be extended until the defendants should receive certain moneys, which, as they alleged, they had not received when they filed this answer. But the answer did not state any sufficient consideration for said agreement, and it did not allege that it was either inconvenient or impracticable for the defendants to pay said note at the time it became due. On demurrer, held that said answer did not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense to the plaintiff's action.<sup>1</sup> Error from Marion district court.

Action by Wilhelm against Costello and others on a promissory note given by defendants to plaintiff. The case was heard at the April term, 1873, of the district court. Judgment was entered as follows:

Martin & Case and J. W. Williams, for plaintiffs in error.

No brief on file.

Peters & Case, for defendant in error.

The demurrer was properly sustained. The subsequent oral agreement was a separate and distinct contract from the written note. It must therefore stand or fall upon its own merits. It cannot derive any of its legal requisites from the written contract. Without any consideration the oral agreement is a nullity. 1 Pars. Cont. 8; Dudley v. Reynolds, 1 Kan. *285. No consideration is alleged or stated in the answer. The existence of a fact required by law to be proved will not be presumed. When the law presumes a fact, it need not be stated in the pleading. 1 Chit. Pl. 221. The converse of this is equally true, viz.: when the law does not presume a fact, it must be stated in the pleading.

VALENTINE, J. This was an action on a promissory note given by the plaintiffs in error, defendants below, to the defendant in error. The defendants below answered, setting forth in their answer, substantially, that, after said note was given, a parol agreement was entered into between the parties that the note should be paid at maturity if convenient and practicable, but if not convenient and *231 practicable, then that the time for *the payment of the same should be extended until the defendants should receive certain moneys, which, as they allege, they had not yet received when they filed their answer. The plaintiff below demurred to said answer on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense to the plaintiff's cause of action. The court below sustained said demurrer, and then granted leave to the defendants to amend their answer; but the defendants failing to so amend, the court then rendered judgment for the plaintiff, and against the defendants, for the amount of the note, with interest and costs. The defendants now bring the case to this court, and ask a reversal of said judgment. The only error that they assign in their petition in error is "that the court erred in sustaining the demurrer of the said plaintiff to the answer of the said defendants." We do not think that the court erred in sustaining said demurrer: First, there is no sufficient consideration alleged in said answer to uphold said agreement. Second, it is nowhere alleged in said answer that it was either inconvenient or impracticable for the defendants to pay said note at the time the same became due. It is true, the defendants allege that this agreement was made at a time when the plaintiff and one of the defendants were settling up sundry matters between themselves; and it is also true that they allege that this particular defendant at the time of making the settlement paid certain moneys to the plaintiff; but there is no such connection alleged between said settlement and the payment of said moneys on the one side, and the agreement of the plaintiff to extend the time for the payment of said note on the other side, as would constitute one a consideration for the other.

We are not required in this case to determine whether the plaintiff was entitled to recover for all that he asked or not; for treating the answer as an answer, it did not state any facts which would defeat the plaintiff's cause of action, or any portion thereof. But if it were treated as a demurrer, then it would apply to the whole of the plain-tiff's petition, which unquestionably stated a good cause of *232 action, whether the *plaintiff was entitled to recover for all that he asked or not. Therefore, in whatever way the answer may be considered, it cannot be sustained. Neither do we think that we are called upon, under the assignment of error in this case, to consider the question whether the court below erred in rendering a judgment for forty dollars, "costs of collection." No judgment for any other amount as costs seems, however, to have been rendered, and hence it would not seem that there was any error.

The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

X. K. STOUT v. C. C. HYATT.

January Term, 1874.

1. Jury Trial: Impaneling Jury. It is not a substantial error for the district court to discharge a juror during the time the jury are being impaneled although the juror may be discharged for an insufficient reason, where an unexceptionable jury is afterwards obtained, and where the party complaining has not exhausted his peremptory challenges. [Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Franklin, 23 Kan. 78.]<sup>1</sup>
2. Titles: Legal and Equitable. A party may have both a legal and an equitable title to a piece of land. He may in fact possess the whole title, both legal and equitable, and be the entire owner of the property.
3. Ejectment: Plaintiff's Title: Adverse Legal Title. A party may, in an action for the recovery of real property under section 595 of the Civil Code, recover on the strength of an equitable title only, even though the adverse party may hold the legal title, provided, however, that such equitable title is paramount to and stronger than the title held by such adverse party.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup>A trial court, in impaneling a jury to serve in a particular case, should have and has a very extensive and almost unlimited discretion in discharging a person called to serve on the jury who might, in the opinion of the court, not make the fittest or most competent person to serve on that jury; but this rule should not be applied in retaining jurors. State v. Miller, 29 Kan. 43. See, also, State v. McKinney, 31 Kan. 575; S. C. 3 Pac. Rep. 356.

4. ———: Equitable Action. Where the plaintiff seeks, under said section 595 of the Code, to recover real property on the strength of a paramount equitable title against a defendant who holds the legal title, the action is in the nature of an equitable action, and although such action is frequently called an action of ejectment, yet the final determination of the rights of the parties must be governed by the rules pertaining to equitable actions; that is, the plaintiff in such action must make out in every respect as complete a right to recover, and by the same kind of evidence, as though he had commenced his action in the form of an equitable action.
- 233 *5. ———: Pleadings and Evidence. Although the facts in an action for the recovery of real property under said section 595 of the Code are not usually and need not necessarily be set out in the pleadings in detail, nor with any degree of particularity, still either party under such pleadings may prove whatever would strengthen his own title or defeat his adversary's title in the same manner and to the same extent as he could do if the facts were set out with all the circumstantial minuteness and fullness of detail that they usually are in equitable actions. [Wicks v. Smith, 18 Kan. 515.]
6. School Lands: Sales under Territorial Laws. Since the decision in the case of State v. Stringfellow, 2 Kan. *263, *316 et seq., there can be no question concerning the power of the territorial authorities of Kansas to sell school lands during the time that Kansas was a territory, nor concerning the validity of the laws of the territorial legislature passed for that purpose.
7. ———: Territorial Pre-emption Law. Pre-emption rights could be assigned under section 5 of the territorial pre-emption laws of 1855, p. 646, and this assignment could be made by a simple instrument in writing. The assignment, where the land has not been paid for, was at most only the assignment of an equitable interest. No estate was conveyed, and, of course, it was not necessary to execute a deed of conveyance. Said instrument in writing may be and must be proved in the same manner as any other simple instrument in writing.
8. ———: Proceedings of County Board. The proceedings of the county board under section 8 of the territorial pre-emption laws of 1855 are in the nature of judicial proceedings, and should be treated with about the same respect as the proceedings of other tribunals of special and limited jurisdiction.
9. ———. While the county board had the power under said pre-emption laws to determine whether any particular person had the right to pre-empt any particular piece of land, yet they had no power to determine whether any such person, or any other person, had at any time paid for said land. The payment was to be made to the school treasurer, and hence the records of the county board could not be evidence of such payment.

<sup>1</sup>The plaintiff in ejectment must recover, if he recovers at all, upon the strength of his own title. In this state the plaintiff is not required to have the legal title, or all the title, or a title paramount to the title of all others, in order to enable him to recover. All that is necessary in order to enable him to recover is that he shall have some kind of estate in the property in controversy, legal or equitable; and that his title to the property shall be paramount to that of the defendant. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Rockwood, 25 Kan. 802; Same v. Pracht, 80 Kan. 71; S. C. 1 Pac. Rep. 319.

10. ———: Receipt as Evidence. A receipt given by the school treasurer for money paid for school land under said pre-emption laws is prima facie evidence, and only prima facie evidence of the payment of said money.<sup>1</sup>
11. Title: Purchase of Equitable, will not Defeat Prior Legal. A party purchasing a merely equitable title to land cannot be a bona fide purchaser of the land so as to defeat prior equities existing in favor of the person holding the legal title to the land. [Wicks v. Smith, 21 Kan. 415; Babb v. Lindley, 23 Kan. 481.]
12. School Lands: Pre-emption: Forfeiture. Under the territorial laws of Kansas, passed in 1855, for the pre-emption of school lands, the pre-emption right would be forfeited if the land was not paid for before *234 it was offered for sale. Under the school laws of said territory *of Kansas, passed in 1857, the school treasurer had a right to loan the money received from the sale of school lands on good security to be approved by the county commissioners. Under these laws of 1855 and 1857 a piece of school land was sold and a promissory note taken in payment therefor, which note was secured and approved by the county commissioners. If at the time of the sale and the execution of said note it was understood by all the parties, the purchaser, the school treasurer, the county commissioners, and the makers of the note, that the land was paid for, and that said note was given for money loaned by the school treasurer to the parties executing the note, and all was done in good faith, a subsequent failure to pay said note would not work a forfeiture of the purchaser's right to said land. It was not absolutely necessary in a transaction like the foregoing that the money should pass from the purchaser to the school treasurer, and then from the school treasurer to the makers of the note, in order to make the transaction valid.

Error from Doniphan district court.

Ejectment for 160 acres of school land, brought by Hyatt against Stout. Hyatt claimed as owner under an alleged purchase made in 1857 by one Reuben Middleton under the territorial pre-emption law of 1855. Stout claimed as owner in fee, holding the legal title under a patent issued by the state in 1870. On the trial Hyatt gave in evidence a receipt dated October 13, 1857, signed by the school treasurer, reciting the payment by Middleton of the purchase money. Stout claimed that instead of the payment being made a note was executed by Middleton for the purchase money, with Joel P. Blair, one of the county board, as surety, and which note was approved by said Blair and E. V. B. Rogers, another of the board, by writing upon the back of the note on the sixteenth of March, 1857; and that, in lieu of this note, another was executed afterwards, but dated the same, signed by Middleton and Bela M. Hughes. The notes were produced upon the trial. The second note had a writing upon the back showing that the same was approved by the tribunal transacting county business. An indorsement on the back of the first note showed that it had *235 been ex*changed for the second note. No record is shown that the money realized from the sale had been loaned to these parties by the county board. The county treasurer testified that there was no evidence in his office that these notes, or any part of either, had been paid. Trial at the March term, 1873, of the district court. Verdict and judgment for the plaintiff.

<sup>1</sup>A party who has given a receipt admitting payment in full, has the right always to show, by parol evidence, that it was given by mistake, and that it was untrue. Clark v. Marbourg, 6 Pac. Rep. 548. See American B. Co. v. Murphy, ante, *41, and note.

The court erred in sustaining the challenge for cause of Nixon, a juror. The Civil Code, § 270, provides as a ground of challenge, relationship to either party. Kin is a relationship by blood. In this case there was no relationship of Nixon by consanguinity or marriage with either party to the suit.

The court erred in refusing to exclude all testimony under the petition. The averments in the petition that the plaintiff had a legal and equitable estate in the land, were repugnant and contradictory averments. If he had the legal estate, he did not have the equitable, and vice versa. Contradictory or inconsistent averments in a pleading destroy each other. Gould, Pl. c. 3, §§ 272, 273. Had these averments been made in separate counts the proper way to take advantage of the pleading would have been a motion to compel an election.

The plaintiff below seeks to recover upon an equitable title, and to enable him to recover he must show such a state of facts as would in a proper action compel a specific performance of the contract,—compel the conveyance to him of the legal title. To do this he must show that there have been no laches on his part; that his claim is not stale; that he has made payment of the purchase money; that the pre-emption was without fraud, or that he was an innocent purchaser, and the execution of the contract is not a fraud upon the defendant or the public generally; and that the decree would produce no injustice.

*236 *The county board in taking proof of and allowing a pre-emption, under the law of 1855, were but ministerial officers, and the record might be disproved for fraud before the issue of the patent, and even after, where the rights of innocent third persons had intervened. 2 Phil. Ev. 591. But if the record of the entry by Culbard cannot be disputed because it is a record, Culbard, by such record, had an equitable title to the land. On payment he could make conveyance. The evidence of his conveyance must be the same as in any other conveyance. If by deed, its acknowledgment carries the proof. If by simple contract, proof of execution must be made. This sale, entered upon the books of the county board, was not a proper subject of record there. It is an unauthorized record. 2 Phil. 585.

No title, legal or equitable, vested in Hyatt, or Middleton, his grantor, because no payment had been made as required by sections 6 and 7 of the statute of 1855. If all the proceedings before the county board were not a fraud, and the assignment by Culbard was in fact made, but without payment by Middleton or Hyatt, no right was conferred as against the government, and the disposing power over the lands was still in the state. Frisbie v. Whitney, 9 Wall. 195. But the court here came to the rescue of the plaintiff and instructed the jury that it did not matter whether there was any payment or not; that the receipt executed by the school treasurer was conclusive of payment. This was error. It was competent to contradict the receipt, as the same was only prima facie evidence of payment. Bemis v. Becker, 1 Kan. *240.

The notes given by Middleton were a nullity. They never had any validity, because executed for payment when payment should have been in money. It was but a loan of money; there had been no money paid, and there was no record produced of the approval of the security of these notes by the county board as required by section 8, p. 86, Laws 1857. Under the General Statutes of 1868, c. 94, § 16, these lands had become forfeit to the state.

*237 Another question is presented in the instructions asked *for by the defendant below: Can the plaintiff below maintain this action upon an equitable title against the defendant holding the legal title? It is true that the statute provides that it shall be sufficient to state that he has an equitable estate in the land. But can a party in all cases where he may be entitled to the possession of the land maintain ejectment upon his equitable title? He does not hold the paramount title. State v. Stringfellow, 2 Kan. *316.

Stout must be held to be the trustee of Hyatt if Hyatt is entitled to the land. Fraud to be proven must be plead. If the plaintiff recovers, there ought to be a lien declared upon the land for the purchase money, and the proper party in whose favor the lien should be declared was not before the court.

W. W. Guthrie and N. B. Wood, for defendant in error.

The court properly excused the juror Nixon, on ground of "suspicion of partiality for defendant." Code, § 270, (last clause;) Hartford Bank v. Hart, 3 Day, 491. But it is no error to release a juror when peremptory challenges have not been exhausted. Wiley v. Keokuk, 6 Kan. *104.

Plaintiff's petition was within section 595 of the Code: "He may recover on a legal or equitable title." Then, certainly, the averment of both is good. But, at the most, defendant could only have moved to have petition made more certain.

This was not an action to enforce performance, but a case where the plaintiff stood upon a record title, deduced under a statute authorizing the sale, and vesting in the county board full jurisdiction in the premises; and when the record showed full proof of purchase and payment, standing for ten years with the approval of the authorities, yearly exacting taxation therefrom. All pretense of fraud on the part of the plaintiff is idle talk. The law existed. This land was within sound of the court-house, and its claimant, Culbard, well known to the county board. Deed after deed is put on record, tax after tax is paid, and Stout knows and informs Wood that he has ten acres of the Middleton land inclosed with his. It was in fact *238 paid for to the acceptance of the proper officials, *and the usual evidences executed. But this matters not, since the purchaser had the right to rely on the public records. The pre-emption right vested "by settlement before the survey." Then the settler had the right to purchase, and to assign that right in any stage of its existence. Nothing forfeited that right but the neglect to make payments "before the same is offered for sale," and the evidence that such payment had been made was "a receipt of the officer receiving the money, specifying the amount so paid, and the number and description of the land," and thereon the title vested in the beneficiary of such receipt. Sections 6, 7, p. 646, Laws 1855; Kissell v. St. Louis Public Schools, 16 Mo. 582; Stark v. Starrs, 6 Wall. 418.

The decision of the county board on questions within its jurisdiction is res adjudicata. Anthony v. Halderman, 7 Kan. *63; Norton v. Graham, Id. *169. The jurisdiction was exclusively in the county board. Laws 1855, p. 646, § 8. The county board act as judicial officers "in hearing and determining applications and proofs concerning rights of pre-emption under this act" of 1855. Section 8 of said act; Lewis v. Lewis, 9 Mo. 189; O'Hanlon v. Perry, Id. 807; Wilcox v. Jackson, 13 Pet. 517; Morton v. Blankenship, 5 Mo. 356. And the school treasurer's receipt was not a simple receipt subject to be contradicted by parol, but was evidence of title. The decision of the county board that Middleton held the treasurer's receipt for payment, and had complied with the law, and was entitled to receive the patent for said land, was final and conclusive, and could not be attacked collaterally. Said record imparted notice of the title under such pre-emption. Under still another rule, ("that as only a certificate could issue until payment made,") the law will presume such payment to have been made, and this presumption is conclusive, at least in lands of subsequent purchasers. Ward's Lessee v. Barrows, 2 Ohio St. 246; Coombs' Lessee v. Lane, 4 Ohio St. 148; Bank of U. S. v. Dandridge, 12 Wheat. 70; Polk v. Wendall, 9 Cranch, 98.

The note of Middleton and Blair was accepted as a loan of such money in good faith, and with the approval of the county board, and in payment for such land; and if a misappropriation of the proceeds of such sale, it would not defeat the title of the purchaser. State v.

Stringfellow, 2 Kan. *321; Stauffer v. Eaton, 13 Ohio, 332. *239 Plaintiff might, in such case, be *liable for purchase money, but his legal title would not be thereby affected. But, with notice of the decision in State v. Stringfellow, the legislature ratified all sales of school lands, and left the collection therefor to other remedies; and this before the act for sales of school lands took effect. Laws 1864, p. 193; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 46. It then follows that, at the time Stout purchased, the state nor county had no interest in this land, and he got nothing by his patent.

In ejectment the equitable title will prevail against the legal title. Butler v. Kaulback, 8 Kan. *668. But plaintiff was a purchaser from the holder of full evidence of title, and cannot be affected by any alleged defects not resulting from actual fraud. It must be conceded that, on the record made, Hughes (plaintiff's grantor) had a perfect title; then his deed conveyed such title to plaintiff. Swayze's Lessee v. Burke, 12 Pet. 11, 23; 12 Curt. 614.

VALENTINE, J. This was an action for the recovery of real property. Two trials were had. Verdict and judgment for the plaintiff below, defendant in error. The land in dispute is a part of section 16, township 3, range 21, in Doniphan county, and was originally school land. The records of the board of county commissioners of said county show among other things the following facts, to-wit: On February 2, 1857, the county board allowed H. Culbard to pre-empt said land, and to assign his pre-emption right to Asa K. Hubbard, and ordered a transcript of the record to be given to said Hubbard. On the same day the board appointed Ebenezer Blackstone a commissioner to secure the purchase money for school lands. On July 17, 1857, said board allowed said Hubbard to have entered on the records of the board an assignment of said pre-emption right from Hubbard to Reuben Middleton. On August 7, 1857, said board appointed said Blackstone school treasurer for Doniphan county, and on the same day he duly qualified and took possession of the office. On July 15, *240 1858, said Middleton made proof of his right *to pre-empt said land, and of payment therefor to said board, by presenting to them a receipt for the amount to be paid for said land, signed by said Blackstone, school treasurer, and the board then made the following entry, to-wit:

"It is therefore considered by the court that the said Reuben Middleton has complied with the provisions of an act of the legislative assembly of the territory of Kansas entitled 'An act to grant pre-emptions to school lands in certain cases,' and the instructions of the executive department in relation to the same, and that he is entitled to receive the patent for said land."

The receipt given by Blackstone to Middleton, and copied into the records of the board of county commissioners, reads, according to the evidence in the case, as follows:

"No. 16. Received, Troy, Oct. 13, 1857, of Reuben Middleton, the sum of two hundred dollars, it being the purchase money for the following-described quarter-section of school land, to-wit: The southwest quarter of section sixteen, township three, of range twenty-one, in the county of Doniphan, and territory of Kansas.

"EBENEZER BLACKSTONE,
"School Treasurer for Doniphan Co., K. T."

Hubbard also executed a deed for said land to Middleton, February 16, 1857. Middleton executed a deed for the land to Hughes, September 19, 1858, and Hughes to Hyatt, the plaintiff below, May 13, 1862. This constitutes the plaintiff's title. The defendant Stout holds under a patent issued by the state of Kansas to himself on August 31, 1870. There are many other facts which we have not yet stated, but which we shall state as we proceed. The plaintiff in error, defendant below, claims that the court below committed many errors: for instance, that the court erred in impaneling a jury; that the court erred in holding that a party may have both a legal and an equitable title to land; that the court erred in allowing the plaintiff below to recover on the strength of an equitable title, as against the defendant who holds the legal title; that the court erred in admitting illegal evidence, and excluding legal evidence; that the court erred in giving improper instructions, and refusing to give proper ones, etc.;

all of which we shall consider as we proceed. But as to many *241 *of said supposed errors, all that we can do will be to decide the questions involved therein without entering into any discussion of said questions.

1. It is not a substantial error for the district court to discharge a juror during the time the jury are being impaneled, although the juror may be discharged for an insufficient reason, where an unexceptionable jury is afterwards obtained, and where the party complaining has not exhausted his peremptory challenges.

2. A party may have both a legal and an equitable title to a piece of land. He may in fact possess the whole title, both legal and equitable, and be the entire owner of the property.

3. A party may, in an action for the recovery of real property under section 595 of the Civil Code, recover on the strength of an equitable title only, even though the adverse party may hold the legal title: provided, however, that such equitable title is paramount to and stronger than the title held by such adverse party.

4. Where the plaintiff seeks, under said section 595 of the Code, to recover real property on the strength of a paramount equitable title against a defendant who holds the legal title, the action is in the nature of an equitable action; and although such action is frequently called an action of ejectment, yet the final determination of the rights of the parties must be governed by the rules pertaining to equitable actions. That is, the plaintiff in such a case must make out in every respect as complete a right to recover, and by the same kind of evidence, as though he had commenced his action in the form of an equitable action.

5. Although the facts in an action for the recovery of real property, under said section 595 of the Code, are not usually and need not necessarily be set out in the pleadings in detail, nor with any degree of particularity, still either party under such pleadings may prove whatever would strengthen his own title, or defeat his adversary's title, in the same manner and to the same extent as he *242 could do if the facts were set out with *all the circumstantial minuteness and fullness of detail that they usually are in equitable actions.

6. Since the decision in the case of State v. Stringfellow, 2 Kan. *263, *316; we suppose there can be no question concerning the power of the territorial authorities of Kansas to sell school lands during the time that Kansas was a territory, or concerning the validity of the laws of the territorial legislature passed for that purpose.

7. Pre-emption rights could be assigned under section 5 of the territorial pre-emption laws of 1855, p. 646, and this assignment could be made by a simple instrument in writing. The assignment where the land had not been paid for was at most only the assignment of an equitable interest. No estate was conveyed, and of course it was not necessary to execute a deed of conveyance. Said instrument in writing may be and must be proved in the same manner as any other simple instrument in writing.

8. The proceedings of the county board under section 8 of the territorial pre-emption laws of 1855, p. 646, are in the nature of judicial proceedings, and should be treated with about the same respect as the proceedings of other tribunals of special and limited jurisdiction.

9. While the county board had the power under said pre-emption laws to determine whether any particular person had the right to pre-empt any particular piece of land, yet they had no power to determine whether any such person or any other person had at any time paid for said land. The payment was to be made to the school treasurer, and hence the records of the county board would not be evidence of such payment.

10. The receipt given by Blackstone, school treasurer, to Middleton, was regular upon its face, and was given by the proper officer. See the following statutes in the following order, to-wit: Laws 1855, p. 646, § 6; Laws 1857, p. 86, § 3, (took effect February 20, 1857;) Laws 1855, p. 646, § 7. And hence said receipt was prima facie evidence that said money therein mentioned was paid. But, *243 as *we think, it was only prima facie evidence of that fact.

The receipt was not intended as evidence of title, but only evidence of payment. Under the said pre-emption laws whenever payment was made for the land the title thereto immediately vested in the purchaser. Laws 1855, p. 646, § 7. It required no receipt, patent, or other instrument to vest this title. This title, however, was only an equitable title. The receipt for the money was then given for the money paid. The purchaser then presented this receipt to the secretary of the territory. The patent for the land was then issued by the governor and secretary, and the legal title to the land passed from the territory to the purchaser. The main object in giving the receipt seems to have been to enable the purchaser to obtain his patent. In the present case the court below held that said receipt, taken in connection with the records of the board of county commissioners, was conclusive evidence of said payment. In this we think the court below erred. It is true said receipt would be conclusive as against any person except the state (then territory) or some person holding under the state, (or territory,) for no one except the state, (or territory,) or some person holding thereunder, would have any right to said land or to the money. But the defendant below holds under the state, and holds precisely the same rights to said land that the state held immediately prior to his purchase. He holds the legal title, with all the equities that the state held prior to his purchase; and therefore he may dispute the supposed payment made by the said Middleton to the same extent that the state might have done if the state had continued to hold the legal title. That receipts in general are only prima facie evidence of payment we suppose will not be disputed.

11. It is claimed that the plaintiff, Hyatt, is a bona fide purchaser of said land, without any notice of a want of payment therefor, and that, therefore, said receipt cannot be disputed. Now, it may be that the plaintiff is a bona fide purchaser in fact, as he claims, but we hardly think that such can be so in law. At the time the *244 plaintiff purchased *said land no patent for the same had yet been issued. The legal title to the land was therefore still in the territory of Kansas, and was not in Hughes, the plaintiff's grantor. The plaintiff could, therefore, at most, obtain only an equitable title from his grantor. And a party purchasing a merely equitable title must always take notice of all counter equities which may be outstanding in favor of the person holding the legal title. A party purchasing a merely equitable title cannot be a bona fide purchaser so as to defeat prior equities existing in favor of the person holding the legal title.

12. It would seem from some of the evidence that the purchase money for said land has never in fact been paid, but that a certain note was given therefor, and that the note has not yet been paid. Now this may or may not avoid the plaintiff's title. If it is to be considered that the land has not been paid for at all, we should think that the plaintiff's title had been forfeited. Laws 1855, p. 646, § 6. But if it was understood by Middleton, the school treasurer, the county commissioners, and the parties who executed said note, that the land was paid for, and that said note was given for money loaned by the school treasurer to the persons who executed said note, and that all was done in good faith, then we should think that the plain-tiff's title should be held good. Under the school laws as they existed at the time said receipt was given, the school treasurer had a right to loan said money on good security to be approved by the county commissioners. Laws 1857, p. 86, § 3. And if the money was to be paid in by the purchaser and loaned out to the borrower on the same day, it was not necessary that the money should actually pass into the hands of the treasurer. If all the parties considered that the purchaser's debt as such was extinguished, and that the borrower's debt was created, that was sufficient. If the borrower was satisfied to look to the purchaser for the money, that was sufficient. And then if the purchaser should pay the borrower and the borrower should never pay the note, it would not defeat the purchaser's title. It may be, however, that under the peculiar *245 circumstances of this particular case *before the plaintiff should be allowed to recover (if he may recover) he should be compelled to pay to the defendant (as a trustee holding the legal title for plaintiff's benefit) what the payors of said note may now owe thereon, if, in fact, said note has never been paid; for, as we have before intimated, this is substantially an equity action. But as we have not all the facts before us we shall not comment on this matter further.

The judgment of the court below will be reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

MARSHALL SMITH v. OSCAR F. ROWLAND and others.

July Term, 1874.

1. Vendor's Lien: Contract. A vendor's lien on real estate for unpaid purchase money may be created by the express contract of the parties at the time of the sale and conveyance of such real estate.<sup>1</sup>
2. ———. Where the parties insert provisions in the deed of conveyance, and in the promissory note given for the unpaid purchase money, stipulating for a vendor's lien, such lien is thereby created.
3. ———: Remedy of Vendor. The vendor may commence an action to enforce such a lien without first exhausting his remedy against the personal estate of the vendee; and neither is the vendor bound to show that the vendee has no personal property subject to execution.

Error from Osage district court.

The case is stated in the opinion. There was judgment in the district court in favor of the defendants in error.

*246 **James Rogers*, for plaintiff.

The defendant contends that a vendor's lien at common law is not recognized in this state, and that this lien is the same as a vendor's lien at common law. While the plaintiff admits the first proposition, he claims that a lien may be reserved in a deed, and may be enforced in a court of equity in like manner as a lien created by a deed of trust, or deed of mortgage; in short, that a mortgage deed or deed of trust is nothing but an equitable lien created by contract in writing. A mortgage is defined as "a mere security creating a lien upon property, but vesting no title whatever either before or after condition broken." Chick v. Willetts, 2 Kan. *384. The lien reserved in this deed is precisely of this nature, and may correctly be defined as a mere security in the nature of a lien upon the deeded property. In the above case the court states that the common-law attributes of mortgages have been set aside; but for all that, the intention of the parties may still be enforced. In the case of Simpson v. Munde, 3 Kan. *172, it nowhere appears that a lien may not be reserved in a deed, or created by contract. It is simply asserted in that case that no liens are created by implications of law; but the case says nothing of liens arising out of the contract of the parties. The lien there spoken of is described as an "impalpable entity," a "protean quality," an "ethereal essence." This certainly is not this lien which arises out of the plain language of the conveyance, and is easily understood by any man of ordinary intelligence.

There is no force in the position of the defendant that the plaintiff must show that he has exhausted his remedy against the personal estate of his vendee, or that he has no personal estate out of which the claim can be made, even conceding this to be true in a *247 proceeding to enforce a lien at *common law, which we very much doubt. Sparks v. Hess, 15 Cal. 186.

Ellis Lewis, for defendants.

The deed of plaintiff, Smith, to the Rowlands was made in Illinois, but the land conveyed lies in Kansas. The contract, therefore, is a Kansas contract, and governed entirely by Kansas laws. When Smith in his deed to the Rowlands reserved a vendor's lien, he attempted to reserve what the counsel for plaintiff denominates a "vendor's lien at common law;" for he must necessarily go to the adjudicated cases of other states, defining the vendor's lien and prescribing its mode of being enforced, (which this court has decided have no force or authority here,) to ascertain what rights he acquired by his reservation of a vendor's lien.

The plaintiff asks that the law of vendor's lien as administered in England and in some of the United States shall be administered here, because he has in terms reserved a vendor's lien in his conveyance to the Rowlands. We understand the decisions of this court to go to the bottom of this subject of vendor's lien, and not to the surface, as counsel for plaintiff in error contends. His construction of the decisions is that where an absolute deed on its face shows that a portion of the purchase money is unpaid, and there is no specific reservation of the vendor's lien in the deed, then the vendor acquires or retains no such lien; but where, in addition to this, the vendor specifically reserves a vendor's lien, then that the law of vendor's lien as administered in England will be administered here to define the vendor's rights and afford him his remedy. Then, if the grantee at the time of the purchase has not sufficient personal property out of which the purchase money can be made, the land is liable to the lien. If he shall acquire a sufficiency for that purpose, then the land is freed from any liability to the lien. But if insolvency shall return then the liability returns. Simpson v. Mundee, 3 Kan. *172. When *248 specifically named and reserved as a "vendor's lien," by the vendor, the vendor's lien (which by this court *in 3 Kan. *184, is described as "an impalpable entity, a protean quality, an ethereal essence, which no man can graphically describe, and of which few can have anything like a clear conception") becomes a palpable entity, capable of description and conception, and the nature of the whole thing becomes changed. The plaintiff's "reservation" is void for vagueness and uncertainty; and whether he claims a vendor's lien by reason of the non-payment of the purchase money, with notice to the defendants of its non-payment, or because he has contracted for an impalpable entity, makes no difference. It was not the question in Simpson v. Mundee whether the parties had contracted for a vendor's lien, but whether any such thing was recognized in this state, and whether the law of vendor's lien as administered in England would be administered in like manner in this state; whether, if a party purchased a piece of real estate free from any lien at the time of his purchase it should subsequently, by the insolvency of another party, become subject to a lien; whether the question of whether there was a lien should be a matter of secrecy, obscurity, and doubt, and metaphysical disquisition, and the transfer of real estate be impeded thereby. The general policy of our real-estate laws is to require everything concerning the title to or rights in it to be in writing. Secret trusts are discountenanced. Simpson v. Mundee, supra. Do not the same evils result whether this court holds that a vendor's lien results from non-payment of purchase money with notice of non-payment to third parties, or whether parties create it by so many words? It is its vagueness, the inherent difficulty of justly enforcing a vendor's lien, its changing and secret character, its essential conflict with the policy of our real-estate laws, not that the parties had contracted for it, that led this court to decide that the law of vendor's lien as administered in England is not necessarily a part of the law of this state.

Conceding the position of plaintiff, that plaintiff reserved a vendor's lien which would be enforced, a bill filed to enforce such a lien must show that the plaintiff has exhausted his remedy against *249 the personal estate of his vendee, or that *he has no personal estate out of which the claim can be made; and judgment for a sale under the lien in the first instance, unless the record shows that the vendee has no personal property, is erroneous. In this case there is no allegation in the petition on this point. Scott v. Crawford, 12 Ind. 410; Eyler v. Crabbs, 2 Md. 137; Lead. Cas. Eq. 366.

VALENTINE, J. The only questions involved in this case are as follows: First. Can a vendor's lien on real estate for unpaid purchase money be created by the express contract of the parties at the time of the sale and conveyance of such real estate? Second. And if so, was any such lien created in the present case? In the present case a deed of conveyance was executed for the land, and a promissory note was given for the unpaid purchase money. The substance of the deed, so far as it has any application to this case, was that Marshall Smith sold and conveyed to Oscar F. Rowland and John T. Rowland certain lands in Osage and Linn counties, subject to a vendor's lien for the payment of the unpaid purchase money. That portion of the deed intended to create said vendor's lien follows immediately after the description of the property conveyed, and is expressed in the following language, to-wit: "Subject, however, to a vendor's lien upon all the above-described premises, which is hereby reserved to the said Marshall Smith to secure the payment of part of the purchase money, according to the tenor of the promissory note of the parties of the second part of even date herewith, for the sum of thirteen hundred thirty-three and 33-100 dollars, payable to the said Marshall Smith, or order, five years after date, with ten per cent. interest per annum from maturity until paid." This deed was dated March 12, 1867, and was duly recorded in Osage county, June 1, 1869. The promissory note above described reads as follows:

JACKSONVILLE, ILLINOIS, March 12, 1867.

"Five years after date we promise to pay Marshall Smith, or *250 order, thirteen hundred and thirty-three and 33-100 dol*lars, value received, with ten per cent. interest per annum from maturity until paid. This secured by vendor's lien reserved in deed of date from payee and wife to us of 406 93-100 acres of land in Osage and Linn counties, Kansas.

OSCAR F. ROWLAND.

"JOHN T. ROWLAND."

We know of no reason why the vendor's lien attempted to be created by the stipulations contained in said deed and note should not be held legal, valid, and binding. It is true, under the decisions in this state, (Simpson v. Mundee, 3 Kan. *172; Brown v. Simpson, 4 Kan. *76,) no vendor's lien can be created by mere operation of law, or by mere force of any rules of equity, where the deed is absolute upon its face, and apparently contradicting all idea of any supposed vendor's lien; but no decision has ever been rendered that we are aware of, in this state or elsewhere, affirming that the parties to a sale and conveyance of real estate cannot if they choose create by contract a valid vendor's lien. The vendor's lien in the present case is no "mere creature of a court of equity." It is no "secret trust." It is not against public policy. It is not "against the general policy of our real-estate laws," or registry laws, or any other laws, either in letter or spirit. And it is no more an "impalpable entity," a "protean quality," an "ethereal essence," or an "indescribable myth," than any other mere lien upon real property. It is as tangible and as substantial as any other mere lien, and is as fair and reasonable in all its terms and conditions as any other lien founded upon a pledge of property for the payment of a debt. It was created by the parties themselves, in writing, and was placed in the deed itself that conveyed the land, so that when the deed should be recorded it would be notice to all the world, and especially to subsequent purchasers and mortgagees. Gen. St. 187, § 20. Vendors' liens have not been wholly abolished in Kansas. Stevens v. Chadwick, 10 Kan. *406. And neither have all equitable liens been abolished. Seibert v. True, 8 Kan. *52; Seibert v. Thompson, 8 Kan. *65, *73. And there is certainly no statute that either expressly or impliedly prohibits parties from creating vendors' liens by express contract. Therefore, *we think parties may so create vendors' liens, and that a vendor's lien has been so created in the present case. Hutchinson v. Patrick, 22 Tex. 318; Stratton v. Gold, 40 Miss. 778; Bear v. Whisler, 7 Watts, 144; Carpenter v. Mitchell, 54 Ill. 126; Harvey v. Kelly, 41 Miss. 490; Dunning v. Stearns, 9 Barb. 630.

The claim that the vendor in the present case cannot commence his action to enforce his vendor's lien until he has first exhausted his remedy against the personal estate of the vendee, is not tenable; and neither is the vendor bound to show that the vendee has no personal property subject to execution. See authorities above cited, and Sparks v. Hess, 15 Cal. 186, 193. Whatever may have been the rule where the lien was created merely by implication of law, and not by contract, can make no difference in this case, for in the present case the lien was created by express contract upon the specific property against which the vendor now seeks to have the lien enforced.

July Term, 1874.

1. Sales: Stoppage in Transitu. In order to exercise the right of stoppage in transitu, no actual seizure of the goods before delivery to the vendee is essential. A demand of the carrier, notice to him to stop the goods, or a claim and endeavor to get the possession, is sufficient.
2. ———. Such demand must be made of the one in possession of the goods.
3. ———. Seizure by an officer under process in favor of another creditor will not defeat the right of stoppage.
4. ———. Stoppage in transitu is the enforcement of a lien, and not a rescission of the sale; hence proof of the exercise of this right of stoppage is not proof of an absolute ownership.
- *252 *5. Replevin: Pleading and Proof: Variance. Where a petition in replevin alleges absolute ownership, and the findings of fact show simply the right derived from a stoppage in transitu, and it does not appear that any objection was made to proof of this kind of interest in the property, and no motion was made for a new trial, and it does not appear that the attention of the district court was in any way called to the variance, this court will not on that account reverse a judgment sustained by the findings, notwithstanding the discrepancy between them and the petition.
6. Common Carrier: Lien of: Substitution: Officer. The lien of the carrier for charges for carriage of the specific articles is prior to the rights of the vendor, and the carrier may insist upon retaining possession until those charges are paid; and an officer holding process against the vendee may lawfully advance these charges to the carrier on taking possession of the goods, and, having so advanced them, is substituted to all the carrier's rights of possession as security therefor.
7. Replevin not Maintainable: Judgment. The action of replevin cannot be maintained against one having the right of possession. In such case, if the defendant has given bonds and kept the property, judgment should be entered in his favor for costs.

Error from Bourbon district court.

The case is sufficiently stated in the opinion.

*253 **Hulett & McCleverty*, for plaintiff in error.

Before Donovan & Feiferlich could recover under their petition, they must show an absolute ownership in the coal-oil and turpentine, or some part of it. A mere right to exercise the right of stoppage in transitu gives no title to the property unless that right is exercised and put in operation by an actual stoppage, or demand for the property, under the law, and by virtue of the law. Notice of the con-signor's claim, and purpose to execute his right, (1 Pars. Cont. 596,) is requisite to entitle the vendor to exercise this right. The finding of facts of the court below, show "that defendants in error demanded possession of the goods of Rucker while he held them, and before action brought." There is no finding of any notice of their claim or purpose to execute their right of stoppage in transitu. Again, the right of stoppage in transit is not a rescinding of the sale, but merely an extension of the common-law lien of the vendor, (Rowley v. Bigelow, 12 Pick. 307; Newhall v. Vargas, 15 M. 315; Rogers v. Thomas, 20 Conn. 53;) and hence until this lien is put in force and operation, the property is in the vendee, (in this case, L. E. Conner & Co. ;) Rucker, holding the same on an execution issued against Conner & Co., is rightfully in possession; and the court erred in finding for the plaintiffs below.

The sixth finding of fact by the court below is "that no payment or tender of the freight charges were made to Rucker before the bringing of this action." The seventh finding is "that said Rucker paid the freight charges on said goods, to the amount of $13.60." Now, we submit that Rucker, being lawfully in possession of the goods under an execution against the vendees, is entitled to the same protection as the carriers of the goods from which he took them; and there is and can be no question but that the carrier would be entitled to hold the goods until their claim for freight was satisfied, even though the stoppage in transitu was perfected. Oppenheim v. Russell, 3 Bos. & P. 42.

*254 An action will not lie in replevin to enforce a lien. *Defendants in error to authorize them to recover possession of chattels by virtue of their right of stoppage in transitu, must give notice of their claim, and of their purpose to exercise their right. A mere demand for the possession from one lawfully holding possession is insufficient; and there can be no question but that Rucker did have right to hold the goods against all parties, until the vendors acted upon and exercised their right of stoppage in transitu. And Rucker, holding the chattels by virtue of a valid execution against Conner & Co., who were the owners of the same against all the world excepting the lien of the right of stoppage in transitu by the vendors, and having paid the freight from St. Louis to Fort Scott, was entitled in any event to repayment, or tender of payment, before delivering up the goods. He had the same rights as the carriers themselves; and it is not sufficient to say that the court allowed a diminution of the judgment rendered to the amount of the freight. Rucker was entitled to the payment to him of the freight before being subjected to a suit at law.

C. O. French, for defendants in error.

BREWER, J. This was an action of replevin brought by defendants in error in the district court of Bourbon county. The testimony is not in the record, and the case is before us on the pleadings, the findings, and judgment. The petition alleges an absolute ownership. The findings show that the goods were in the possession of Rucker as constable by virtue of proper and legal process against the firm of L. E. Conner & Co. Plaintiff's title was based upon an attempted exercise of the right of stoppage in transitu. The findings are that plaintiffs, at St. Louis, sold the goods to Conner & Co., and shipped them to Fort Scott; that Conner & Co. were then insolvent, and that this insolvency was unknown to plaintiffs; that the goods never came into the possession of Conner & Co., but were taken by the constable from the carrier by virtue of his process; and that the constable paid the freight charges, and also that plaintiffs demanded possession of the goods from the constable before suit, and while they were in his possession, but did not pay or tender the freight charges. These are all the facts upon which the court based its conclusions of title and right of possession in the plaintiffs. The first finding shows a passage of the title from plaintiffs to Conner & Co.; and a reinvestment in plaintiffs of title and right of possession is claimed only by virtue of an exercise of the right of stoppage in transitu. Now, the mere insolvency of the vendee does not of itself amount to a stoppage in transitu; there must be some act on the part of the vendor indicative of his intention to repossess himself of the goods. 1 Pars. Cont. 478; 2 Kent, Comm. 548, and cases cited in notes. Actual seizure of the goods before they come into the hands of the vendee is not essential. A demand of the carrier, or notice to him to stop the goods, or a claim and endeavor to get the possession, is sufficient. No particular form of notice and demand is required. See same authorities. This right can be exercised only during the transit, and before delivery, actual or constructive, to the vendee. But a seizure by an officer under legal process in favor of some other creditor does not destroy the right. Smith v. Goss, 1 Camp. N. P. 282; Buckley v. Furniss, 15 Wend. 137; Aguirre v. Parmelee, 22 Conn. 473; Wood v. Yeatman, 15 B. Mon. 270. Demand must be made of the party in possession. It is not sufficient to make demand of the vendee. Whitehead v. Anderson, 9 Mees. & W. 519; Mottram v. Heyer, 5 Denio, 629.

Applying these rules to the facts of this case, and it appears that the transit had not ended. The goods were in possession of an officer holding legal process in favor of another creditor. Demand was made of the party in actual possession. It would seem, therefore, that the right of stoppage in transitu was not gone, and that the plaintiffs took the necessary steps to assert that right. But it is insisted by counsel that this stoppage in transitu is simply the exercise of a lien by the seller, and not a rescission of the sale; that the petition alleges absolute ownership, while the findings only show the existence of a lien,—a variance that is fatal to the action. It must be conceded that the great weight of authority supports the claim of counsel in reference to the nature of stoppage in transitu, though there is far from absolute unanimity on the question. But it does not appear that any objection was made to proof of this kind of interest in the property under the general allegation of ownership. No motion for a new trial was made, nor does it appear that the attention of the district court was called to this variance, and it is one of those discrepancies which, under almost any circumstances, might properly be corrected at the trial by an amendment of the petition. As it does not appear by exception or otherwise that the findings are against the evidence, we could not order a new trial, but must direct the judgment that ought to be entered. It does not seem to us, therefore, that we ought to disturb the judgment upon that ground.

One question more remains for consideration. The constable paid the freight charges when he took possession of the goods from the carrier. These charges were neither paid nor tendered to him before this suit was commenced. Who, then, had the right of possession at that time? Clearly the officer. The lien for charges was prior to the claims of creditors, or the rights of the vendor. 2 Kent, Comm. 541; Oppenheim v. Russell, 3 Bos. & P. 42. The carrier's possession could not be disturbed until they were paid. The officer was justified in paying them, and, having paid them, was substituted to all the rights of the carrier. Before his possession, then, could be disturbed, he must be reimbursed the money by him thus advanced. Now, the gist of the action of replevin is the right of possession. Town of Leroy v. McConnell, 8 Kan. *273. Of course, questions of title may also arise, but the action can never be maintained against any one having the right of possession. The constable, having the right of possession, was entitled to judgment. He should not be subject to the expenses of a litigation which was not rightfully commenced.

*257 The law will protect the possession in him until *these charges are paid. Having retained the property, the value of this possession need not and could not properly be determined, nor could any judgment be rendered for the return of the property, or the recovery of the value thereof, or the value of the possession. All that could properly be done was to render a judgment in his favor for costs. Such a judgment, upon this ground alone, we are compelled to direct the district court to enter, and the case will be remanded for that purpose.

We have in this opinion discussed questions other than the one necessary to be considered, in order that there might be no dispute hereafter as to the matters decided and disposed of between these parties by this case.

RICHARD WILLIS and another v. FRANK SPROULE and another.<sup>1</sup>

July Term, 1874.

1. Evidence: Objections to. An objection to evidence should be specific, and should designate the ground upon which the objection is founded. [Long v. Kasebeer, 28 Kan. 240; Humphrey v. Collins, 23 Kan. 550.]
2. Roads and Highways: Records of Board: Evidence. Whenever the records and files of the board of county commissioners, purporting to establish a county road, are regular in form, and contain everything which the statutes require to be preserved and kept in such cases, such records and files will prove, prima facie at least, that such road has been legally established, and has a legal existence; and there is no necessity, in the first instance, to resort to evidence aliunde to prove the legal existence of the road.
3. ———: Notices of Petition for, and of Viewing. In 1870 it was not necessary that the notices required to be given under sections 3 and 4 of the road law (chapter 89, Gen. St. 1868) should be preserved, or that any record should be made of them.
4. ———: Petitioners: Qualifications. While it is necessary that the petition for laying out a road should be signed by at least twelve householders, yet it is not necessary, in order to make the road valid, that *258 the *petition itself should show upon its face that all or any of said signers are householders. The statute does not require anything of that kind. [County of Wabaunsee v. Muhlenbocker, 18 Kan. 132.]
5. ———: Appointment of Viewers. Where the order of the county board appointing the road viewers is substantially in compliance with the statutes, the order is sufficient.
6. ———: Width of: Report of Viewers. Where the viewers neglected to report upon the width of the road, as required by section 31 of the road law, (chapter 89, Gen. St.) and the road was afterwards established, held, that under said section 31 the road will be forty feet wide.

<sup>1</sup> Where neither upon the papers nor the proceedings of the county board does affirmatively appear that at least twelve of the petitioners were householders, resident in the vicinity of the proposed road, and the proceedings are attacked directly by petition in error, the defect is fatal, and the proceedings must be set aside as void. When attacked collaterally, the fact that such petitioners are qualified householders may be shown by testimony aliunde the record. Oliphant v. County of Atchison, 18 Kan. 386. See St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Mossman, 30 Kan. 340; S. C. 2 Pac. Rep. 146. The statute does not require that proof of the posting and publication of the notice prescribed in section 3, c. 108, Laws 1874, (Dassler, Comp. Laws 1885, p. 804, § 3,) shall be filed or entered of record on the journal of the commissioners. Therefore, if the commissioners cause a record of the notice to be entered on their journal by the county clerk in conformity with the statute, and the records and files contain everything which the statute requires to be preserved and kept in such a case, they will prove, prima facie at least, that the order laying out or vacating a public road is legal and valid. Crawford v. County of Elk, 32 Kan. 555; S. C. 4 Pac. Rep. 1011. The notice required by said section is so far jurisdictional, that, if not given as prescribed by the statute, the board of commissioners has no authority to vacate a road. Troy v. County of Doniphan, 32 Kan. 507; S. C. 4 Pac. Rep. 1009. See County of Leavenworth v. Epsen, 12 Kan. *581, and note.

7. ———: Viewers: Qualifications and Report. The viewers made their report in writing, putting in everything required by the statute except the width of the road, and then signed the same. Immediately following their signatures are the following words, to-wit: "Qualified by James F. Foreman, County Surveyor;" and then follows the surveyor's return, which includes the map and field-notes of the survey of the proposed road. The road was afterwards established by the board of county commissioners, and the court below, upon all the evidence, rendered its decision that the road was legally established, and was valid. Held, that the supreme court cannot now determine from said words alone that said road was not legally established, or is invalid.
8. ———: Award of Damages. The road viewers made no separate report of the amount of the damages which they allowed, as required by section 7 of the road law; but the report of damages was made by amending the original report, by adding the words, "and we awarded Ole Clemenson $25 damages, no other parties claiming any;" and this amendment was made by two of the commissioners only. Held, that this was a great irregularity; but after the road has been established, it cannot be held invalid in a collateral proceeding merely on account of such irregularity.
9. Officers: Officer de Facto: Evidence: Removing Obstruction in Road. Where a person is sued for an act done by him for the doing of which he justifies as an officer, he may always, in the first instance, show, by the introduction of parol evidence, that he was at the time of the commission of the act complained of such officer de facto, for such evidence is prima facie evidence that he was such officer de jure. But even if it were error in this case to admit such evidence, still the error would be immaterial, for the act done was the removal of an obstruction from a road so that the road could be traveled, and this any person had a right to do, whether he was an officer or not.
10. Roads and Highways: Records: Commissioners: Judicial Nature of Proceedings. The greater portion of the proceedings of county commissioners in the establishment of county roads is judicial in its nature, and whenever the commissioners act in a judicial or quasi judicial capacity, their proceedings are entitled to about the same respect from superior courts and elsewhere as the proceedings of other tribunals of special, limited, and inferior jurisdiction. But even where their acts are ministerial, still, while superior courts should rule strictly, so as to *259 keep them within the *strict limits of their jurisdiction, yet such courts should rule liberally in other respects, so as not to invalidate their proceedings for immaterial irregularities.

Error from Doniphan District Court.

Trespass, brought by Willis and another against Frank Sproule and Thomas L. Chilton, for tearing down their fence. The defendants admitted the alleged acts of trespass, and set up in their answer that the place where the alleged trespass was committed was a public highway; that the defendant Sproule was overseer of highways; and that he took to his assistance the defendant Chilton, and removed the obstructions across said highway, which was a fence joining the farms of plaintiffs. The action was commenced before a justice of the peace; was certified to the district court, where it was tried at the March term, 1873. On the trial the plaintiffs showed their possession of the land, and made proof of their damages, which were nominal only. The defendants, on their part, offered in evidence a petition on file in the office of the county clerk, signed by more than twelve persons claiming to be "legal voters," praying for a road to be laid out where these acts of alleged trespass were committed; to the introduction of which paper the plaintiffs excepted, but the same was admitted. The defendants offered in evidence the record of the county board, appointing commissioners to view and report on the practicability of the road, which record was admitted against the objections of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs then offered in evidence the records of the county board which contained the report of the viewers, and the field-notes; also the record of the board of commissioners establishing the road,—all of which evidence was admitted against the objections of the plaintiff. Sproule also testified that he was overseer of highways in the district, and as such overseer opened the road on plaintiffs' land, where it had been fenced in 1870. Plaintiffs offered to prove in rebuttal, by one of the viewers, that there was nothing in their report when filed upon the subject of damages; and that two of the viewers, several days after the report had been *260 filed with the county clerk, added to it an *award of damages to Ole Clemenson, which offered testimony was excluded. Finding and judgment in favor of the defendants.

The court erred in admitting the petition for a road, because it does not purport to be signed by householders, as required by section 1, c. 89, Gen. St. 897. No proof was made that the signers were householders; without such proof, the paper was inadmissible. Williams v. Holmes, 2 Wis. 129; Harrington v. People, 6 Barb. 607; Daveiss v. County Court, 1 Bibb, 514.

The record appointing the viewers was inadmissible because it did not direct the viewers to view and lay out the road, and report as required by section 6 of the road law, but to report whether the ground was fit for a road,—“practicable.” The report of the viewers was also inadmissible because it did not report upon the question of the utility of the road,—the public necessity. They were a jury to determine the necessity of the road. Section 6, Road Law. There must have been such necessity before the property of the plaintiffs could be taken for the highway. County of Leavenworth v. Miller, 7 Kan. *527; In re Wells Co. Road, 7 Ohio St. 21; Daveiss v. County Court, 1 Bibb, 514; Winston v. Waggoner, 5 J. J. Marsh, 41. It was also inadmissible because the viewers did not determine and report the width, as required by section 31 of the road law; and without such determination the proceedings are void. Shamokin Road, 6 Bin. 36; Road Case, 4 Watts & S. 39; Beardslee v. French, 7 Conn. 125; Taylor v. Lucas, 8 Blackf. 289; In re Road in Norriton, 4 Pa. St. 337; Com. v. Coombs, 2 Mass. 491; Christ's Church v. Woodward, 26 Me. 178, 181. An order could not be made to open a road until its width had been established. Middle Creek Road, 9 Pa. St. 69.

The report of the viewers was a nullity because the viewers did not take an oath as required by section 5 of the road law. The report says that they were "qualified by James Foreman, county surveyor;" but he was not authorized to administer an oath to them. The statute authorizes him to administer an oath to a chain-carrier, (Gen. St. 289, §§ 157, 167,) and it nowhere authorized to administer oaths generally. The viewers, then, were not sworn. Without be-

*261 ing sworn, *their proceedings were void. Fisher v. Allen, 8 N. J. Law, 301; Bryson's Road, 2 Pen. & W. 207; State v. Barnes, 13 N. J. Law, 268; Keenan v. Commissioners' Court, 26 Ala. 568; Fisher v. Smith, 5 Leigh, 611; Hoagland v. Culvert, 20 N. J. Law, 387; Colvert v. Whittington, 11 Ired. 278; In re Road in Norriton, 4 Pa. St. 337; Winston v. Waggoner, 5 J. J. Marsh, 41; In re Wells Co. Road, 7 Ohio St. 21; Com. v. Coombs, 2 Mass. 491; Pollard v. Ferguson, 1 Litt. 197; Daveiss v. County Court, 1 Bibb, 514; Breckenridge v. Ward, 1 T. B. Mon. 58.

There was no separate report made upon the question of damages, as required by the road law; at least the plaintiffs offered to show such to be the fact. Gen. St. 900, § 7.

No notice was given of the presentation of the petition to the county board or of the meeting of the viewers. Section 3, Road Law. Without such notice the proceedings are void. Case v. Myers, 6 Dana, 330; State v. Van Geison, 15 N. J. Law, 339; Manning v. Williams, 2 Mich. 106; Com. v. Coombs, 2 Mass. 492; Harlow v. Pike, 3 Me. 438.

To constitute this a highway there must have been, according to the weight of authorities, a strict compliance with the statute, or, according to other authorities, a substantial compliance with the statute. There was neither. Hull v. County of Marshall, 12 Iowa, 155; County of Shawnee v. Carter, 2 Kan. *116; Dill. Mun. Corp. 470; In re Lind v. Clemens, 44 Mo. 540; Soulard v. Peck, 49 Mo. 479; Trumpler v. Bemerly, 39 Cal. 490; Lockwood v. Lockwood, 22 Conn. 426; People v. Village of Brighton, 20 Mich. 57; In re Wells Co. Road, 7 Ohio St. 21; Stockett v. Nicholson, Walk. 75; Glover v. City of Boston, 14 Gray, 288.

It was error in the court to permit the overseer to prove that he was such officer by his own oath. It was not the best evidence. It should have been shown that he had qualified by taking the oath and giving bond. Gen. St. 1085, 1086; State v. Hageman, 13 N. J. Law, 314.

Nathan Price and W. D. Webb, for defendants.

The question as to the admissibility of the various papers, records, evidence, etc., offered in evidence by the defendants, were general, and not special, except the objection to proving by parol that Sproule was overseer of highways. The attention of the court or counsel was not called by said objections, or any of them, to any particular alleged defect in the records. For instance, the objection that the viewers did not take the oath required by law was first suggested on the argument of the motion for a new trial, (which was long after the trial of the action,) and it does not appear in *262 the tran*script. The court below did not pass upon it. How, then, can the plaintiffs avail themselves of it, even if it has any merit? State v. Jones, 7 Nev. 408, 415; Sharon v. Minnock, 6 Nev. 377; Leet v. Wilson, 24 Cal. 398; Dreux v. Domeo, 18 Cal. 83; Waters v. Gilbert, 2 Cush. 27; Jackson v. Cadwell, 1 Cow. 622; Whiteside v. Jackson, 1 Wend. 418; Luke v. Johnnycake, 9 Kan. *511. If it was necessary to offer any additional evidence to make the records offered admissible,—if the attention of the court or counsel had been called to it in the court below,—it might perhaps have been remedied. There might have been further and additional qualifications of the viewers on file in the office of the county clerk, which might have been produced if attention had been called to the fact that there was an appearance of qualification before the surveyor. But if the viewers should have been qualified before some other officer, and were not, (and still they may have been,) nevertheless, they were viewers de facto, and their proceedings cannot be attacked collaterally.

It was proper, but not necessary, for the defendants to prove that the signers of the petition were householders of the county, and resided in the vicinity where the road was to be laid out. Gen. St. 897, c. 89, § 1; Williams v. Holmes, 2 Wis. 129. The plaintiffs, however, objected to defendants making this proof, and cannot now be heard to complain because it was not done.

This was an action of trespass against the road overseer and his servant, and is a collateral, and not a direct, attack upon the proceedings of the commissioners. It appears from the records offered and received in evidence that the "report, survey, and plat" had been recorded, and, for the purposes of this action at least, said road must be "considered a public highway." Chapter 89, § 6, p. 901, Gen. St.; Harrow v. State, 1 G. Greene, 439. This entire case is really covered by Beebe v. Scheidt, 13 Ohio St. 406. Our road statute is taken from the Ohio statute therein referred to, and that decision is part of the law of this state. Stebbins v. Guthrie, 4 Kan. *353. See, also, Anderson v. County of Hamilton, 12 Ohio St. 642, and Tomlinson v. Wallace, 16 Wis. 224.

The road was at least 40 feet wide. Section 31, p. 907, Gen. St. 1868. It was in the discretion of the commissioners *to establish the width of the road, but in this case the statute makes it at least 40 feet; and unless the commissioners make a different width, 40 feet will be the established width by law.

Any person who wishes to use a highway which is unlawfully obstructed, may remove such obstruction, whether he be an officer or not. Williams v. Fink, 18 Wis. 265.

It was not necessary that record evidence should be offered to show that defendant Sproule was overseer of highways. If he was acting in that capacity, it was sufficient. Besides, in the answer it is alleged that he is such overseer, and it is not denied under oath. Code, § 108.

VALENTINE, J. This was an action in the nature of trespass quare clausum fregit; but the real question in litigation was whether a certain supposed county road had any legal existence or not. If the road was legally established, or if it was established in such a manner that it had any legal existence, then there was no trespass; but if the road was wholly void, then the alleged trespass was actually committed. The question of the legal existence of said road arose upon a motion for a new trial. The court below found that the road was legally established, and had a legal existence. Now, if this finding was sustained by sufficient evidence, then the motion for the new trial was rightfully overruled; but if it was not sustained by sufficient evidence, then the court below erred in overruling said motion. The question, as it comes to us, is whether the evidence is sufficient to show, prima facie, that the road was legally established. Many other questions were raised in the court below, but they can hardly be considered as being involved in the case, as the case is presented to this court. Many objections were made by the plaintiffs below (plaintiffs in error) to the introduction of certain portions of the evidence, but the objections, with one exception, were too general to be available. The objections were made without giving any reasons therefor.

This was not sufficient. Luke v. Johnnycake, 9 Kan. *511, *264 *518; Simpson v. Kimberlin, 12 Kan. *579; and also cases cited in defendants' brief. The objections should have been specific, and should have designated the grounds upon which the objection was founded. Another question was raised by the plaintiffs by excepting to the exclusion of certain evidence offered by themselves. All of these questions necessary to be considered will be considered in their proper order.

After a careful consideration of the question, we have come to the conclusion that whenever the records and files of the board of county commissioners purporting to establish a county road are regular in form, and contain everything which the statutes require to be preserved and kept in such cases, such records and files will prove, prima facie at least, that such road has been legally established, and has a legal existence, and therefore that there is no necessity, in the first instance, to resort to evidence aliunde to prove the legal existence of the road. Such ought to be the law, and especially so where the existence of the road is attacked collaterally, as in this case. The strongest reasons, and some very high authority, sustain this view of the law. Anderson v. County of Hamilton, 12 Ohio St. 635, 642;

Beebe v. Scheidt, 13 Ohio St. 406, 418. If such were not the law, it would be dangerous for any man to travel a road against the wishes of the owner of the land. The records of the county would be no protection to him, and he might be unable to procure evidence aliunde to show that the road had ever been legally established. And to show that the road had been legally established in one suit, would be no evidence of such fact in another suit instituted against some other person, or even against himself for some other supposed trespass. Of course we do not wish to be understood as deciding that the records of the county commissioners are more than prima facie evidence of the establishment of the road; for we suppose that generally, if not always, jurisdictional facts may be proved or disproved by evidence aliunde, for the purpose of sustaining or invalidating the proceedings of a tribunal of special and limited jurisdiction, such as the *265 board of county *commissioners is. In the present case, everything necessary for the establishment of said road seems to have been preserved, and the proceedings for the establishment of the road seem to be sufficiently regular to make the same valid.

It is true, the notices required to be given under sections 3 and 4 of the road law (chapter 89, Gen. St. p. 898) do not seem to have been preserved; but it was not necessary, under the law as it then existed, (1870,) that said notices should have been preserved, or that any record should have been made of them. It is otherwise now. Laws 1874, pp. 165, 166, §§ 3, 4. Besides, one of the plaintiffs petitioned for said road, and, instead of receiving a notice from some one else, should have given the notices to others, (section 4, Road Law;) and the other plaintiff made a voluntary appearance through counsel, and probably he did not need any notice. With regard to the notices required to be given under section 3 of the road law, it is provided that "on the petition being presented and the commissioners SATISFIED that notice has been given as aforesaid, they shall appoint three disinterested householders of the county as viewers," etc. From this it seems that the commissioners must examine and determine for themselves whether said notices were given or not; that is, before they proceed further they must be "satisfied" that said notices were given, and in becoming satisfied that said notices were given they act in a quasi judicial capacity; (Anderson v. County of Hamilton, supra; Beebe v. Scheidt, supra; Stone v. City of Augusta, 46 Me. 127;) and their determination upon the matter, whatever it may be, is at least prima facie evidence of the truth of their findings. With regard to the notice required to be given under section 4 of the road laws, see the case of County of Leavenworth v. Epsen, 12 Kan. *531, and cases there cited.

While it is necessary that the petition for laying out a road should be signed by at least twelve householders, yet it is not absolutely necessary, in order to make the road valid, that the petition itself should show upon its face that all or any of said signers are householders. The statutes do not require anything of that kind.

*266 *The order of the county board appointing the road viewers was substantially in compliance with the statutes; and such a compliance, we think, is really all that is necessary. While superior courts should rule strictly, so as to keep inferior tribunals within their proper jurisdiction, yet superior courts should rule liberally with regard to the language used by inferior tribunals, and with regard to the mere form of their proceedings. Beebe v. Scheidt, supra. Besides, if said order were considered really irregular, still mere irregularities could not be taken advantage of in this collateral way.

The viewers did not report upon the width of the road, as required by section 31 of the road law. Gen. St. 907. The road will therefore, under said section 31, be forty feet wide. This failure to determine upon the width of the road will not invalidate the road.

Section 5 of the road law (chapter 89, Gen. St. 899) requires that the viewers shall, before they proceed to view the proposed road, take an oath to faithfully and impartially discharge their duties; but the statute does not anywhere require that this oath shall be preserved, or that any record shall be made of it. Now, whether the want of an oath on the part of the viewers would invalidate the road when attacked collaterally, as in this case, may be questioned. The cases referred to by plaintiffs are all, or nearly all, where the validity of the proceedings in establishing the road are attacked in a direct proceeding,—such as certiorari, appeal, petition in error, supersedeas, etc., and hence such cases do not apply in this case. But we do not think that it appears in this case that no oath was taken. The viewers make their report in writing, putting in everything required by the statute except the width of the road, and then sign the same. Immediately following their signatures are the following words, to-wit: "Qualified by James F. Foreman, county surveyor." And then follows the surveyor's return, which includes the map and field-notes of the survey of the proposed road. Now, whether the commis-by the county surveyor, does not appear; or whether it was the report itself that was qualified, (that is, limited, modified, varied,) by adding on the surveyor's return, is left unexplained. It is certain, however, that these words alone cannot now prove to this court, against all the presumptions in favor of the regularity of the proceedings of the viewers and of the county board, and against all the presumptions in favor of the findings of the court below, that said viewers were not sworn before they commenced to view and lay out said road, or that they were not sworn by a proper officer, or that the road was not legally established, or that it is now invalid. The law does not require that the viewers should be sworn to their report, nor does it require that they should be "qualified" to the same.

There was no separate report by the viewers, under section 7 of the road law, (Gen. St. 900,) as to the amount of damages which they allowed. But the report of damages was made by amending the original report by adding the following words, to-wit: "And we awarded Ole Clemenson $25 damages, no other parties claiming any;" and this amendment was made by two of the commissioners only. This was a great irregularity, but it was only an irregularity. It did not invalidate the proceedings. The whole report, including the amendment, was made within the proper time. It was then acted on by the county commissioners. The county commissioners established the road. The commissioners had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the proceedings. Their determination was in the nature of a judicial determination, and cannot be attacked collaterally for mere irregularities. The statute provides that "it shall be the duty of the commissioners, on receiving the report of the viewers aforesaid, to cause the same to be read before their meeting, and, if no legal objection shall be made to said report, or sustained by a majority of said board of commissioners, and they are satisfied that such road will be of public utility, and the report of the viewers being favorable *268 thereto, they *shall cause said report, survey, and plat to be recorded, and from thenceforth said road shall be considered a public highway." Gen. St. 900, § 6.

The plaintiff objected to parol evidence being introduced to show that the defendant Sproule was road overseer, "on the ground that if he was such officer there should be record evidence of the same." The objection was rightfully overruled. Prell v. McDonald, 7 Kan. *426, *444, *445. It is certainly the rule that when a person is sued for an act done by himself, for the doing of which he justifies as an officer, he may always, in the first instance, show, by the introduction of parol evidence, that he was, at the time of the commission of the act complained of, such officer de facto; for such evidence is prima facie evidence that he was such officer de jure. But even if it were error in this case to admit such evidence, still the error would be immaterial; for the act done was the removal of an obstruction from a road so that the road could be traveled, and this any person had a right to do whether he was an officer or not.

We have had considerable trouble with road cases. It would seem that no road can be established without some irregularities intervening; and if mere irregularities in the establishment of a road will invalidate the same, then nearly every person who travels upon a supposed road without the consent of the owner of the land, express or implied, commits a trespass for which he might be made to answer in damages. We have therefore considered very carefully the question as to how irregularities committed by county commissioners and other inferior tribunals should be considered by superior courts. Now, much that comes within the scope and jurisdiction of county commissioners is judicial in its nature. Indeed, the greater portion of the proceedings of county commissioners in the establishment of county roads is judicial in its nature; and whenever the commissioners act in a judicial, or quasi judicial, capacity, their proceedings are entitled to about the same respect from superior courts and elsewhere *269 as the proceedings *of other tribunals of special, limited, and inferior jurisdiction. That is, when inferior tribunals go beyond their jurisdiction, their proceedings are void; but while they keep within the strict limits of their jurisdiction, their proceedings are valid, notwithstanding irregularities may intervene. Much, however, that comes before county commissioners is ministerial in its nature. Then, how are their proceedings, when they act ministerially, to be considered? Much the same, we think, as when they act judicially, except that when they act ministerially irregularities will sometimes invalidate their proceedings. We think the true rule will be found to be, even in such cases, that while superior courts should rule strictly, so as to keep inferior tribunals within the strict limits of their jurisdiction, yet they should rule liberally in other respects, so as not to invalidate the proceedings of such inferior tribunals for mere irregularities. Even with a liberal ruling, the proceedings of inferior tribunals, where they act ministerially, would often have to be considered invalid. But with as strict a ruling as the plaintiff in error contends for, probably nearly every road in the state would have to be declared invalid.

The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

ALEXANDER H. AYRES v. LITTLETON S. CRUM.

July Term, 1874.

Justices' Courts: New Trial: Review in District Court. Where an action has been tried before a justice of the peace, and a judgment rendered for the plaintiff, and no motion made for a new trial, the district court cannot, upon a petition in error, re-examine the evidence introduced on the trial before the justice for the purpose of determining whether the judgment rendered by the justice is sustained by sufficient evidence or not. [Rice v. Harvey, 19 Kan. 149; Typer v. Sooy, Id. 599; Greenwell v. Greenwell, 28 Kan. 413.]

Error from Labette district court.

The case is stated in the opinion.

*270 *Ayers & Fox, for plaintiff in error.

Crum's claim was for services rendered by him as deputy-sheriff, and he could only recover his fees by statute as deputy-sheriff, and the claim recovered is a mere extortion. But the services actually rendered were in serving papers in a case in which plaintiff in error was not a party, but only an attorney. Hence he was not liable. But there was no proof that the charge of $12 "for four days' service" was grounded on fact, necessity, or reason; but it is on its face a mere invention, for use in a home court.

Upon the proof, it consisted of a single uncontroverted sentence of the plaintiff below, that defendant below said to him, either upon the delivery or the return of the papers: "I will see you paid." As matter of law, this does not show a promise before the service. Crum, the party charged by law with knowledge, could not, on his oath, say that the promise was before the services. Is he to ask the court to say so? He dare only say that it was on the return, and is he to ask the court to say more? The court can neither furnish fact nor conscience. It declares the law. Now, the promise not being shown to have been before the service, it is a nude pact at common law, independent of the statutes of frauds.

The promise proven was made by one of the attorneys through whom the costs and expenses of the action were to be adjusted. The expression proven is, upon its face, that of a surety to a principal debtor, and a promise to answer for the debt of the parties. The debt against the client subsisted. There was no agreement to accept the attorneys, or release the clients, even had the promise been made before the service.

There is no force in the first assignment of error,—that "as *271 plaintiff in error was a member of a firm, and the cause *of action was the contract of the firm, judgment should have been given against Ayres for half only." The statute makes all contracts several. Gen. St. c. 21, § 1.

The second assignment of error is "that the plaintiff did not prove a prima facie case before the justice." So much of the evidence as appears to have been preserved (although irregular) certainly proves the cause of action as alleged. It is true that when the services were performed Crum was a deputy-sheriff, but the law does not therefore preclude him from the transaction of private business; and the bill of exceptions before the justice does not establish that he performed the services as deputy-sheriff.

The so-called bill of exception taken before the justice is of no force in this proceeding. The exception shown was made to the final judgment of the justice. Where there is a trial by jury in a justice's court, exceptions may be taken to the rulings of the justice during the trial. Justices' Act, § 212. No exception is necessary or warranted to a final judgment. Lender v. Caldwell, 4 Kan. *339. And hence, for all practical purposes, an exception to a final judgment is inoperative. The evidence can only be saved by bill of exceptions.

The only manner in which the objection that the evidence does not support the verdict can be made available is by a motion for a new trial, and on exception, if the court should overrule the motion. From frequent decisions this has become axiomatic in Kansas. No motion for a new trial was made before the justice, nor would the justice have been authorized by law to entertain such motion. There is no jury, and it is only upon the verdict of a jury that a motion for a new trial can be made in that court. Laws 1869, c. 60. And the reason is obvious. To render such a motion intelligible, where the cause was tried by the court, the justice must have made written findings of fact and law, as in the district court. This would be asking too much of justices of the peace, who are usually men unlearned in the law, and its practical operation would be the reversal of *272 the major part *of the judgments of such inferior courts upon purely technical grounds.

The law gives no method of bringing the questions at bar from justices' courts to the district court except by appeal. Such is the evident intent of the statute, and a common-sense view of the matter, and such are the decisions in Iowa and Illinois, and probably other states. Taylor v. Rockwell, 10 Iowa, 530; Swafford v. Dovenor, 1 Scam. 165; White v. Wiseman, Id. 169; Doe v. Spraggins, Id. 330; Hoppe v. Stone, 39 Mo. 378.

VALENTINE, J. This action was commenced originally in a justice's court. Judgment was there rendered in favor of the defendant in error, plaintiff in the justice's court, and against Ayres, the defendant in the justice's court. Ayres removed the case to the district court on petition in error, where the judgment of the justice was affirmed, and now, as plaintiff in error, Ayres brings the case to this court.

It is claimed that the district court erred in affirming the judgment of the justice; and it is also claimed that the justice erred in rendering the judgment he did upon the evidence introduced at the trial before him. That is, it is claimed that the evidence introduced at the trial is not sufficient, and does not sustain the judgment rendered by the justice. These are the only rulings of either court complained of. The trial in the justice's court was before the justice alone, and he found generally for the plaintiff and against the defendant, and rendered his judgment accordingly. The defendant (now plaintiff in error) excepted to the judgment, but did not ask the court to make special findings of either fact or law, and made no motion for a new trial. The exception to the judgment was the only manner in which the defendant raised any question as to the sufficiency of the evidence; and no question was raised in any form, or at any time, as to the relevancy or competency of any particular portion of the evidence. Under these circumstances is there anything for us to review?

We think not. This question has already been decided in this *273 court. Major v. Major, 2 Kan. *337, *338, **339. See, also, as having some application to this case, Taylor v. Rockwell, 10 Iowa, 530; Swafford v. Dovenor, 1 Scam. 165; White v. Wiseman, Id. 169; Doe v. Spraggins, Id. 330; Hoppe v. Stone, 39 Mo. 378.

When a case is tried before a justice of the peace upon the evidence, it is tried in the same manner as it would be tried if it were tried before a jury, and the findings of the justice are entitled to the same respect as those of a jury. Therefore, where a case is tried before a justice, if the justice is bound to render just such a judgment as ought to be rendered upon the evidence, whatever his findings of fact might be, then, where a case is tried before a jury, the court would also be bound to render just such a judgment as ought to be rendered upon the evidence, whatever the findings of the jury might be; that is, the court would be bound to wholly ignore the findings of the jury, and to render the proper judgment upon the evidence. The court could not grant a new trial, in such a case, but would be bound to render a judgment, and to render just such a judgment as the evidence would warrant, whatever the findings of the jury might be. We cannot think that this is the law.

It is our opinion that no court can wholly ignore the findings of fact, whether made by court, referee, or jury; and no court can re-examine the evidence for the purpose of determining whether such findings are sustained by sufficient evidence, except for the purpose of granting a new trial. And therefore, if no new trial is asked for, no such re-examination can be had. If the re-examination of the evidence should be for the purpose of determining what the judgment should be, then the re-examination of the evidence would really be a re-trial of the case upon its merits; and where the case had been tried by a jury, it would be an infringement by the court upon the province of the jury.

We do not wish to be understood as deciding in this case that a new trial may be granted in a justice's court on the ground that the findings of the court or jury are not sustained by sufficient evidence; and neither do we wish to be *understood as deciding that a justice is bound to make special findings of fact when requested to do so by either party. It may be that no new trial can be granted in a justice's court for such a reason; and it may be that a justice is bound only to find generally for one or the other of the parties; and it may be that where such finding and the judgment are not sustained by sufficient evidence, the only remedy of the party aggrieved is by appeal. See Taylor v. Rockwell, 10 Iowa, 530. We certainly think he has no remedy by petition in error, if he has not even asked that a new trial should be granted, or that special findings should be made; and this is all that we now decide.

The judgment of the court below must be affirmed.

STATE OF KANSAS v. GEORGE S. SMITH.<sup>1</sup>

July Term, 1874.

1. Embezzlement: County Treasurer. Chapter 83 of the Laws of 1873, amending section 88 of the crimes act (chapter 31, Gen. St.) includes within its provisions a county treasurer as liable to the penalties for embezzlement.
2. Information: Description of Funds. In an information against a county treasurer for embezzling public funds in the county treasury it is impossible and unnecessary to set forth the particular kind of funds embezzled, whether United States treasury notes or bank notes, or gold or silver.
3. Preliminary Examination: Plea in Abatement: Variance. Where the accused was charged before the examining magistrate with embezzling $67,000 of the funds of the county of Leavenworth, and in the information was charged with embezzling $67,378.42 belonging to divers designated funds in the treasury of the county of Leavenworth, and a special plea was interposed that the defendant did not have a preliminary examination as to the embezzlement of any money or other thing belonging to any other person than the county of Leavenworth, nor did he waive his right to such examination, held, that there was no error in *275 ruling upon *these facts that the plea was not a bar to the further prosecution of the action under the information.
4. Instruction: Questions of Law and Questions of Fact. An instruction that asserts that "when it has been established that the funds or property has reached the hands of the officer, and that the same was not forthcoming when properly or legally demanded, the law presumes an illegal conversion of such funds or property, and the burden of proving the legal use of such property or money is upon the officer," is erroneous in this: that it declares that the law presumes a conclusion that is exclusively within the province of the jury.

Appeal from Atchison district court.

<sup>1</sup>An information which, in one count, charges the defendant with embezzling certain property received by him as the "agent, servant, employe, and bailee" of the owner, is not objectionable on the ground that it charges two separate and distinct crimes, State v. Lillie, 21 Kan. 728; indictment that alleges that accused was "intrusted as bailee" with property converted, is sufficient, People v. Hill, 8 Pac. Rep. 75; information charging offense in language of statute, People v. Tomlinson, 5 Pac. Rep. 509; what constitutes embezzlement of public moneys, People v. Gray, 5 Pac. Rep. 240; indictment must allege that the act was without consent of owner, State v. Mims, 2 N. W. Rep. 492; failure to pay over to proper officer money in his hands is prima facie evidence against treasurer, State v. Mims, 2 N. W. Rep. 683; malicious prosecution—effect of conviction, Bowman v. Brown, 8 N. W. Rep. 609; postmaster improperly using public funds may be indicted for embezzlement, U. S. v. Adams, 9 N. W. Rep. 718; sufficiency of indictment of county treasurer—excluding juror for insufficient knowledge of English language, State v. Ring, 11 N. W. Rep. 233; embezzlement, when not a felony, People v. Parkhurst, 12 N. W. Rep. 894; county treasurer may impeach settlements to prove that default was more than three years before suit, State v. Hutchinson, 15 N. W. Rep. 298; is sent to convert—question for jury, People v. Galland, 22 N. W. Rep. 81; indictment—instructions, State v. Benton, 22 N. W. Rep. 639; joint property, State v. Kent, 22 Minn. 41; neglect to pay over, State v. Munich, 22 Minn. 67; surplusage in indictment—failure to allege demand—sufficient averment of official character—confession—time. proof of—demand, Id.

Information for embezzlement, filed by the county attorney of Leavenworth county in the criminal court of said county of Leavenworth, on the ninth of March, 1874. The information stated that the defendant Smith, was duly elected to the office of county treasurer of Leavenworth county in November, 1871, for the term of two years, commencing on the first Tuesday of July, 1872; that he duly qualified, and entered upon the discharge of the duties of said office, and held and occupied said office from the second of July, 1872, until the twenty-seventh of December, 1873, when he resigned, and was succeeded in office by George A. Eddy, who was duly appointed, and had qualified to fill the vacancy; "that while the said George S. Smith was acting as county treasurer of said county of Leavenworth as aforesaid, he, the said Smith, received, collected, and took into his possession, and under his care, in his official capacity, aforesaid, and by virtue of his office of treasurer of the county of Leavenworth, aforesaid, at different times, and from day to day, during the time from July 2, 1872, until December 27, 1873, many and various sums of money, state warrants, county warrants, township warrants, valuable securities, effects, and other vouchers for money, all of which were by him, the said Smith, received and collected as money, and are legally chargeable against him, as money; and the aggregate amount so collected and received by him, and that came into his possession, and under his care, by virtue of his office aforesaid, was $564,460.66, and were of the value of $564,460.66; that said money, warrants, valuable securities, effects, and vouchers *aforesaid, received and collected by the said Smith as aforesaid, were so collected as aforesaid by the said Smith for, and belonging to, and were the goods, chattels, and property of, the various persons, classes of persons, corporations, and purposes named and described below in the column marked 'A,' at the head thereof, and in the column below marked 'B,' at the head thereof, and opposite the names or description of each of said persons, classes of persons, corporations, and purposes is the amount of money, warrants, securities, effects, or vouchers so collected and received for and belonging to each of said persons, classes of persons, corporations, and purposes, respectively; and which said money, warrants, valuable securities, effects, and vouchers were received and collected by the said George S. Smith, and the same came into his possession and under his care, by virtue of his said office of treasurer, and were by the laws of the state of Kansas required to be collected and received by him, the said Smith, as treasurer of said county as aforesaid. And the said George S. Smith, of the moneys, warrants, valuable securities, and effects aforesaid, that had been collected and received by him as aforesaid, and that had come into his possession and under his care by virtue of his office of treasurer aforesaid, did, at the county of Leavenworth, in the state of Kansas, and within the jurisdiction of this court, on the twenty-seventh day of December, 1873, unlawfully, fraudulently, and feloniously embezzle and convert to his own use the sum of $67,378.42, and of the value of $67,372.42, without the assent of the county of Leavenworth aforesaid, or of any of the persons, classes of persons, corporations, above mentioned, and named and described below in the column marked 'A,' at the head thereof, or of any person or persons whomsoever," etc.

The "column below" was an exhibit, divided into four columns. The first division was marked "A," under which was named and repeated the county, the state, the townships, and cities, and school-districts in Leavenworth county, and several railroad companies, and specifying the character of all the various funds coming into the treasurer's hands. In the division marked "B" was set forth (opposite the designations in column "A") the amount received by the defendant of each of said funds; in the division marked "C" was set forth the amount of each of said funds paid out or disbursed by the defendant; and in the division marked "D" was stated and which it was alleged the defendant had appropriated. The totals of the divisions were: "B," amount received, $564,460.66; "C," amount disbursed, $497,082.24; "D," amount due, $67,378.42.

The information contained a second count, as follows: "And the said Luther M. Goddard, county attorney as aforesaid, prosecuting for and in behalf of said state of Kansas, in the name and by authority and on behalf of the said state of Kansas, now here, and in said criminal court of the county of Leavenworth, further information gives that the said George S. Smith, at the county of Leavenworth, in the state of Kansas, and within the jurisdiction of this court, on the twenty-seventh of December, 1873, was then and there an officer of the county of Leavenworth, in the state of Kansas, an incorporation duly organized, and existing under the laws of the state of Kansas, to-wit, the treasurer of said county, duly elected and qualified, and legally authorized and empowered, to perform all the duties of said office; and that the said George S. Smith, as such officer and treasurer of said county, was then and there intrusted, and did then and there have in his possession, and under his care, by virtue of his said office, certain public moneys, to-wit, the sum of $67,378.42, of the property and effects of said county of Leavenworth, and of the value of $67.378.42; and the said George S. Smith did then and there, unlawfully, fraudulently, and feloniously embezzle and convert to his own use, without the assent of the said county of Leavenworth, or of any person thereunto authorized, all of the same public moneys aforesaid, with the custody and care of which he, the said George S. Smith, was then and there so as aforesaid intrusted, and did then and there have and hold, by virtue of his said office of treasurer of the county aforesaid, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the state of Kansas."

Smith appeared, and on his verified petition the venue was changed to Atchison county, and the transcript was filed in the Atchison district court on the fifth of May, 1874. The June term, 1874, of said district court convened on the eighth day of June. On the 12th,

Smith moved to quash said information "because the same *278 does not, nor does either count *thereof, contain facts sufficient to constitute a crime under the laws of the state of Kansas." This motion was overruled. He then filed a special plea in abatement, alleging that "in so far as said information charges the embezzlement or conversion of money or other things, belonging to any other person than the county of Leavenworth, he did not have a preliminary examination, as provided by law, nor did he waive his right to such examination." In support of this motion the affidavit on which he was examined before the police judge of Leavenworth (and which appears in the record) was produced, and, after the caption, title, and venue, is as follows: "Enos Hook being first duly sworn, says, that on the 16th of December, 1873, at the city of Leavenworth, in the county of Leavenworth, state of Kansas, George S. Smith was then and there an officer of the county of Leavenworth, an incorporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the state of Kansas, to-wit, the treasurer of said county, duly elected and qualified and legally authorized and empowered to perform all the duties of said office; and that the said George S. Smith, as such officer and treasurer of said county, was then and there elected, and did then and there have in his possession and under his care by virtue of his said office certain public moneys, to-wit, the sum of sixty-seven thousand dollars, of the moneys belonging to said county, and of the value of sixty-seven thousand dollars, and the said George S. Smith did then and there unlawfully, fraudulently, and feloniously embezzle and convert to his own use, without the assent of the county of Leavenworth, all of the same public moneys aforesaid, with the custody and care of which he, the said George S. Smith, was then and there so as aforesaid intrusted, and then and there did have and hold by virtue of his said office of treasurer of the county aforesaid, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided."

The plea in abatement was overruled. Smith then pleaded not guilty. A jury was impaneled, and the case tried. The evidence is not preserved in the record, but it is stated in the bill of exceptions that "it was proved on the trial that no legal demand, by warrant, order, coupon, bond or otherwise, was ever made upon the defendant *279 which was not paid, and *that the only neglect or refusal was to pay to his successor in office the amount appearing to be due by the schedules attached to the information."

The record contains several pages of instructions asked by the defendant, and refused by the court.

The court gave the following general charge to the jury:

"As jurors it is your sworn duty to carefully examine the evidence, and apply it to this case, under the law as given you by the court.

You are the exclusive judges of the evidence, and of the weight of evidence, and you have the right to believe or disbelieve any witness in this case, and then give it that consideration you in your judgment think it is entitled to receive; and if after you have thoroughly examined the evidence in the case, and the instructions given you by the court, you are convinced, beyond a reasonable doubt, of the guilt of the defendant, you will so find, and convict him of the crime of embezzlement, and will specify in your verdict the amount you find was so embezzled or converted to his own use. But on the other hand, if there yet remains in your minds a reasonable doubt as to his guilt, you will give the defendant the benefit of this doubt, and will acquit him altogether. By reasonable doubt is meant such a doubt as a reasonable man would entertain, and not one merely imaginary or fanciful.

"The defendant is charged in the information with having feloniously embezzled and converted to his own use certain funds in his hands as county treasurer of the county of Leavenworth. Before the defendant can be legally convicted under this charge, it must appear to the satisfaction of the jury, from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt, that when county treasurer of Leavenworth county he did feloniously and fraudulently (that is, with the intention, design, and purpose of appropriating to his own use) embezzle and convert said funds. The gist and essence of every crime consists of the intention of the person charged, and unless the evidence establishes a guilty intention, beyond all reasonable doubt, the defendant must be acquitted. By guilty intention, I mean the intention to do the act which was unlawful; and it makes no difference whether he considered it a crime or not.

"During the time the defendant was county treasurer of Leavenworth county he had the sole right to the custody, control, and management of all moneys coming into his hands as such officer, and had the right, if he so chose, to keep such *funds *280 along with any private funds of his own,—had the legal right to deposit such funds in any bank, or keep them in his office, or at his house, or on his person. In other words, the law did not prescribe how he should keep the public funds, and it was no violation of law to keep them as he saw proper. The only duty imposed by law on him in this regard was that he should properly keep and pay such funds out upon legal demand being made therefor. It being the legal right of the defendant to keep his money and papers of whatever character which came into his hands as county treasurer wherever he pleased, he was at perfect liberty to place them where he chose. He was not bound to keep any books concerning his deposits; nor was he bound to state to his clerks, or any one else, where his funds were; and even though he did not tell his clerks where the funds were, or did not tell them correctly, that fact alone is not sufficient evidence of embezzlement. And if, by bad management, and through and by reason of a financial crisis, or the failure or dereliction of any bank in which his funds were deposited, or through or by reason of the embezzlement of the funds of such bank by any of its officers, the defendant was unable to pay to his successor in office the amount payable under the law,—under this state of facts he cannot be convicted of embezzlement.

“An embezzlement cannot take place until a party refuses to account for, or falsely accounts for, the fund or thing alleged to have been embezzled.

“In any event, before the jury can legally render a verdict against the defendant, they must be able to determine from the evidence whose money was embezzled, substantially the amount thereof, and to whom it belonged.

“If the jury can account for the loss of the fund, money, or thing alleged to have been embezzled on any reasonable hypothesis other than the guilt of the defendant, they must acquit.”

And at the instance and request of the counsel for the state the court gave the following instructions:

“The defendant, George S. Smith, is charged by the information filed herein that at the county of Leavenworth and state of Kansas, on the twenty-seventh of December, 1873, he did then and there, being county treasurer of said county of Leavenworth, and then and there acting as such treasurer of said county, and being then and there, by virtue of his said office, in possession of moneys, *281 goods, valuable securities, and effects *belonging to the county of Leavenworth, the state Kansas, and to the various persons, classes of persons, and corporations named in said information, and said moneys, goods, valuable securities, and effects having come into his possession and under his care by virtue of his office as such county treasurer, willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously convert to his own use and embezzle such moneys, goods, valuable securities, and effects, to the value of $67,378.42, belonging to the county of Leavenworth, and the other persons, classes of person, and corporations named in said information. To ‘embezzle’ is to appropriate fraudulently, to one’s own use, that which is intrusted to one’s care; to apply to one’s private use by a breach of trust. It is to fraudulently remove and secrete personal property with which the party has been intrusted, for the purpose of applying to his own use.

“The laws of Kansas do not prescribe what a county treasurer shall do with public moneys and property while in his custody. It is lawful for him to deposit it in a bank for safe-keeping, to keep it in his office, or on his person. The law does not prohibit him from placing such funds in the custody of another. But the use by the county treasurer of moneys or effects in his hands as such treasurer, belonging to any municipal corporation, and of which the law makes such treasurer the custodian, which has come to his hands, and under his care, by virtue of his employment or office, for the purchase of property in such treasurer's own name for private purposes, or to pay his private debts, or in making loans to another for interest or accommodation, is unlawful, and constitutes a conversion of such moneys and property, whether such treasurer at the time of so using such moneys or effects intended to replace or repay such effects or moneys or not.

"Although the information in this cause charges that the embezzlement was done by the defendant on the twenty-seventh of December, 1873, to sustain said information it is not necessary that the proof should show that the acts constituting such crime were actually done on that day; but the information is sustained by proof showing said acts to have been committed at any time within two years preceding the filing of said information.

"The statute defining the crime and fixing the punishment for embezzlement was designed to punish the fraudulent or illegal conversion of money or property intrusted to the care of the persons named in the statute, and as a safeguard against such fraudulent or *282 illegal conversion of such property; and *when it has been established that the funds or property charged has reached the hands of the officer, and that the same was not forthcoming when properly or legally demanded, the law presumes an illegal conversion of such funds or property, and the burden of proving the legal use of such property or money is upon the officer."

The jury returned a verdict of "guilty of the embezzlement of $67,-378.42, the personal property of another, as is charged in the information filed against him." On the twenty-ninth of June defendant's motions for a new trial and in arrest of judgment were overruled. And the record then shows that thereupon (on said twenty-ninth of June) "it is adjudged by the court that the defendant, George S. Smith, be, and he is hereby, sentenced to confinement in the state penitentiary of the state of Kansas for the term of one year from the eighth day of June, 1874."<sup>1</sup>

Stillings & Fenlon and Taylor & Gilpatrick, for appellant.

The main question in this case is whether the act of 1873, which amends section 88 of the crimes act, includes within its provisions a county treasurer. It will not be denied that embezzlement is a purely

[Court convened on the eighth of June; sentence was pronounced on the twenty-ninth. Section 291 of the crimes act (Gen. St. 381) explicitly provides: "But no person shall in any case be sentenced to confinement and hard labor for any term less than one year." In this case the words "and hard labor" do not appear in the sentence. Whether erroneous by reason of such omission or not, (4 Wis. 395, 398; 5 Wis. 29; 12 Wis. 813, 534,) there would seem to be no doubt that the sentence, as to time or duration, was contrary to the express provision of the statute. If 21 days less than a year does not invalidate the sentence, then 121 or 221 or 364 days less than a year would not render it invalid. As the court reversed the judgment upon other grounds, this error (if it be one) was not noticed in the opinion. The defendant's counsel did not discuss it,—it was an error favorable to their client; but the pro-statutory crime; that it was a matter of the legislature to determine what classes of persons were to be included, and what classes *283 of property might be embez*zled. We submit that unless a county treasurer is plainly mentioned in the statute, or other words used which leave no fair question as to the intention of the law-making power to include such officer, then he is not to be considered as within the law.

The law of embezzlement, as found in our statutes, has been but little changed since the time of Henry VIII., and its legislation and judicial history will fail to show that any law-making power, or any court other than the one from whose judgment we now appeal, has ever held that this statute embraced within its meaning a county treasurer. The court below held that it did embrace a county treasurer, because the statute uses the words "if any officer of any incorporation," and held that because other statutes made counties corporations for certain purposes, that Smith, being county treasurer of Leavenworth county, was therefore "an officer of an incorporation" within the true spirit and meaning of the embezzlement law. Most of the embezzlement statutes of the American states, instead of using the word "incorporation," use the term "incorporated company," and hence our statute is to this extent peculiar and sui generis in its language; but when the code commissioners, who compiled the Statutes of 1868, were considering the original statutes, they simply struck out the words "incorporated company," and inserted the word "incorporation," but whether for euphony or rhetoric, to say in one word what had before that time been expressed by the two words stricken out, it could not have been intended by the code commissioners nor by the legislature that the change in the language was for the purpose of bringing within the meaning of the statute a large class of persons not theretofore considered within its purview. This is evident from the fact that in most of the states which have a general embezzlement statute similar to ours there are also statutes specifically denouncing embezzlements by public officers, and from the further fact that the whole history, legislative and judicial, of this embezzlement law under consideration shows that it was *284 intended to punish the fraudulent embezzlement *and conversion of property by clerks, servants, apprentices, officers, agents, etc., of incorporations, "without the assent of the master or employer." Who is the master or employer of a county treasurer? He is subject to the order of no employer or master; he is an officer of the law, charged with public duties, bound to obey the law; the only and sole authority over him is with the county commissioners to call upon him to settle; and to say that he has a master or employer is to assert an absurdity. The information charges the embezzlement of the funds to have been done "without the assent of the said county of Leavenworth." The pleader considered this an essential averment. How could the county of Leavenworth assent? By no fair interpretation of language can we see how a court could hold that the legislature intended to go beyond the condemnation of the servants, officers, and agents of private persons, either natural or artificial. Any other construction of the statute is strained and unnatural; and the fact that the statute has been in existence in England and this country for hundreds of years, and not a solitary prosecution ever brought under it against any of the vast army of public delinquents, is an unanswerable argument to the effect that the judicial wisdom of over three hundred years has been unable to discover in this statute what has been claimed by the prosecution in this case.

fession generally, at the time it was announced, regarded the sentence with surprise, and doubted the authority of the district court to fix a less term than one year from the day of pronouncing sentence. And the question did not escape the attention of the counsel for the state. In their brief they say: "If the sentence is one that the court below should not have rendered, it is the duty of this court to modify such judgment, and direct said court to assess the proper sentence." Where a sentence is more favorable to a defendant than that prescribed by law, he can take advantage of the error if he chooses to do so. 4 Wis. 898; 4 Metc. 860.]

The legislature has seen proper to go no further than protect the public funds in the hands of county treasurers by requiring bonds for the security of such funds, and inflicting certain prescribed penalties for dereliction upon the part of such officials. The attention of the court is called to the record, where it appears that it was proved that the only neglect or refusal on the part of Smith was to pay to his successor in office the amount appearing to be due by his books. If that be true, what penalty does the law inflict? Section 73, p. 270, Gen. St., specifically provides that when this state of facts shall exist the treasurer "shall forfeit a sum of not less than one hundred dollars, nor more than five hundred dollars, and be liable on *285 his official bond for such refusal or neglect." *Yet here, in this case, instead of being subject to the law laid down to cover the exact state of facts shown, instead of being liable to a forfeiture of from one to five hundred dollars, the defendant is convicted of a felony, and sentenced to the penitentiary.

But if it can possibly be held that a county treasurer is within the jurisdiction of the embezzlement statutes, we claim that the court erred in refusing the instructions asked by defendant below. And we claim that the court erred most grievously in giving the instruction in these words: "When it has been established that the funds or property charged has reached the officer's hands, and that the same was not forthcoming when properly or legally demanded, the law presumes an illegal conversion of such funds or property, and the burden of proving the legal use of such property or money is upon the officer." This instruction we submit is in violation of every well-known principle in the trial of criminal cases. The law never presumes anything against a defendant, and never casts the burden of proving his innocence on him. The instruction is in direct conflict with the adjudications of this court in similar cases. Horne v. State, 1 Kan. *72. The doctrines that apply to the construction of the statute under consideration, and the principles that govern the trial of cases properly brought under it, are so fundamental in their nature, and so well known, that we forbear to quote authorities at any length, but satisfy ourselves by calling attention to 2 Whart. Crim. Law, 1940; Whart. Prec. 460; Coats v. People, 22 N. Y. 245; People v. Allen, 5 Denio, 76; People v. Hennessey, 15 Wend. 147; Roscoe, Crim. Ev. 402; 2 Bish. Crim. Law, § 376; Ex parte Hedley, 31 Cal. 108; Lyon v. Kain, 47 Ill. 202; Nicholas v. Purczell, 21 Iowa, 267; County of Hamilton v. Mighels, 7 Ohio St. 115; Halbert v. State, 22 Ind. 129; County of Hennepin v. Jones, 18 Minn. 199, (Gil. 182.)

The court also erred in refusing to sustain the special plea to the information. The statute in substantially abolishing the grand jury system specifically provided that no information should be filed by the county attorney against any person until such person should *286 have a preliminary examination as provided by law. In this case, as shown by the special plea and evidence to sustain it, there was no charge made before the committing magistrate, and, of course, no examination had of any offense except the embezzlement of money belonging to the county of Leavenworth, and the defendant was compelled to plead and go to trial for the embezzlement of funds belonging to some fifty or sixty different persons.

L. M. Goddard and J. W. English, for the State.

Does the law of Kansas (Laws 1873, p. 177) cover the case of a county treasurer? The history of English and American legislation on this subject must throw some light on this question. All the English statutes upon the subject of embezzlement are directed against those who misappropriate the funds and property of private persons and private corporations, and other laws have been enacted to punish public officers. So, also, the legislators of the various American states have enacted laws of a similar character with the English statutes, and in all or nearly all the same law declares the defalcation of public officers to be criminal, and imposes penalties for such crimes. In Kansas, up to 1868, the embezzlement law was similar to the English and the other American statutes above spoken of. Comp. Laws 1862, p. 301, § 82. But when the revision of 1868 was adopted, the embezzlement statute was changed so as to enlarge the terms used, and instead of "incorporated companies," as used in 1862 and in all the English and American statutes, the word "incorporation" was substituted, and, except as to state officers and county treasurers neglecting or refusing to pay to the state taxes collected, no punishment is imposed upon defaulting county officers in express terms. We also find by sections 1 and 2 of chapter 25 of the General Statutes that "corporations are either, first, public, or, second, private. A public corporation is one that has for its object the government of a portion of the state."

No better or more apt words could be well imagined to create *287 a county into a corporation. With these differences *in view between our statute and all others in these general respects, we must presume that for a wise purpose the change in our laws was made. As it first was, from 1862 to 1868, a private corporation only could be intended; in 1868 the words are so changed as to embrace both public and private corporations as defined by the enactment of the same legislature, (1868.) Would it be reasonable to say that for mere euphony a change so radical would be made? The words as used in the Laws of 1862, following the English Law and all the American statutes, have a fixed and definite meaning, established for two hundred years, by constant use without change, and by reason of a long series of decisions of the courts of last resort during all that time. Manifest propriety would require that if the legislature of 1868 intended merely to re-enact the law of 1862 that they should use the words which are universally used and construed as having a fixed and definite meaning; and the fact that a change has been made in the verbiage (under such circumstances) demonstrates that, for some reason, the legislature wished to convey a different idea, and intended either to contract or enlarge the class of associations spoken of, and not to leave the law just as it was, notwithstanding the change. It has been contended, however, that this court has decided that a county is at best but a quasi corporation, and that for that reason it could not be intended that this law would embrace county officers. We can readily conceive that for some purposes a county may be deficient in some of the attributes of private corporations, but in all respects in which it does exercise the functions of a corporation it can and does use and possess them as perfectly and completely as a railroad company, or any other private corporation; but owing to public policy it may be, and doubtless is, necessary to restrict them greatly. We are, however, at a loss to understand how or why the county of Leavenworth, "which has for its object the government of a portion of the state of Kansas," is not enough of a corporation, under the law of Kansas, to guard itself against a plunderer of its treasury.

*288 *Again, as an index to the idea influencing the legislators enacting this law, we think there should be some notice taken of the omission to enact a law to punish county officers who violate their duties, and also of the fact that the law of Kansas does define the crime and prescribe the punishment to be inflicted upon a defaulting state treasurer. Would so significant an omission have been made (on the theory that the legislature was honestly endeavoring to guard against fraud) if it had been believed by them that (as the law was then worded) county officers could plunder the county treasurer with impunity? Evidently, the legislators believed that by the change they had wrought in the law of 1862 they had provided for cases like the one at bar; and remembering the fact that the entire state could not be deemed a corporation within sections 1 and 2 of chapter 25 of the General Statutes, they enacted the state-officer law, making, as they believed, the statutes broad enough to cover the wide range of official corruption in the state.

It has been contended that the words "without the assent of his employer" are qualifying words, limiting the construction of this statute to private corporations. We think this construction not legitimate. Of course, in the strict sense, there is no employer for a county treasurer; but he is elected by the people, and receives a salary as compensation for his services. But in these respects does he differ from a bank president, who is also elected indirectly by the stockholders, and receives his salary, and is the head of the company, and has no other employer than the stockholders? In every respect these words would just as much exclude the president of the bank as the treasurer of the county; because, in either case, no employer could be found to consent. People v. McKinney, 10 Mich. 82, 83. For this court to hold otherwise, must determine that official corruption is no crime in Kansas, and that our laws are framed for the encouragement of larceny by public functionaries; and the court need go no further for a precedent for such a construction of Kansas laws than to the official conduct of the dozen defaulting county treasurers, most *289 of *whom are now anxiously looking for the decision of this cause. We think this court cannot be disposed to take so narrow a view of this embezzlement law; but that the obvious intention of the legislature will be fully carried out, and crime will be met by merited and just punishment. This evidently was the view taken by the district court on the trial of this cause; and we think the court committed no error by so doing. If the sentence is one that the court below should not have rendered, it is the duty of this court to modify such judgment, and direct said court to assess the proper sentence. Crim. Code, § 291.

The second instruction asked by defendant was properly refused, as its equivalent was given in the general charge. The third is manifestly wrong, in that it requires the state to show by evidence the design, intent, and purpose to cheat and defraud the person entitled to such fund; and reasonable doubt as applicable to this proposition is absurd, as intent must ever be inferred from conduct of the party, and can, from the nature of the case, never be established as an affirmative fact. The fourth was given with a modification so clearly right that it seems useless to dwell on it. The fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth were much too broadly stated, and are mere abstract propositions, of which what of good law is in them the court gave in substance, and only rejected that which would require the state to prove things impossible to be proven,—the intent of a party in any of his acts. We hold that the intent must be inferred from the acts of a party; that the law raises presumptions as to intentions from actions; and if the act is proved, the defendant must establish an innocent motive, or the law presumes that he contemplated the natural result of his acts. Acts must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. The inmost workings of the human heart, of reason, cannot be proved, but must, of necessity, be presumed; and to instruct a jury otherwise is an absurdity. These observations apply to every of the instructions asked and modified by the court.

*290 It is contended that the instruction that upon the failure of *a public officer to pay on proper demand a fund which came to his hand as such officer, the law presumes an illegal conversion, etc., takes from the jury the decision of the question of the guilt of the defendant, and instructs them that, certain facts being established, the defendant is guilty, and they must so find. We do not so understand this instruction. Our idea in asking it was to have the jury understand that when it was established that the defendant had the property named, and that he refused (when he should surrender it) to give it up, that that was a conversion within the meaning of the law, and that those facts being established the burden was on the defendant to show a lawful excuse for the detention. In other words, we merely defined what all law books established as a "conversion" in the absence of any proof to the contrary, and, in addition, the idea that when a conversion by the defendant was established, the justification being exclusively within the knowledge of the defendant, the law imposed upon him the burden of establishing it in his own behalf. There can be no question that the burden of proof can be shifted from one side to the other in criminal cases. In larceny, the possession of stolen property soon after it was stolen throws the burden of proof on the prisoner to show an innocent possession. In murder, the killing by prisoner being proved, with no circumstances showing the motives, the burden is upon the defendant to show justification. In case of state treasurer, the statute defines presumptions almost in the words of this instruction. See Gen. St. 1868, p. 984, §§ 56, 57; People v. Dalton, 15 Wend. 581; Roscoe, Crim. Ev. 80. No better established principle can be found than that a lawful demand by one legally authorized to receive from one legally requested to surrender, and a refusal to surrender, constitutes a conversion; and when such demand and refusal is established, upon whom should devolve the responsibility of showing a legal and proper reason for refusing to comply with such demand, unless the defendant who made such refusal? The general rule that the party having the affirmative of any proposition must establish it, for rarely is it possible to establish a *291 nega*tive, demands that our proposition is the true interpretation of the law. And, taken with the fact that all the instructions given by the court, as a whole, modify this instruction so as to be clearly within the law, as contended for by the defendant, we are unable to see any error in this instruction even from their standpoint.

KINGMAN, C. J. The appellant was charged with the offense of embezzling the funds in the county treasury of Leavenworth county. He was tried and convicted, and from the judgment of the district court appeals. Several errors are alleged, two of which raise the question of the sufficiency of the information. The first in order of time as well as in importance is whether the law of 1873, page 177, amending section 88 of the crimes and punishment act of the General Statutes, includes within its provisions a county treasurer. So much of that section as is relevant in this case is as follows: "If any clerk, apprentice, or servant of any private person, or of any co-partnership, * * * or if any officer, agent, clerk, or servant of any incorporation, or any person employed in such capacity, shall embezzle or convert to his own use, or shall take, make way with, or secrete, with intent to convert to his own use, without the assent of his employer, any goods, rights in action, or valuable security, or effects whatsoever, belonging to any person, co-partnership, or corporation, which shall have come into his possession or under his care by virtue of such employment or office, he shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished in the manner prescribed by law for stealing property of the kind or value of the articles so embezzled, taken, or secreted. * * *"

Is the county treasurer such an officer as is contemplated by the statute? It is urged with great ability and ingenuity that this question must be answered in the negative on the ground that a county is not a corporation within the meaning of the term as used in the act, and that this is apparent from the language used; that the section provides that the embezzlement must be without the assent of the employer, and that the treasurer is not the employe of any one, and even if it should be held that the county was his employer it could not in any way "assent" to an unlawful appropriation of its funds. Again, it is urged that the treasurer, by giving bond as required by law, becomes, not a bailee, but a special insurer of the public funds that come into his possession, and therefore no criminal liability attaches to him for any use he may make of such funds. The legislature, having made him an insurer, could not have intended also to make him a criminal. The course of reasoning is only suggested, and no attempt is made to state it at any length. The court has reached a different conclusion from the counsel for the appellant on this point, and the reasons for such conclusion will be briefly indicated.

A sketch of the legislation upon the subject of embezzlement is given by Mr. Bishop in the second volume of his work on Criminal Law, from which it will be seen that from the time our ancestors thought it necessary to legislate upon this subject that the law has been gradually enlarged in its scope as from time to time society required such action. The section of our statute quoted above embraces within its terms a much greater variety of classes of persons who can commit the crime of embezzlement, and a much greater variety of circumstances under which it can be committed, than was provided for in the older statutes in which the law on this subject had its origin, and in some respects than any of the statutes of other states that have come under our notice. It is not necessary to point out these changes except in one instance, and that is the substitution of the word "incorporation" in the General Statutes of 1868 for the phrase "incorporated company" in the Compiled Laws of 1862 (section 82, p. 301,) and the continued use of this word in the Laws of 1873, while in this last statute the word "corporation" is added in describing the parties whose goods, etc., may be embezzled. This change must have been made for a purpose, and in our judgment it was intentionally made so as to include many persons who were not before within its letter.

The substituted word in the General Statutes is an awkward *293 *one, yet still it expresses its purpose with sufficient precision.

While the word "corporation," which is also used in the law of 1873, is a better one, it still does not change the meaning. Neither the revisors nor the legislature could have been ignorant of the difference between private and public corporations, and when they substituted a term that embraced all corporations for a phrase that evidently included only a voluntary association of persons, it will hardly do to say that they did it for the sake of euphony. The same revisors and the same legislature declared that counties were bodies corporate, (section 1, c. 25,) and must have known that the change in the section quoted would bring within its terms a large class of officers of municipal corporations, and others not theretofore embraced within its provisions. Take the plain terms of the law of 1873, and the declaration that counties are corporations, and there can be little doubt that county officers are embraced within the letter of the statute. We are referred to the legislation of other states to show that those states have thought it necessary to enact specific laws embracing county officers although their statutes in reference to embezzlement were very similar to our own. The inference we draw from such legislation is that, as it has been found necessary elsewhere, it may have been thought important in this state; and certainly it was as well to do it by a change in the language of the statute of embezzlement as by a separate enactment. Indeed it seems to us the better way. If the agents of individuals or incorporated companies should be punished for certain specified offenses, then it seems fit that the agents of the public should be punished for a like offense. Nor does the giving of a bond indicate a purpose not to secure the public interests by punishing those who wrongfully execute the public trusts confided to them. Such bonds are frequently given by the employes of private persons, and yet that would not be claimed as exempting them from the penalties of the law of embezzlement. We cannot perceive why a bond should have any other effect when required by law than when exacted by contract. This view is *294 strength*ened by reference to other provisions of our statutes which inflict severe penalties on the county treasurer for much less serious offenses than the one charged in this case. See Gen. St. §

73, p. 270, and § 75, p. 930. It is urged on this point that section 51, p. 264, establishes the relation of debtor and creditor between the county treasurer and the public, and that the treasurer, being the debtor for the funds in his possession, cannot be guilty of embezzling what is his own, as he owes it. But such is not the meaning or purpose of that section. It was intended to, and does, prescribe the method of keeping the treasurer's books, but does not pretend to determine the relations of the county treasurer to the county. To draw from a section of law intended to provide a convenient form of keeping an account an inference that those provisions define and establish the relations of the treasurer to the county is hardly warrantable, and in our view not sound.

It is argued that the treasurer cannot be included because he has no "employer," and by the statute the offense can only be committed against the assent of the employer. One thing is certain, that the treasurer is employed in his office, on business not his own, and not volunteered, but in pursuance of certain well-known conditions. All these facts constitute an employment, and also an employer and employe; and while we shall not attempt to define who is the employer, we are satisfied that there is one; and the fact that that employer cannot authorize the illegal use of the funds in the treasurer's hands, only simplifies the necessary testimony, but does not change the construction of the law. The truth is that in the original English statute the word was a necessary one, and has been retained in all the changes, although in some respects its place is an awkward one. It still retains its place in our statute, and if there is any supposable case where the word "embezzlement" itself does not presuppose the non-assent of the principal or employer, it must be in a case where the employer is legally incapacitated from giving such assent.

2. Another defect alleged is that the information fails to specifically describe the property charged to have been embezzled.

*295 The information charges specifically to what fund each portion of the total charged belongs, but does not describe the kinds of money embezzled. In transactions such as are now under consideration, running through a long period of time, and involving large sums of money, received from a whole community, and being constantly changed by the necessities of the office, such a description of the funds is impossible, and if necessary to be averred must be proven, and therefore is an effectual bar to all prosecutions under the law. Mr. Bishop, in his treatise on Criminal Law, after showing that under the English statutes the courts have held that the particular property embezzled must be specifically described, and pointing out cases where such description would be impossible, makes upon those decisions these observations: "That a court departs from its duty when it does not allow some form of pleading to cover every offense known in the law. We conclude, consequently, that embezzlement may in reason be committed under the circumstances mentioned in this section, and that those courts which have determined otherwise have erred." Vol. 2, § 315a. We are not forced to discuss the authorities on this point, for the change in the law necessarily compels such construction of its provisions as will give it effect, and we do not think that the reason of those decisions, when applied to the agents of private persons, who can at all times scrutinize the acts of those in their employ, apply to a public officer. The public at large can exercise no constant supervision over his acts, nor can it, like a private individual, assume the direct custody of the funds at any moment. The proper authorities may require him to account, may examine the funds in his possession, but in the next hour all these funds may be changed, long before the act of embezzlement is done, or the intent is formed. To suppose that the legislature, when they added the large class of public officers to those who might be amenable to the law for the offense of embezzlement, intended to require proof of the identity of the money embezzled, or a description *296 of it, and from whom it *was received, is to infer that they intended to enact a law the enforcement of which would be impossible. It will not do to permit an artificial rule of pleading, having a doubtful foundation in reason, to lead to such a disastrous result. This exact point has been decided in Michigan in a very able opinion, (People v. McKinney, 10 Mich. 54,) and we but follow that decision in holding that the information is not defective in not describing precisely the funds embezzled.

3. The next error alleged is in the overruling the special plea of defendant. These are the essential facts: Smith was arrested on a charge of embezzling the sum of $67,000 of the funds belonging to the county of Leavenworth. The information charges him, in the first count, with embezzling $67,378.42 belonging to divers designated funds in the treasury of the county of Leavenworth. The special plea is that the defendant did not have a preliminary examination as to the embezzlement of any money or other thing belonging to any other person than the county of Leavenworth, nor did he waive his right to such examination. The court upon an inspection ruled against the defendant, and with some hesitation we conclude correctly. To hold that the warrant of a justice should describe the offense as accurately as the information would in most cases be to defeat justice. They are generally unlearned in the technicalities of the law, and describe the offense in general terms, while the information is expected to be more exact in its terms, and more full and accurate in its statements. We think the main purpose of the required preliminary examination was reached in this case, and the defendant sufficiently apprised of the general charge, in the complaint before the police judge, of what offense he would have to answer in a more definite charge before the district court.

4. The remaining questions in this case arise upon the instructions; and while the counsel for the appellant in general terms complaints of the refusal of the court to give a great number of instructions, covering many pages, yet no specific error is pointed out except as to one instruction to be *noticed immediately. Many of these instructions so refused were substantially and correctly given elsewhere in the charge, and so were properly refused; of others, the meager statement of the evidence in the record leaves us unable to say whether they were relevant to any testimony in the case or not. In this state of the case we cannot say that any of the instructions were improperly refused. One of the instructions given is as follows: "The statute defining the crime and fixing the punishment for embezzlement was designed to punish the fraudulent or illegal conversion of money or property intrusted to the care of the persons named in the statute, and as a safeguard against such fraudulent or illegal conversion of such property; and when it has been established that the funds or property charged has reached the hands of the officer, and that the same was not forthcoming when properly or legally demanded, the law presumes an illegal conversion of such funds or property, and the burden of proving the legal use of such property or money is upon the officer."

The last part of this instruction lays down a rule to which we cannot assent. It would be most perilous to an officer who had faithfully discharged responsible duties for a series of years, handling in his official capacity large amounts of money, and who should find at last that there was a deficiency for which he could not account, or replace, although for a sum which, compared with the amounts which had passed through his hands, would be trivial. In such a case, under the instruction given, a jury would be compelled to find a verdict of guilty, although they might believe the man was perfectly honest. Nor is this an extreme case. Much harder ones may readily be imagined. In every case the jury are the sole triers of the main fact of the guilt of the accused, and judges of the testimony establishing each fact necessary to constitute the main fact. The facts are to be proven; what those facts show is for the jury to decide. It may be considered law in this country generally, that the burden of proof in criminal cases is on the state, and that this burden never changes.

It is true that there are some decisions seemingly adverse to this opinion, but they are very few, and do not *rest on sound reasoning. The accused stands on the presumption of his innocence until a complete case is made against him, and if the testimony is insufficient on any point he must be acquitted. These rules are merely stated. Neither the public nor the profession is interested in the discussion of questions long settled, well understood, and generally acquiesced in. This instruction, we think, violates these rules, and is therefore erroneous. In the argument it is likened to an accused person being in the unexplained possession of property recently stolen. The cases are not analagous. In the latter case the crime itself is already proven. The possession of the fruits of the crime is such evidence as authorizes the jury to find such possessor guilty, and whether this is a presumption of law or fact, or no presumption at all, need not now be stated. We only desire to point out the difference between the two cases. In the one case it is used to prove both the offense and the offender; in the other it is only used to prove the perpetrator of a crime already proven. In the case at bar such evidence would be sufficient if the jury believed the facts showed also the guilty intent of the accused to convert the property to his own use. Ordinarily, a jury might well draw such an inference from such facts; but the court below says in effect that they are compelled to draw such an inference, and this, in our opinion, is an unauthorized assumption by the court of a duty that belonged exclusively to the jury. From the proven facts the jury, not the court, must find that the accused converted the money to his own use. In this case they might well have found him guilty from the facts proven, if they had been left at liberty to weigh the value of these facts, as well as any others necessary to prove the guilt of the accused. We are not certain that the instruction misled the jury, but we are not certain that it did not; and as it is clearly erroneous, on this ground alone we are constrained to direct a reversal of the judgment, and order a new trial in accordance with the motion of the appellant.

*STATE v. CALVIN H. GRAHAM.

July Term, 1874.

Appeal by the state from district court of Coffey county.

A. M. F. Randolph, Co. Atty., for the State.

Silas Fearl and R. M. Ruggles, for defendant.

STATE v. SIDNEY S. SMITH.

July Term, 1874.

Appeal by the state from district court of Cherokee county.

W. H. Whiteman, Co. Atty., and Blair & Hill, for the State.

McComas & McKeighan and H. G. Webb, for defendant.

These two cases were heard and considered in this court in connection with the preceding case of State v. George S. Smith, but no separate opinion was written except the brief one reversing the judgments. Graham was county treasurer of Coffey county, and Sidney S. Smith was county treasurer of Cherokee county, and each was prosecuted by information for embezzlement. The information against

Graham was filed on the twenty-third of February, 1874, and the charging part thereof is as follows:

"That on or about the tenth day of November, 1873, in the said county of Coffey, in the state of Kansas aforesaid, and within the jurisdiction of this court, the above-named Calvin H. Graham, being then and there an officer of a certain incorporation, to-wit, being then and there the county treasurer of the said county of Coffey,—the said county being then and there an incorporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the state of Kansas,—certain moneys, of the amount of $12,127.19, and of the value of $12,127.19, and then and there belonging to said county of Coffey, and being then and there moneys, goods, property, and effects belonging to said county, which said moneys had theretofore come into the possession and under the care of him, the said Calvin H. Graham, by virtue of his said office of county treasurer of said county, and in discharge of the duties thereof, did, without the assent of the said county of Coffey, unlawfully, fraudulently, and feloniously embezzle and convert to his own use, contrary to the form of the statute in such *300 *case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the state of Kansas."

The defendant Graham moved to quash said information for the following reasons: "First, that the said information does not state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense; second, that said information is not direct or certain as to the offense charged; third, that said information does not state the facts claimed to constitute the offense attempted to be therein charged in plain and concise language, without repetition."

The court below, at the May term, 1874, sustained said motion and quashed said information, and adjudged that the defendant go hence without day; to which ruling and judgment the state excepted, and brought the case here by appeal.

The information against Sidney S. Smith was filed on the sixteenth of June, 1873. The charging part thereof is as follows:

"That while so being and acting as such county treasurer as aforesaid, and on the second day of July, 1872, at the county of Cherokee aforesaid, he, the said Sidney S. Smith, (then being over the age of sixteen years,) willfully, unlawfully, wrongfully, fraudulently, corruptly, and feloniously did embezzle and convert to his own use, without the assent of said county of Cherokee, and without the assent of the board of county commissioners thereof, certain moneys and property belonging to said county of Cherokee, to-wit, United States treasury notes, of various denominations, to the amount of five thousand dollars, and of the value of five thousand dollars; national bank notes, of various denominations, to the amount of five thousand dollars, and of the value of five thousand dollars; gold coin of the United States, of various denominations, to the amount of three thousand dollars, and of the value of three thousand three hundred dollars; silver coin of the United States, of various denominations, to the amount of one thousand dollars, and of the value of one thousand dollars,—all of which said treasury notes, national bank notes, and gold and silver coin, were then and there the property, moneys, goods, and chattels of the said county of Cherokee, and which said property and money, at and before the time of the *301 said embezzlement and conversion thereof, as *aforesaid, by said Sidney S. Smith, had come into the hands and possession of the said Sidney S. Smith as county treasurer as aforesaid, and by virtue of his said office of county treasurer of said county of Cherokee, contrary to the statutes in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the state of Kansas.”

A motion to quash said information was filed by the defendant, stating grounds therefor, as follows:

“First, that said information does not state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense; second, that section 88 of chapter 31 of the General Statutes of the state of Kansas is repealed, and was repealed by the legislature of said state before the institution of this proceeding; third, that the provisions of law defining and punishing embezzlement in the state of Kansas did not and do not affect or include public officers.”

The district court, at the June term, 1873, sustained said motion to quash, and made an order discharging the defendant. The state appealed.

KINGMAN, C. J. For the reasons stated in the case of State v. George S. Smith, just decided, each of the above entitled cases is reversed, and remanded for further proceedings.

*302 *MISSOURI RIVER, FT. S. & G. R. CO. v. C. A. MORRIS, Treas.

July Term, 1874.

1. Indian Lands: Cherokee Neutral Lands: When Subject to Taxation. By contract with the secretary of the interior, Mr. James F. Joy became the purchaser of a tract in south-eastern Kansas, known as the “Cherokee Neutral Lands.” By the terms of that contract lands were patented as paid for. Having paid for and received patents for a portion of these lands, in March, 1869, Mr. Joy assigned his contract to the plaintiff in error. On the eighth of August, 1870, the plaintiff paid the balance of the purchase money, and on the second of November, 1870, received a patent for the remainder of said lands. Held, that these lands paid for on the eighth of August, and patented on the second of November, 1870, were not subject to taxation for the year 1870.

2. Public Lands: Granted to Railroads: When Subject to Taxation. On the twenty-fifth of July, 1866, congress passed an act entitled “An act granting lands to the state of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas & Neosho Valley Railroad, and its extensions to Red river." By the terms of this act, upon the certificate of the governor of Kansas that any ten consecutive miles of this railroad had been completed, patents were to issue directly to the Kansas & Neosho Valley Railroad Company for the lands opposite such completed section, and so for each successive section. No action on the part of the state was in terms called for. The said railroad company, now the Missouri River, Fort Scott & Gulf Railroad Company, as required, formally accepted the grant with its terms and conditions. Prior to 1870 it had complied with all the terms and conditions of the grant required to be performed by it. The state of Kansas took no action in reference to this matter until March, 1871, when the legislature passed a joint resolution formally accepting the grant. No patents had issued for certain of the lands within this grant in Bourbon county up to April 21, 1871. Held, that they were nevertheless subject to taxation for the year 1870.<sup>1</sup>

Error from Bourbon district court.

*303 **C. W. Blair and Wallace Pratt*, for plaintiff.

The decision of the supreme court of the United States in the Case of The Kansas Indians, 5 Wall. 737, being decisive of the question of exemption from taxation of all lands owned by Indians whose tribal organization was preserved, leaves the only question for solution here to be whether the legal and equitable title to the lands were in the United States, or the Cherokee tribe of Indians, or in both, at the time of the levy of this tax, or whether the complete equitable title had passed to the plaintiff. It is a matter of history, and familiar to every member of this court, that the "Cherokee Neutral Lands" are a part of the "Louisiana Purchase," acquired by the United States from the French republic by the treaty of April 30, 1803, and that, by the second article of the treaty of December 29, 1835, between the United States and the Cherokee Nation, these lands were ceded to said nation. 7 U. S. St. at Large, 478. By the provisions of this treaty of cession to the Cherokees, the United States government renewed its pledge and guaranty of protection contained in former treaties with the Cherokee Nation, and also stipulated that these ceded lands should never be included within the territorial limits or jurisdiction of any state or territory without the consent of said Indians. Afterwards, and in August, 1866, another treaty was made and proclaimed between the United States and the Cherokees, the first paragraph of the seventeenth article of which is as follows:

"Art. 17. The Cherokee Nation hereby cedes, in trust, to the United States, the tract of land in the state of Kansas which was sold to the Cherokees by the United States, under the provisions of the second article of the treaty of 1835, and also that strip of the land ceded to the nation by the fourth article of said treaty, which is included in the state of Kansas; and the Cherokees consent that said lands may be included in the limits and jurisdiction of said state." 14 U. S. St. at Large, 799.

Counsel for defendant in error, as we understand, admits that *304 the lands were exempt from taxation under the treaty *of 1835, but he asserts that they were so exempt only in pursuance of that provision of said treaty which stipulated that the lands should never be included in the limits or jurisdiction of any state or territory without the consent of the Indians. From this he deduces the proposition that consent that the lands be included in the limits and jurisdiction of the state of Kansas having been given by the Indians in the seventeenth article of the treaty of 1866, above quoted, from that time they were subject to taxation. We claim that these lands were exempted from taxation by the treaty of 1835, and from any other interference of state or territorial authority, not alone because of the stipulation above referred to, but because they were ceded under the assured protection of the government, and for the purpose of a home for themselves and their descendants, to a nation of Indians which at the time kept up, and ever since has preserved, its tribal organization,—a tribe which has always been recognized by the political and judicial departments of the government as a state, capable of making treaties, managing its own affairs, and subject only to the control of the government of the United States. "The acts of our government plainly recognize the Cherokee Nation as a state, and the courts are bound by these acts." Cherokee Nation v. State, 5 Pet. 15. And see Cases of The Kansas Indians, 5 Wall. 737; The Wea Indians, 5 Wall. 757; The Miamis, 5 Wall. 760; The New York Indians, 5 Wall. 761. And in County of Douglas v. Union Pac. Ry. Co. 5 Kan. *615, this court decided that, "as long as the title to land lying within an Indian reserve remained in the United States, or in the Indians, or in both, the land is not taxable by the state." The lands in question in that case were parcel of certain lands ceded by the Delaware tribe of Indians to the United States by the treaty of 1854. Nowhere in that treaty is there any provision exempting the lands so ceded from taxation, nor any provision that they should never be included within the limits or jurisdiction of any state without the consent of the Indians. And see McCracken v. Todd, 1 Kan. *148.

The plaintiff in error claims that the clause above quoted *305 *from the seventeenth article of the treaty of 1866 had the effect simply of including the lands in question within the territorial boundaries of the state of Kansas, and in no other respect changed the relative rights of the Indians and said state. The language used in the treaty admits of no other or different construction. The word "jurisdiction" is evidently used, not as descriptive of the power of or right of exercise of authority by the state, but of the territory to which such power and authority extend. Had the intention been to subject the lands to the jurisdiction of the state, how easy, appropriate, and free from all doubt as to meaning, to have said that they consented that said lands might be included in the limits and subject to the jurisdiction of the state of Kansas.

Again, the object of the Cherokees, in ceding these lands to the United States in trust, was, as article 17 of the treaty plainly indicates and provides, to have them sold, and the proceeds applied to the use of the Indians. It is evident that no purchaser could have been found for them, and it is also evident that the United States government would never have consented to a sale of these lands, except possibly to some other tribe of Indians, unless they were or could be included in some state or territory. Under the stipulation in the treaty of 1835, the provisions of the act organizing the territory, and the act of admission of the state of Kansas into the Union, these lands never could have been included in the limits of said state until the Cherokees should signify their assent to the president of the United States to be so included. Hence the necessity for the clause of assent in the seventeenth article of the treaty of 1866. No such necessity existed for any consent on the part of the Indians that these lands should be subject to the laws and jurisdiction of said state. So soon as the same were sold and paid for, and the title of the Indians and the United States government extinguished, these lands became freed from the control of the federal government, and at once became subject to the laws of the state of Kansas, and liable to taxation.

Whenever the supreme court of the United States has been *306 *called upon to construe treaties between the government and Indian tribes, it has always adopted rules of interpretation favorable to the Indians, (Worcester v. State, 6 Pet. 582; Case of Miamis, 5 Wall. 760;) hence there can be no doubt whatever but that our construction must be sustained. No one will seriously claim that it was the intention of the Cherokees, in making this treaty, to subject these lands to the jurisdiction and laws of the state of Kansas, and consequently to a liability to taxation. By consenting that they might be included within the boundaries of the state, they did what was absolutely essential to accomplish the object they had in view in making the cession of these lands to the United States, to-wit, a sale at the price specified in the treaty. A further consent that the land should be subject to the laws of the state in nowise aided the accomplishment of this object, because, as we have shown, so soon as they should be sold and paid for, and the rights of the Indians extinguished, precisely this result would be accomplished. Nor could such consent have been of any advantage whatever to the Indians. On the contrary, it would have been greatly to their pecuniary prejudice. No one could tell when these lands would be sold. In fact, they were not sold till about two years had elapsed after the making of this treaty. They might not have been sold for years, and in the mean time the Indians, in order to save their lands from sale for taxes, would have been required to pay a large sum of money annually to the state of Kansas, and for what consideration? Absolutely none.

Under the provisions of the contract between the secretary of the interior and Mr. Joy, it is apparent from the agreed statement of facts in this case that, at the time of the levy and assessment of the tax in question, the plaintiff in error, assignee of Mr. Joy, had neither the legal nor equitable title to that portion of the neutral lands situate in Bourbon county. The legal title was in the United States, and the equitable in the Cherokees. The plaintiff in error had "a mere contingent, conditional, and inchoate equity," liable to be forfeited

*307 by its failure to pay for the same according to the terms of the contract of purchase. In the language of Mr. Justice

VALENTINE, in Parker v. Winsor, 5 Kan. *373; "The legal title has not passed because the patent has not yet been issued; and the equitable title has not passed because it has not yet been paid for, and because it is clearly the intention of the parties, as indicated in the treaty, that such title shall not pass until the land is fully paid for." And, again, in County of Douglas v. Union Pac. Ry. Co., 5 Kan. *623, the same justice says: "The legal title to land never passes until the legal evidence of such title is executed, and the equitable title probably never passes until everything has been done so that the land cannot be forfeited." It would be difficult to frame a contract in which "time" should be made more of its essence than in the one under which these lands were purchased, or one in which the rights of the Indians could have been more carefully guarded. No right of possession was given to the purchaser, thus avoiding the acquiring of an equity by the making of improvements upon the lands. Equally was the claim of an equity, based upon part payment, guarded against, by providing that whenever the sum of $50,000 or more of principal should be paid, the government would set off and patent to the purchaser a number of acres corresponding to the number of dollars so paid. As appears from the agreed statement of facts, this provision of the contract was faithfully observed; so that, at the time of the levy of the tax in question, the government had not received one single dollar from the purchaser for which it had not conveyed to him a corresponding acre of these lands.

The lands mentioned in the second cause of action of the petition, at the time of the levy of the tax against them, were the property of the United States, and, as such, exempt from taxation by the state of Kansas. These lands are parcel of a grant by the United States to the state of Kansas, for the use of the plaintiff in error, by an act of congress entitled "An act granting lands to the state of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas & Neosho Valley Railroad *308 and its extensions to Red river," approved July 25, 1866. *By this act certain conditions were imposed upon plaintiff in error. One provided for a formal acceptance of the terms and conditions of the grant by the railroad company within one year; another prescribed the kind of road that should be built; and another, that the railroad company should not dispose of or incumber the land so granted under the provisions of said act. It is admitted that plaintiff in error, (then the Kansas & Neosho Valley Railroad Company,) at the time of the levy of the tax against these lands, had complied with all of the conditions of the grant on its part to be performed. It is also admitted that the state at that time had not accepted and did not accept such grant until the second of March, 1871, when a formal resolution was passed by the legislature of the state accepting the same. We claim that, notwithstanding such compliance on the part of the plaintiff in error with all of the conditions of this grant, no such complete equitable title to the lands in question had passed to it at the time of the levy of this tax as to entitle it to a conveyance by the United States of the legal title, but that this equitable title as well as the legal, still remained in the United States, because (1) there had been no acceptance of the grant by the state of Kansas. This grant was made directly to the state of Kansas for the use of the plaintiff in error, thus constituting the state the trustee, and the railroad company the cestui que trust. In all deeds or grants made directly to a trustee for the use of another, there must be some sort of an acceptance by the trustee in order to make such deed or grant operative; and no presumption of acceptance can obtain where the state is named as trustee unless there has been some action of its legislative department, through which alone the state can act, indicating at least a knowledge on their part of the terms and conditions of such deed or grant. (2) The United States, in prohibiting the railroad company from disposing of or incumbering these lands until the patent should be given it under the provisions of the grant, clearly and unmistakably show that it was their intention that no interest whatever in these *309 lands *should pass to the railroad company until these patents had been executed, but that the entire equitable, as well as the legal, title should remain in the United States. At the time of the levy of this tax no patent for any of these lands had been made, and hence no such interest in them had passed from the United States to the railroad company as to render them liable to taxation by the state. Act of Admission, § 2, subd. 6; Parker v. Winsor, 5 Kan. *362; County of Douglas v. Union Pac. Ry. Co., *615.

W. J. Bawden, for defendant in error.

The entire equitable and beneficial interest and title to said neutral lands were, at the time of the levy of taxes thereon for 1870, and since the year 1868 had been, vested in the plaintiff in error, or its grantor, James F. Joy. Plaintiff in error contends that said lands were exempted from taxation by the organic act and act of admission until the consent of the Indians should be obtained, and that the consent given in the seventeenth article of the treaty of 1866 "had the effect simply of including these lands in the boundaries, and making them subject to the process of the courts of the state of Kansas." Is this a fair deduction? The second proviso of the organic act provides that nothing in said act shall be construed "to include any territory which by treaty with any Indian tribe is not, without the consent of said tribe, to be included within the territorial limits or jurisdiction of any state or territory, but all such territory shall be excepted out of the boundaries and constitute no part of the territory of Kansas until said tribe shall signify their assent to the president of the United States to be included within the said territory of Kansas." Gen. St. 1868, p. 26. In section 1 of the act of admission (Gen. St. 67) the identical words are used as above quoted, with the exception that the word "state" is substituted for "territory," and the word "such" for "any." This, then, is the law, if any there be, under which these lands are exempted from taxation: because they are not included within the territorial limits or jurisdiction of the state of Kansas.

*310 *What is the language used in the treaty, which the plaintiff in error claims had the effect simply of including these lands within the boundaries of the state, and making them subject to the process of the courts thereof? In article 17 of the treaty of August 11, 1866, are these words: "and the Cherokees consent that said lands may be included in the limits and jurisdiction of the said state." If the excluding of these lands from the limits and jurisdiction of the state prohibits the state from taxing the same until consent is given by the Indians, then consent given by said Indians that said lands may be included in the limits and jurisdiction of the state removes the prohibition. But the treaty of 1866 not only removed the prohibition imposed by the organic act and the act of admission, but it went further: it made the United States the trustee of the Cherokee Nation for the sale of said lands, and authorized the secretary of the interior, acting for the United States, "to sell such lands to the highest bidder." It is admitted in the agreed statement of facts "that in pursuance of the provisions of said article 17 of said treaty, as amended by the United States senate, and of a supplemental article thereto ratified June 6, 1868, James F. Joy, on the eighth of June 1868, entered into a contract in writing with O. H. Browning, then secretary of the interior department of the United States, for the purchase of said lands; that on or about the first day of March, 1869, said James F. Joy assigned and conveyed to the plaintiff all of his right, title, and interest in and to said contract of the date of June 8, 1868." Did not the contract of James F. Joy with the secretary of the interior confer an equitable title upon said Joy? If not, what office did the contract perform? It is not claimed that there were any special conditions incorporated in said contract, and the presumption is that the contract was such as is usual for the sale of land; and in fact the contract itself shows that no conditions were imposed; that it was an ordinary contract for the sale of land, in which the grantor uses the words "agrees to sell, and hereby doth sell,"

*311 etc. It is a well-settled principle that equity considers, where land is sold on credit, and the deed is to be made when the purchase money is paid, that the land at the time of the purchase becomes the vendee's, and the purchase money the vendor's; that the vendor becomes the trustee of the vendee with respect to the land, and the vendee the trustee of the vendor with respect to the purchase money. Clute v. Robison, 2 Johns. 595; Watson v. Le Row, 6 Barb. 481; Howard v. Babcock, 7 Ohio, 73-81; Washb. Real Prop. 424, 426. In the case of Parker v. Winsor, 5 Kan. *369, cited by plaintiff, the treaty under which the sale to the Union Pacific Railway Company was made, provides that "none of said lands shall be subject to taxation until the patents have been issued therefor;" but in the treaty under which the sale was made in the case at bar "the Cherokees consent that said lands may be included in the limits and jurisdiction of the said state." In Parker v. Winsor the court says: "But in this case neither the legal nor equitable title has passed. The legal title has not passed because the patent has not yet been issued; and the equitable title has not passed because it has not yet been paid for, and because it is clearly the intention of the parties, as indicated in the treaty, that such title shall not pass until the land is fully paid for." And the same principle was decided in County of Douglas v. Union Pac. Ry. Co., 5 Kan. *615. In the case at bar there is no such intention expressed or implied, and no such conditions imposed. If the equitable title did not pass because of the provisions of that treaty and the intention of the parties that it should not pass, then, by a parity of reasoning, in the case at bar, when no such intention and no such provisions exist, the equitable title did pass.

As to the taxes sought to be enjoined in the second count in plaintiff's petition, their validity would seem to be settled by the agreed statement of facts. It is true that the act granting the lands to the plaintiff in error did impose some conditions upon said railroad company, but it is agreed that said plaintiff in error had, at the time of said levy, "complied with all the conditions of said grant on its part to be performed," leaving nothing but the naked legal title in *312 the *United States. The plaintiff company, then, had accepted the grant within one year after the passage of said act, and prior to July 25, 1867; and upon the acceptance thereof the equitable title passed to the plaintiff in error. There is no provision which makes it necessary that the state of Kansas should accept the trust.

BREWER, J. The plaintiff in error filed its petition in the district court of Bourbon county against the defendant in error to enjoin the collection of a tax levied in the year 1870 against certain real estate of the plaintiff, and containing two causes of action. The first is to enjoin a tax, amounting to about $10,000, levied against that portion of the "Cherokee Neutral Lands" lying in Bourbon county, and to which the plaintiff acquired title by patent from the United States bearing date November 2, 1870. The petition alleges that, at the time of the levy of this tax, the plaintiff had neither the legal nor equitable title to these lands, but that they were in the United States government and the Cherokee tribe of Indians, and hence the lands were exempt from taxation. The second cause of action is to enjoin the collection of a tax levied against certain lands granted by the United States government to the state of Kansas to aid in the construction of the railroad of the Kansas & Neosho Valley Railroad Company, (the former corporate name of the plaintiff,) by an act of congress approved July 25, 1866, which grant had not been accepted by the state of Kansas at the time of the levy of said last-mentioned tax. The facts were agreed between the respective parties, and are contained in a written stipulation on file herein, which, by order of the court below, was made a part of the record. The court below found for the defendant, and rendered judgment accordingly. The facts contained in the stipulation above referred to, and the exhibits thereto attached, relating to the first cause of action, are as follows:

"(1) That the lands mentioned in the first cause of action in *313 the petition, are a part of the 'Cherokee Neutral Lands,' *so called, and the same mentioned in the first part of article 17 of the treaty between the United States and the Cherokee Nation of Indians, proclaimed August 11, 1866.

"(2) That in pursuance of the provisions of article 17 of said treaty, as amended by the United States senate, and a supplemental article thereto, ratified June 6, 1868, James F. Joy, on the eighth of June, 1868, entered into a contract with the then secretary of the interior department of the United States for the purchase of said 'Cherokee Neutral Lands,' by the terms of which contract Mr. Joy was to pay for the same to the secretary of the interior, as trustee for the Cherokee Nation of Indians, at the rate of one dollar per acre, as follows: Within ten days, the sum of $75,000; $75,000 on the thirtieth days of August, 1868, 1869, and 1870, respectively; and $100,000 per annum thereafter, until the whole purchase money should be paid. It was further agreed, in and by said contract, that the United States should cause said lands to be surveyed as public lands were usually surveyed, and, on the payment by Mr. Joy of $50,000, to set apart for him a quantity of said land in one body, in as compact form as practicable, extending directly across said lands from east to west, and containing a number of acres equal to the number of dollars thus paid, and from time to time to convey the same by patent to said Joy, whenever requested so to do, in such quantities, and by legal subdivisions, as said purchaser should indicate; and on the payment of each additional installment, with interest, as therein stipulated, to set apart for said purchaser an additional tract of land, in compact form, when the said purchaser might request, but extending directly across the neutral lands from east to west, containing a number of acres equal to the number of dollars of principal thus paid; and to convey the same to said purchaser, or his assigns, and so on from time to time until the whole should be paid; and no conveyance of any part of said lands to be made until the same should have been paid for as provided for in the said contract.

"(3) That on or about the first of March, 1869, Mr. Joy assigned and conveyed to the plaintiff all his right, title, and interest in and to said contract, and to the lands therein described.

"(4) That prior to said first of March, 1869, Mr. Joy had paid to the secretary of the interior portions of the purchase money for said lands, and had received from the United States patents for a *314 corresponding number of acres of the same, set apart for him in pursuance of the provisions of said contract; but that no part of the said 'Cherokee Neutral Lands' situate in Bourbon county was included in said patents.

"(5) That on the eighth of August, 1870, the plaintiff, as such assignee of Mr. Joy, paid to the secretary of the interior the sum of $437,478.50, the balance of the principal and interest then due and unpaid upon said contract, after deducting the payments so as aforesaid made by Mr. Joy; and on the second of November, 1870, received from the United States a patent conveying to said plaintiff the balance of said 'Cherokee Neutral Lands' not so as aforesaid patented to Mr. Joy, and including in said patent that portion of said lands situate in Bourbon county.

"(6) That in September, 1870, there was levied and assessed against said lands in Bourbon county, and by the proper officers of said county, the tax mentioned in the first count of plaintiff's petition, and that the same, with the statutory penalty of ten per cent., is in the hands of the defendant for collection.

"(7) That the Cherokee Indians retained, at the time of the levy of this tax, and still retain, their tribal organization and national existence."

It seems from this agreed statement that the only interest the plaintiff had in these lands, at the time of the levy and assessment of the tax, was derived from a contract of purchase, upon which no portion of the purchase money had been paid; for while the contract provided for the sale of the entire 800,000 acres, and some money had been paid thereon, yet it also provided for the conveyance of the land as rapidly as paid for, acres for dollars, and all the land paid for had been in fact conveyed by patent prior thereto. Of course, the government had no lien upon the lands patented for the purchase money of those unpatented; and the plaintiff had no right to a conveyance of the latter until it had paid therefor the contract price of a dollar per acre. There was therefore but a simple contract of purchase, upon which the purchaser had paid nothing. The legal title was in the government; and while the plaintiff had an equitable interest in the land, it had not the full equitable title. If these lands had *315 been public lands, beyond any question, under the recent decision of the supreme court of the United States in the case of the Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Culp, 16 Wall. 603, reversing the decision of this court, (9 Kan. *38,) they would not have been subject to taxation. In that case the court says: "While we recognize the doctrine heretofore laid down by this court that lands sold by the United States may be taxed before they have parted with the legal title by issuing a patent, it is to be understood as applicable to cases where the right to the patent is complete, and the equitable title is fully vested in the party, without anything more to be paid, or any act to be done going to the foundation of his right." But these were not public lands. The government held the legal title, but held it in trust for the Cherokee Indians. These Indians still retained their tribal organization and national existence. As such their property was exempt from state taxation. In the Case of The Kansas Indians, 5 Wall. 737, the supreme court decided that "as long as the United States recognizes their national character they are under the protection of treaties and the laws of congress, and their property is withdrawn from the operation of state laws." The same doctrine was recognized in the subsequent Case of The New York Indians, 5 Wall. 761. These decisions were placed, not simply or mainly on treaty stipulations, but upon the broad ground that these Indian nations were under the protection and care of the general government, were separate nations, and outside the jurisdiction of the states. Speaking of the Shawnees, Mr. Justice Davis uses this language: "If the tribal organization of the Shawnees is preserved intact, and recognized by the political department of the government as existing, then they are a people distinct from others, capable of making treaties, separated from the jurisdiction of Kansas, and to be governed exclusively by the government of the Union." So that, whether these lands were the property of the United States or the Cherokee Nation, they were alike exempt from taxation.

But there remains a more difficult question. These lands were originally ceded to the Cherokees by the treaty of December *316 29, 1835. 7 U. S. St. 478. By that treaty *it was stipulated that these lands should never be included within the limits or jurisdiction of any state or territory without the consent of said Indians. By the treaty of 1866 they were ceded by the Cherokees to the United States. 14 U. S. St. 799. The seventeenth article of that treaty is, so far as it bears upon the question, as follows:

"Art. 17. The Cherokee Nation hereby cedes, in trust, to the United States, the tract of land in the state of Kansas which was sold to the Cherokees by the United States under the provisions of the second article of the treaty of 1835, and also that strip of the land ceded to the nation by the fourth article of said treaty, which is included in the state of Kansas; and the Cherokees consent that said lands may be included in the limits and jurisdiction of said state."

Upon this, counsel for defendant in error contends that the Cherokees, who at the time of this tax were the sole beneficiaries of this trust, the owners of the full equitable interest, subject only to the plaintiff's right of purchase, a nation not occupying these lands, but domiciled outside the territorial boundaries of the state, had consented that the lands should become a part of the state, and subject to all its laws, including its revenue and tax laws. If the Indians consented, who could object? The restraints of the organic act and the act of admission were abrogated by this stipulation, and thereafter the authority of the state was full and absolute over the lands. It cannot be denied that there is great force in this argument. But it must be borne in mind that it is settled law to construe Indian treaties liberally in favor of the Indians. As said by Mr. Justice DAVIS, "Enlarged rules of construction are adopted in reference to Indian treaties;" and by Chief Justice MARSHALL, in 6 Pet. 582: "The language used in treaties with the Indians shall never be construed to their prejudice, if words be made use of which are susceptible of a more extended meaning than their plain import, as connected with the tenor of their treaty." Now, the purpose of this cession might be defeated, and would certainly be hindered, if from the very date of the treaty, and before the government had effected any *317 sale, the state could burden these *lands with its taxes, and subject them to sale for non-payment. No benefit would inure to the Cherokees by making them subject to taxation prior to a sale. The lands would be less rather than more salable. And we cannot suppose they intended to insert a stipulation which would throw a burden upon their property, and for which they receive no consideration. It seems to us, rather, that they intended simply to do away with the prior stipulation of exclusion, leaving the lands, as other Indian lands to which such a stipulation of exclusion had never attached, under the protection of the general government until such time as the latter should effect a sale. From these considerations it follows that these lands were not subject to taxation for the year 1870, and the tax proceedings should be perpetually enjoined.

2. In regard to the lands in question in the second cause of action, it is agreed in the statement of facts that they are a part of certain lands granted to the state of Kansas by a certain act of congress approved July 25, 1866; that the plaintiff in error, had, at the time of the levy of the tax complained of, complied with all the conditions of said grant on its part to be performed; that the state of Kansas had not, at the time of said levy, accepted said grant, and never did accept the same until the second of March, 1871. Referring to the act of congress, it appears from the first section that the grant of lands was to "the state of Kansas for the use and benefit of said railroad company," (the plaintiff herein.) By the third section it was provided that "when the governor of the state of Kansas shall certify that any section of ten consecutive miles of said road is completed in a good, substantial, and workman-like manner as a first-class railroad, then the said secretary of the interior shall issue to the said company patents for so many sections of the land, within the limits above named, as are coterminous with the said completed section hereinbefore granted," (and so for each successive section of ten miles:) "provided, that if said road is not completed within ten years from the date of the acceptance of the grant hereinbefore made, *318 the lands remaining unpatented shall re*vert to the United States; and provided, further, that the said lands shall not in any manner be disposed of or incumbered by said company, or its assigns, except as the same are patented under the provisions of this act." Section seven requires that the acceptance of the company shall be in writing, and made within one year. These are all the provisions of the act that bear upon the question. It is agreed that no patent had been issued for these lands up to the time of commencing this action. Upon these facts counsel for plaintiff in error say, (we quote from their brief:)

"We claim that, notwithstanding such compliance on the part of the plaintiff in error with all of the conditions of this grant, no such complete, equitable title to the lands in question had passed to it, at the time of the levy of this tax, as to entitle it to a conveyance by the United States of the legal title, but that this equitable title, as well as the legal, still remained in the United States—First, because there had been no acceptance of the grant by the state of Kansas. This grant was made directly to the state of Kansas for the use of the plaintiff in error; thus constituting the state the trustee, and the railroad company the cestui que trust. Second. Because the United States, in prohibiting the railroad company from disposing of or incumbering these lands until the patent should be given it under the provisions of the grant, clearly and unmistakably show that it was their intention that no interest whatever in these hands should pass to the railroad company until these patents had been executed, but that the entire equitable as well as the legal title should remain in the United States."

It does not seem to us that either point is well taken. The case comes within the rule as laid down by Mr. Justice MILLER in the case from 16th Wall., just cited: "where the right to the patent is complete, and the equitable title is fully vested in the party without anything more to be paid, or any act to be done going to the foundation of his right." While the grant is in terms to the state for the use of the company, the act calls for no acceptance from the state, and provides for the issue of patents directly to the company, and specifies the conditions of the issue. Those conditions involve no action on the part of the state; for, while patents were to issue on the *319 *certificate of the governor, this was simply a provision on the part of the United States government to secure satisfactory evidence of the performance by the company of the conditions of the grant before a conveyance of the lands. The company had nothing more to pay,—nothing more to do. It had complied with the conditions of the grant. Nothing remained, unless, perhaps, it were the evidence of such compliance. There was certainly nothing that went to the "foundation of its right." Nor do we think the restriction on the company's disposal of the land a restriction on the right of taxation. The government retained by it no interest in the land. The equitable interest of the company was in nowise limited. It was a naked restriction on the right to dispose or incumber. There is no reason for making it the basis of an exemption from taxation. We see no error in the ruling of the district court upon this point.

The case having been tried upon an agreed statement of facts, it is the duty of this court to direct what judgment shall be entered by the district court. The case will be remanded, with instructions to enter a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in error, enjoining and restraining all proceedings to collect the taxes for the year 1870 on the lands described in the first cause of action set forth in the petition, and for costs of suit. The costs of this court will be divided.

*320      *JOHN H. WHESTONE v. OTTAWA UNIVERSITY.

July Term, 1874.

1. Corporation: Articles of Incorporation: Powers. Where, in preparing a certificate of incorporation, the incorporators employ only the words used in the statute to describe the general purposes of such incorporation, it will be presumed that they intended to create a corporation of the same general nature, and with the same general powers, granted by the statute, rather than that by such words they sought to apply special limitations on the powers of the corporation.<sup>1</sup>
2. Ultra Vires: Donation of Lots by Town Company. A donation of lots by a town-site corporation, with no special limitation on its powers, is not necessarily ultra vires.
3. ———: Purposes of Donation. Where the direct and proximate tendency of certain improvements sought to be obtained by the donation is the building up of the town, and the enhanced value of the remaining property of the corporation, the donation is within the powers of the corporation, and this though the improvements are to be made outside of the town-site.
4. ———: A donation by the Ottawa Town Company to the Ottawa University of one hundred lots, to aid in the erection of a school building outside of the town-site, and distant therefrom less than half a mile, was not ultra vires.
5. Corporation: Acts Bind Stockholders. An act within the powers of a corporation, when regularly done, binds both the corporation and stockholders.
6. Conveyances: Quitclaim. Under our statutes, any interest in lands may be conveyed by deed, quitclaim or otherwise.

7. Bond: To Build or to Convey: Construction. A bond, with penalty to erect a certain building by a named time, or convey certain specified lots, is, after the time to build has passed, equivalent to a bond with penalty to convey.
8. ———: Specific Performance. Such a bond is in equity treated as a contract to convey, which may ordinarily be specifically enforced.

Error from Franklin district court.

Action to compel specific performance of a contract to convey certain lots of land, brought by the Ottawa University, as plaintiff, against the board of county commissioners of the county of Franklin, John H. Whetstone, W. T. Pickrell, Levi C. Wasson, George S. Holt, J. L.

Hawkins, W. W. Roller, the Ottawa Town Company, and Robert Atkinson, *as defendants. The board of county commissioners, the Ottawa Town Company, and Whetstone answered.

The other defendants made default. The action was tried at the March term, 1878, of the district court. The judgment is as follows: "It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said John H. Whetstone, W. T. Pickrell, Levi C. Wasson, George S. Holt, J. L. Hawkins, and W. W. Roller, defendants, within ten days from the rising of this court, execute and deliver to the said Ottawa University a good and sufficient deed, conveying to the said Ottawa University, in fee-simple, all and every the lots, parcels, or tracts of land in said petition, and in the exhibit thereto, mentioned and described, to-wit [describing the lots as in the petition and exhibit;] and in default of the execution and delivery of said deed as aforesaid by the said defendants, it is ordered that this judgment and decree shall have the effect and operation, at law and in equity, of such conveyance, so as to vest the title to the said premises in the said plaintiff in fee-simple; and it is further considered and adjudged that the said plaintiff recover of the said defendants its costs in and about this suit in this behalf expended," etc. From this decree Whetstone alone appealed, and he brings the case here by petition in error.

C. B. Mason and Sears & Maxwell, for plaintiff in error.

We claim that the Ottawa Town Company had no power to make a deed or donation of the 100 lots to the Ottawa University, and the deed made was ultra vires, and therefore void. It is a violation of the grant between the state and the corporation. It may be supererogation to present any argument upon the construction of the powers of a corporation to this court, when it is a maxim "that a corporation is a mere creature of the statute, and has no powers whatever except those expressly given it, or which are incidental to its existence;" but the recurrence to fundamental principles cannot well be avoided in preparing a brief on the subject. "The principle of the limited power of corporations *is founded on the soundest principles."

*322 Mayor v. Norfolk Ry. Co., 30 Eng. Law. & Eq. 137; Perrine v. Chesapeake & D. C. Co., 9 How. 184; White's B. of B. v.

Toledo Ins. Co., 12 Ohio St. 605; 5 Wheat. 636. A corporation is not only incapable of making contracts which are forbidden by its charter, but, in general, it can make none which are not necessary, either directly or indirectly, to effect the objects of its creation. Head v. Providence Ins. Co., 2 Cranch, 154; Fisher v. Horicon I. & M. Co., 10 Wis. 351. And it is well settled, both in England and the United States, that corporations take nothing by implication. Newhall v. Galena & C. U. R. Co., 14 Ill. 275; Town of Petersburg v. Metzker, 21 Ill. 205; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Canal Com'rs, 21 Pa. St. 19; Lyon v. Lyon, 21 Conn. 194. And words that are ambiguous in a charter are to be construed strongly against the corporators. Moran v. County of Miami, 2 Black, 723; Perrine v. Chesapeake & D. C. Co., 9 How. 172. Said deed is a violation of the charter, as between the managers of the corporation and the stockholders in the corporation. Every act which impairs the contract, whether by the state towards a corporation, or by the corporation towards the shareholders, is unconstitutional and void. As to unconstitutionality, see Plant v. Long Island R. Co., 10 Barb. 28; Mississippi, O. & R. R. Co. v. Cross, 20 Ark. 449; Young v. Harrison, 6 Ga. 130; Com. v. Cullen, 13 Pa. St. 133.

The rights of the majority over the minority do not extend to the performance of any act not conformable to the principles of the constitution of the corporation. Ang. & A. Corp. §§ 391, 500; McLaughlin v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 8 Mich. 100. The power to donate the property of the town company, nowhere expressly appears in their charter. The power cannot be implied as one necessary and incidental to the carrying out of the specific purpose for which the corporation was created. It requires no argument to show that "a donation to the Ottawa University, to enable that corporation to complete a certain building then being erected as a school building, outside of the limits of the town of Ottawa, and more than one-fourth of a mile distant from the limits of the property and land held and owned by the Ottawa Town Company, and off from said property and land," is a plain departure from the specific purposes of the charter of the Ottawa Town Company. The very object of the conveyance and transaction between the Ottawa Town Company and the board of county commissioners was in keeping with one of the main purposes of the *323 charter *of the town company,—the making of improvements on the town-site. The palpable application of one hundred lots to the benefit of the Ottawa University is a direct misapplication to any purpose, expressed or implied, for which the Ottawa Town Company has an existence. If such a disposition of the property of the corporation can be made as attempted to be done to the Ottawa University, why may not all the property of the Ottawa Town Company be donated to erect a hospital or other building, wherever it may be situated? The principle, if allowed to prevail at all, necessarily need have no limit.

If, however, such deed has been made and delivered, by a majority of the stockholders having power to do the business of the corporation, we say that the only powers delegated to the quorum by the by-laws passed, as referred to in the fifth finding of fact by the court, were such powers as were incidental to its purposes; and it cannot be implied from the proceedings therein found that the quorum so constituted should have any other or further powers than such as were necessary for the legitimate purposes mentioned in its charter. The resolutions and proceedings to which the district court has attached an importance in its decision were really immaterial to the power of the making of a deed in the year 1868. The proceedings mentioned in the fifth finding of fact occurred and were adopted April 24, 1865, and January 10, 1866. If with reference to the making of this deed, or any other power not incidental to the corporation, these proceedings had taken place, some claim for the validity of such deed might justly be presented; perhaps upon a state of facts showing the assent of the stockholders to the delegation of powers beyond the original charter, but certainly on no other grounds would any shareholder be estopped. It is fairly implied that the district court found that no authority exists in the terms of this charter to dispose of the property of the Ottawa Town Company, in the manner and conveyance made December 30, 1868, but that such authority was conferred by the proceedings *324 of April, 1865, and January, 1866. That any such powers *are inferential in these proceedings, we confess is beyond our comprehension. These proceedings cannot be reasonably inferred to mean anything more than, for convenience of the performance of the legitimate business of the corporation, a small portion of its members should constitute a power capable of performing the business necessary and incidental to the existence and purposes of the corporation. The district court seems to accept these proceedings as the pivot upon which turns the validity of the deed of the Ottawa Town Company to the plaintiff below. Such conclusion of the court is plainly unjustified by the circumstances of the case, and in harmony with the uniform erroneous conclusions of law arrived at by the court throughout. The acts of the majority control only when confined to the ordinary transactions of the company, and consistent with the original objects of its formation, but cannot exceed the authority in the charter. As against the plaintiff in error, nothing obligatory upon him could occur without his assent, in any event. If present, but protesting, he was not bound by the act of the meeting of December 30, 1868. If not present, he cannot be regarded as assenting to the act of the meeting. American Bank v. Baker, 4 Metc. 164. The shares of stock owned by the plaintiff in error represent (1) property; (2) rights and privileges; of which he cannot be divested except by his own consent, and in the exercise of which rights the law will protect him. 43 N. H. 520; Stevens v. Rutland & B. R. Co., 29 Vt. 545; Redf. Rys. 92; Macedon & B. P. R. Co. v. Lapham, 18 Barb. 312; 5 Eng. Ry. Cas. 573.

But if the town company had the power to make a deed to the university on December 30, 1868, and if no stockholder had the right to complain of the act of the majority on that day, we claim, then, that the facts found by the court do not show any title or interest in the 100 lots in the plaintiff below, as against the plaintiff here. The deed intended and purports to convey nothing more than a bare possibility, and that possibility the mere right of an action of a party having no legal interest in the land. The conveyance made on that day

*325 by the town company was a simple quitclaim deed of the 100 lots. A quitclaim deed carries with it nothing more than that which is then in possession of the grantor. Hence the grantee always requires an express covenant if he expects to hold the grantor, and the grantor always gives a quitclaim deed when he intends to exempt himself from liability. A quitclaim deed presupposes a previous or precedent conveyance, and he who purchases land is held bound by the maxim caveat emptor, and if he means to hold the grantor, he must exact express covenant. It cannot be successfully claimed that the rule of the common law in Kansas on this subject is abrogated. Neither section 2 nor section 5 of the act concerning conveyances (chapter 22, Gen. St.) applies to the deed of quitclaim. Such a construction might have been claimed with some force if the original draft of the act in 1868 by the commissioners to revise had been adopted. [By section 4 of such act, had it been adopted, the words "grant," "bargain," and "sell," or, in other words, a quitclaim deed, with those terms expressed, might have had the same effect as certain covenants of warranty, and the rights of a grantee been different. Com'rs' Rev. 261, 262, § 4.] That such provision was not made a part of the act must be construed to mean that it was not the intention of the legislature expressly to enact any such rule as to the effect of quitclaim deeds. Examining, then, section 5 of our act relating to conveyances, it cannot reasonably be enlarged to refer to deeds of quitclaim, because the section only relates to deeds where the grantor, by terms of his deed, "undertakes to convey to the grantee an indefeasible estate in fee-simple absolute;" that is, to convey the legal estate,—the term used in the statute; and the town company undertook to convey no legal estate, nor could they, as the only interest they had was such equitable interest, if any at all, in the land, as they held under the bond. A title bond, even when the purchase money has all been paid, gives the holder only an equitable interest in the land, (Huddle v. Worthington, 1 Ohio, 423;) nor do we think the case of Bayer v. Cockerill, 3 Kan. *282, under the law as then enacted, is to be construed as contrary to our view thus taken

*326 of a quitclaim deed and legal estate. If our understanding is correct,—and we submit, no other is apparent and reasonable, for it is absurd to claim that this quitclaim, by its terms, undertakes to convey any such estate as a fee-simple absolute,—then section 2 can have no application, there being no estate to which the word "heirs" can attach, and this section, in its terms, clearly only refers to such estate as the grantor then had.

It seems to us the common-law rule must prevail in Kansas, as before stated, and that clearly the Ottawa University acquired no title or right to claim a specific performance in equity of the contract to reconvey. If, as against the grantor in the quitclaim deed, the grantee has acquired no rights he could enforce, concerning the after-acquired title, much less can it prevail against Whetstone, who holds the title from a grantor who was the owner of the indefeasible absolute fee-simple. The court, in the second finding of facts, finds the fee-simple in the board of county commissioners of Franklin county. There was and is but one fee-simple at the same time. It could not be divested by the Ottawa Town Company by any number of deeds, whether quitclaim or otherwise, when there was no fee-simple in them to divest; nor could any amount of quitclaim deed-making at such time, except by the board of commissioners, take the fee-simple out of where it was vested, or transfer the right to a specific performance of the original agreement to a grantee. The deed of quitclaim conveying no estate in the land, as we have shown, we claim the recording of such deed has no more effect upon a subsequent purchaser of the premises than a void instrument.

The obligation of the board of county commissioners of Franklin county, as shown by the third paragraph of facts, and by the bond, is in the alternative,—to build a court-house to cost not less than $15,000, on or before the first day of January, 1870; or to reconvey, in default thereof, to the Ottawa Town Company the 100 lots, or to pay not exceeding $15,000. And the recording of this bond on the twenty-

*327 eighth day of November, 1865, was constructive notice to all parties. This bond *is found to be delivered simultaneously with the deed to the board of commissioners, and to be the consideration for the deed, that is, exchanged for the deed. Now, certainly, before any default, the Ottawa Town Company had no right to elect which alternative they could or would accept,—whether the court-house would be built; or, on default, require the lots to be reconveyed; or, on demand and refusal of commissioners to reconvey, then to resort to the legal remedy at law on the bond. And there has been no rescission of the contract in law. The facts found do not constitute a rescission. While the bond is outstanding, unrevoked, and uncanceled, there is no mutuality in the acts of the parties creating a rescission of the contract, or a breach upon which a right of action inures to the obligee, as though the contract was rescinded. If the Ottawa Town Company had rescinded, or intends to rescind, the transaction, it must be shown on their part, or by those claiming under them, that they have rescinded their rights in the obligation. If asking equity, they must show they have equitably performed their part, and thus seek to place all parties statu quo before the making of the deed and bond. Not having done this, we claim, on the facts, neither the Ottawa Town Company, nor their grantee, are entitled to such legal finding set forth as paragraph 4.

This brings us to a consideration of the first two findings of law, in conclusion of our argument in the case on behalf of plaintiff in error. The two, taken together, substantially find (1) that the Ottawa Town Company, on January 1, 1870, could elect to sue on the bond for damages, or for the legal title, by reason of the equitable interest; (2) that such right as the town company had by assignment could pass to its grantee. As before stated, the bond was in the alternative. Clearly, the obligor had the right to elect in this contract. The obligation of a bond, being the language of the obligee, shall be construed in favor of the obligor. 2 Pars. Cont. 510, note 4. The board had the right to build the court-house, and, in case they did not build as stipulated, then they had the right to reconvey, and, if this

*328 was the only alternative, undoubtedly an action by a proper party would lie to compel them to reconvey. But that is not this case. There was still another alternative. They could keep the lots, and be liable on their bond. That which they had failed to do—to build a court-house—they were by the terms of this bond debarred from afterwards (unless, perhaps, within a reasonable time) choosing to perform. But the terms of this obligation reserved to them the right still to elect not to reconvey, and leave to the obligee the legal remedy on the bond. And the board did elect; and, they having elected, the Ottawa Town Company (had no deed been made to the plaintiff below) had a clear and adequate remedy at law, and having that would not have been entitled to equitable relief, and bring their suit after legal title had been conveyed by the board of commissioners. Story, Cont. 665, note 2; McNitt v. Clark, 7 Johns. 465. Again, whatever right, title, or interest in this transaction the Ottawa Town Company may have had, (and which we claim to have been on December, 30, 1868, or at any other time since, simply rights holden by virtue of the bond, and under that, only the legal right to damages, if the board of commissioners refused to reconvey,) they were not assigned, nor could the right to specific performance be assigned by the town company, so that the grantee stood subrogated to the rights of the obligee in the bond. And we now claim that this judgment ought not to be affirmed, because the well-established rules of a court of equity require that he can only have a right to a specific performance of a contract who shows a valuable and meritorious consideration as the basis of his claim. It cannot be said that the plaintiff in error is in pari delictu, for although no money has been paid by him, his obligation to pay and indemnify sustains his position in contemplation of law; nor can any comparison on this score invidious to him be made, for the plaintiff below must recover on his own equity, and not on want of equity in his adversary. Another maxim is that “where there is equal equity, the law must prevail.”

*329 **John W. De Ford*, for defendant in error.

In Whetstone's answer to petition of defendant in error is this allegation: “This defendant further alleges that the conveyance of the said board of county commissioners to the defendant, of said one hundred lots, was made in good faith, and for a valuable consideration, and that this defendant is the owner thereof, subject to any equities between the said board of county commissioners and the said Ottawa Town Company." This admission, thus solemnly made by Whetstone, that he holds the lots "subject to any equities between" the county commissioners and the town company, would seem to resolve the whole case into these two questions: (1) If the town company were plaintiff here, would it in equity be entitled to a specific performance by the county board of the bond of May 12, 1865? If yea, then, (2) did the "quitclaim," of December 30, 1868, vest in the Ottawa University a title to the same relief? If both these questions be answered in the affirmative, the judgment should be affirmed.

Can it be contended, with any show of reason that the county board were not, in equity and good conscience, bound to perform their contract with the town company? Every principle of justice required them to build the court-house, or, failing in that, to return the lots to the town company, or pay for them, as the latter might elect. McNitt v. Clark, 7 Johns. 465.

Did the "quitclaim" of December 30, 1868, vest in the university a title to the same decree? The plaintiff in error says, "No," alleging that "it was ultra vires, beyond the power of the town company to make that conveyance, and it therefore was and is void;" that "it is void as against any shareholders not assenting to its execution;" that "it places neither a legal nor equitable interest in the grantee;" and that "the district court's conclusions of law on the rights of the obligee in the bond, or the grantee in the quitclaim deed, are erroneous." But we deem all these objections unsound.

The powers and privileges of the Ottawa Town Company *330 *were conferred by sections 37, 20, 18, etc., and the limitation thereupon imposed by section 45, c. 44, Comp. Laws 1862. By section 37 they are "authorized to carry on the business and operations named in their certificate of incorporation, and by the name and style provided in said certificate shall be deemed a body corporate, with succession, and they and their associates, successors, and assigns, shall have the same general corporate powers as are provided in the twentieth section of this act, and subject to all the restrictions hereafter provided." Section 20 empowers them to "contract, and be contracted with, acquire, and convey at pleasure, all such real and personal estate as may be necessary and convenient to carry into effect the objects of the incorporation, and do all needful acts to carry into effect the object for which it was created; and such company shall possess all the powers, and be subject to all rules and restrictions, provided by this act." And section 18 reads: "The stockholders may, from time to time, adopt such regulations and by-laws, for the management of the business of the company, as they may see proper," etc. And by section 45 the corporation was restricted in the employment of its stock, means, and assets to the "legitimate objects of its creation." The town company was incorporated for the "purpose of locating and laying out a town-site, and making improvements thereon." These of course were its "legitimate objects;" and from the foregoing extracts it appears to have been clothed with ample authority to accomplish them. Was the conveyance of the 97 lots to the university, to enable her to complete a college building a quarter of a mile without the limits of the town, within the scope of these "legitimate objects?" The answer to this depends upon the meaning to be given to the words "making improvements thereon." Plaintiff in error claims that the words "making improvements thereon" mean "only erections upon, or something performed on, the land itself, to ameliorate its condition,—such as the erection of buildings, or fences, or necessary grading, or ditching to improve the drainage." But these corporations are never organized for the purpose of locating, laying out, and "making im-*331 provements," *in that limited sense, on town-sites. Their grand object always is to enhance the value of their lots by every available expedient, and then make money by selling them. And in view of this fact, it would seem that the term as here used was employed in its most liberal sense, and includes the "performance of any act, whether on or off the town-site, the direct and proximate tendency of which is to enhance its value in the market. Vandall v. Dock Co., 10 Amer. Law Reg. (N. S.) 506. And who can doubt that the finishing of the university building, at a distance of only a quarter of a mile from town, and the opening of a school in it, had a "direct and proximate tendency" to enhance the value of lots in Ottawa? At all events, the presumption is that it had this tendency, and that the act of the town company in making the deed was lawful, until the contrary appears. And even if not so, it would, in this case, make no difference. Bissell v. Michigan S. & N. I. R. Co., 22 N. Y. 258.

Again, the plaintiff in error asserts that the quitclaim of December 30, 1868, is "void as against any shareholder not assenting to its execution." That Whetstone was bound, with or without his assent, by the act of a majority of the meeting which passed the resolution directing the execution and delivery of this deed, if otherwise lawful, can admit of no question. It would, in truth, be a singular town company that could not make a conveyance of this kind without the consent of every shareholder.

Whetstone further insists that the quitclaim "placed neither a legal nor equitable interest in the grantee," especially as against him. The town company, he argues, on December 30, 1868, had no interest, but only the "possibility" of one, in the lots, and hence their deed of that date conveyed nothing. But a "bare possibility" can be conveyed just as well as an absolute estate in fee-simple. "Conveyances of land, or of any other estate or interest therein, may be made by deed." Section 3, c. 22, Gen. St. 1868; sections 2, 5, 6, Id. And Story tells us that courts of equity "give effect to assignments of trusts, and possibilities of trusts, and contingent interests, and expectancies, whether they are in real or in personal estate." Story, Eq.

Jur. §§ 1040, 1055; Maduska v. Thomas, 6 Kan. *153; Lessee of Thompson v. Hoop, 6 Ohio St. 480; Mitchell v. Winslow, 2 Story, 639; 50 Mo. 31. But the fact is that the town company, prior to January 1, 1870, had in these lots a far greater interest than a "bare possibility." They had an estate contingent upon the happening of a condition precedent,—an estate which would entirely fail, it is true, if the court-house should be built, but which, if it should not, would expand into an absolute estate in fee-simple. On the other hand, the county had a fee conditional, which would become unqualified by the erection of the court-house, and would, if they failed in that, shrink into a mere dry legal estate, held in trust for the town company or its assigns. This was the true state of the property; and to say that the town company could not assign an interest of this magnitude in December, 1868, is to waste words. It follows, then, that the quitclaim deed, granting, as it does, the 100 lots, (and not merely whatever interest the grantor had in them,) with the "hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging, or in any wise appertaining," wrought a perfect transfer to the university of the bond dated May 12, 1865, and of all rights, present or future, arising out of it. Adamson v. Wilson, 47 Mo. 272; Garton v. Cannada, 39 Mo. 365; Worsham v. Callison, 49 Mo. 208; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1050.

There is no error in the conclusions of law found by the district court. But suppose it were otherwise, what right has Whetstone to complain of "the findings of the court as matter of law, or the rights of the obligee in the bond, or the grantee in the quitclaim deed?" Surely, they can take care of themselves; and so long as they make no objection, Whetstone may well be content. But, even if he could be allowed to fight their battles, no exception was taken to any conclusion of law, and he is therefore presumed to have acquiesced in them. Luirance v. Luirance, 32 Ind. 198; City of Logansport v. Wright, 25 Ind. 516.

The plaintiff in error thinks the county "could keep the lots, and be liable on their bond." But Story says, (Eq. Jur. § 751:) "If the contract appears only in the condition of a bond, secured by a penalty, the court will act upon it as an agreement, and will not suffer the party to escape from a specific performance by offering to pay the penalty," and that such a bond is "not to be discharged by the payment of the penalty." Id. § 715. But neither Whetstone nor the county board has ever offered to build the court-house, reconvey the lots, pay the penalty, or do any other act or thing in performance of the obligation. On the contrary, the county has attempted to give the lots to Whetstone for nothing.

BREWER, J. The findings of facts made by the court below on the trial of this action are as follows :

"(1) That the plaintiff, the Ottawa University, and the defendants, the board of county commissioners of the county of Franklin, and the Ottawa Town Company, are each corporations, created under the laws of the state of Kansas.

"(2) The board of county commissioners of the county of Franklin, by deed, with full covenants, executed by the Ottawa Town Company, were seized of a good, absolute, and indefeasible estate in fee-simple of and in, all and singular, the 100 town lots in the town (now city) of Ottawa, particularly described by number, lot, and block in Exhibit A, attached to and being a part of the petition.

"(3) On the twelfth of May, 1865, said board of county commissioners made and delivered to the Ottawa Town Company a bond in the sum of $15,000, conditioned that they, or their successors in office should, before the first day of January, 1870, erect on block 85, in the city of Ottawa, a court-house, at a cost of not less than $15,000, or, in default thereof, to convey to the Ottawa Town Company the 100 lots described in said Exhibit A.

"(4) The deed mentioned in the second paragraph herein, and the bond mentioned in the third paragraph herein, were delivered simultaneously; that is, exchanged the one for the other. There was no consideration whatever paid by said board of county commissioners, either directly or indirectly, to the Ottawa Town Company, as a consideration for the lots described in the deed aforesaid; nor have the conditions of the bond aforesaid been complied with; that is, no court-house has been erected, or money paid, or conveyance made, as provided for.

*334 "(5) At a meeting of the Ottawa Town Company, held *Monday, April 24, 1865, the following proceedings were had: "Moved and seconded that regular meetings of the company shall be held on Monday evening, at 7:30, and that five shall constitute a quorum; carried." And at a meeting held Wednesday, January 10, 1866, it was "moved and seconded that hereafter votes of this company be taken by shares, and that each half-share be allowed one vote, whenever present, by person or by proxy; carried." These proceedings were recorded in a book furnished and kept by the company for that purpose, and in that book there is no record of any meeting after June 27, 1867.

"(6) The property of the Ottawa Town Company was divided into twenty shares, and on and before the thirtieth of December, 1868, the twenty shares of the Ottawa Town Company's stock were held as follows: By C. P. Kalloch, one share; by E. J. Nugent, three shares; by J. C. Richmond, one-half share; by F. Cobb, one-half share; by E. Cobb, one-half share; by S. C. Pomeroy, one share; by J. T. Jones, one share; by W. Libby, one-half share; by T. J. Southard, one-half share; by J. B. Gordon, one share; by C. C. Hutchinson, one share; by R. D. Lathrop, four shares and one-half share; by C. T. Evans, one-half share; by G. S. Holt, one-half share; by S. T. Kelsey, one-half share; by A. S. Lathrop, one share; and by J. H. Whetstone, two shares and one-half share. The property of the town company originally consisted of all the land described by the town plat of Ottawa.

"(7) On the thirtieth of December, 1868, the Ottawa Town Company held a meeting, with the following shareholders, present or represented: C. P. Kalloch by I. S. Kalloch, C. C. Hutchinson, J. T. Jones, S. T. Kelsey, J. C. Richmond, E. J. Nugent, J. H. Lane by H. F. Sheldon, and G. S. Holt. The following proceedings were had: 'Holt elected secretary pro tem. * * * Voted that a quitclaim deed be given to Atkinson, for the benefit of Ottawa University, of 97 lots, previously donated to the county of Franklin. * * * Voted, that if anything accrues from the lots traded to Lathrop, that also be given to Atkinson for the same purpose. * * * Voted that the secretary pro tem. see that the deed be furnished this p. m., and have it signed by the president.' John H. Whetstone had notice of this meeting, and was present, just before or just at the time of the opening, but, on account of sickness, withdrew, and did not participate.

"(8) On the thirtieth of December, 1868, the Ottawa Town Company, by its president, I. S. Kalloch, and by its secretary **pro tem.*, G. S. Holt, executed and delivered to Robert Atkinson, as treasurer of the Ottawa University, for the sole use and benefit of the Ottawa University, a quitclaim deed of the 97 lots referred to in the seventh paragraph herein, being 97 of the 100 lots before that time conveyed by the said Ottawa Town Company to the board of county commissioners of Franklin county; that there was no consideration whatever paid by the Ottawa University, either directly or indirectly, to the Ottawa Town Company, for the lots aforesaid, but the quitclaim deed so made was made as a donation to the Ottawa University, to enable that corporation to complete a certain building then being erected as a school building outside of the limits of the town of Ottawa, and more than one-fourth of a mile distant from the limits of the property, and land held and owned by the Ottawa Town Company, and off from said property and land.

"(9) On the ninth of August, 1870, the board of county commissioners of the county of Franklin made and delivered to John H. Whetstone a quitclaim deed to 100 lots mentioned and referred to in the second paragraph herein, but without any consideration paid therefor by the said Whetstone, or by any person for him, either directly or indirectly, to said board of county commissioners, or to any one, for the use and benefit of Franklin county, and without any agreement or promise, either express or implied, to pay, or cause to be paid, at any time or in any manner, any valuable consideration, except that on the same day the said Whetstone, with W. T. Pickrell as his security, executed and delivered to said board of county commissioners a bond in the sum of $15,000, conditioned that they will, in consideration of said quitclaim deed, save harmless the board of county commissioners of the county of Franklin from all liability, by way of damages or expenses incurred, or which may be incurred or expended, by reason of the giving of the bond by said board, referred to and described in the third paragraph herein.

"(10) On the tenth of August, 1870, John H. Whetstone executed and delivered to W. T. Pickrell a quitclaim deed for lots 18 and 20, in block 72; and on the fifteenth of August, 1870, said Whetstone executed and delivered to George S. Holt a quitclaim deed for lots 7, 9, and 11, in block 69; and on the fifteenth of August, 1870, said Whetstone executed and delivered to W. W. Roller and J. L. Hawkins a quitclaim deed for lots — in block —; and on the seventeenth of August, 1870, John H. Whetstone executed and delivered to *L. C. Wasson a quitclaim deed for lots 1, 3, 5, 7, and 9, in block 81, part of the lots described in quitclaim deed from board of county commissioners of the county of Franklin to said Whetstone, referred to and described in the ninth paragraph herein; and all the deeds, bonds, and writings herein referred to were duly recorded in the office of the register of deeds of Franklin county, in the order of their dates respectively.

"(11) On the thirtieth of December, 1868, at the time of the meeting of the Ottawa Town Company, the following were resident stockholders or shareholders, residing in, and in the vicinity of, the town of Ottawa: E. J. Nugent, J. C. Richmond, E. Cobb, J. T. Jones, C. C. Hutchinson, G. S. Holt, S. T. Kelsey, J. H. Whetstone, and A. S. Lathrop. In all of the meetings of the Ottawa Town Company, A. S. Lathrop had represented the interest of R. D. Lathrop, and said A. S. Lathrop had no notice of the meeting above referred to, and protested in his own behalf, and for R. D. Lathrop, against the attempted conveyance or transfer of the interest of the Ottawa Town Company to Robert Atkinson, treasurer of the Ottawa University, of the property referred to. John H. Whetstone also opposed the conveyance last above mentioned, and made that fact known to other shareholders of the company, and to Robert Atkinson, and has never ratified the action of the town company."

The conclusions of law found by the district court on such trial are as follows:

"(1) After the first of January, 1870, the Ottawa Town Company had an equitable interest in the 100 lots, and could elect to sue for the legal title, or for the recovery of the penalty of $15,000 fixed in the bond.

"(2) The Ottawa Town Company, claiming title to the 100 lots, could sell and convey its interest therein, though not in actual possession, and not holding the legal title, and the action of its grantee for the legal title can be maintained by the grantee if it could have been by the grantor.

"(3) The officers and a quorum of the stockholders of the Ottawa Town Company could make a conveyance of the legal title or equitable interest of that corporation in the 100 lots, and no individual stockholder of the corporation can maintain an action to cancel or set aside such conveyance, though the same was made for an inadequate consideration.

*337 "(4) The conveyance by the board of county commissioners to John H. Whetstone vested in the grantee no greater title or interest than that held by the county at the time; and the bond for reconveyance, and the deed to the Ottawa University, being duly recorded, said Whetstone had full knowledge of the equities in favor of the Ottawa Town Company and Ottawa University; and the Ottawa University can therefore maintain the action against said Whetstone, if the Ottawa Town Company could maintain a like action against the board of county commissioners.

"The court therefore finds for the plaintiff."

The first finding of fact sets forth, among others, that the Ottawa Town Company is a corporation created under the laws of the state of Kansas. The following is a copy of the article of incorporation filed with the secretary of state, on the sixth of September, 1864, which, by stipulation of the parties, is to be taken as one of the facts found in this case:

"This is to certify that the undersigned have formed themselves into an association or body corporate, for the purpose of locating and laying out a town-site, and making improvements therein. The particular tracts of land to be obtained as a town-site are the east half of section thirty-five, (E.  $\frac{1}{2}$  sec. 35,) and the west half of section thirty-six, (W.  $\frac{1}{2}$  sec. 36,) both of township seventeen south, (T. 17 S.,) and range nineteen east, (R. 19 E.,) upon what is known as the 'Ottawa Reservation,' in the county of Franklin, in the state of Kansas. The name of the company or body corporate shall be 'The Ottawa Town Company.'

"In witness whereof we, the undersigned, have hereunto interchangeably set our hands and seals this first day of September, 1864.

"CLINTON C. HUTCHINSON. [Seal.]

"JOHN C. RICHMOND. [Seal.]

"ISAAC S. KALLOCH. [Seal.]

"CHARLES T. EVANS. [Seal.]

"ASA S. LATHROP." [Seal.]

As none of the testimony is before us, except so far as it is shown by the stipulation just cited, the only question is whether, upon the pleadings and findings of fact, the defendant in error, the Ottawa University, ought to have recovered a judgment against the plaintiff in error. Upon this the plaintiff in error makes the following

*338 points: *(1) That the deed of December 30, 1868, under which plaintiff below claims, is ultra vires of the corporation, and therefore void; (2) that it is void as against any shareholder not assenting to its execution; (3) that as a deed of quitclaim it places neither a legal nor equitable interest in the grantee, and especially as against the plaintiff in error; (4) that the findings of the court as matter of law, on the rights of the obligee in the bond, or the grantee in the quitclaim deed, are erroneous."

The first is the principal question, and it is one of no little difficulty. It is insisted that there is no express power conferred to donate the property of the corporation, nor to use it for the purpose of making improvements elsewhere than within the limits of the town-site; nor is the power necessary and incidental to the carrying out of the specific purpose for which the corporation was created. Looking simply at the articles of incorporation, and regarding the words used therein as selected by the incorporators with especial reference to a limitation of the powers of the corporation, and this argument is strong. Power is given to locate and lay out a town-site, and make improvements thereon. A town can be located and laid out, and improvements made in it, without the donation of a single lot, and without the use of a single dollar's worth of property in making of outside improvements. We are fully aware of the rule that corporations take nothing by implication, and that it is the duty of courts, especially in this day, when so much of the business of the country is carried on by corporations, and so much of its wealth held by them, to see to it that the powers of a corporation are not exercised beyond its charter, but are kept within the limits which the legislature has prescribed. Only in this way can the rights of the stockholders be protected against the illegal action of the directors, or of the minority of the stockholders against similar action of the majority.

On an examination, we find that the words used in the articles *339 of incorporation under consideration were taken *from the statute, where they stand as descriptive of the general purposes of such a corporation. Comp. Laws, 372, c. 44, § 37. This section reads: "When any number of persons * * * associate themselves together for the purpose of locating and laying out a town-site, and making improvements therein, they shall, under their hands and seals, make a certificate," etc.; and when incorporated "shall have the same general corporate powers as are provided in the twentieth section of this act, and subject to all the restrictions hereafter provided." It would seem, then, from the adoption of the words of the statute, that the incorporators intended thereby, not so much a special limitation on the powers of this town-site corporation, as the creation of one of the nature, and with the general powers, specified in the statute. If special limitations had been sought, additional words would have been used. Turning now to section 20 of the same chapter of the statutes, (the section referred to,) we find that it empowers them to "contract and be contracted with, acquire, and convey at pleasure, all such real and personal estate as may be necessary and convenient to carry into effect the objects of the incorporation; to make and use a common seal, and the same to alter at pleasure; and do all needful acts to carry into effect the object for which it was created; and such company shall possess all the powers, and be subject to all rules and restrictions, provided by this act." And by section 45 of said act it is provided, by way of restriction, that "no company or association, incorporated under the provisions of this act, shall employ its stock, means, assets, or other property, directly or indirectly, for any other purpose whatever than to accomplish the legitimate objects of its creation."

Now, town-site companies are neither novel nor rare in Kansas. Every county has been the home of several, and the manner of their working, and the means employed to accomplish their purposes, are familiar to us all. Nor is Kansas peculiar in this respect. Every western state is full of them. They are private corporations, organized for the purposes of gain. They take real estate, lay it off *340 into lots and blocks, streets and *alleys, induce people to settle and purchase, and by the sale of lots make their profits. Their object is to make gain by the sale of lots, and they may "convey at pleasure such real estate as may be necessary and convenient to carry into effect this object." If by the donation of one lot they can double the value of the remainder, is not the one lot used directly to accomplish the legitimate object of the corporation? If by donating 100 lots to the county they can secure the county-seat and the erection of county buildings, are they not furthering the very purpose of building up a town? This the counsel for plaintiff in error seem to concede, for thus, they say, they secure improvements on the town-site. Here the improvements to secure which this donation was made, were to be placed from one-fourth to one-half of a mile away from the town. And if there, why not anywhere, urge counsel. The purpose of securing improvements on the town-site is not simply that the improvements be there, but that thereby the property the corporation has to sell may be enhanced in value. And if the lots were donated to secure the erection of a hospital or school at a remote place, as suggested by counsel, there would be no resultant benefit to the corporation of enhanced value of its unsold lots. It seems to us that this must be the test: If the direct and proximate tendency of the improvements sought to be obtained by the donation is the building up of the town, and the enhanced value of the remaining property of the corporation, the donation is not ultra vires. The purpose of the corporation is to build up a town, and make gain by the sale of lots. This purpose is directly furthered by such a donation. See, as bearing upon the questions here discussed, the late case from California (40 Cal. 84) of Vandall v. Dock Co., reported in 10 Amer. Law Reg. (N. S.) 506, which in many respects is similar to this. The donation in this case was to aid the Ottawa University in erecting a school building near the town-site. It will hardly be doubted that the direct and proximate tendency of such an improvement was to enhance *the *341 value of property in Ottawa. Hence the donation was not ultra vires.

The donation being within the powers of the corporation, having been made by the proper officers, and having been fully authorized by a vote of the corporation at a regularly called meeting, it follows that all the stockholders are bound by the act. The proceedings on the part of the corporation appear to have been regular; at least, no defect is pointed out in them.

The Ottawa Town Company had an interest in these lands,—such an interest as is created by a bond to convey. Any interest in land may be conveyed by deed, quitclaim or otherwise. Gen. St. 185, § 3. The county had given a bond, with penalty, to build a court-house before the first of January, 1870, or reconvey the lots. The time to build the court-house had passed. It then left the contract of the county a simple bond, with a penalty to convey. Equity always treats this as a contract to convey, which may ordinarily be specifically enforced, and does not leave the party to his legal remedy on the bond. Waynick v. Richmond, 11 Kan. *488.

We see no error in the judgment, and the same will be affirmed.

LEMUEL BASSETT v. Z. A. WOODWARD.

July Term, 1874.

1. Pleading: Variance: Judgment. Where the allegations in the petition and the findings of fact sustain the judgment, a variance between the prayer for relief in the petition and the judgment will not, when noticed first in this court, ordinarily justify a reversal.
2. Parties in Supreme Court. Parties, whether plaintiffs or defendants in the district court, who are affected by errors alleged in the proceedings in that court, must be made parties to proceedings in this court before those errors can be inquired into.

*342 *Error from Labette district court.

Action by Woodward against Bassett and Kuykendall. Trial at the November term, 1871, of the district court. Findings and judgment in favor of plaintiff and against the defendants. Bassett alone appeals. Kuykendall is not joined either as a plaintiff or a defendant in this court.

W. P. Lamb, for plaintiff in error.

A demand of the relief to which the party supposes himself entitled must be contained in the petition; and no other relief can be granted by the court rightfully. Civil Code, § 87. The demand must correspond to the prior averments in the petition, and the judgment and the findings of the court must conform and agree with avermment of the petition and the demand for judgment and relief; and judgment and finding by the court exceeding or contrary to that demanded is error, and should be reversed.

The court cannot grant relief in favor of one defendant and against another defendant on the petition of the plaintiff in a matter where the plaintiff has no interest, and where no affirmative relief is asked by either defendant. In all cases the judgment must conform to the questions raised by the pleadings before the court, and cannot extend beyond such questions. Bouv. Law Dict. 676, § 9. The judgment in this case was not authorized. The proper requisites have not been made to obtain it, either in the petition or the answer; it is, therefore, a fraudulent judgment, as it divests the plaintiff in error of his rights in the collection of his money from his co-defendant below, without any benefit to the plaintiff below.

BREWER, J. The defendant in error brought his action in the district court of Labette county against plaintiff in error *343 *and one Josiah Kuykendall to compela specific performance of a contract to sell real estate. In his petition he alleged a written contract on the part of Bassett to sell him the real estate at any time within eight days on the payment of $3,500; that Kuykendall had notice of this written contract; that within the eight days he tendered the $3,500, and demanded a deed, but that Bassett, combining with Kuykendall to cheat and defraud him, refused to convey, but sold and conveyed to Kuykendall for a greater sum than $3,500. He asked a decree compelling Kuykendall to convey to him upon payment of the $3,500, and requiring Bassett to join in the conveyance, and enjoining Kuykendall from selling or incumbering the premises in any manner. Bassett and Kuykendall filed a joint answer in which Bassett admitted the contract, but denied everything else, and Kuykendall admitted purchasing from Bassett, and denied the other allegations. The case was tried by the court, without a jury. Findings of fact and conclusions of law were made, and judgment entered in favor of Woodward. The testimony was not preserved, so that the case is here simply on the pleadings, the findings, and the judgment. The findings sustain the allegations of the petition. In addition the court finds the terms of the sale from Bassett to Kuykendall, to-wit, cash, $2,000, and note and mortgage for $1,700, and that the sale had been consummated.

Upon these facts it would seem clear that Woodward upon payment of the $3,500 was entitled to a decree for a specific performance. Such a decree was entered, and so far at least as Woodward is concerned we see no error in it. Counsel for plaintiff in error claims that the prayer for relief in the petition does not warrant the decree. The decree commanded Kuykendall, upon payment of the $3,500, to execute a conveyance to Woodward, and Bassett to execute to Woodward an assignment of the mortgage, and to surrender the notes secured thereby to Kuykendall. It was the duty of the court in framing its decree to see that such conveyances and instruments were *344 executed by the defendants as would secure to the plaintiff *that which he had contracted for, a clear and perfect title to the premises. This was done, and only this. It does not appear that the attention of the district court was called to the fact that the prayer for relief did not speak of an assignment of a mortgage. We certainly should not disturb a judgment on account of a variance so purely immaterial. It may be that the court erred in not directing specifically the payment of $2,000 to Kuykendall, and $1,500 to Bassett, but that is a matter in which Woodward is not the only party interested. If any error of that kind occurred, it can be corrected only by a proceeding in error, to which Kuykendall also is a party defendant.

The judgment will be affirmed.

G. W. YANDLE v. S. A. CRANE and another.<sup>1</sup>

July Term, 1874.

1. Replevin: Pleading: Contradictory Defenses: General Denial. In an action of replevin, where the defendant files an answer containing a "general denial," and six subsequent defenses, in which subsequent defenses the defendant admits that the plaintiff is the owner of the property replevied, and that the defendant detains the same from the plaintiff, held, that on the trial of the action said "general denial" can be considered only as a denial that the plaintiff is entitled to the immediate possession of the property, and that the defendant wrongfully detains the same from the plaintiff.
2. ———: Issue: Evidence Under General Denial. In an action of replevin the defendant, under a "general denial," will be entitled to prove on the trial that he does not wrongfully detain the property, by introducing evidence tending to show that his detention of the same is right-ful.

Error from Labette district court.

*345 Replevin, brought by Crane and another against Yandle. *The plaintiffs had judgment at the March term, 1873, of the district court.

F. A. Bettis, for plaintiff in error.

The plaintiffs' evidence fails to establish (1) that at the commencement of the action the plaintiffs were the owners of the property; (2) that they were entitled to the possession; (3) that the property was not withheld by due process of law; and (4) that at the commencement of the action Yandle was in possession of the property. The defendant's answer contained a general denial, and three affirmative defenses. Under each and all of these the court refused to permit the defendant to show the right of possession of the cattle in controversy to have been in himself, under section 33, c. 40, Gen. St. 1868. The evidence offered should have been received under the general denial; and if this is so, then the affirmative defenses were general denials in themselves. It may be claimed that the second defense does not allege the premises to have been surrounded by a good and lawful fence; but it does allege the premises to have been "a close;" and a "close" is a lawful inclosure, and a lawful inclosure in Kansas is surrounded by a good and lawful fence.

It is set up in the answer that the cattle were strays. The court refused to hear any evidence to this point, and this was manifest error.

W. B. Glasse and H. G. Webb, for defendants in error.

VALENTINE, J. This was an action of replevin for twelve head of neat cattle. The defendants in error (plaintiffs below) replevied the cattle from plaintiff in error, and judgment was rendered in favor of defendants in error. The petition below was an ordinary petition in replevin, and sufficiently stated the plaintiff's cause of action. The answer contained, first, a general denial, and then six separate defenses setting up new matter. In these subsequent defenses the defendant admitted that the plaintiffs were the owners of the cattle, and that the defendant detained the cattle from the plaintiffs. Hence, upon the trial of the action, the general denial of the defendant could be considered only as a denial that the plaintiffs were entitled to the immediate possession of the property, and that the defendant wrongfully detained the same from the plaintiffs, (Wiley v. Keokuk, 6 Kan. *94; Butler v. Kaulback, 8 Kan. *668;) for the answer itself admitted and proved on the trial all the other allegations of the petition. The answer in fact proved prima facie the plaintiffs' whole case. It proved conclusively that the plaintiffs were the owners of the cattle, and that the defendant detained them from the plaintiffs; and as proof of ownership, if unaccompanied by other circumstances, is always prima facie evidence of the right of possession, and as a proof of a detention of property by a person not the owner, and against the will of the owner, if unexplained by other circumstances, is always prima facie evidence of a wrongful detention of the property, therefore the foregoing admission of ownership and detention contained in the answer were prima facie evidence of the plaintiffs' right of possession, and that the detention of the cattle on the part of the defendant was wrongful. If it be claimed, however, that said ownership and said detention were explained by other circumstances stated in the answer, which showed that the plaintiffs were not entitled to the immediate possession of the property, and that the defendant did not wrongfully detain the same, then it may be answered that these other circumstances stated in the answer were controverted by the plaintiffs, and could not be taken as true until proved by the defendant. Under the pleadings, it did not devolve upon the plaintiffs, in the first instance, to prove anything. It devolved upon the defendant to show that he had the right to *347 the possession of said cattle, and that he did not *wrongfully detain them. And this brings us to another question.

The defendant, although admitting in his answer that the plaintiffs were the owners of said cattle, and that the defendant detained the same from the plaintiffs, also alleged that the detention was not wrongful for the following reasons, to-wit: He alleges that the plaintiffs permitted these twelve head of cattle, along with a large number of other cattle belonging to the plaintiffs, to enter the premises of the defendant, and there do a great deal of damage, for which damage the plaintiff claims to have a lien upon said cattle. Gen. St. 494, § 33; Id. 1002, § 3; Laws 1872, 384, § 3. And the defendant also alleges that he took said cattle up as estrays. Gen. St. 1003 et seq. All of the defenses (six in number) in which the foregoing allegations are contained are defective for reasons not necessary now to be stated, except that the defendant does not show by any of said defenses that his case comes within any of the statutes above cited. We think, however, that the defendant had a right to show, under his general denial, all the facts that he attempted to allege in said six defenses of his answer, (Wilson v. Fuller, 9 Kan. *177, *190;) that is, he had a right to show, under his general denial, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to the immediate possession of the cattle, and that the defendant did not wrongfully detain the same, by showing that the cattle broke through a lawful inclosure, and entered the defendant's premises, and there did damage, and that the defendant detained them for the purpose of enforcing his lien for the damages; or, by showing that the cattle were strays, and that they entered the defendant's premises, and that the defendant then took them up as strays. The court below, on objections by the plaintiffs, refused to permit the defendant to prove the foregoing facts, or, at least, the first of the foregoing facts. The question as to what may be proved by a defendant under a general denial in replevin has already been considered and decided by this court. Town of Leroy v. McConnell, 8 Kan. *273; Wilson v.

*348 Fuller, 9 Kan. *177, *190. *In these cases it was decided that under our Code the gist of the action of replevin is the wrongful detention of the property by the defendant as against the plaintiff, and that, under a general denial, the defendant may prove anything that will tend to show that he does not wrongfully detain the property as against the plaintiff. In the present case, for instance, the defendant might show that he did not wrongfully detain the property by showing that he rightfully detained it. The court below, however, on objections made by the plaintiffs, excluded all evidence tending to show that the detention of the property by the defendant was rightful instead of wrongful; and herein we think the court below erred. The plaintiffs alleged in their petition that the detention of the cattle was wrongful. The defendant denied the same by a general denial. The plaintiffs then proved prima facie, by parol evidence, and by the defendant's admissions in his answer, that the detention was wrongful, and the defendant then had a right to rebut this prima facie case by showing that the detention was not wrongful.

The judgment of the court below is reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

MOSES M. EDWARDS v. JAMES CRUME.

July Term, 1874.

1. Parent and Child: Trespass. Where a minor son, who lives with his father, and is under his father's control, commits certain wrongful acts, but where the said acts have not been authorized by the father, are not done in his presence, have no connection with the father's business, are not ratified by the father, and from which the father receives no benefit, the father is not liable in a civil action for damages for such wrongful acts.<sup>1</sup>
2. Demurrer: To Evidence. Where a demurrer to the evidence is interposed by the defendant in a civil action, under section 275 of the Code *349 *as amended, (Laws 1872, p. 329,) and neither the petition nor the evidence shows a cause of action against the defendant, and the evidence does not tend to prove a cause of action against the defendant, the court does not err in sustaining said demurrer.

Error from Cherokee district court. Action by Edwards against Crume. The petition was as follows: "The said Moses M. Edwards, plaintiff, complains of the said James Crume, defendant, and shows to the court and avers that on the thirtieth day of October, 1872, he was the owner of 1,000 fruit trees, being and growing upon land owned and occupied by plaintiff in the county of Cherokee, and 500 rails laid up in a fence on his said farm in said county, and three quarters of a mile of osage-orange hedge fence, two years old, growing upon his said place; that on said thirtieth of October <sup>1</sup> Where a minor son negligently and carelessly shoots and kills a mare belonging to another, the father, who had no connection with the transaction, directly or indirectly, proximately or remotely, is not liable; and where the father afterwards, without consideration, and not in writing, promises to pay the value of the mare, held that such promise does not render him liable. Baker v. Morris, 7 Pac. Rep. 267. Maintenance of children, see Harris v. Harris, 5 Kan. 84, and note; rights and liabilities of parent, see note to Sawyer v. Sauer, 10 Kan. 390.

one James Crume, junior, a minor, under 21 years of age, who is the son of defendant James Crume, and resides with defendant in his family, and who is a member of defendant's family, did set on fire the prairie, being the grass growing on the prairie in said county, in the vicinity of plaintiff's place, where said above-named property of plaintiff then was; and plaintiff avers that said fire so set out in the prairie aforesaid by the said James Crume, junior, minor, and son of the said James Crume, defendant, as aforesaid, did set fire to, burn up, and destroy and damage plaintiff's property aforesaid, and did occasion damage to the said 1,000 fruit trees growing on plaintiff's farm aforesaid, and the said 500 rails, and the said three-quarters of a mile of hedge fence on plaintiff's said farm, and that said fire totally burned up and destroyed said property of plaintiff; and plaintiff says said fruit trees were of the value of $1,000; that said rails were of the value of $15; that said three-quarters of a mile of hedge fence was worth $50; wherefore plaintiff avers that by reason of the fire aforesaid so set out by the said James Crume, junior, minor, and son of defendant, the said property above mentioned was totally destroyed, and he has been damaged thereby to the amount of $1,065, wherefore," etc. Answer, a general denial. Trial at the June term, 1873. Defendant demurred to plaintiff's evidence. Demurrer sustained, and judgment against plaintiff for costs.

*350 **W. M. Matheny*, for plaintiff in error.

The court erred in sustaining the demurrer. It was not interposed at the proper time. A demurrer which, like this, goes to the sufficiency of the facts stated in the petition, should have been filed before the answer, and determined by the court before proceeding to the trial of the action, it being in fact a demurrer to the petition and not to the evidence. The proof sustained all the allegations of plaintiff's petition.

The court erred in rendering judgment in favor of the defendant and against the plaintiff. The petition stated a good cause of action, and the proof introduced authorized a judgment in favor of the plaintiff.

J. R. Hallowell, for defendant in error.

VALENTINE, J. The main question in this case is whether a father is liable in a civil action for damages for the wrongful acts of his minor son, where the son lives with the father, and is under his control, but where the acts complained of were not authorized by the father, were not done in his presence, had no connection with the father's business, were not ratified by him, and from which the father received no benefit. We must answer this question in the negative. The father in such a case is not liable. Baker v. Haldeman, 24 Mo. 219; Tift v. Tift, 4 Denio, 175; Moon v. Towers, 8 C. B. (N. S.) 611; S. C. 98 E. C. L. 611; McManus v. Crickett, 1 East, 106. In such a case the son alone is liable. Suppose a minor son, fifteen or twenty years of age, should steal a horse or rob a bank, and abscond with the proceeds of his larceny, does any one suppose that the father would have to answer therefor, either civilly or criminally? The minor alone would be liable, and he would be liable both civilly and criminally. The question in this case arose on a demurrer to the evidence interposed by the defendant under section 275 of the *351 Code as amended. Laws 1872, p. 329. The demurrer was sustained, and the action dismissed at plaintiff's costs. Now, neither the petition nor the evidence showed any cause of action against the defendant, who is the father of the person who, it is alleged, committed the wrongful acts. The evidence did not tend to prove any cause of action against the defendant, and hence we think the demurrer was rightfully sustained. There is nothing else in this case of sufficient importance to be considered. The judgment of the court below must be affirmed.

AMEY ANDREWS and another v. WILLIAM ALCORN, Adm'r, etc.

July Term, 1874.

1. Pleading: Attaching Copy of Note to Petition: Cannot be Reviewed in Supreme Court. In an action on two promissory notes and a mortgage, the petition did not contain a copy of either of the notes or the mortgage; and no copy of either was attached to or filed with the petition; and no reason was given why such copies were not furnished, (Code, §§ 118, 123;) and no question was raised in the court below as to the necessity for such copies; and no ruling of the court below upon any such question has been assigned for error in the supreme court: held, that no such question can be raised in the supreme court merely by a discussion of the questions in the briefs of counsel. No such question can be raised in the district court on demurrer.
2. Note and Mortgage: Pleading: Causes of Action: Immaterial Error. Where a petition, which in fact contains but one cause of action, with a proper prayer for relief, is divided into three counts, the first of which states a cause of action and the other two do not, but which, if taken in connection with the first count, modify and enlarge the cause of action stated in the first count; and these three counts are headed respectively as follows: "1st Cause of Action," "2d Cause of Action," "3d Cause of Action;" and the defendant moves the court to compel the plaintiff to elect upon which cause of action he will proceed; and also demurs to the petition on the ground "that there are not facts sufficient stated in either of said counts to constitute a cause of *action;" *352 and the court overrules both said motion and said demurrer; and afterwards a judgment is rendered in accordance with the prayer of the petition, and just such a judgment as would be proper if the words "1st

Cause of Action," "2d Cause of Action," and "3d Cause of Action" were stricken out of said petition: held, that although the district court may have erred in disregarding said words, still the error is not of such a substantial character as will require a reversal of the judgment by the supreme court. [Curtis v. Buckley, 14 Kan. 449.]<sup>1</sup>

3. Homestead: Purchase by Wife: Mortgage for Purchase Money.

Where a wife purchases a piece of land, and takes the title in her own name, and at the same time executes two promissory notes for the unpaid purchase money; and also executes a mortgage on the property to secure the payment of said notes; and said wife, at the time she purchases said property, intends to make the same her homestead, and afterwards does, with her husband, occupy the same as her homestead: held, that, notwithstanding said intention and said occupancy, the mortgage may be foreclosed, and the land sold to pay the unpaid purchase money for which said notes and mortgage were given.<sup>2</sup>

4. ———: Interest of Husband. The husband did not execute said notes or said mortgage, but the mortgage, nevertheless, may be foreclosed, and the land ordered to be sold free and clear from all right, title, and interest of the husband in or to said property, he being a party to the suit on his own motion.

Error from Bourbon district court.

<sup>1</sup>In the case of Andrews v. Alcorn, 13 Kan. *351, which was an action on two promissory notes and a mortgage, one of which notes was due and the other was not due, it was held that only one cause of action was stated in the petition. The petition was divided into three counts, and, using the language of the court in delivering the opinion in that case, the "first count set forth the substance of one of said notes, which was then due, and stated a good cause of action; the second count set forth the substance of the other note, but did not state any cause of action, for the reason only that this note was not yet due." This language leaves it to be inferred, by an irresistible implication, that if the note set forth in the second count of the petition had been due, two causes of action would unquestionably have been stated. The court by this language says, in substance, that the only reason why the second count of that petition did not state a cause of action as well as the first count was that the note set forth in the second count was not yet due. In that case both parties in the supreme court admitted that only one cause of action was set forth in the original petition. See briefs of counsel in that case. The court below in that case also held that only one cause of action was stated, and rendered judgment upon only one of the notes,—the one that was due, and the one that was set forth in the first count of the petition; and the supreme court, following the district court and the counsel of the parties in that case, also held that only one cause of action was stated, and so held for the single reason—"the reason only"—that the second note was not due when that action was commenced and tried in the district court. In this present case, however, all the notes were due when this action was commenced. The plaintiffs in error in this case say that the court below based its decision in this case upon the words printed in italics at the commencement of the second paragraph of the syllabus, in the case of Andrews v. Alcorn. Now, said words in italics are no part of the syllabus of that case, and constitute no part of the decision of the case, but are simply the words of the reporter. The court in that case decided that a promissory note, and a mortgage executed to secure the same, taken together, constitute only one cause of action; and also decided that even two promissory notes together, with a mortgage securing them, where only one of the notes is due, do not constitute more than one cause of action. But the court has never decided that two or more promissory notes, where all are due, do not constitute more than one cause of action; and it makes no difference whether the notes are secured by a mortgage or not. Per VALENTINE, J., Ambrose v. Parrott, 28 Kan. 697.

Foreclosure of mortgage, brought by Robert Hamilton, in his lifetime. Hamilton sold the mortgaged premises to Amey Andrews, a married woman, and she gave him her two notes, each for $400, one payable February 14, 1873, and the other February 14, 1874, and executed a mortgage on said lands to secure said notes. The action was commenced in May, 1873, against said Amey alone. Afterwards Jacob Andrews, the husband, was joined as a co-defendant, at his request. Before the trial Hamilton died, and Alcorn, as administrator was substituted. Trial at the September term, 1873, of the district court. Personal judgment against defendant Amey Andrews for the amount of the note past due, and judgment against both defendants of fore*closure, and for the sale of the mortgaged premises, and both defendants bring the case here on error.

This case presents, first, this question of practice: How many causes of action are there in a note and mortgage, or in several notes and mortgage? The petition below makes three separate causes of action,—one upon the note then past due, one upon the second note not yet due, and a third upon the mortgage itself. We maintain that an action upon any number of notes and the mortgage securing them, known as “the foreclosure of a mortgage,” is a special statutory proceeding, in the nature of a bill in chancery, and constitutes but one cause of action, the several notes making up the whole amount secured by the mortgage, and only requiring a statement of the facts, in “plain and concise language,” in one count; the allegation of indebtedness upon the notes, and that the mortgage was given to secure them, being the material facts. All the forms and precedents indicate this as the proper practice. See similar statute of Iowa, §§ 3660, 3661, Rev. 1860; Tomlinson v. Funston, 1 G. Greene, 545; McDowell v. Lloyd, 22 Iowa, 448. The second count in the petition is based upon the note coming due February 14, 1874; and that a note not yet due can be a good cause of action seems absurd. If there was then but one cause of action, and the pleader divided it into three, the court erred in overruling the motion to compel plaintiff to elect upon which cause of action he would proceed, and which remedy he would pursue. Sturges v. Burton, 8 Ohio St. 215.

The court also erred in overruling the separate demurrer of Amey Andrews, it being to each count separately. If there was but one cause of action in all, the demurrer should have been sustained at least to the second and third counts, the second count being upon a note not due, and the third upon a mortgage securing it. Each count in a petition must be good in itself, and where a pleader must restate a count or refer to it in order to plead another, then they both make but one. Summit Co. Bank v. Smith, Handy, 575. In the notes" the mortgage was given; showing that the pleader was compelled to refer to the other two in order to make a third count at all, which is the exact point met and decided in 1 Handy, 575. The manner of pleading in this petition, we think, proves the logic of 1 Handy, and that a foreclosure should be in one count, stating all the facts, and as a part of those facts that the notes and mortgage had been given and were due. The fact that the mortgage and notes constitute but one contract would seem to determine the number of counts. As to being one contract, see Kennion v. Kelsey, 10 Iowa, 443; Muzzy v. Knight, 8 Kan. *456. The real and well-understood object of a foreclosure is to obtain an order to sell the mortgaged premises to pay the debt; and to get the benefit of that, as to the whole debt, all the facts should be stated in one count, as upon the mortgage contract alone, the notes being part of such contract.

*354 case at bar the notes are first *set out in two separate counts, and the third count begins by saying that “said notes were given for purchase money,” and “that to secure the payment of said

The petition neither contains nor has attached a copy of the notes, as pointed out in the Code as necessary in such cases. If this is necessary in such a pleading, then the demurrer would be good as to the first count also; and we think it is necessary, in declaring upon a note or account alone, either to incorporate or attach a copy.

The court also erred in declaring the amount of the notes to be a lien upon the premises described in the pretended mortgage, and in ordering the same to be sold freed and cleared of all claim and interest of both defendants, for the reasons that the premises were the homestead of the defendants, and the mortgage was executed by the wife only. This court has decided in Edwards v. Fry, 9 Kan. *425, and Monroe v. May, 9 Kan. *474, "that a purchase of a homestead with a view to occupancy, followed by occupancy within a reasonable time, may secure ab initio a homestead inviolability." The admitted facts are that the premises were purchased with the intention of making them the homestead of the defendant Amey Andrews and her family, and that they had been actually occupied from the time of purchase since as such homestead. The findings and admitted facts bring this case exactly within the terms of the cases in 9 Kan. above cited, and make the property in the case at bar a homestead. And it has been settled that a mortgage upon a homestead, executed by the husband or wife alone, is void. Const. art. 15, § 9; Morris v. Ward, 5 Kan. *248; Dollman v. Harris, Id. *599. These fifth and ninth Kansas cases decide that the constitutional exemption should be liberally viewed and construed; and if so, then the exceptions should be strictly construed; and the exception refers only to non-exemption from forced sale for the purchase money, and not to the creation of a lien. Section 9 of article 15 says, too, that a lien upon a homestead is obtained only "by the consent of both husband and wife, when that relation exists," or at least it means that. Then, if a lien can only be created by the consent of both, this mortgage was no lien, since it was by the consent of one only. As we understand said section 9, it is that when suit is brought for purchase money, even of a homestead, the court should make a finding of that fact, and then the law would not allow an exemption to hold against the execution. But it does not, nor does the statute, empower the court to decree that such money is a lien; for, if so, it would be in effect to hold that we have vendors' liens in Kansas, which this court has decided not to be true. Then, if the court could not adjudge purchase money to be a lien, neither can it adjudge a void mortgage to be a lien.

Again, the court erred in ordering the premises to be sold, freed and cleared of all right and title of both defendants. Jacob Andrews did not execute the mortgage; and as to the validity of a deed or mortgage not executed by the wife, see Hait v. Houle, 19 Wis. 472, and cases there cited, which will apply equally to the husband, since in this state the husband and wife stand in the same relation to each other. At the very least, then, so much of this decree as bars the husband, who did not execute the mortgage, should be modified.

The first error complained of by the plaintiff in error is that the court erred in overruling the motion of the defendant in the court below, to compel the plaintiff to elect upon which cause of action he would rely; and in support of this proposition it is agreed that the petition did not disclose but one cause of action. The counsel fail to note the distinction between "one cause of action" improperly subdivided into two or more causes, and a fictitious restatement of the same cause of action in a second count, as was the case in Sturges v. Burton, 8 Ohio St. 215, to which he refers.

The demurrer to the second cause of action was properly overruled, because in fact and in law, and according to the argument of the plaintiff in error, there was but one cause of action stated in the petition. The facts as stated in the petition are one cause of action. The facts are stated in logical order, and the numbering of the paragraphs on the margin of the petition as "first," "second," and "third" cause of action will be disregarded as surplusage. The errors complained of are immaterial, and do not prejudice the substantial rights of the plaintiffs in error. This is the law of appellate procedure. Powell, App. Proc. 125. It is the repeatedly announced doctrine of this court. Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Pointer, 9 Kan. *621.

It is contended in this case that the mortgage is void because it was upon a homestead, and is not signed by the husband. There is nothing in the record to show that the land was occupied as a homestead at the time this mortgage was given. The mortgage is dated the fourteenth day of February, 1872. It was given for the purchase money. The occupation commenced upon the same day. This is all the record shows. It does not, then, affirmatively appear that it was occupied as a homestead when the mortgage was given. The inference would be that the property was first conveyed to Mrs. Andrews; that she gave these notes and mortgage for the purchase money, *357 and then moved into it as a homestead,—*this all occurring in one day. The doctrine of Edwards v. Fry and Monroe v. May, 9 Kan., does not fit this case. This court also holds if an attachment intervene between the purchase and occupancy, the homestead does not defeat the attachment. Bullene v. Hiatt, 12 Kan. *98. It becomes a homestead ab initio by the occupancy. But if a woman purchase a piece of land with the intent to occupy it as a homestead, she may dispose of it as she pleases before it is so occupied. She may change the intent, and never so occupy it. Then, as the record does not show (and error must be made affirmatively to appear) that this land was "occupied" as a homestead at the time the mortgage was given, it does not require the joint act of husband and wife to alienate it, even if it had not been given for the purchase money. But this was given for the purchase money, and the homestead exemption has no validity as against debts of this class.

The other error complained of is that a copy of note and mortgage was not set out in the petition. There are two answers to this: First, the point was not raised in the court below; second, the law does not require a copy of the note and mortgage to be set out in the petition. Nash. Pl. 787; Swan, Pl. 200.

VALENTINE, J. This was an action on two promissory notes and a mortgage. The judgment was in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendants now bring the case to this court. The petition did not contain a copy of either of the notes or the mortgage. No copy of either was attached to or filed with the petition, and no reason was given why such copies were not furnished. Code, §§ 118, 123. But as no question was raised in the court below as to the necessity for such copies, and as no ruling of the court below upon any such question has been assigned for error in this court, no such question can now, and for the first time, be raised in this court, merely by *358 a discussion of the question in *the briefs of counsel. No such question can be raised in the district court on demurrer.

The petition below was divided into three counts, headed, respectively, as follows: "1st Cause of Action," "2d Cause of Action," and "3d Cause of Action." The first count set forth the substance of one of said notes, which was then due, and stated a good cause of action. The second count set forth the substance of the other note, but did not state any cause of action, for the reason only that this note was not yet due. The third count set forth the substance of said mortgage, but probably did not state facts sufficient to constitute any cause of action thereon. The prayer for relief was just what it should have been if the words "1st Cause of Action," "2d Cause of Action," and "3d Cause of Action" had been stricken from the petition, and everything else stated in the petition had been stated (as it should have been stated) in one count only, and the judgment was in accordance with the prayer for relief. The defendant Amey Andrews moved to require the plaintiff to elect upon which cause of action he would proceed. The court overruled the motion. Said defendant then filed a demurrer, demurring separately to each and every count in plaintiff's petition set forth, and assigned as grounds of demurrer that there were not facts sufficient stated in either of said counts to constitute a cause of action. The court overruled the demurrer. Now, while we think that the court might properly have sustained, and perhaps ought to have sustained, both said motion and said demurrer, (the demurrer, however, only as to the second and third counts,) as a punishment to the pleader for negligently inserting the useless words—in fact, worse than useless words—"1st Cause of Action," "2d Cause of Action," and "3d Cause of Action," in his petition, yet we do not think that the court committed any substantial error by overruling said motion and said demurrer. Only one cause of action was in fact stated in the whole of said petition. It is true, the first count, taken alone, stated a cause of action,—an ordinary *359 cause of action on a promissory *note; but it is also true that the whole of the petition, taken together, (with these useless words stricken out,) stated only one cause of action,—an ordinary cause of action on two promissory notes, (one due and the other not yet due,) and a mortgage executed to secure their payment. While the facts stated in the first count constituted a cause of action, the facts stated in the other two counts (so called) simply modified and enlarged that cause of action; and as all the facts stated in the whole petition constituted but one cause of action, they should all have been stated in one count. We suppose the court below treated said useless words merely as surplusage, and in this the court perhaps may have erred; but the error was slight, and, as substantial justice was done to all the parties, we shall not now reverse the judgment of the court below merely on account of such immaterial error. Code, §§ 140, 304.

Said promissory notes were given for the unpaid purchase money of a certain piece of land. The mortgage was given on the same land, and at the time of the purchase thereof, to secure the payment of said notes. The defendants below also claim that the defendant Amey Andrews purchased the land with the intention of making it her homestead; that afterwards she did make it her homestead; that said mortgage was executed by herself alone, without her husband, Jacob Andrews, the other defendant, joining with her in its execution; and therefore they claim that said mortgage is void. There are at least two answers to this claim: First. The mortgage was given for the unpaid purchase money of the mortgaged premises at the time of the purchase. Pratt v. Topeka Bank, 12 Kan. *570. Second. Her intention to make said property her homestead was not her only intention. She also at the same time entertained the intention, as expressed in her mortgage, to pledge the property she was then purchasing as a security for the unpaid purchase money which she was to pay on her said intended homestead. Her intention to make the property her homestead was modified by her other inten-be enforced as really one intention; that is, the property can be held as her homestead subject to the payment of the purchase money. She did not intend when she purchased the property, as the mortgage shows, to cheat and defraud the vendor out of the purchase money; and she did not intend, as the mortgage shows, to make her homestead right paramount to the lien of the vendor, which she expressly gave him on the property for the purchase money. But her intention was, as the mortgage shows, decidedly the contrary. It has already been decided in this court that at any time before the property actually becomes a homestead a lien, which could not be created on a homestead, may be created on such property the same as on any other property; and the fact that the property afterwards becomes a homestead will not destroy the lien thus previously created. Bullene v. Hiatt, 12 Kan. *98. And a vendor's lien on real estate may be created at the time of the purchase of the same by the express contract of the parties to the purchase and sale. Smith v. Rowland, ante, 245.

The title to said property, after Mrs. Andrews purchased the same, was wholly in her. Her husband, Jacob Andrews, had no interest in the property, except such as he might have by virtue of being her husband, and by virtue of residing on and occupying the property as a homestead. Mrs. Andrews alone executed said notes and mortgage. The court below rendered a personal judgment against Mrs. Andrews for the amount due on the first note, but rendered no personal judgment against Jacob Andrews. The court, however, rendered a judgment against both of the defendants that the amount of the notes was a lien on the mortgaged premises, and that said premises should be sold free and clear of and from all right, title, and interest of both of the defendants to discharge said lien, etc. Of this judgment the defendant Jacob Andrews now complains, and he com-

*361 plains merely on the ground that he was not a party to said notes or mortgage. Now, he was in possession of the property, claiming it as his homestead, and was a proper party to the suit and to the judgment; and he was made a party to the action on his own motion, after the suit had been previously commenced against his wife alone; and he had no interest in the property which could not be destroyed by a valid execution sale against his wife. In this state all property not exempt from execution or other final process may be sold at judicial sale. Civil Code, § 443. And as we have before seen, this property, by virtue of being a homestead, is not exempt from sale under a judgment rendered for the unpaid purchase money, and it is not claimed that it is exempt for any other reason. All right, title, and interest of Amey Andrews may therefore be sold on execution or other final process, and such sale will divest Jacob Andrews of all his interest in the property, as he holds wholly under his wife. In this state, when the real estate of a husband or wife is sold at judicial sale, there is nothing left for the other to inherit or receive after the death of the one who owns the real estate. The rights of husband and wife are precisely alike in this respect. Gen. St. 395, c. 33, § 28. And the statute clearly shows that the wife, on the death of her husband, obtains no interest in any real estate ever owned by the husband, if the same had previously been sold to pay his debts on any execution or other final process. Gen. St. 393, c. 33, § 8. Therefore, as the court below had a right to render a judgment against the wife, in whom the title to the property was vested, ordering the property to be sold free and clear from all right, title, and interest held by the wife therein, we think it necessarily follows that the court also had a right to render a judgment against the husband, who held solely under his wife, ordering the property to be sold free and clear from all right, title, and interest held by him in the property. Such a judgment would seem to be necessary to bar the husband's homestead interest.

The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

*SUSAN J. SMITH v. HELEN M. PAYTON.

July Term, 1874.

Attachment: Return-day: Service and Return of Order. Where an order of attachment is issued at the commencement of an action, and the clerk fixes the return-day thereof at twenty days from its date, instead of within ten days as prescribed by law, the order of attachment is not void for that reason, and the sheriff may serve the same at any time within ten days of its date; and when so served it is error for the court to set aside and vacate such order merely because of such mistake of the clerk in fixing the return-day.

Error from Labette district court.

The case is stated in the opinion.

F. A. Bettis, for plaintiff in error.

The court cannot presume that the order of attachment was applied for and obtained at the time of commencing suit. In truth, the affidavit for attachment recites that the suit had already been commenced. But if the order should have been made returnable in ten instead of twenty days, it was a mere irregularity, and the court should have ordered its amendment in "furtherance of justice." Code, § 139; Irwin v. Bank of Bellefontaine, 6 Ohio St. 81; Very v. Levy, 13 How. 350; Ames v. Weston, 4 Shep. 266. But the direction to the officer to return the writ in twenty days is mere surplusage. The officer must take notice of and follow the law. The law fixes the time of the return, and the Code nowhere requires the order of attachment to designate the return-day. "The court must, in every stage of the cause, disregard every error or defect in the pleadings or proceedings which does not affect the substantial rights of the *363 adverse party." Code, § 140. The error in the order, if *any existed, was a mere mistake of the clerk, and in nowise affected any substantial right of the defendant in error.

The judicial discretion as to amendments, under section 139, is not reviewable, except in case of gross abuse thereof. Of this there is no information upon the facts brought to this court.

The process was void, and could not be amended, and the amendment would not have validated the order. The attachment was issued and served three days before the filing of the petition and commencement of the suit. Code, §§ 57, 100. The affidavit was properly ruled insufficient, since it was entitled in the action, whereas no action had been commenced, and it does not state that Smith ought to recover of Payton, nor that the latter was a non-resident, nor other ground for the attachment, save by referring to "said defendant," when there was no defendant. Milliken v. Selye, 3 Denio, 54; 7 How. 127. The attachment was issued with the summons, and should have been returnable at the same time as the summons, (Code, § 195,) but was ten days later.

VALENTINE, J. In this action an order of attachment was issued. The defendant moved the court to set aside and vacate said order on the following grounds, to-wit: "(1) It was issued at the commencement of the action, and the return-day thereof is not the same as that of the summons. (2) The return-day of the order appears on its face to have been altered after the issuing thereof. (3) There is no proof of service or return of the order. (4) The affidavit on which the order is based is insufficient in not showing the specifications required by the statute for the issuing of the order. (5) There has been no publication nor commencement of action. Said motion will be based upon the papers in the action." The motion came on to be heard upon the papers in the case. "And thereupon the *364 plaintiff, by her attorney, F. A. Bettis, *moved the court for leave to amend the order of attachment in the cause issued by making the return-day thereof ten days from the date of the issue thereof, which the court refused; to which the plaintiff then and there excepted. And the court, having heard the argument of counsel upon the motion to discharge the order, doth find that said order of attachment is void, and not amendable, and doth order that the same

The action seems to have been commenced on the twenty-fifth of September, 1872. Both the summons and the order of attachment were issued on that day. The only irregularities appearing in the record of the proceedings are as follows: The petition is marked "Filed September 28, 1872," and the return-day of the order of attachment is October 15, 1872, while that of the summons is October 5, 1872. From the other evidence contained in the record, we must consider the marking of the petition as "Filed September 28th," a clerical mistake. It should have been marked "Filed September 25th." No action can be commenced except by filing a petition; and no summons or order of attachment can be issued except at the time of, or after the commencement of, an action. Section 57 of the Code provides that "a civil action may be commenced in a court of record by filing in the office of the clerk of the proper court a petition, and causing a summons to be issued thereon." Gen. St. 640, 641. Section 190 of the Code provides that "the plaintiff, in a civil action for the recovery of money, may, at or after the commencement thereof, have an attachment," etc. Laws 1870, p. 171, § 4. Now, the presumptions of law are always in favor of the regularity of the proceedings of a public officer, and it is much less probable that the clerk of the district court in this case should have made a mistake in issuing a summons and order of attachment before any suit was commenced than that he should have made a mistake in marking the time of filing the petition. It is scarcely possible *365 that the clerk could have issued, *through mistake, a summons and an order of attachment three days before the petition was filed; but he might, through mistake, have marked the petition "Filed September 28th," when it was in fact filed September 25th. Besides, the affidavit for the order of attachment was sworn to and filed on the twenty-fifth of September, and the plaintiff in the affidavit then swears "that said plaintiff, Susan J. Smith, has commenced said suit against the above-named defendant, Helen Payton," etc. An affidavit for service by publication was also filed in the case, and in this affidavit the affiant, W. P. Lamb, attorney for the plaintiff, says that "said cause was commenced on the twenty-fifth day of September, 1872, by the filing of a petition, the issuing of a summons thereon, and the filing of an affidavit for attachment, and the issuing of an order of attachment thereon," etc. The defendant herself, in her motion to set aside the order of attachment, says that the order of attachment was issued at the commencement of the action, etc.; and she does not at any time, as appears from the record, make any specific point that the order was issued before the petition was filed. This is a strong admission against the defendant. We are therefore led irresistibly to the conclusion that the petition was in fact filed September 25th.

The only question, then, for us to consider is whether the order of attachment was void because it was made returnable in twenty days instead of in ten days. Section 195 of the Code provides that the return-day of the order of attachment, when issued at the commencement of the action, shall be the same as that of the summons; when issued afterwards, it shall be twenty days after it is issued. Gen. St. 666. And section 61 of the Code provides that "the summons shall be served and returned by the officer to whom it is delivered, except when issued to any other county than the one in which the action is commenced, within ten days from its date. Gen. St. 641. In the present case the order of attachment was issued on the day of the commencement of the suit, but whether at the time of the commencement of the suit or afterwards is not shown, except, possibly, *366 by the affidavit of the plaintiff made for the purpose *of obtaining the order of attachment filed September 25th, where she says "that said plaintiff, Susan J. Smith, has commenced said suit," etc. This would indicate that the order was issued after the commencement of the suit. But, for the purposes of this case, suppose that the order was issued at the commencement of the suit, then was the order void? We think not. The statute fixes the return-day of the writ, and not the clerk. Code, §§ 61, 195. And even though the clerk should make a mistake in designating the true return-day, still his mistake would not invalidate the writ. It would still be the duty of the sheriff to serve the writ within the time prescribed by law, and then return the same to the court. The statute does not even require that the clerk should designate the return-day. In the present case the writ was not only served within ten days from its date, as prescribed by the statute, but it was completely served within two days. The writ in this case was returned twenty-one days after it was issued; but we suppose that it will not be claimed that a writ, or the service thereof, becomes void by reason of a failure of the sheriff to return the writ on the return-day. It is the general practice of sheriffs not to return writs until after the return-day. The order of attachment issued in this case should not have been set aside, and therefore the order of the court below setting it aside must be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

July Term, 1874.

1. Counties: Officers of New Counties: Term of Office: Vacancies. On the tenth of April, 1872, the governor, having received the requisite preliminary papers preparatory to the organization of the county of Harvey, appointed commissioners and clerk for that purpose, as the statute requires. On the twentieth of May thereafter an election was held, at which all the county officers were elected. At the succeeding general election all the county officers were elected, and among them C. A. Tracy was elected sheriff. At the general election in 1873 the plaintiff was elected sheriff. Held, that Tracy was elected to fill the unexpired term until the time provided by the general law for the election of sheriff should arrive.
2. County Officers: Constitutional Term. The provisions of section 3 of article 9 of the constitution, that "all county officers shall hold their offices for the term of two years, and until their successors shall be qualified," applies only to the regular term of the office, and not to vacancies or exceptional cases. [Odell v. Dodge, 16 Kan. 448; Ottawa Co. v. Nelson, 19 Kan. 243.]
3. ———: In New Counties. The legislature has the power to say how county officers shall be elected, and when their terms shall commence, and to make that commencement uniform throughout the state; and to provide how vacancies shall be filled, and how the officers of a newly-organized county shall be elected, until the time when such offices are filled according to the provisions of the general law.<sup>2</sup>
4. Mandamus: Parties. The action of mandamus must be brought by the proper public officer or the real party in interest.]

Original proceedings in mandamus.

Hagerty, claiming to have been elected to the office of sheriff of Harvey county, at the general election held in November, 1873, for the term of two years, to commence in January, 1874, commenced proceedings in this court on the twenty-first of November, 1873, in his own name, as plaintiff, to compel the board of county commissioners and the county clerk of said Harvey county to canvass the votes cast at said election for county officers. An alternative writ was granted and issued. After reciting the facts at length, (which are sufficiently stated in the opinion,) said writ is as follows:

"Now, therefore, we being willing that speedy justice may be done in the premises, do command and require you, the said defendants

<sup>2</sup>Where the first election in a newly-organized county is held for county officers on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday in November, the day for holding general elections, all county officers then elected continue to hold their offices until the next general election, and until their successors are elected and qualified. B. C. Arnold, A. G. Richardson, and T. S. Floyd, as county commissioners of the said county of Harvey, and you, the said defendant *368 H. W. Bailey, as county *clerk of the said county of Harvey, and each of you, to meet at the office of the county clerk of the said county of Harvey on the twenty-eighth day of November, 1873, at the hour of 10 o'clock in the forenoon; and that then and there, as such county commissioners, you, the said B. C. Arnold, A. G. Richardson, and T. S. Floyd, proceed to open the several returns of said election made to said office of county clerk, and make due canvass thereof, and from such returns you then and there determine the persons who have received the greatest number of votes at the said election for the said several county offices aforesaid, and reduce such determination to writing, and sign the same as such county commissioners; and we do command and require you, the said defendant H. W. Bailey, as such county clerk of said county of Harvey, as soon as said commissioners have determined the persons who have received the highest number of votes at said election for said several county offices, to make out, sign, certify, and deposit in your said office, an abstract of the votes cast at said election for said several county offices of the said county of Harvey; or that, in default thereof, you, the defendants, and each of you, show cause, if any you have, to the supreme court of the state of Kansas, by the sixth day of January, 1874, why you have not done as herein commanded and required; and have you then and there this writ, with your return thereon.

"Witness the Hon. SAMUEL A. KINGMAN, chief justice of the supreme court of the state of Kansas, at chambers, at the city of Topeka, this twenty-first day of November, 1873.

[Seal.]

"A. HAMMATT, Clerk Supreme Court."

The allowance of said writ was indorsed on the back thereof, (Code, § 693,) as follows:

"The within writ of mandamus allowed and granted by me this twenty-first day of November, 1873.

"S. A. KINGMAN,

"Chief Justice of Supreme Court of Kansas."

Arnold and Floyd, commissioners, and Bailey, county clerk, moved to quash the writ as to all the county offices except the office of sheriff, because the plaintiff, Hagerty, was a private person, having no interest in any office other than that of sheriff; and as to the office of sheriff, they made a return, admitting the facts as alleged, but claiming that the election of Hagerty as sheriff of said county, *369 in the year 1873, was *void, said office having an incumbent, duly elected and qualified, whose term did not expire until the second Monday of January, 1875.

C. C. Nichols, for plaintiff.

The only questions raised by defendants' return to the alternative writ are questions of law, and are substantially these: Was there a sheriff for Harvey county for the regular term, to commence in January, 1874, to be elected at the general election held in November, 1873? Or, in other words, was C. A. Tracy, the then present incumbent of that office, and who was elected in November, 1872, chosen sheriff of said county for a regular term of two years, or for an unexpired term of one year? If C. A. Tracy was chosen for an unexpired term, ending on the second Monday of January, 1874, then the election of the plaintiff, Hagerty, in November, 1873, was legal, and on said Monday in January (1874) next after his election he was entitled to the office.

If the acts of our legislature concerning the subject-matter in issue are not beyond the pale of the constitution, there can be but little or no doubt in the matter. The provisions of our constitution relating to this question are section 19 of article 2; section 2 of article 4; section 1 of article 9; section 2 of article 9; section 3 of article 9; section 1 of article 15; section 2 of article 15. Now, taking all these sections of the constitution of our state, and considering them separately, or as a whole, and I arrive at one conclusion, namely, that the constitution of our state, so far as it relates to county offices and officers, has but one restrictive provision in it, and that it has clothed our legislature with authority concerning county offices and county officers. On this question it is totally silent, except where it declares the term of county officers, and where it delegates all other powers concerning them to the legislature, to be disposed of and provided for as the legislature in its wisdom may direct. The constitution

*370 does not create a single county office, unless by implication it creates the office of county sheriff and the office of county treasurer; but it vests in the legislature the power to create such county offices as may be necessary, not even declaring whether the incumbents of such county offices as the legislature may create shall be filled by election or appointment, but leaves the matter with the legislature, and as it may provide. The constitution does not, by inference or otherwise, declare that the terms of county officers shall all be regular terms of two years; nor does it preclude the idea that they may not be, nor the idea of an unexpired term. It does not fix the date when regular terms shall begin, nor does it preclude the legislature from so doing, nor from making that date uniform in every county throughout the state. And in view of these facts, the legislature has enacted such laws as to it seemed wise in the premises. They have said that all county officers should be elected for full terms once in two years; that the regular term shall commence on the second Monday in January after their election; that sheriffs shall be elected for a full term in the odd years; and that whenever a sheriff shall be elected at any other time it shall be for the unexpired term only; and this rule (the terms and commencement thereof being fixed by other provisions) applies to the first officers elected in newly-organized counties as well as to those subsequently elected. If section the said county of Harvey; that the said Tracy duly qualified, and on the thirteenth of January, 1873, entered upon the discharge of the duties of his said office; that since said time he has neither resigned, died, nor been removed from said office, but that, on the contrary, he has ever since said time been and now is discharging the duties of said office of sheriff. The facts being admitted as proved, the first and only question to be solved is, for what period of time was Tracy elected to hold said office of sheriff at said general election in 1872? If this question is answered by the court, as we think it must be, that he was elected for the period of two years, then, of course, the matter is ended, and the peremptory writ will be refused, for the very obvious reasons that if there was by the laws of this state, and the circumstances of the case, no person to be elected to fill the office of sheriff of Harvey county at the general election held on the fourth of November, 1873, it follows, of course, that any votes cast at such election for any person to fill such office were mere nullities, and the canvass of such votes would be of no benefit to the plaintiff or any one else; and this being the case, the writ, under the rulings of this court, must be refused. Tarr v. Haughey, 5 Kan. *638; Gossard v. Vaught, 10 Kan. *162. If, however, upon the other hand, the court should hold that Tracy was elected to hold his office only until the general election of 1873, it will of course be admitted that a peremptory writ must be issued.

In order to reach a determination of the question as to what period of time Tracy was elected at the general election in 1872 to serve as sheriff of Harvey county, it will be necessary to examine the constitutional provisions in reference to such elections. Section 3 of article 9 of the constitution is as follows: "All county officers shall hold their offices for the term of two years, and until their successors shall be qualified." Section 2 of article 4 provides that two elections shall be held each year,—one to be a general election and the other to be a township election. It of course follows from this constitutional provision in relation to elections that all county officers, and all other officers, to be elected other than township officers, are to be elected at the general election, whenever they are elected to fill the constitutional term of office. In other words, (in the absence of express statutes to the contrary, at least,) every constitutional term of a county office must commence with a general election. And if this were not so by reason of the constitution itself, it would be so by reason of the provisions of chapter 36 of the General Statutes. By the same constitutional provision in relation to elections, we find that the general elections are to be held in November of each year. It appearing from the facts in this case that the first general election which ever could have or ever in fact was held in the county of Harvey was held on the fifth of November, 1872, it seems to us to inevitably follow as a conclusion that the constitutional term of the office of sheriff in that county could only have commenced from the first general election. In other words, the constitutional term of office for sheriff of Harvey county had never commenced to or had run in Harvey county prior to or before the first general election held in that county.

*375 If the propo*sitions above made be correct, then it seems to us that all that remains of this question to be discussed is whether the constitutional provision above quoted in reference to the terms of county officers is self-asserting, or whether it lays in abeyance until called into life by an act of the legislature. If the constitutional provision fixing the term of county officers is self-asserting, it of course follows that it immediately asserted itself at this first general election, and attached itself to the office of sheriff of Harvey county, and that therefore Tracy was elected to fill that office for the term of two years. But if this constitutional provision is not self-asserting, and lays in abeyance until called into life by an act of the legislature, it follows that the legislature has a right of control over it, and to say when it shall run, and when it shall not run; and having, by section 2, p. 428, Gen. St., said when the constitutional term of the office of sheriff in every county in this state shall commence to run, it can only commence to run from such time; and therefore we admit that if the legislature has control over this constitutional provision, and can say when it shall run and when it shall not, that by this section of the statute above quoted the constitutional term of office of sheriff of Harvey county did not and could not commence to run until the general election held in that county on the fourth of November, 1873, and that Tracy was only elected to fill an interregnum that necessarily existed in the office of sheriff of that county from the general election of 1872 to the general election of 1873. In other words, under this construction it must be held that the constitutional term of the office of sheriff in that county lay in abeyance until the general election of 1873; for, as we have seen, it can only commence to run from some general election, and that prior to the general election of 1873 there had never been a general election held in that county which would give to it a starting point by reason of this statute. To go back to our starting point, we think, beyond a doubt, that the plaintiff in this action, in order to maintain it at all, is forced to squarely take *376 the position that this constitutional *provision is not self-asserting, but is subordinate to the will of the legislature, and can only come into life and force upon an expression of such will; and that, therefore, by the terms of said section 2, p. 428, Gen. St., it necessarily lay in abeyance until the general election of 1873.

The defendants take the position that it is self-asserting, and will always attach itself to any term of office, at any general election, where it ought to attach itself if it be self-asserting, irrespective of any and all acts of the legislature concerning it; that the legislature has no power or control over it; that it never lays in abeyance; and that, therefore, it will always, in every newly-organized county, in evitably assert itself at the first general election held in such counties, the legislature to the contrary notwithstanding. Which of these two positions is the correct one? We think that this question has been fully, forcibly, and squarely answered by this court in the case of State v. Thoman, decided by this court at the July term in 1872. 10 Kan. *191. The facts in that case, the court will remember, were these: The legislature, in 1867, created the Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, and Ninth judicial districts, and provided that at the next general election judges should be elected in each of these districts to hold their offices for the term of four years, and until their successors in office were elected. John R. Goodin was elected under this law at the general election in 1867, as judge of the Seventh judicial district. At the general election in the fall of 1871 he was again elected judge of that district. The question before the court was, was Judge Goodin elected at the general election in 1871 for the constitutional term of four years, or was he elected merely to fill an interregnum existing between the time when his office expired under the election of 1867 and the general election of 1872? Section 3, p. 428, Gen. St., had attempted to fix the time when the constitutional term of the offices of district judges should run, in just the same way as section 2 of the same page attempts to fix the time when the constitutional terms of county officers shall run, and by that section the time fixed for *377 the *election of district judges for the constitutional term was at the general election in 1868, and every four years thereafter. While it was admitted by the defendant in that action that the legislature had a right, by special statute, to provide for the election of a judge in 1867 in the Seventh judicial district, and that such judge should hold his office for the constitutional term of four years, yet the defendant contended (and of course rightly) that upon the expiration of this four years, for which Judge Goodin was elected in 1867 under this special law, that the special law had spent its whole force, and that after that term provided for by it had expired it had nothing further to do with the election of judges in that district. Then it was further contended for by the defendant that section 5 of article 3 of the constitution, fixing the period of the terms of district judges, just the same as section 3 of article 9 fixes the period of the terms of county officers, was not self-asserting, and only came into existence when called into life by an act of the legislature; and that section 3, p. 428, Gen. St., had fixed the precise times, and the only times, when the constitutional terms could attach to the office of district judge in this state, except only when otherwise changed by special laws, and therefore it was further claimed as the very logic of the position that this provision was not self-asserting; that, as the legislature had by the special law only given this constitutional promise life during the four years immediately succeeding the general election of 1867, its life expired with the expiration of that four years, and thereafter depended entirely upon section 3, p. 428, Gen. St., (in the absence of any other act of the legislature upon the subject,) in reference to its asserting and attaching itself to the office of district judge in that district; and that by that section of the statute it could only commence running and attach itself to that office from and after the general election to be held in 1872; and that by reason thereof there was an interregnum in the office of district judge of the Seventh judicial district from the general election in 1871 to the general election in 1872, during which the constitutional term lay in *378 *abeyance; and that therefore any one who was elected at the general election in 1871 could only hold until his successor should be elected in 1872. On the other hand, it was contended that the constitutional provision was self-asserting, and therefore immediately attached itself to the first general election held after the term provided for by the special law had expired; and that, therefore, Judge Goodin's election at the general election in 1871 was for the constitutional term of four years, notwithstanding section 3, p. 428, Gen. St. And this court, after a very able and elaborate argument of the question, decided that the constitutional provision was self-asserting,—was a higher and paramount law to the act of the legislature; and that notwithstanding section 3, p. 428, Gen. St., it attached itself to the office of judge of the Seventh judicial district at the first general election after the term provided for by the special law expired.

What is the very logic of this decision? It can be and is nothing else than that the legislature cannot control the constitutional provisions establishing the terms of any offices; that such provisions never lay dormant or in abeyance until called into life by an act of the legislature; that they spring into existence, and attach themselves to their respective offices, irrespective and regardless of any and all laws of the legislature upon the subject. Was or is this decision any more applicable to the construction of section 5 of article 3 of the constitution, and section 3, p. 428, Gen. St., than it is to the construction of section 3 of article 9 of the constitution, and section 2, p. 428, Gen. St.? Is not this decision conclusive upon the question as to whether section 5 of article 3 of the constitution, or section 3 of article 9 of the constitution, are self-asserting, by saying that they are? If this be so, is there any way to escape a conclusion in the case at bar in favor of the defendants? Is there any escape from saying that, by the very logic of this decision, the constitutional term for county officers in all newly-organized counties attaches itself to the various offices at the first general election held in such county?

Would this court have arrived at any other determination in *379 the above *case if the legislature had created the Seventh judicial district in 1871, and provided that the governor should appoint a person to act as judge until the general election in 1871, and remained silent as to how long the person elected judge at the general election in 1871 should serve, and a person elected at the general election in 1872 had brought the action under that state of facts? If this court would not have decided different under such a state of facts, what must be its decision in a case when a county, organized in the spring of 1872, provided with temporary officers until the general election in the fall of that year, and at that first general election county officers are elected, and the court is asked to decide that such county officers are not elected for a constitutional term, but are only elected to fill an interregnum that exists in such offices from the first general election in the county until the second general election in that county, by reason of the fact that the legislature has not permitted the constitution to assert itself in that county until such second general election?

But, again, outside of this decision, and the principles involved in it, we think that the law upon this subject is with the defendants, even conceding, for the sake of the argument, that the legislature has entire control of the provision of the constitution fixing the terms of county officers, and can say when such terms shall run and when they shall not; for although the legislature has said by section 2, p. 428, Gen. St., that the constitutional term of two years for the office of sheriff of any county shall run only from general elections held on the odd years in such county, yet this section is limited by exceptions made by section 5, same page, in its application; and we think that one of the exceptions provided for by this section 5 is in the case of any newly-organized county, when a special election has been held by the inhabitants thereof upon its organization, under section 3, p. 249, Gen. St., for county officers, and such county officers are elected by the people at such election, for the reason that section 8, p. 251,

Gen. St., provides that such county officers, so elected by *380 *the people, shall only hold their offices until the first general election thereafter, and their successors shall have been elected and qualified. Now, whenever the first general election in such a county comes on an even year, if the persons elected at such general election are not elected for the constitutional term of two years, it follows that the people of such county are called upon to hold two elections to fill one vacancy or interregnum. This, of course, would be no argument if the first county officers were appointed to hold until a general election, but as they are elected by the people, one such election would be sufficient to fill the one vacancy. Surely, the legislature never intended to require two elections to fill but one vacancy. Therefore we say that by section 8, p. 251, Gen. St., the legislature intended, in all cases of newly-organized counties, that at the first general election held in such counties their full complement of county officers should be elected for the full constitutional term. To give it any other construction would be to say that the legislature intended that in all newly-organized counties that happened to be organized in the even-numbered years there would be a vacancy in the offices of county clerk and county commissioners that would have to be filled (1) by an appointment by the governor; (2) by a special election by the people; (3) by a general election held by the people. Evidently the legislature had no such intention in enacting the various statutes in relation to the election of county officers.

KINGMAN, C. J. On the tenth of April, 1872, the governor, having received the requisite papers preparatory to the organization of the county of Harvey, appointed commissioners and county clerk for that purpose, as the statute requires. On the twentieth of May thereafter a special election was held, at which a full set of county officers was elected, and immediately thereafter qualified. At the general election in November, 1872, all the county officers were elected, among *381 which C. A. Tracy was elected sheriff. At the general election in November, 1873, the plaintiff was elected sheriff. But the defendants, the county commissioners and county clerk of said county, refused to canvass the votes therefor. The real question raised on these facts, and the only one necessary to decide, is this: Was Tracy elected for a full term of two years? If he was, it would be an idle thing to direct the canvass of the votes for the plaintiff. If he was not, then certainly the plaintiff is entitled to the office, and to have the votes canvassed and the result declared, so that he may enter upon the discharge of his duties.

The statutory provisions bearing upon this question are these: Chapter 24 of the General Statutes (page 249) provides for the organization of new counties; and, after directing how the county officers shall be elected at a special election, fixes their term of office in section 8, (page 251,) directing that they shall hold their respective offices until the next general election, and until their successors shall be elected and qualified. Section 2, p. 428, Gen. St., provides for the election of sheriff and certain other county officers at the general election in 1869, and at the general election in every second year thereafter. Section 57 of chapter 36 provides for filling vacancies in county offices, as well as others, by appointment, until the next general election; section 58 fixes the time when the regular term of office begins, on the second Monday of January next after the election; section 59 regulates the term of officers appointed or elected to fill vacancies, and therein declares that they shall hold during the unexpired term for which they are elected, and until their successors are elected and qualified. These are the material statutory provisions on the question, and from them we think it clear that it was the purpose of the legislature to fix a uniform time for the commencement of the regular term of officers; one class to be elected in the odd years, and one class in the even years, and the term of each class to commence on the second Monday in January after their election; and wherever vacancies occurred, then the person elected to fill the same was only elected for the unexpired term, so *382 that all officers of any one class should, throughout the state, be elected at the same time, thus avoiding confusion, and the necessity for a great multiplicity of laws. If the statutory provisions upon the subject were alone to be consulted, we should have no doubt that Tracy's election as sheriff in November, 1872, was only for an unexpired term, and that his successor would be elected at the general election in 1873. We think this is the fair construction of the statutory provisions on the subject; and had the question rested on those provisions, it is not likely that any litigation would have ever grown out of them. The constitutional provision on this subject, and not the statutes, has given rise to the difficulties in this case.

Section 3 of article 9 prescribes the term of county officers in these words: "All county officers shall hold their office for the term of two years, and until their successors shall be qualified." It is contended that this section attaches to every county officer immediately upon the election or appointment of such officer. Taken in its hardest literal terms, and the clause seems to bear this construction, and would apply alike to all county officers, upon their accession to office, whether elected to fill a vacancy or for a full term, for it applies to all county officers, making no distinction between those appointed or elected to fill a vacancy, and those to fill a full term. Such a construction would be productive of great confusion, as, in the course of time, from removals, resignations, death, and other causes, it would come to pass that the commencement of the term of office would be different as to each office in a county, and in each county in the state. From other constitutional provisions it is apparent that but two elections are contemplated in a year,—a township election and a general election,—so that, to add to the confusion, it would happen that a great number of county officers would hold by appointment, while others might be elected. It is the general policy of the constitution that the people elect the officers, and this policy is the one adopted by the legislature. But as to county officers the constitution is silent.

It prescribes the length of their term, but as to how they shall *383 be selected, or when the term *shall begin, there is no provision. The conduct of public business, under circumstances such as above suggested, would be so difficult as to be nearly impracticable. We cannot think the framers of the constitution intended any such result; nor do we think it necessary to give such a construction to the clause. It was undoubtedly intended to fix the regular term of county officers at a uniform period of two years. The constitution furnishes general rules for the government of the state. It rarely comes down to details, and in this provision we understand the purpose to be to furnish a general rule fixing the duration of a regular term, and not provisions for a vacancy, or an exceptional case. We cannot give it the literal interpretation claimed by the defendants without making it absurd from its impracticable workings. We must therefore give it a construction that is neither violent nor unreasonable.

The provisions of the constitution as to some of the officers are explicit,—that they are to be elected; that in case of vacancy, it shall be filled by appointment; and the appointment runs only until the next general election that shall occur more than thirty days after such vacancy shall have happened, (section 14, art. 1; section 11, art. 3;) while as to county officers, the entire discretion is vested in the legislature as to how many there shall be, (with some possible exceptions,) how they shall be selected, when their terms shall begin, and what shall be their duties. The sole restriction is as to length of term. By giving this restrictive clause the fair construction of applying to the regular term of county offices, and not to vacancies or exceptional cases, we conform to the almost uniform practice of the counties of the state, to the construction placed upon it by the legislature in the statutes above referred to, and to the construction this court has heretofore given it in the case of Bond v. White, 8 Kan.

*333. Does this case form one of the exceptional ones? We think so. The legislature is given the power to provide for the organization of new counties. This includes the right to prescribe the terms and conditions prerequisite thereto, and all the steps necessary *384 to secure that result. Such *regulations are prescribed, and, among others, it is provided that their organization may be effected at any time when the prescribed conditions exist; that the first commissioners and clerk are to be appointed by the governor. At the first election the county officers are only to hold until the next general election, when another election is to be held. If section 3 of article 9 is to have any other construction than the one we have given it, then it applies with full force to the officers elected at the first election, and they must hold for a full term; and then each new county might, and probably would, have its political year beginning at a different period from that of any other county. It is not contended that the constitutional provision applies to these, nor is it consistent with the position of defendants that they should so hold; for then the first officers, and not themselves, would be entitled to hold the offices. This is not said by way of estoppel on the defendants, but as a suggestion of the consequences of giving to the section the construction claimed, and applying it to the organization of new counties.

We think that under the power to organize new counties the legislature had the power to designate how the offices shall be filled until the commencement of the regular term, and that the fact of its having provided for two elections does not derogate from their power. And we think that there is no doubt that the legislature may determine when a regular term shall commence, and that they have so determined in the election law; that certain of the county officers are elected in the odd years, and their terms commence in January of the even years, and that certain other county officers are elected in the even years, and their terms commence in January of the odd years. The term of all these offices is two years. The legislature cannot make them more nor less; but for vacancies, and for exceptional cases, such as the organization of new counties, we think they have the power to say how the office should be filled up to the time when the regular term commences, even if it requires two elections in one year. With these views, it follows that a peremptory writ must be awarded *385 against the defendants, commanding them to canvass the votes for plaintiff for sheriff of Harvey county.

While it is the duty of defendants to canvass the votes for the other officers mentioned in the alternative writ, we cannot command them so to do on the application of plaintiff. The application must be in the name of the proper public officer, or of the real party in interest, to authorize the court to act in the premises.

As the defendant A. G. Richardson, one of the board of commissioners, by his answer has shown his willingness to canvass the vote at the time prescribed by law, and his attendance at the proper place and time for that purpose, and was only prevented by the refusal of the other commissioners; and has also shown by his attendance at the time and place commanded in the alternative writ for the canvass of the vote, and by his request to the other commissioners to canvass the vote then and there,—the peremptory writ will go at the costs of the other defendants.

clerk, and the records thereof, from Osage Mission to Erie. The county-seat had been duly located at Osage Mission, and the county offices were there kept and held. An election was held March 26, 1872, for the purpose of relocating the county-seat. The board of county commissioners canvassed the vote, and caused proclamation thereof, showing that 3,391 votes had been cast, of which 1,712 were in favor of Erie, and 1,679 were in favor of Osage Mission, and determined that the county-seat, by a majority of 33 votes, was located at Erie. Butler, in his petition for an injunction, alleged that said election was void, claiming—First, that the petition for the election was fraudulent, and did not contain names of electors equal to three-fifths the whole number of electors in said county, as shown by the last registration made by the assessors, and on file in the county clerk's office, as provided by the "Act for the registration of all adult persons in each county," (chapter 86, Gen. St. 894; section 4, c. 26, Gen. St. 297;) second, that no valid election was held in Erie precinct. Regarding the first objection, Butler alleged that of the pretended signature to the election petition, more than six hundred in the aggregate were names of fictitious persons, minors, and non-residents, and names of resident electors signed thereto without their knowledge or consent. Respecting the election held at Erie precinct, Butler alleged that before the polls opened 83 fictitious names were placed on the poll-books, and a corresponding number of spurious ballots placed in the ballot-box; that 259 votes only were actually polled, (of which fifty were cast by minors and non-residents;) making the whole number, at the closing of the polls, (including said 83 spurious votes,) 342, of which the election board canvassed 337 as cast for Erie, and

and that said board manufactured new and spurious poll-books and returns, showing that 595 votes were cast at Erie precinct, (of which 590 were for Erie, and 5 for Osage Mission;) that these 595 votes so fraudulently returned from Erie were canvassed by the county board, and said 590 included in the number (1,712) canvassed and allowed in favor of Erie for the county-seat. McMillen answered, denying averments of the petition, and alleging that illegal and fraudulent votes were cast at Osage Mission, and other precincts, and canvassed for and in favor of Osage Mission for the county-seat.

The trial commenced on the twenty-third of April, 1872, (at the April term of the district court,) and continued through eleven days, until the fourth of May, when the trial was continued until the next term. The trial was resumed at the April term, 1873, when fifteen days more were occupied in taking testimony, and then the court took the case under advisement until the next term. More than fifty witnesses were sworn and examined. No testimony was offered in regard to the petition for the election, but the evidence on both sides was mainly in regard to the alleged frauds at Erie precinct, and alleged illegal and fraudulent voting at Osage Mission and other precincts. Five witnesses (citizens of Osage Mission) testified that they were present when the polls were closed at Erie, and proclamation of the result of the election there was made; that there were only 342 names on the poll-books, as numbered, and that the ballots were taken from the ballot-box, and counted in their presence, and were 342 in number.

One of the clerks of said election, called by defendant, testified: "At the time the polls closed the proclamation made was that the polls of that election was now closed. I did not hear anything said with regard to the votes cast. After the announcement that the polls were closed, they commenced counting out the votes. They continued to count until they got through. Don't know how long it was. Stopped counting two or three times, a little while at a time. Think Layng,

Quinlan, and other Osage Mission men left about 9 o'clock, *388 —may be not so late. It was before we had finished *counting the votes,—perhaps three-quarters of an hour. Don't know why they left at that time. We had between 300 and 400 votes counted out when they left. Think there was about the same number counted out when they left that we had numbered on the poll-books. About the time the Osage Mission men left, G. F. Dutton [of the judges of election] remarked to the house that the whole number of votes cast was 342, and remarked that we would like to have the room, and they [the Osage Mission men] lit out. That [342 votes] was not the true number. I knew they were not all out. Don't know why he [Dutton] did it; 342 may have been the last number that had been set down at that time. Immediately after those men left the house we took a little rest, and then commenced counting out again. I mean we recommenced counting out the balance of the ballots that were in the box. Commenced counting out of the same box we had been using all day. The box was open while they were taking the ballots out. Before the Mission men went away the board did not want the room cleared, or, at least, the board said nothing about wanting it cleared. The Mission men gave them no time to say anything about their remaining longer if they wanted to. At the time Dutton said the whole number of votes cast was 342 we had not numbered all the names that were on poll-books. None of the poll-books was in public view. They were not in public view all the time we were numbering them. They were in separate sheets. The sheets that we were numbering could have been seen by those in the room,—at least by those standing close by. We had sheets with names on them that were underneath the ones we were numbering. We kept them out of sight that way until the men from the Mission left. We did it simply because we knew that if the Mission men knew how many votes we polled they would poll four times as many in order to beat us. We had a couple of large blotting papers that we used, that we placed on top of our poll-books; kept one above and one below my hand. When we filled a sheet, would place it underneath the pile from which we were using. * * * I don't know what part of the page the number '342' was. The number may have been half-way down a page when the polls were closed. When the Mission men left I don't remember whether we had numbered all the names that appeared in their sight or not. We stopped counting because one of the judges said they were all counted out. I *389 did know better than that at the time. I said some*thing about it not being correct a little while afterwards. Think I asked him what he called out that number for, or something to that effect. He said it would not do to let those Mission men know how many were polled, for if we did they would go down and raise their count enough to beat us."

Considerable testimony was given by the defense for the purpose of showing that the Osage Mission party had used money improperly to influence voters in favor of Osage Mission. One witness testified that at the first election (at which there was no choice) he had voted for Erie, but afterwards sold his vote to the Missionites for two dollars and a half, and at the second election had voted for the Osage Mission. At the July term, 1873, the court made its findings of fact and conclusions of law. Its findings were that the election at Erie was legal, that the county commissioners rightly canvassed and counted the vote from that precinct as returned, and that Erie had received a majority of the legal votes cast;<sup>1</sup> and its conclusion was that plaintiff, Butler, was not entitled to the relief demanded. Judgment was entered in favor of the defendant.

BREWER, J. This is a contest over a county-seat election in Neosho county. The contestants now, as heretofore, were Osage Mission and Erie. As the result of the canvass, the county commis-*390 sioners declared that Erie had received a ma*jority, and directed the removal of the county offices to that place. Plaintiff in error, who was plaintiff below, instituted this proceeding to contest the election, and to restrain such removal. The judgment of the district court was in favor of the defendant, and sustained the result of the canvass as declared by the commissioners. The record of the case is very voluminous, comprising 647 pages of legal cap. As errors in the proceedings of the district court, plaintiff alleges certain rulings in the introduction of testimony, permitting an amendment of the answer, and certain of the findings of fact and conclusions of law.

[The commissioners' canvass was, total vote, 3,891,—1,712 for Erie, and 1,679 for Osage Mission; majority for Erie, 83. This election was held March 26, 1872. An examination of the official canvasses (as given in the Annual Reports of the Secretary of State) shows that the total vote cast in Neosho county at the general election was as follows: In November, 1871, for representatives, 1,949,—being 1,442 less than at the county-seat election held March 26, 1872; in November, 1872, for representatives, 2,709,—being 682 less than at the county-seat election of March 26, 1872; in November, 1873, for representatives, 2,032,—being 1,859 less than at the county-seat election held March 26, 1872.]

But, preliminary to any inquiry into these matters, we are met by a counter-objection on the part of the defendant, which, if well taken, is conclusive of the case. The trial was commenced at the April term, 1872, of the district court of Neosho county. The plaintiff introduced his testimony, and rested. The defendant commenced his, and examined a witness or two. All this testimony was reduced to writing as it was given. Before the defendant had rested, the April term closed, and the further hearing was postponed. The record reads as follows: "And the time fixed by law for the holding of said April term of court having expired, this cause was continued from term to term, until the April term of said court 1873, when the same was resumed." By law two terms intervened between the commencement and close of the trial. At the April term, 1873, the defendant finished his evidence. Rebutting testimony was offered, and the case submitted to the court. The trial in April, 1873, was treated as a continuance that began in April, 1872, and as though there had been but an adjournment from day to day during the same term. There was no formal offering of the testimony as written down,—no re-examination of the witnesses. Now, it is insisted by counsel for defendant in error that the trial which commenced in April, 1872, was ended by the close of the term, and that that in April, 1873, was a separate, independent trial, and as at that time no testimony was offered supporting the plaintiff's claim, the judgment was properly entered for defendant. We think *this objection of the defendant in error well taken. We do not understand that a case can be tried piecemeal in this way. Here two terms and a year's time intervene between the term at which part of the testimony is heard and that at which the remainder is introduced. If the case were tried before a jury, the impropriety would be more apparent, in view of the difficulty of securing the reattendance of the same triers; but the impropriety would not be more real, where a great length of time intervenes, as in this case. Undue weight will very likely be given to the testimony offered at one of the terms. The case is not presented to the consideration of the court in a symmetrical and well-proportioned manner. Impressions settle into convictions, while the manner of witnesses, and much of the minutia which gave rise to those impressions, are forgotten. It frequently happens that the testimony on the one side, even when not contradicted, is explained or qualified by that on the other, and, when so explained or qualified, carries a very different meaning from that which it conveys by itself alone. If this explanation or qualification is not heard for a year, it will often go but little ways towards changing the effect first produced on the mind. The whole force of the argument in favor of the statutory requirement that exceptions must be reduced to writing at the term is against the propriety of a trial in the manner this was tried.

Again at common law, the judgment, and all proceedings, were entered and dated as of the first day of the term, as though it was but a single day's duration, and there were no break or interruption of any kind in the session of the court. The idea seemed to be that a trial was a continuous proceeding, from its opening to its close. The jury were under charge of an officer, and forbidden to separate through the entire trial, and not, as now, only when counseling upon the verdict. A criminal trial once commenced must be carried through to its close, and a failure to finish it was equivalent to an acquittal of the defendant. Jurors were and are summoned only for the term.

Process for witnesses loses its force at the end of the term.

*392 *Exceptions must be reduced to writing at the term. Questions even have been raised as to the power to continue a motion for a new trial to a subsequent term, though in Ohio and in this state it has been decided that such a motion could be continued.

Coleman v. Edwards, 5 Ohio St. 51; Brenner v. Bigelow, 8 Kan. *496. In Ohio the continuance of such a motion does not carry with it the right to make a bill of exceptions as to rulings upon the trial. Kline v. Wynne, 10 Ohio St. 223; Morgan v. Boyd, 13 Ohio St. 271; "All indictments and information shall be tried at the first term at which the defendant appears, unless the same be continued for cause." Crim. Code, § 157; Gen. St. 845. "Actions shall be triable at the first term of the court after the issues therein, by the time fixed for pleading, are or should have been made up." Civil Code, § 315; Gen. St. 689. A trial docket is to be made out twelve days before the term, and actions set for particular days, and so arranged that they may be tried as nearly as possible on the days for which they are set. Code, § 313; Gen. St. 688. We are aware that the statute empowers the court to continue "an action at any stage of the proceedings." Code, § 316; Gen. St. 689. But the question here is not as to the power to continue, but the effect of the continuance. The court may break up a trial at any time, and continue the case; but at the next term the trial must be recommenced, and cannot be taken up where it was left off. "A final adjournment of the court for the term operates as a legal discharge of a jury, and terminates their functions as such." Ashbaugh v. Edgecomb, 13 Ind. 466. In Indiana there is a special statute applicable to cases where the time fixed by law for the close of a term comes in the midst of a trial. 2 Gav. & H. St. 27, § 32; Dorsch v. Rosenthal, 39 Ind. 209.

Our conclusion, then, is that inasmuch as the plaintiff, at the April term, 1873, offered no testimony to support his case, the defendant was entitled to judgment; and that it is immaterial whether any errors were committed in the rulings in April, 1872. At the time the *393 trial was resumed in April, *1873, the defendant objected to any consideration of the testimony offered the year previous, and moved for a dismissal of the case, so that the matter was fully called to the attention of the district court. While we have been constrained to place our decision upon this ground, we deem it due to the parties litigant and interested, and to the importance of the case, to say that we have examined the whole record before us, and considered all the objections made by counsel for plaintiff in error to the various rulings of the district court; and that while upon such record there appears a great conflict of testimony, yet, in accordance with well-settled rules of decision, we should have been compelled to uphold the findings of the trial court upon the disputed questions of fact.

The judgment will be affirmed.

E. T. CARR and another v. GEORGE O. CATLIN and others.

July Term, 1874.

1. Administration: Partnership Property: Liability of Administrator. Where one member of a partnership dies intestate, and the administrator of his individual estate gives the second bond required by the statute, and takes possession of the entire partnership property for the purpose of settling up the partnership estate, and thereafter converts such property to his own use, an action can be maintained against him and the sureties on said second bond, by any partnership creditor, without any allowance of such creditor's claim in the probate court, or any settlement of the partnership affairs in such court.<sup>1</sup>
2. ———: Citation to Surviving Partner: Appearance. The citation to the surviving partner, provided for by section 49 of the executor's act of 1859, (Comp. Laws, 520; Gen. St. 437, § 35,) only serves to bring such partner into court; and if, without any citation, he comes into the probate court, and files a written refusal to close up the partnership business, the court has jurisdiction to direct the administrator of the decedent to give bond and take charge of the entire partnership assets, and the bond given in pursuance thereof is valid.
- *394 *3. Contracts: Written: Construction. Every instrument must be construed in the light of the circumstances under which it was executed, and sometimes these circumstances will make perfectly plain the otherwise doubtful intent of the party executing it.

6. ———: Limitation: Action on Bond. No action accrues against an administrator in his individual capacity until there has been some violation of his trust, nor against the sureties on his bond until there has been some breach of the conditions of the bond; and then the statute of limitations begins to run from the date of such violation and breach.

Error from Leavenworth district court.

Action by Catlin and two others, partners as Catlin & Co., commenced against Carr, Clark, and Mills, as sureties in a bond given July 13, 1866, by Samuel S. Ludlum, administrator of the estate of William H. Hays, deceased, for the proper execution of the trust imposed on him by taking possession of the partnership property of the firm of Hays & Ludlum. The plaintiffs were creditors of Hays & Ludlum. The action was commenced October 24, 1868. An amended petition was filed July 20, 1869, and a second amended petition was filed in September, 1871, and in November, 1872, the second amended petition was amended by attaching a copy of the bond sued upon. All three defendants answered the first and second petitions, and the defendants Carr and Mills answered the last amended petition. The action was tried at the May term, 1873. Verdict and judgment against Carr and Mills for $618.20. No finding, *395 ver*dict, or judgment against Clark. Carr and Mills bring the case here by petition in error.

Clough & Wheat, for plaintiffs in error.

No reason is known to us why judgment should not have been rendered against Thomas R. Clark, if it was proper to render judgment against Carr and Mills. We refer to said second amended petition, as it was finally amended, and to the answer of Carr and Mills thereto, and to the reply to said answer, and to the special verdict; and claim that there is not any cause of action established against Carr and Mills, and that, therefore, their motion for judgment should have been sustained. But, even if it is shown that there was once a cause of action against them, then we claim that the same was not sued for or on until said second amended petition was filed, on the twenty-fifth of September, 1871, and that the same was then, and also when the suit was first brought, on the twenty-fourth of October, 1868, barred by the statute of limitations.

In support of our claim that there was not any cause of action found against Carr and Mills, we draw attention to the finding, from which it appears that John B. Ludlum, the surviving partner, never was cited, as required by section 49, c. 91, Comp. Laws 1862, p. 520. And as John B. Ludlum was at common law, and notwithstanding the statutes, entitled to the control and disposition of the partnership property until he should neglect or refuse to give bond after being cited for that purpose, (Bredow v. Mutual Sav. Inst., 28 Mo. 181, and section 51 of said act,) we submit that the probate court had no power or jurisdiction to make any order in relation to the partnership property, or to assume jurisdiction over the same, or to require Samuel S. Ludlum to give the bond mentioned in section 50 of said act; and that, therefore, the bond sued on is void, because the proper steps had not been taken to divest such rights of John B. Ludlum, or to confer power to control the property on the administrator of the deceased partner. Thomas v. Burrus, 23 Miss. 550; 1 Redf. 331; Cook v. Carr, 19 Md. 1; Flinn v. Chase, 4 Denio, 90; Griffith v. Frazier, 8 Cranch, 9; In re Hamilton, 34 Cal. 464; Jochumsen v. Suffolk Sav. Bank, 3 Allen, 87; County of Monroe v. Budlong, 51 Barb. 514; Olds v. State, 6 *Blackf. 91; Monroe v. James, 4 Munf. 194; Behrle v. Sherman, 10 Bosw. 293; Kane v. Paul, 14 Pet. 39; Fredrick v. Pacquette, 19 Wis. 541; Shanks v. Seamond, 24 Iowa, 131; Langworthy's Heirs v. Baker, 23 Ill. 489; Toll. Ex'rs, 121; Adams v. Adams, 36 Ga. 241; Alfred v. McKay, Id. 441.

This matter of citation was not mere form. Until thus cited, the surviving partner had the right to retain and dispose of the property. It was an act required to be done to divest John B. Ludlum of his otherwise right to control and dispose of the property, and, that act of citation not being done, we submit that John B. Ludlum was never divested of his rights to and concerning the partnership property; and, if not, it of course follows that said bond was void. If it shall follow that said bond is good as a voluntary bond, then we suggest that unless it is one of the bonds mentioned in section 575 of the Civil Code of 1859, (Civil Code 1868, § 726,) any cause of action arising from a breach thereof should have been brought in the name of the state of Kansas, (People v. Norton, 9 N. Y. 176; Annett v. Kerr, 28 How. Pr. 324; Sandrey v. Michell, 113 E. C. L. 415-418; People v. Townsend, 37 Barb. 520; Corporation of Washington v. Young, 10 Wheat. 406; Tucker v. Hart, 23 Miss. 548;) and, of course, unless said bond was such an one as was by some law authorized to be taken as an official bond, it is not one of those mentioned in said section 575. If it shall be claimed for plaintiff that the recitals in said bond estop Carr, Clark, and Mills from denying that John B. Ludlum, after having been duly cited for that purpose, neglected or refused to give the bond required in said sections 46 and 47, (those being some of the necessary facts to give the probate court jurisdiction over the partnership property,) then we say that inasmuch as it is not in the said bond recited or admitted that John B. Ludlum had been cited, (or that he had in or to the probate court refused to give such bond,) we submit said defendants are not so estopped, because an estoppel cannot be extended beyond the exact terms of the admission. Miller v. Hampton, 37 Ala. 346; Campbell v. Knights, 11 Shep. 332; Van Rensselaer v. Kearney, 11 How. 326; Fitzsimmons v. Allen's Adm'r, 39 Ill. 442.

And it appears to us that the rule of law that a party shall not be deprived of his property, or of his right to possess, control, and dispose of property, without due process of law, etc., would of itself render void all the proceedings of said *probate court in relation to said partnership property; and show that it is the duty of Samuel S. Ludlum, as an individual, to account to John B. Ludlum, as the surviving member of the firm, thus leaving the partnership creditors to look to John B. Ludlum as the representative of the late firm, rather than to found an action upon void proceedings of a probate court. And we submit that if such creditors are confined, so far as the partnership property is concerned, to such remedies as they may have against John B. Ludlum, not only will no rule of law be violated, but the idea evidently on the mind of John B. Ludlum, when he refused to continue the business of Hays & Ludlum, will be carried out; for if that paper is not utterly void, its legal effect was simply a refusal on the part of John B. Ludlum to continue the business of the late firm, and a request that the administrator of William H. Hays, deceased, (whoever he might be,) should take charge of his (John B. Ludlum's) interest in the property of said firm, thus, in substance, merely appointing such administrator, whoever he might be, his agent to take charge of the property.

And, further, in support of our claim that there was not any cause of action found against Carr and Mills, we draw attention to sections 48 and 189 of said chapter 91 of the Compiled Laws, and to the want of any pretense in the pleadings on which the action was tried, of any judgment, or order of distribution, or for the administrator to pay any claim or claims; nor is there any finding that such was the fact, or of any order of the probate court for distribution or payment to be made by the administrator; and therefore we submit that the motion of said Carr and Mills for judgment should have been sustained. See sections 48, 189, 190, and 227 of said act; and 2 Amer. Lead. Cas. 135; People v. Barnes, 12 Wend. 492; Com. v. Evans, 1 Watts, 437; Justices v. Sloan, 7 Ga. 31; Com. v. Fretz, 4 Pa. St. 344; Dinkins v. Bailey, 23 Miss. 284; People v. Corlies, 1 Sandf. 228; Siglar v. Haywood, 8 Wheat. 675; State v. Modrell, 15 Mo. 421; McGill v. Armour, 11 How. 142; Gordon v. State, 11 Ark. 12; State v. Cutting, 2 Ohio St. 1. And we submit that a reasonable construction of the aforesaid sections of said act, in connection with the other parts thereof, show that it was not the intention of the legislature *398 that the admin*istrator of a deceased partner should have the same power with reference to or to dispose of the property of a firm he might administer on, under sections 49 and 50 of said act, as the surviving partner would have if he closed up the business of the firm.

The verdict is not sufficient to sustain the judgment. Even if defendants in error ever had a cause of action, it was barred by limitation. Although they alleged that their claim, which was general indebitatus assumpsit for goods, wares, and merchandise sold and delivered by plaintiffs to Hays & Ludlum, had been presented and allowed by the probate court, so as to bring themselves within the requirements of section 151, and the following sections of said act relating to allowance of claims, yet there was no proof or finding made of any such allowance or presentation. It appears from the verdict that the debt sued for came due on the sixth of July, 1865, more than three years before the commencement of the first action, and more than five years before the second amended petition was filed, and there is, we submit, nothing in the verdict to take the case out of the ordinary three-year statute of limitations. It is very clear on said verdict that when the said action was first commenced, in October, 1868, sections 20 and 21 of the Code of 1859 barred any action against the survivor, John B. Ludlum, for the money due for the goods sold; and also that the same sections then barred any action against the administrator for the goods sold, even leaving out the time (which, we submit, ought not to be done) which elapsed after the death of Hays, on the twenty-sixth day of March, 1866, to the fifth day of July, 1866, the time Ludlum was appointed administrator; because from the fifth of July, 1865, the time when the debt came due, to the twenty-fourth of October, 1868, the time when the suit was first brought, is a period of three years and one hundred and nine days; so that the supposed cause of action, on which defendants in error sued as their claim of indebtedness, was barred, so far as bringing any action therefor was concerned, at least nine, if not one hundred and nine, days before the action was commenced, (Toby v. Allen, *3 Kan. *399,) and therefore no cause of action was shown by the verdict.

And we submit that when the cause of action for the debt was barred by the limitation law, as above shown, that no action could be maintained as attempted by defendants in error. In this connection we refer to Chick v. Willetts, 2 Kan. *384; Pollock v. Maison, 41 Ill. 517; U. S. v. Athens Armory, 35 Ga. 344, 358.

And, further, in this same connection, if defendants in error proved a cause of action against Carr and Mills but for the statute of limitations, we further submit that if the supposed cause of action set forth in the last-amended petition is other and different than the cause of action set forth in either of the preceding petitions, that, therefore, the supposed cause of action was not sued on until the twenty-fifth of September, 1871, even though it was filed in the same action. See the opinion of this court in the case of Hiatt v. Auld, 11 Kan. *176, and cases therein cited; Dudley v. Price's Adm'r, 10 B. Mon. 84; Toby v. Allen, 3 Kan. *412, *414; Richmond v. Van-hook, 8 Ired. Eq. 585. But if such cause of action is not other or different than the one first sued on, in the same action, then the decision in Glass Co. v. Ludlum, 8 Kan. *40, (a similar case,) is conclusive against defendants in error. The record in said case in 8 Kan. will show, we think, that that case raised all the questions relied on by the present defendants in error; which, among other things, shows the indebtedness of Hays & Ludlum to the company, and a request for the district court to find conversion by the administrator of the firm property; and if the evidence in this case is sufficient to show the conversion found, then in that case it was sufficient to require a finding in relation thereto; but the judgment in that case was not reversed, notwithstanding the refusal to find on the alleged conversion.

We submit that the bond executed by Carr, Clark, and Mills with Samuel S. Ludlum, as his sureties, is void, because the conditions therein are not any of them the conditions specified in said section 50, c. 91, Comp. Laws. The bond is void if the conditions thereof are not any of them the condition specified in said section 50. Tomlin v. Green, 39 Ill. 225; Kelly v. Archer, 48 Barb. 68; Minor v. Mechanics' Bank, 1 Pet. C. C. 46; Jackson v. Simonton, 4 Cranch,

C. C. 255; Haines v. Levin, 51 Pa. St. 417; Fulcher v. Com., *400 *3 J. J. Marsh. 592; U. S. v. Bradley, 10 Pet. 364; Postmaster General v. Early, 12 Wheat: 136-150; Woods v. State, 10 Mo. 700; Purple v. Purple, 5 Pick. 226. The conditions in said bond, after the first one therein written, are substantially the conditions (as nearly as in the nature of the case they could be) required in the bond of a surviving partner when he administers on the partnership estate, (see sections 46 and 47 of said act,) and are therefore void. Fulcher v. Com., supra; Small v. Com., 8 Pa. St. 101. And as to the first of the conditions in said bond, we submit that the only trust therein referred to was that consequent upon, and such only as resulted merely from, S. S. Ludlum's having taken possession of the property, which, as we have above seen, simply placed him under obligations as agent of John B. Ludlum. But even if it was an undertaking of which creditors could take advantage, it was not, we submit, sufficient to sustain the assignment of such breaches as are necessary to maintain the judgment complained of, even if the limitation and other objections raised shall be decided against us. And, further, a bare receipt of assets is not the commencement of administration thereon, (Kendall v. Lee, 2 Pen. & W. 482;) and as such taking possession was not the commencement of administration thereon, and as the first condition in said bond was merely to the effect "that Samuel S. Ludlum should faithfully execute the trust incurred by the act of taking possession of the partnership property, with no unnecessary waste or expense," and as that was not the condition required in a bond given in pursuance of said section 50, or by any other section of law, we submit it and the bond, so far as connected therewith, are both void. Sureties are never held responsible beyond the clear and absolute terms and meaning of their undertakings. Presumptions and equities are never allowed to enlarge, or in any degree change, their legal obligations so as, by construction, to extend their undertaking. Miller v. Stewart, 9 Wheat. 680; U. S. v. Kirkpatrick, Id. 720; Leggett v. Humphreys, 21 How. 67; U. S. v. Boyd, 15 Pet. 187; Smith v. U. S., 2 Wall. 235; Bowers v. Beck, 2 Nev. 139; Judah v. Zimmerman, 22 Ind. 392; Dobbin v. Bradley, 17 Wend. 422; Walsh v. Bailie, 10 Johns. 180; Walrath v. Thompson, 6 Hill, 540; McCluskey v. Cromwell, 11 N. Y. 598.

It was not necessary for the defendants in error to establish their demand in the probate court to entitle them to payment thereof out of the partnership assets of Hays & Ludlum; or, if the probate court had no jurisdiction to allow, classify, and order payment out of partnership assets, then of course no allegation need be made in the petition of the classification of their claim by the probate court, and an order on the administrator of William H. Hays to pay the amount allowed and classified. [Here follows an argument covering several pages, construing the executors' and administrators' act of 1859, (Comp. Laws 1862, pp. 512-546,) which argument is adopted by the court, and inserted in the opinion, infra, pp. *404-*407.]

Counsel for plaintiffs in error attempt to confound this case with the case of Glass Co. v. Ludlum, 8 Kan. *40; but there is a broad distinction between the two cases, as they appear in court, although the facts out of which both actions originally grew are the same. In that case, it will be remembered, the plaintiff based its action on the judgment or findings or orders of the probate court, alleging in its petition, first, that the estate of William H. Hays had no property. On this allegation Anthony and Dunlop, who were the sureties of Samuel S. Ludlum as administrator proper, demurred the plaintiff out of court, and properly so. But when they alleged, again, as against Carr and Mills, the defendants here, (plaintiffs in error,) that the probate court had settled the partnership estate, and ordered a payment to plaintiff out of such estate, they failed on the proof; for the court found from the records of the probate court that the estate settled and the order made was on the individual estate of William H. Hays. So, in that case, Anthony and Dunlop defeated the plaintiff on his own pleading, and Carr and Mills beat the plaintiff on the failure of evidence to sustain the allegations of the petition. That case, therefore, is no criterion nor guide nor precedent for this.

*402 We take **totally* different grounds. We deny all and any powers in the probate court to adjudicate on partnership matters, other than to cite the administrator, acting as special trustee of the partnership property, or the survivor, should he act, to account for his doings. If the surviving partner had taken the property, having given bond, and then had squandered and converted the property, in an action against him and his bondsmen, would any one contend it would be necessary for a creditor to first establish and classify his claim in the probate court? And is it not clear that the administrator, by the statute, simply takes the place of the declining surviving partner, assumes only his duties, and he and his bondsmen assuming precisely the obligations which the surviving partner and his bondsmen would have assumed if he had taken the partnership property? Of course it is not contended, if the creditors here (defendants in error) had desired to make the separate individual property of William H. Hays responsible for this debt, that it would not have been incumbent on them to prove and classify their debt; but they had the right (being creditors of Hays & Ludlum) to look to the partnership property to pay their debt, and they elected so to do. They knew, as the jury found, that there were sufficient partnership assets to pay all debts. They demanded the payment of this debt from Ludlum, who was the special statutory trustee of this property, and for whose acts and for whose omissions, in respect to this special property, Mills and Carr made themselves liable. Ludlum converted these assets to his own use, and apparently the only answer the sureties now give is, "We will not pay because you did not prove your claim in the probate court. If we had proved it there, we would have been met with the fatal objections made in the Boston Glass Company's case, which doubtless would have been agreeable to Ludlum and his sureties." Green's Adm'r v. Virden, 22 Mo. 506; State v. Baldwin, 27 Mo. 103.

No substantial question can be made on the statute of limitations.

*403 The bond upon which this action is based was filed and approved on the thirteenth of July, 1866, and the action commenced October 24, 1868. We are unable to see how any real question can be presented under the limitation statute.

BREWER, J. This was an action on a bond given by the administrator of the estate of William H. Hays, deceased, upon taking possession of the partnership property of the firm of Hays & Ludlum, of which firm the deceased was a member. It appears from the pleadings and special verdict that in March, 1866, the firm of Hays & Ludlum was composed of William H. Hays and John B. Ludlum; that the twenty-sixth of that month William H. Hays died, intestate; that, on the fifth of July, Samuel S. Ludlum was appointed administrator of his estate; that thereafter the surviving partner filed in the probate court a written refusal to continue the business of the late firm, and a request that the administrator take charge of the partnership property; that the probate court ordered the administrator to take possession of said partnership property, giving a new bond therefor as provided by statute; that the administrator did take possession and give a new bond, the one sued on in this action; that he sold the property and converted the proceeds to his own use; that the partnership property he received was ample to pay all the partnership debts; that the firm of Hays & Ludlum was indebted to the plaintiff in the amount sued for; and that demand was made of the administrator for payment, and payment refused.

A great many questions are raised and discussed by counsel in their briefs. We shall notice only those we deem the most important. And, first, can this action be maintained without proof of the allowance of the claim by the probate court, or of any settlement in said court by the administrator of the partnership estate? As the record stands, no action is shown of the probate court subsequent to the approval of the bond. After a careful examination of the statute and the authorities, we must answer this question in the affirmative. We *404 cannot express our views better than in the language of the able counsel for defendants in error, and so quote from their brief:

"The probate court is established by the constitution, (article 3, § 8,) and its powers are limited to '*such probate jurisdiction and care of estates of deceased persons * * * as may be prescribed by law.*' It would seem clear that unless there be some 'law' specifically prescribing that the probate court shall have the power to allow, classify, and order payments of partnership debts out of partnership assets, that no such power exists. It is a well-known rule that the powers of a court of limited jurisdiction are to be found only in the statute which confers them; that such a court takes nothing by intendment or construction. If, then, this power to allow, classify, and order payments is not—to use the language of the constitution—'prescribed by law,' it does not exist; and it cannot, with any show of reason, be argued that such a power is necessary to the execution of any other power conferred by law, upon the probate court. What powers, then, do we find are 'prescribed by law?' The first forty-four sections of the act approved thirtieth July, 1859,—the act under which the bond in this case was given, and the proceedings had out of which this action grows,—apply wholly to the granting of letters and matters strictly connected therewith. The eight sections next following relate to the disposition of the property of a firm of which the deceased was a member. Sections 55 to 150, inclusive, prescribe the power of the court, and the duty of the administrator respecting the money and property of the deceased. Sections 151 to 178 provide for the allowance and classification of demands against the estate of deceased persons, and specify the manner in which different characters of claims are to be paid from the estate of the deceased, and how these claims may be established. The sections then next following (sections 180 to 196) prescribe the mode of settlement by administrators, and define the power of the court therein; from 197 to 222, inclusive, the statute prescribes the mode of distribution of the decendent's estate; and the balance of the statute provides for proceedings against executors and administrators and for appeals; and this comprises all the legislation on this subject. Shall it be claimed that section 151 (Comp. Laws, 534) confers the power on the probate court to classify the claim of the plaintiff? If there are no partnership assets, and the claim was sought to be made out of the individual property of William H. Hays, then, *of course, the court would have power under that section to classify the demand; and then, to maintain an action on the administrator's bond, probably it would be necessary to allege an allowance and classification. But such is not the case at bar. Here is a partnership debt, with partnership assets sufficient to pay all such debts, and not a claim that is sought to be enforced against the individual property of the decedent. It is unquestioned law that the partnership debts are to be paid in preference to individual debts out of the partnership assets; yet if it can be maintained that section 151 confers the power on the probate court to classify partnership debts, then the entire assets of the firm could or might be employed in the payment of the individual debts of the decedent, so setting aside a rule that has prevailed from time immemorial. Such a construction is surely not to be forced, and can only be conceded when the plain reading of the statute demands it. The legislature is speaking only in this section of the estate proper of the decedent, and providing what claims as against it shall be entitled to preference. No other rational construction can be given to this section, especially when we notice that the whole subject-matter of legislative attention, as shown by the sections immediately preceding and following, is the estate proper of the decedent; and this conclusion, it would seem, becomes entirely irresistible when we consider that this same law-making power which is now speaking of debts of the deceased, and of the property of the deceased, devotes several entire sections of this same law to prescribing what shall be done with claims against a partnership, and what disposition shall be made with partnership effects. The two subjects were before the legislature, and they provided for each separately; and when a mode is prescribed and a power given to allow and classify one character of claims, if the same power was intended to be given as to the other, it would have been as easy to express it. Not having been expressed, it is not only fair, but in accordance with all settled law, that it was not intended to be given.

"But, again, giving credit to the legislature for enacting laws in view of well-established principles of equity, and the rights of the creditors of a partnership to the extent of the partnership assets, and examining the provisions of the act under consideration bearing on the question, we think it clear that the legislature did not intend to make the allowance and classification of a partnership debt by the probate court a condition precedent to the right of a creditor of the firm to *recover on the bond given, either by the surviving partner or the administrator of deceased member of the firm. The legislature knew that the creditors of the firm had a right to be paid out of the partnership property, and therefore it provided, in accordance with the principle of survivorship, that the surviving partner should first retain the partnership property; but in order to protect the interest of the decedent, the statute (section 47) compelled him to give a bond which required him 'to apply the property to the payment of the partnership debts,' and which also required him to render an account of his doings to the probate court. Two leading ideas are manifest in this section: the payment of the partnership debts, and the preservation and payment to the administrator of any balance that might be due the estate of the decedent. Could it be claimed that if the surviving partner had given the bond required by the statute, taken the goods, and converted them to his own use, that these plaintiffs could not recover against his bondsmen, because their demand had not been allowed, classified, and ordered paid by the probate court? Would the probate court have the power to allow a claim that might be presented to the survivor, and the power to order him to pay it? It would be a judgment as well against himself as the estate of the deceased, and where, either in the constitution or statute laws, does the probate court obtain the power or jurisdiction to render judgment against a surviving partner? The constitution says it 'shall have such probate jurisdiction and care of the estates of deceased persons as may be prescribed by law,' and not jurisdiction to render judgments against living persons on ordinary common-law liabilities. It is true, the law (section 48) gives the probate court power to cite him to account, and to adjudicate upon the account, as in cases of an ordinary administrator; and this power is a necessary power to protect the interests of the decedent. His duty and obligation is to pay partnership debts, and in adjudicating upon his accounts, if the court should find that he had paid out money of the partnership in payment of other than partnership debts, the court would disallow it, 'as in cases of ordinary administration;' and this is all the power conferred by 'law' on the probate court over the surviving partner.

"But, again, the legislature, wisely anticipating the very state of affairs in this case, provided that if the surviving partner should not give the bond, then the administrator of the decedent, upon *407 giving bond, should be entitled to the possession *of the property of the partnership,—to be dealt with how, and in what manner? As the other property of the estate? No; for the statute says, in express terms, 'he shall with the partnership property pay the debts of the late firm.' When? Within a year, or three years, as he pays by statute the other debts of the decedent? No; but 'with as much expedition as possible,' and pay the surviving partner his proportion of the excess. Is it not clear that the legislature intended simply to substitute the administrator for the surviving partner, giving him the same powers with reference to the partnership effects, and imposing upon him the same duties? He is to pay the debts 'with as much expedition as possible,—not wait for the process of allowance in the probate court. It is not the debt of an estate, nor of a decedent, nor of an individual, he is commanded to pay. In carrying out the trust, he is not acting as administrator, nor are his bondmen liable on his administrator's bond for his misdeeds in the execution of this trust. This has already been decided by this court. Glass Co. v. Ludlum, 8 Kan. *40, *47. He is neither more nor less than a special trustee as to this property and this class of debts. He needs no order from the probate court to pay them. By accepting the trust he takes upon himself the burdens of deciding what are debts. While we feel an abiding conviction that upon principle, analogy, and reason we are right in our conclusions, we are not without the very best of authority to sustain our position. The case of State v. Baldwin, 27 Mo. 103, is directly in point, the decision being upon the statute of Missouri of 1845, from which our statute is taken, and the court in that case, page 107, say 'the law does not require partnership demands to be allowed by the court.' And the same court, in the case of Green's Adm'r v. Virden, 22 Mo. 506, hold the same doctrine, and deny to the probate court any power over the partnership assets, or over the surviving partner, except those expressly granted, to-wit, to cite him to account, and to adjudicate upon his account."

A second question of importance is this: no citation was ever issued by the probate court to the surviving partner, as provided for in section 49 of the administrators' act. Comp. Laws 1862, 520. That section reads: "In case the surviving partner, having been duly cited for that purpose, shall neglect or refuse to give the bond *408 *required," etc., "the executor or administrator on the estate of such deceased partner, on giving a bond as provided in the following sections, shall forthwith take the whole partnership estate," etc. It is earnestly insisted by counsel for plaintiffs in error that such citation was jurisdictional, and that "the probate court had not power or jurisdiction to make any order in relation to the partnership property, or to assume jurisdiction over the same, or to require Samuel S. Ludlum to give the bond mentioned in section 50 of said act; and that, therefore, the bond sued on is void, because the proper steps had not been taken to divest the rights of John B. Ludlum, or to confer power to control the property on the administrator of the deceased partner." We think that this citation is a matter personal to the surviving partner, and that while he may insist on his right to the possession of the partnership property until after such citation, and a refusal or neglect to give the statutory bond, yet that when he comes voluntarily into the probate court, and declines to take any further charge of the partnership property, he waives the necessity of any citation, and cannot thereafter object that none was served upon him; and that the objection to the subsequent proceedings which he is estopped from making, no one else can make for him, or for themselves. It is jurisdictional in the sense that a summons is.

It brings the party into court. But when a party voluntarily appears in court, it is unnecessary to inquire what, if any, process has been served upon him. Counsel also criticises the paper filed in the probate court by John B. Ludlum, and says that "its legal effect was simply a refusal on the part of John B. Ludlum to continue the business of the late firm, and a request that the administrator of William H. Hays, deceased, (whoever he might be,) should take charge of his [John B. Ludlum's] interest in the property of said firm; thus, in substance, merely appointing such administrator, whoever he might be, his agent to take charge of the property." The paper is addressed to the probate judge, and reads: "I, as the surviving partner of the late firm of Hays & Ludlum, do refuse to continue *409 the business of the late *firm, and request that the administrator of William H. Hays, deceased, take charge of my interest in the property of said firm," etc. We think there is no difficulty in giving proper effect to this writing. True, it purports to be a refusal to continue the business, instead of a refusal to give the bond, as named in the statute; but every instrument must be construed in the light of the circumstances under which it is executed. One or the other—the surviving partner or the administrator—was to take the property, give bond, and close up the partnership business. By this paper the surviving partner comes into court, and in unmistakable language declines in favor of the administrator. No form of refusal is prescribed. This was sufficient.

Again, counsel insist that the bond sued on is void because the conditions in it are not any of them the conditions specified in the statute. The statute (section 50) provides that "before proceeding to administer upon such partnership property, as provided in the preceding section," the administrator shall give bond "conditioned that he will faithfully execute that trust, with no unnecessary waste or expense." The form of a bond is not given in this case as it is for the surviving partner, or in ordinary administration. In order to understand what trust is intended, we must refer to the preceding section. There it is provided that he shall take the whole partnership estate into his possession, and with it pay the partnership debts with as much expedition as possible, and return to the surviving partner his proportion of the excess, if any there be. Now, the bond in this case (which seems to have been in part copied from the form given for a bond of a surviving partner) covers all these points. It recites the refusal of the surviving partner, and that the administrator has taken possession of the partnership property, and the first condition is that he shall "faithfully execute the trust incurred by such act with no unnecessary waste or expense." If this had been all, we think the bond would have been sufficient. It, however, goes on and specifies more in detail the obligation assumed by the administrator.

*410 *Again, it is urged that if defendants in error had any cause of action it was barred before suit was brought. The petition was filed October 24, 1868. The verdict shows that the debt was due from Hays & Ludlum to defendants in error on the sixth of July, 1865,—more than three years prior thereto. But no cause of action could arise on the bond until it was given, and that was in 1866,—none against Ludlum, in his individual capacity, or against his sureties, until after a breach of the condition of the bond, and a conversion of the goods to his own use. When the administrator assumed the charge of the partnership estate the defendants in error had a valid claim against that estate. He had ample means to discharge that indebtedness. Instead of so doing, he converted those means to his own use, and thereby created a personal liability against himself and the sureties in his bond, which dated from the time of such conversion.

We do not think the amendments to the petition were so radical as to make the last petition present a cause of action substantially different from that in the first.

Other questions have been presented by counsel for plaintiffs in error in their brief, but we cannot stop to discuss them at length. We have endeavored to examine them all carefully, and, after such examination, we are satisfied that no substantial error appears in the record, and that the judgment must be affirmed.

*411    *JOHN C. GATES and another v. CHARLES SANDERS.

July Term, 1874.

1. Appeal: From Justice's Court: What Taken Upon. Where A. sues B. before a justice of the peace, and at the same time obtains an order of attachment, and thereafter the order of attachment is discharged by the justice, but judgment rendered on the claim in favor of A., and A., intending to appeal, files an ordinary appeal-bond, reciting the judgment, but neither reciting nor referring to the attachment, or its discharge, the proceedings on the attachment are not taken up to the district court for re-examination or review, but were ended by the decision of the justice. [Brown v. Tuppeny, 24 Kan. 29.]
2. Amendment: Appeal-Bond. While the district court may permit the amendment of an appeal-bond insufficient in form or amount, it may also, in the exercise of a sound discretion, refuse to permit any amendment.<sup>1</sup>

Error from Saline district court.

The case is stated in the opinion.

<sup>1</sup>Where a judgment is rendered in favor of A., against C., before a justice of the peace, or a similar award of damages for right of way made by a board of county commissioners, and C., for the purpose of perfecting an appeal to the district court, gives a bond running to B., an entire stranger to the record and proceedings, and no special equities are shown, the district court commits no error by refusing to permit the perfecting of an appeal by the giving of a new bond running to A. Lovitt v. Wellington & W. R. Co., 26 Kan. 297.

John Foster, for plaintiffs in error.

The judgment of the justice discharging the attachment was such a final judgment as is appealable, under section 120 of the justices' act. Kirby v. Fitzpatrick, 18 N. Y. 484; Thomson v. Dean, 7 Wall. 342; Brenner v. Bigelow, 8 Kan. *498; Kayser v. Bauer, 5 Kan. *202; In re McGrade, 24 Mo. 125; Zoller v. McDonald, 23 Cal. 136; Howell v. Kingsbury, 15 Wis. 272; Powell, Appel. Proc. c. 9, § 16. The appeal brings the whole cause to the district court, and opens up the whole merits of it, and it is tried de novo. Section 7, Laws 1870, p. 184; Long v. Hitchcock, 3 Ohio, 274; Horton v. Horner, 14 Ohio, 437.

If there was any defect in the appeal-bond, the application to amend should have been allowed. Sections 139, 140, Civil Code; Bentley v. Dorcas, 11 Ohio St. 398; Justices' Act, § 131.

*412 *The judgment of district court specifies interest at 10 per cent., and is a larger judgment than that of the justice; and it was error to render judgment against plaintiffs for costs of appeal. Gen. St., c. 52, § 6; Justices' Act, § 128.

T. F. Garver, for defendant in error.

We take it that it is too fundamental to need argument that an appeal taken from the final judgment of the justice does not remove attachment proceedings in such action to the district court, and that the naked order of the justice, discharging an attachment, without any judgment for the costs of attachment proceedings, is not a final judgment from which an appeal can be taken to the district court. The district court sustained the first of these propositions, and there was no error in its decision.

Nor did the district court err in refusing to allow the appeal-bond to be amended, and in refusing to admit testimony to show what the plaintiffs had intended to do, and that, through accident and mistake, they got into court as they did. It does not matter what were their intentions, accidents, and mistakes. The fact is, the appeal was simply from the final judgment in the action, and did not pretend to be anything else, and nothing more could be included without there being in effect a new appeal.

The plaintiffs had full and adequate remedy by proceeding in error from the decision of the justice on the attachment, and that was their only remedy. Failing to pursue such remedy, they lost their right to have the order reviewed.

The judgment for costs of appeal against plaintiffs was proper, for in both courts they obtained judgment for the full amount of their claim, with interest as asked for.

BREWER, J. Plaintiffs in error commenced an action against defendant in error before a justice of the peace, and at the same by the justice, but a judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiffs for the amount of their claim. From this judgment they appealed, and filed an ordinary appeal-bond, reciting the judgment, etc., but making no mention of or reference to the attachment or its discharge. On the trial in the district court they obtained a judgment, as before the justice, for the amount of their claim, and then asked for an order of sale of the attached property. This was refused. They then asked leave to amend the appeal-bond, so as to show that they appealed from the order discharging the attachment. This also was refused, and they were taxed with the costs of the appeal. Upon these facts two questions arise: First. Did the appeal from the judgment bring up for review or retrial the proceedings in attachment? Second. If not, ought the district court to have allowed an amendment of the appeal-bond? Both of these, we think, must be answered in the negative. The attachment is but an ancillary proceeding, and may stand or fall without affecting the progress of the suit. The judgment is rendered for or against the plaintiff, and upon the sufficiency of his cause of action, without reference to the disposition of the attachment. Boston v. Wright, 3 Kan. *230. It was of the judgment the plaintiffs complained in their appeal-bond, and that only which they sought to change. If they sought a review of the attachment proceedings, something more than an appeal from the judgment on the merits of the case was necessary.
*413 time sued out an order of attachment. There*after, upon motion of the defendant and hearing, as provided for in section 53 of the justices' act, the order of attachment was discharged.

While the district court has ample power to permit an amendment of the appeal-bond, when insufficient in form or amount, (Justices' Act, § 131,) yet an amendment is not a matter of right, upon which in all cases of insufficiency a party may insist. The court must exercise a sound discretion in deciding whether, under the circumstances of the particular case, the party should be allowed to amend.

*414 In this case we cannot, from anything before us, see *that the court improperly refused the application for leave to amend. The attachment had been discharged by the justice. For aught that appears, the property attached had been returned to the defendant, and by him wholly disposed of. No notice had been given of an intention to retry the question of the attachment. It might be that if the attachment was brought up for retrial and sustained, an unpleasant question would arise as to the responsibility of the constable for not having the goods in his possession. It is useless, however, to speculate. It is enough that the record fails to show that the court abused its discretion. The costs of the appeal were properly taxed to the appellant. Justices' Act, § 128.

The judgment will be affirmed.

It is understood that the same questions arise in the case of Eames, Crampton & Eberle against this defendant in error, and the same judgment will be entered in that case.

(All the justices concurring.)

STATE OF KANSAS v. ISAAC POTTER.<sup>1</sup>

July Term, 1874.

1. Homicide: Evidence: Character of Deceased. On a trial for murder, it is error to permit the state in the first instance, and as a part of its case, to offer testimony showing the character or reputation of the deceased as a quiet and peaceable man.
2. ———: Statements of Deceased: Hearsay. Where the deceased and defendant had two affrays in the same afternoon, the interval between which was about an hour, and during such interval were out of the sight and hearing of each other, though driving along the same road on the way to their respective homes, held, that the second affray was not a continuation of the first to such an extent as to make competent evidence of the statements of the deceased, or his comrades, in such interval, and in the absence of the defendant, as to what had happened, or what he thought the intentions of the defendant were.
- *415 *3. ———: Self-Defense. In order to establish that a homicide was committed in self-defense, it is not essential that the defendant show that deceased actually had a deadly weapon. It is sufficient in that respect if he show that the conduct of deceased was such as to induce a reasonable belief that he had one.<sup>2</sup>

Appeal from Atchison district court.

Information for murder in the second degree against Isaac Potter, George Potter, and Walter Boyle, charging them with killing one Jacob B. Keeley. Isaac Potter demanded a separate trial, and the case against him was tried at the June term, 1874. The district court gave some twenty special instructions, at the instance of the prosecution, of which the second and fifteenth are as follows:

"(2) If the jury find from the evidence that the defendant, Isaac Potter, at the time he assailed the deceased, did so with intent to kill him, or if, after attacking the said deceased, he conceived an intent to take his life, and with such intent inflicted the wounds upon the person of said deceased, from the effects of which he died; and further find that such acts on the part of the defendant were committed purposely and maliciously, and without justification therefor, then, although committed without previous deliberation or premeditation, the jury will find the defendant guilty of murder in the second degree."

<sup>2</sup> Cases involving law of self-defense, see State v. Rose, 80 Kan. 501; S. C. 1 Pac. Rep. 817; State v. Horne, 9 Kan. 82; State v. Potter, 15 Kan. 302; State v. Bowen, 16 Kan. 475; State v. Bohan, 19 Kan. 28; State v. Riddle, 20 Kan. 711; State v. Brown, 21 Kan. 88; malice—self-defense—refusal to instruct, Cook v. Territory, 4 Pac. Rep. 887; defendant may show that his use of a knife was in self-defense, although it caused death, State v. Nett, 7 N. W. Rep. 844; killing of assailant justified on ground of self-defense, when, State v. Mahan, 20 N. W. Rep. 449; arrest without warrant—killing officer—self-defense, People v. Wilson, 21 N. W. Rep. 905; to justify a homicide on the ground of self-defense, a state of facts must exist to justify his acts, and reasonable grounds for such relief, State v. Shippey, 10 Minn. 223, (Gil. 178.)

"(15) To justify defendant in taking the life of the deceased, the jury must find, from the evidence, not only that the deceased had the means at hand to effect the deadly purpose, but said deceased must have indicated, by some act or demonstration at the time of such killing, a present intention to carry out such purpose, thereby inducing a reasonable belief on the part of defendant that it was necessary to deprive deceased of his life."

The jury returned a verdict of guilty of murder in the second degree. New trial refused, and defendant was sentenced to imprisonment in the state penitentiary for ten years.

*416 **Horton & Waggener and C. F. Cochran*, for appellant.

The court should have sustained the motion to quash the information. It does not set forth in plain and concise language, and without repetition, the offense of murder in the second degree. Crim. Code, § 109.

The court erred in allowing the state to introduce evidence of the character of the deceased for being a quiet and peaceable man. This was no issue in the case. It did not in any manner tend to show that defendant "purposely and maliciously" killed Jacob B. Keeley, and could serve no purpose except to prejudice the jury against the defendant. Pound v. State, 43 Ga. 128; Chase v. State, 46 Miss. 707; Ben v. State, 37 Ala. 103; 3 Greenl. Ev. § 27; Wise v. State, 2 Kan. *428. It was not shown that defendant knew the reputation of deceased. Franklin v. State, 29 Ala. 14. It cannot be contended that it involved any greater degree of moral turpitude in defendant, or made him any more amenable to the law, to kill a quiet and peaceable man, than a desperado, if the killing in either case was done purposely and maliciously. State v. Barfield, 8 Ired. 344; Whart. Crim. Law, 172.

It was claimed in the court below that this testimony was material and proper, as it formed part of the res gestæ; but how, or under what circumstances, the character of the deceased entered into and became a part of the res gestæ, wherein the killing was done purposely and maliciously, or in any other manner, so far as establishing the guilt of defendant is concerned, we have searched the books in vain to ascertain. 3 Greenl. Ev. § 27. If such testimony is admissible, by analogy would it not be proper to support the character of a witness for truth before it had been assailed, or prove the character of the accused for violence before evidence of good character had been introduced? Ben v. State, 37 Ala. 105. Would not the character of the accused for violence, etc., form as much a part of the res gestæ wherein he was charged with purposely and maliciously killing another, as the character of the deceased for being a peaceable man? Yet no one will contend that the character of the accused can in any manner be assailed by the state until put in issue by the defendant himself. This court indirectly passed upon this same question in Wise v. State, 2 Kan. *428, *429. But in the case at bar the testimony of the character of deceased was admitted before the state had rested its case; and the defendant at no time attempted to prove the character of deceased, nor was any such testimony offered in his behalf. Ben v. State, supra.

The court erred in admitting testimony of the statements and acts of George Potter previous to said alleged homicide. George Potter was not on trial. Isaac Potter was in no way bound by his statements and acts. Yet the same were permitted to go to the jury as evidence against Isaac Potter. Clawson v. State, 14 Ohio St. 234; Hightower v. State, 22 Tex. 605; 3 Greenl. Ev. § 94; State v. Farr, 33 Iowa, 553; State v. Pike, 51 N. H. 105.

The court erred in permitting the statements of Mike Brannon to Polk Keeley, in the absence of defendant, to go to the jury as evidence against the defendant. It was a conversation between two disinterested parties, and in no sense was it competent to go to the jury as part of the evidence upon which the jury were to acquit or convict defendant of the crime for which he was on trial. Clawson v. State, 14 Ohio St. 238; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 124.

The court erred in permitting the witness, Polk Keeley to testify to the statement as to the intention of defendant, made to him by deceased in the absence of defendant. This was so clearly erroneous it seems unnecessary to do more than call the attention of the court to it. It was simply proving the intention of defendant by the declaration of another, not made in the hearing of defendant, and long previous to the commission of the alleged homicide, and the court should have sustained defendant's motion to strike out the same. Cheek v. State, 35 Ind. 492. The evidence was well calculated to make or induce the jury to believe that the assault was made by defendant without any justification therefor.

The court below permitted evidence of the general reputation of Polk Keeley (a witness) for being a quiet and peaceable boy to go to the jury. For what purpose this testimony was material we cannot conceive, unless it was that Polk Keeley, being a quiet and peaceable boy, was therefore (as argued to the jury by counsel for the prosecution) entitled to some credit as a witness! Yet, regardless of the absurdity of the proposition, this evidence was permitted to go to the jury as tending to prove that the defendant purposely and maliciously killed Jacob B. Keeley! The defendant at no time during said trial attempted to prove the character of said witness in any respect, and the motion to strike out said testimony should have been sustained.

The court in its general charge to the jury, in substance says that if the jury entertain a reasonable doubt as to whether defendant is guilty of murder in the second degree, but are satisfied that he is guilty of some other grade of the same kind of an offense, then it was their duty to convict him of manslaughter in the first, second, third, or fourth degree. In order to convict him at all of an offense less than murder in the second degree, under this instruction, it must be manslaughter in all the degrees.

The court erred in giving instruction No. 2, asked for by the state. The only answer that defendant had to the charge preferred against him was that he acted in self-defense; that deceased assaulted and attacked him, and that, in resisting such attack and assault, it was necessary for him to slay his assailant. Yet the court takes away from him his entire defense by giving this instruction. The court says if defendant "at the time he assailed," etc., "or if, after attacking said deceased," etc. The court could not in much plainer language have said to the jury that defendant did assail and did attack deceased. It was not admitted by defendant that he "assailed" or "attacked" deceased; and there was a great conflict of testimony as to who was the assailant. The court assumed in this instruction a fact as established which it was the exclusive province of the jury to determine from the evidence. Horne v. State, 1 Kan. *73; Craft v. State, 3 Kan. *486; People v. Bennett, 49 N. Y. 148. And by a subsequent instruction, (No. 18,) asked by the state, the court said, *419 in effect, that if defendant voluntarily attacked and as*sailed deceased, then there would be no justification for the act on the ground of self-defense. The jury is first told that defendant was the assailant, and, secondly, that, being the assailant, he could not excuse himself on the ground of self-defense. Construing these two instructions together, (and we have no right to assume that the jury did not so construe them,) the defendant might as well have pled guilty to the charge, and saved the formality of a trial. The court may have charged the jury correctly on this point in other instructions, but these instructions being separate and distinct, might they not have been the controlling views with the jury? Horne v. State, supra.

Inasmuch as the court had given said instruction No. 18, as explanatory of that instruction the court should have instructed the jury as subsequently requested by defendant, as there was evidence that the affray in which deceased was killed, was brought about by deceased. Yet the jury, from instruction No. 18, might infer that if defendant had, previous to the alleged homicide, made an assault upon deceased, he was forever thereafter precluded from justifying his killing deceased on the ground of self-defense, regardless of the time that intervened between his assault upon deceased and the time he committed the homicide.

The court erred in giving instruction No. 15 asked for by the state. In order for the defendant to be justified in taking the life of deceased, it was not necessary for deceased to have the means at hand to slay defendant. If defendant acted from reasonable and honest convictions that it was necessary to kill deceased in order to protect his own life, it is well settled that he would be justified, although in fact the danger he apprehended was not real, but merely apparent. State

v. Horne, 9 Kan. *119. And in order for defendant to be justified in killing deceased, it was not necessary for deceased to have indicated, by some act or demonstration at time of such killing, a present intention to carry out such purpose. State v. Horne, supra. *420 *W. W. Guthrie, for the State.

Enough of the evidence is preserved to show the following facts in the case: Jacob B. Keeley, (the deceased,) his son John, and Mike Brannon, while riding along the road, were set upon by the three defendants at Brack's corner, and the boy, John, injured by a stone thrown by George Potter. The parties here parted. The Potters had been the aggressors; the Keeleys, innocent victims. The Keeleys drive on homeward, some two miles, where they stop in the road opposite a field where another son, Polk Keeley, is at work. The deceased remains at the wagon, and the two boys go over in the field to Polk. Meanwhile the Potters have followed along the road until they have come in sight of the Keeley wagon, when they leave the wagon by the fence, arm themselves with fence-rails, and move upon the deceased. The boys, Polk and John, go to the aid of their father, and the two parties, each armed, meet in the road, when a combat ensued, and the deceased came to his death at the hands of appellant.

As to the character of deceased. He was killed in a renewed encounter, which had overtaken him on the road where he had stopped. The state must show such killing to have been purposely and maliciously done. State v. Boak, 5 Iowa, 433. If deceased, smarting under the blows of the first encounter, had stopped to gather help at the first opportunity, and then intercept his former assailants, and they, in self-defense, had killed him, now no longer an innocent victim, but the aggressor, then the state failed in its case. The circumstances which led to that encounter which entered into the affray were a part of the res gestæ, (State v. Benham, 23 Iowa, 154-160; Copeland v. State, 7 Humph. 479; Wesley v. State, 37 Miss. 327; Monroe v. State, 5 Ga. 85; Franklin v. State, 29 Ala. 14; Pritchett v. State, 22 Ala. 39; State v. Keene, 50 Mo. 357;) and was so held by this court in Wise v. State, 2 Kan. *428, *429. It is not the question of greater or less moral turpitude, but was it a crime, or an act of self-defense? and of evidence tending to prove or disprove such fact, or to explain that conduct which, unexplained, *421 would *tend to prove or disprove such fact. Why did deceased go up the road with a whiffletree in his hand when he saw a large man armed with a rail advancing upon him? and why did his son Polk also advance up the road when he saw three armed men coming down upon his father? and what induced the parties to engage in combat? Was it not part of the res gestæ to show the size, age, and character of the combatants? Until this was done, and the conduct of the Keeleys explained, was a case of purpose and malicious killing made out by the state beyond a reasonable doubt? Had the state shown that the Potters had not acted in self-defense? By the same rule that the accused might show deceased a bad man to explain his conduct, and make out a case of justifiable killing, the state might show his quiet disposition to make out a case of unjustifiable killing. In either case, it is only where the case admits of a doubt as to whether the killing was done in self-defense, and may serve to explain the conduct of the deceased, and thus becomes a part of the res gestæ; and in such cases all the reported cases agree in holding the evidence proper. But it is said that this evidence was offered before the state had rested. It was properly offered whenever a foundation had been laid, which might be either by circumstances developed by the testimony offered by the state or the accused.

The parties met, first, at Brack's corner, and two miles further on, and two hours later, at Albright's field, where, without a word, the encounter was renewed. Then the first encounter was a part of the res gestæ; and the act alone or words spoken by one of several joint participants is the act of all, and is alike evidence, where the trial is severed, as on joint trial. When it had been shown that Brannon was in the first encounter,—had gone into the field and talked with Polk, who then engaged in the second encounter,—it was evidence to explain away the inference that Brannon had been sent by deceased to obtain the reinforcement of Polk to prepare for a second *422 affray, and that Polk had responded. Both were *interested parties. Polk Keeley was one of the actors in the fatal affray.

His acts are a part of the res gestæ, as were those of George Potter and Walter Boyle. Two parties engaged in combat, and what might be testified concerning one member of either party is equally competent as to any other of that party. It did not tend to give credit, but was as to a part of the res gestæ. But how can this court say that any of such testimony was incompetent, in absence of all the evidence in the case, which, if preserved, might show that the proper foundation had been laid therefor.

There was no error as to the instructions. Isolated instructions are not the subject of review. They do not determine the character or effect of the charge or instructions considered as a whole. The defense is self-defense. The testimony shows that the defendant was the first aggressor. The defendant testified and admitted that his party made the first assault, but claim to have done the killing when driven to the wall by the party assailed. These positions are not consistent. No fact was assumed by the court, and the instructions were right.

BREWER, J. The appellant was convicted in the district court of Atchison county of the crime of murder in the second degree, and sentenced to the penitentiary for ten years. From this he has appealed to this court, and alleges numerous errors in the proceedings of that court. And, first, he complains that that court erred in overruling a motion to quash the information. We do not think the objections made to the information are well founded, and hence see no error in the rulings on the motion to quash. Again, he insists that the court erred in allowing the state to introduce evidence of the character of the deceased as a quiet and peaceable man. It appears that the deceased was killed in an affray; that this was the second quarrel upon the same afternoon between the deceased and de-*423     *shortly after the parties left Atchison to go to their respective homes, each in his own wagon, and with two companions.

No serious injury was done to either of the parties at this time. At its close the deceased drove ahead with his wagon, and the parties lost sight of each other. After driving some miles, the deceased stopped beside a field where one of his sons was at work, and while there the other wagon, with the defendant, came along. The quarrel was resumed, and in it the deceased was struck on the head and elsewhere with a piece of a rail or club, and so injured that he died shortly thereafter. On the trial, and before closing their case, the prosecution was permitted, over objection, to ask witnesses, who had testified that they knew the deceased, this question: "State if you knew his general reputation for being a peaceable, quiet, and law-abiding citizen;" and the witnesses testified that he was a peaceable, quiet, and law-abiding man. No attack was made by defendant at any time during the trial on the character of the deceased, and no attempt to show that he was a quarrelsome or turbulent man. The question, then, is fairly presented whether the prosecution, on a trial for murder, may, in the first instance, and as a part of their case, show the character and reputation of the deceased. We do not understand counsel for the state as claiming that such testimony is admissible in all cases, but only in cases where there is a doubt as to whether the killing was done in self-defense, and where such testimony may serve to explain the conduct of the deceased, and is therefore fairly a part of the res gestæ. In such cases it is said that the authorities hold that the defendant may show the bad character and reputation of the deceased as a turbulent, quarrelsome man. See, among other authorities, Franklin v. State, 29 Ala. 14; State v. Keene, 50 Mo. 357; Wise v. State, 2 Kan. *429; People v. Murray, 10 Cal. 310. And if the defendant may show that the deceased was a known quarrelsome, dangerous man, why may not the state show that he was a known peaceable, quiet citizen? The argument is not good. The *424     books are full of parallel cases. The accused *may, in some cases, show his own good character. The state can never, in the first instance, show his bad character. A party can never offer evidence to support a witness' credibility until it is attacked. The reasons for these rules are obvious. Such testimony tends to distract the minds of the jury from the principal question, and should only be admitted when absolutely essential to the discovery of the truth. Again, the law presumes that a witness is honest, that a defendant has a good character, and that a party killed was a quiet and peaceable citizen, except so far as the contrary appears from the testimony in the case; and this presumption renders it unnecessary to offer any evidence in support thereof. No authorities have been cited sustaining the admission of such testimony, and the following are in point against it: Ben v. State, 37 Ala. 103; Chase v. State, 46 Miss. 707; Pound v. State, 43 Ga. 128. For the same reasons the court erred in permitting the state to offer evidence of the character and reputation of Polk Keeley, a son of the deceased, who took part in the last affray.

Another error complained of is in admitting hearsay testimony. The facts are these: The places of the two affrays were about four miles apart. The time between them about an hour. After the deceased had reached the place of the second affray, Mike Brannon and John Keeley, who had been in the wagon with him, got out and went over into an adjoining field, where Polk Keeley was at work. When Polk Keeley was on the stand he was asked what Mike Brannon and John Keeley, or either of them, told him at that time. This question was objected to, but the court overruled the objection. The witness then testified that Mike Brannon told him "that the Potter boys had thrown a rock at father, and hit my brother, John Keeley;" and "that George Potter claimed that my father had run into Mr. Doyle's wagon, but that he did not." He also testified that his father called to him to come, and said that the Potter boys were going to kill him.

At these times the Potter boys were not in sight or hearing. *425 This testimony was admitted *as a part of the res gestæ. In this we think the court erred. The interval between the two affrays was so great—the separation between the parties so complete—that we cannot consider the one a mere continuation of the other, to such an extent as to make all the statements and conversations of the deceased and his companions in the interval, and in the absence of the defendant, a part of the res gestæ. It seems to us that such testimony was plainly hearsay, and ought not to have been admitted. It seems probable, too, that part of it, at least, might have prejudiced the case against the defendant.

Appellant also complains that the court erred in giving and refusing instructions. Counsel in their brief call attention to quite a number, and in many instances have pointed out wherein, as they think, consists the error. We have examined with care the instructions, and considered them with reference to so much of the testimony as is before us in the record, and are constrained to say that so little of the testimony is in the record that it seems wiser not to attempt any extended discussion of the separate instructions. The theory of the defense, as we gather it, was that the killing was in self-defense; and it seems to us that the court, in the special instructions given at the instance of the defendant, laid down the law applicable to this defense fully and correctly. Objection is made to instruction No. 15, given at the instance of the state, on the ground that it implies that the deceased must actually have had a deadly weapon, and actually been in a position and condition to inflict great bodily harm, etc. The actual possession of a deadly weapon may not be essential, if the conduct of the party is such as to induce a reasonable belief that he has one, or is so prepared that he can commit immediately the apprehended injury. Yet the instruction as given may not, in view of the actual facts of the case, though erroneous, have misled the jury. Again, instruction No. 2, given at the instance of the state, is criticised as involving a declaration by the court that defendant commenced the affray. While the instruction does not in terms *426 contain such a declaration, yet we think the *language might very naturally convey to the jury the impression that such was the view of the court in reference to the transaction, and, unless it was an undisputed fact that defendant commenced the affray, ought to be modified. These are all the suggestions we feel warranted in making, in view of the incomplete condition of the record.

The judgment of the district court will be reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial. The defendant will be returned from the penitentiary, and delivered over to the jailor of Atchison county, there to abide the order of the district court of that county.

JOHN Q. WATKINS v. LEVI PARSONS and others.<sup>1</sup>

July Term, 1874.

1. Payment: Bank-Check: Burden of Proof. Where a party both receives and uses a check, the presumption is that he realizes the full amount thereof, and if thereafter he seeks to recover that amount from the drawer, it is incumbent on him to show that he did in fact fail to realize.

*427 *Error from Wyandotte district court.

It appears by the transcript that Julius Hammerslough and another brought their action to foreclose a mortgage executed by Stephen S. Sharp and others. Such proceedings were had in said action, and new parties made thereto, that an issue came to be joined therein between John Q. Watkins, claiming a cause of action in his own behalf, against Levi Parsons, Francis Skiddy, H. A. Johnson, David Crawford, Jr., August Belmont, Shepard Gandy, and Robert S. Stevens, others of the defendants in said action. Watkins claimed as assignee of Sharp, Shaw & Co., who had performed certain work in constructing the Union Pacific Railroad, Southern Branch, between Junction City and Emporia, under a contract with the Land-grant Railway & Trust Company, in which said Parsons, Skiddy, and others were stockholders. The whole case was referred to N. C., sole referee, before whom a trial was had. The referee made and filed his report. Said report was confirmed by the district court at the March term, 1873, and judgment entered, as recommended by the referee, in favor of Watkins for $3,059.41. Watkins claimed the additional sum of $25,000, which the referee found had been paid by Parsons and others to Sharp, Shaw & Co., before the assignment to Watkins, and as to this item or claim Watkins appeals, and brings the case here by petition in error.

Thacher & Stephens, for plaintiff in error.

The case presents the question as to whether, under the circumstances and facts found by the referee, the check of $25,000, drawn by A. P. Robinson on Hale's Bank, and left in the bank by Robinson, and which afterwards came to the hands of Sharp, Shaw & Co., was a payment to Sharp, Shaw & Co. of that amount by the Land-

*428 grant Railway & Trust Company. It is true that Sharp, Shaw & Co. indorsed the check, and it was passed to their credit, and they, by their assignee, Watkins, proved up the same in bankruptcy, as a demand against Hale; yet we claim this does not make the check a judgment, under any well-considered adjudication, and that there is a clear current of authority holding such check as simply a cumulative remedy in their hands.

In the first place, there is no fact found showing an intention that the delivery of the check should operate as a payment, and there is nothing showing its acceptance as a payment. It was delivered in the absence of Sharp, Shaw & Co., and afterwards, at the request of Hale, indorsed by them. It was a check of the copartnership, upon an individual member of the company, whom that company had made the depository of its funds. The drawer of the check knew before he drew and delivered it that Hale was embarrassed. The company had actual knowledge of such fact, and Hale himself knew that he was insolvent. The check was for a part of the indebtedness of this insolvent member of the company to his copartnership. Of the facts of the embarrassment, and of the insolvency, the firm of Sharp, Shaw & Co. were entirely ignorant. The gauze with which the transaction is sought to be covered is very thin. The company use their copartner Hale to draw the funds from New York to pay the bills owing to Sharp, Shaw & Co. by them. They find (and whether before or after the drafts on New York, drawn through Hale, had been cashed, does not appear) that Hale is embarrassed, and seek to relieve themselves. They deem expedition of importance, and do not wait for even the presence of Sharp, Shaw & Co., but, in their absence, pass the check for the trifling sum of $25,000 to Hale, who knows he is insolvent, and yet, without disclosing or intimating any warning, procures the indorsement of Sharp, Shaw & Co. of the check, and transfers the amount to their credit. What interest Hale had, or now has, in the copartnership of the Land-grant Railway & Trust Company, or the value of such interest, does not appear, except *429 cept that he had an interest. *Nor does it appear, except inferentially, whether or not Hale's conduct in getting the indorsement of Sharp, Shaw & Co. to the check, and thus endeavoring to transfer the indebtedness of a failing banker to his own company, to an indebtedness of such a banker to third parties, was an endeavor to protect the interest he had in the copartnership from loss on account of his own failure in the business of a banker. The secrecy of Robinson, of Hale, and of the other members of the copartnership, and their evidently concerted action, show that there must have been some motive actuating Hale, which had a personal advantage to himself of some kind, impelling him to his action.

The motives of the other parties are apparent. After the transfer, and Hale's failure, Sharp, Shaw & Co. use their endeavors to save all they can from Hale's estate. They cause the debt to be proven in the bankrupt court, and secure the dividend to apply. They are nowhere chargeable with laches. The Land-grant Railway & Trust Company lose nothing, and can lose nothing, by any act of Sharp, Shaw & Co. The check is not that of a third party, but their own, upon their copartner, and no complaint is made that the payees have not been diligent to protect their interest. By their own wrongful act they secured the placing of the check to Sharp, Shaw & Co.'s credit with Hale,—secured it to be so placed with full knowledge that, except they themselves pay it, there is to be a loss of part of the amount to Sharp, Shaw & Co. They part with nothing but the check upon an insolvent bank, and with no value excepting such as that check may bring to the payees. Through the efforts of Sharp, Shaw & Co., that value has been secured. They can complain of no bad faith or want of diligence on the part of Sharp, Shaw & Co., or their assignee. The whole matter had its inception in their wrongful act in trying to impose upon Sharp, Shaw & Co. their check upon an insolvent man, and that man their own copartner and financial agent. Had Sharp, Shaw & Co. taken, and themselves credited, the check as payment, fraudulent concealment of material facts as would have allowed a recovery in an action based upon such fraudulent suppression. And in this accounting that whole question is raised; for if Sharp, Shaw & Co. could have recovered of the Land-grant Railway & Trust Company for the fraud, the check was no payment. "No right of action can arise out of a fraud," and "no man shall set up his own iniquity as a defense, any more than as a cause of action," are hypotheses that have passed into maxims. And there is another which is near of kin to them: that "no party can create in himself a right against another, by his own fraud;" and another: that "a wrongful or fraudulent act shall not be allowed to conduce to the advantage of the party who committed it." It is observable that in this transaction the parties were not bargaining. Sharp, Shaw & Co. were not even present, except to indorse the check, which they found had conveniently been placed in Hale's Bank for them. Their action was all of a passive nature. They nowhere procured the action of this copartnership, but it had its whole inception, motive, and action in the Land-grant Railway & Trust Company and its agent; the apparent purpose being to shift Hale's debt to them, upon the shoulders of Sharp, Shaw & Co. Applying these maxims to such facts, we submit that, without other authority, it cannot be done. The referee erred in allowing and crediting the check, but should only have credited the amount Sharp, Shaw & Co., or their assignee, were benefited thereby; and the district court erred in not allowing the exception of Watkins to the report, but should have rendered a proper judgment upon the facts found. Ferrin v. Myrick, 53 Barb. 91; Bradford v. Fox, 38 N. Y. 289; Winsted Bank v. Webb, 39 N. Y. 325; Smith v. Miller, 6 Robt. 413; Leake v. Brown, 43 Ill. 372; Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. v. Collins, 3 Lans. 30; Harbeck v. Craft, 4 Duer, 129; 2 Pars. Cont. 622, 625; Peter v. Beverly, 10 Pet. 567; Palmer v. Elliot, 1 Cliff. 63; French v. Price, 24 Pick. 21; Archibald v. Argall, 53 Ill. 307.

 *430 *and delivery, in the manner found by the referee, was such a

On a balance struck between Sharp, Shaw & Co. and the bank, as of the day of Hale's failure, there was only the sum of $15,- *431 289.26 of the check of $25,000 their due. The facts *found show no other transaction or payment, after the crediting of the check; and after passing such check to their credit, there remained the above balance, August 17, 1869. Upon this has been paid by Hale's assignee the sum of $2,388.50, in June, 1872, leaving a balance, computing interest, (as should manifestly be done, at the date of the referee's report,) of $16,736.67, over and above the amount found to be due to plaintiff in error by said referee. We ask that the judgment may be so modified that we may recover said sum of $16,736.67, in addition to the $3,059.41 allowed by the referee.

T. C. Sears and C. B. Mason, for defendants in error.

The effect of the decision of this court, in the case of Land-grant Ry. & Trust Co. v. Board of Com'rs of Coffey Co., 6 Kan. *245, deprives the first-mentioned party of any corporate rights. As a consequence, the respective rights of the individuals composing the said trust company are reduced to novel and anomalous positions. In good faith, we assume, they undertook the enterprises which they have so commendably carried out, referred to by this court, (6 Kan. *252,) and expected and intended, in like good faith, to be entitled to the rights, and subject to the liabilities, of a corporation. By application of law they are divested of any such status, and the rights and liabilities of the stockholders remain to be adjudicated, unless they plainly fall within the purview of other relations which are defined by law. It is unnecessary to pursue this subject further, however, than to conclude that the most rigid rule to be applied to the existing rights and obligations of the individuals comprising the attempted corporation should be that which attaches to partners in business. If any reason can be advanced by the plaintiff in error respecting the obligations of the defendants for the payment of the sum claimed, it must flow from the peculiar business relation of the defendants and Hale at the time the liability is claimed to occur; and the intimate relations of partners in business must, in itself, create the foundation on which they predicate their claim.

*432 It cannot *be claimed upon the ground of fraud or collusion of Hale and defendants in the case, for no such fact is put in issue by the pleadings, and no such finding appears in the record.

It is entirely competent for one partner to borrow money, or to buy goods, or to enter into contract, on his sole and exclusive credit, with third persons; and, on the other hand, it is equally competent for them to rely on that exclusive credit, and either to refuse to contract with the firm, or to exonerate the firm from all liability upon any contract which would otherwise bind the firm as being for their account and benefit. Story, Partn. § 134. To any transactions not relating to the partnership business, although made by Hale in the name of the partnership, the partners would not be bound, except by express assent. Partners cannot be bound by implication. Mercein v. Mack, 10 Wend. 464; Eastman v. Cooper, 15 Pick. 290. Again, "if a person contract with an individual partner, in a matter unconnected with the partnership business, the firm will not be bound. Colly. Partn. § 483, note 3. We cite these general principles for the purpose of showing that the connection of Hale and the defendants in business as partners, draws to it no implied liability, and therefore such relations of business establish no other rule in this case than that to be applied to strangers having equal knowledge.

We proceed, then, to examine the question how far a liability attaches if a debtor silently delivers his check to his creditor, and knowing at the time the drawee of the check to be "in embarrassed circumstances." Just what condition this unhappy state of facts consists of we are left in uncertainty, and consequently a mere knowledge of that condition is difficult to define. The term "insolvency" has a technical signification, about which there can be no discussion. It is a condition which, if known to the makers of the check, would fix the liabilities upon them, unless by acts the payee waived or lost his rights after receiving the check. But mere "embarrassment" is no legal term, and has no legal signification. A man may be embarrassed to-day and unembarrassed to-morrow. The word, *433 taken in its ordinary meaning concerning *financial affairs, does not have any definite description of condition, but the term "insolvency" bears a precision of condition to which the law attaches a character. Nor are we able to determine what notice the defendants had of the embarrassment referred to,—whether mere rumor or otherwise. The presumption is that the decision is correct, and we confidently insist that the finding of the referee justifies no argument charging a knowledge of insolvency on the part of the defendants.

"An action does not lie against the drawer of the check until he has notice of the presentment and non-payment of the check." Harker v. Anderson, 21 Wend. 372. We claim that the circumstances here are equivalent in law to a presentment and payment of the check. In the first place, at the time of the transaction, the defendants had standing to their credit on the books in said bank a sum more than sufficient to pay said check; and, secondly, a portion of that balance sufficient in amount was appropriated to pay the check of $25,000, and that, too, under the direction of the payee of the check. If the sum of $25,000 had been paid in money when the check was presented, and the money redeposited immediately by the payee, assuredly the plaintiff would admit the discharge of the drawers. What is the effect, however, of the failure to withdraw the funds, and instead the transfer on the books of the bank, as shown by the facts? "A check is always supposed to be drawn against funds, and there is much authority for holding it to be, in some respects, an appropriation of those funds. The funds cannot properly be withdrawn by the drawer." 2 Pars. Notes, 59, note i; Chapman v. White, 2 Seld. 412; Bullard v. Randall, 1 Gray, 605. If a bill or check is sent to the drawee to be passed to the credit of the sender, and is so credited, the bill or check is discharged, and can no longer be negotiable. Savage v. Merle, 5 Pick. 83. "But insolvency of the drawer is almost the only case in which the drawer is a loser, so that he is discharged on a check." Harbeck v. Craft, 4 Duer, 122. Hale being the banker of both the drawer and holder of the check, received *434 it as the *agent of the holder, and not of the drawer. 2 Pars. Notes, 77, note u.

The law imposes upon the holder of a check certain obligations, if he would have recourse against the drawer. He must present it within a reasonable time. This check was presented and paid. It is not true (see referee's findings) that the check was indorsed by S., S. & Co. "at Hale's request." S., S. & Co. kept their accounts with Hale. This transaction was precisely like those of the previous months. The exhibit attached to the record shows that the estimates for May and June were deposited about the same time in the month as this. Now, S., S. & Co. drew at least $10,000 of this check, and, for all that appears, may have drawn out $25,000 after the deposit. Indeed, there is nothing to show but that they could have drawn out every dollar before Hale closed his doors. How much S., S. & Co. had to their credit when this $25,000 was deposited does not appear. There may have been $10,000, $20,000, or $30,000. The referee does not even pretend that this amount of $15,289.26 was the balance due upon their check. On the contrary, he distinctly says this was the balance due on their "said bank account," viz., their general account. To make defendants in error liable upon such a state of facts is going much further than has ever before been claimed.

The election of the assignee, Watkins, to pursue the estate of the bankrupt, Hale, (without discussing the effect of such acts and declarations upon his rights,) certainly leaves the claim where it would at present be error to find otherwise than as reported by the referee; because Watkins proved up the claim, with interest, to the date of filing the petition in bankruptcy against Hale, and received, in June, 1872, of said estate, $2,388.50; and while the estate is not settled, this court is asked to adjudge him $16,736.67, being the balance upon deducting the payment above mentioned. He must show in any event the funds of Hale exhausted, even if he could maintain his suit, and hold the defendants, the drawers of the check, liable.

*435 *BREWER, J. This is a proceeding to reverse the judgment of the district court of Wyandotte county, based upon the report of a referee. Before us are the pleadings, the findings, and conclusions of the referee, and the judgment. The testimony is not preserved. The following quotation from the report of the referee presents all the facts bearing upon the question raised and discussed by counsel:

"And I further find that at the same time I tried the issues between the several defendants herein, and took an account between the said Thomas A. Shaw, Stephen S. Sharp, and Louis Hammerslaugh, constituting the firm of Sharp, Shaw & Co., and the said Levi Parsons, Francis Skiddy, H. A. Johnson, David Crawford, Jr., August Belmont, Shepard Gandy, and Robert S. Stevens, partners under the style of the Land-grant Railway & Trust Company, as to all matters of account put in issue between them herein; and I find that before the commencement of this action the said account of Sharp, Shaw & Co. was assigned to, and all title thereto vested in, the defendant John Q. Watkins, and on said account I find due to said Watkins, as assignee of said Sharp, Shaw & Co., $3,059.41; and I find that the said Watkins is entitled to judgment against the said defendants Parsons, Skiddy, Johnson, Crawford, Belmont, Gandy, and Stevens for the said sum of $3,059.41, with interest from the date of this report at seven per cent. per annum, and costs, as hereinafter stated.

"And I further find as facts in this cause that the charge of $25,000 made by said Land-grant Railway & Trust Company, and dated August 12, 1869, (appearing upon Schedule A, hereto attached,) was for a check drawn by said Land-grant Railway & Trust Company, by their agent, A. P. Robinson, upon the bank of Hiram F. Hale, by the name of Hale & Rice, bankers, (that being the name in which said Hale did business as a banker, and the bank being solely the bank of said Hale,) payable to Sharp, Shaw & Co., or order; that said Hale then owned an interest in the copartnership called the Land-grant Railway & Trust Company, but kept said bank on his sole account, as his individual business; that said Land-grant Railway & Trust Company were keeping funds in said bank by drawing *436 drafts on New York in its *favor, and delivering the same to said bank, and were making monthly payments for work to Sharp, Shaw & Co., by drawing checks upon said bank; that Sharp, Shaw & Co. at the same time kept their funds in said bank; that on the twelfth of August, 1869, the said A. P. Robinson, as such agent, drew a check on said bank for $25,000, payable to Sharp, Shaw & Co., or order, and placed the same in said bank for Sharp, Shaw & Co., who soon after took the same, and indorsed it, and caused the amount thereof to be placed to their credit on the books of the bank; that at the time said check was deposited by said Robinson, and indorsed by said Sharp, Shaw & Co., and placed to their credit, said Hale was insolvent, and afterwards, and on or about the seventeenth of the same month, stopped business as a banker; that at the time he so stopped business he was indebted to said Sharp, Shaw & Co. on their said bank account in the sum of $15,289.26; that at the time said check was made and deposited in Hale's bank, and when the same was indorsed by Sharp, Shaw & Co., and credited to them on the books of the bank, said Hale had knowledge of his insolvency, and at the same time the said Land-grant Railway & Trust Company, and A. P. Robinson, their agent, had notice that he was embarrassed in his finances, and said Sharp, Shaw & Co. had no such knowledge or notice; that at the time said check of $25,000 was so drawn, delivered, indorsed, and credited to Sharp, Shaw & Co. said Land-grant Railway & Trust Company had a balance in their favor, owing by said Hale to them, standing to their credit upon the books of the bank, more than sufficient in amount to pay the said check of $25,000; that afterwards the said Hale, having been adjudged a bankrupt in the United States district court for the district of Kansas, the defendant Watkins, after the assignment of the said demand to him, proved up in said court, as assignee of said Sharp, Shaw & Co., and as a debt due from said Hale to said Sharp, Shaw & Co., the balance of bank account so due from said Hale to them, including said check of $25,000, as credit to them, and the same was so proved up and established at the amount of $19,107.96, including interest to the time of filing the petition in bankruptcy; that afterwards, in June, 1872, the said Watkins received on said debt, as a dividend of assets of bankruptcy, the sum of $2,388.50, said bankrupt's estate not having then been fully settled.

*437 "And I further report that I allowed said check of $25,*000 as a payment by said Land-grant Railway & Trust Company to Sharp, Shaw & Co. in stating said accounts. I append hereto a schedule marked 'A,' of the accounts, both debit and credit, as kept by the Land-grant Railway & Trust Company, passed upon by me, with such charges as were rejected by me marked 'Rejected' in the margin, all the other items of the account having been allowed, which schedule is a part of this report. And I further find that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover from the defendants Shaw and Sharp the costs of recovering judgment upon the note and mortgage in their favor, and the defendant Watkins is entitled to recover the costs of stating the account and recovering the judgment in his favor. All which is respectfully submitted.

NELSON COBB, Referee."

We think the referee was right in his conclusions, and that the judgment must be affirmed. The authorities cited by the learned counsel for plaintiff in error are not in point. Under what circumstances the receipt of a check operates as payment is a question of wide limit, but one into which it is not necessary in this case to enter; for here the check was both received and used, and for aught that appears in the record the entire amount of money it called for also received and used. The check was drawn on the twelfth of August, was received by the payees, deposited in Hale's bank, and the amount passed to their credit. It nowhere appears what transaction took place during the ensuing five days prior to the suspension of the bank, between the bank and Sharp, Shaw & Co. Many times the amount of this check may have been drawn and used by them. The bank continued in business, and we must presume honored and paid checks as presented. Evidently there were some transactions, for while the amount of the check was $25,000, the balance due Sharp, Shaw & Co. at the time of suspension was less than $16,000. If Robinson, instead of leaving the check for Sharp, Shaw & Co., had drawn the money, and given it to them, and they had then deposited it in the bank, or if they, on receipt of the check, had themselves drawn the money, and then deposited it, there would be no question as to the payment. No more can there be if, after depositing the check to *438 their credit, they drew the amount *thereof out on their own checks. Indeed, by the deposit of the check to their credit, the latter had performed its office, and had become a dead instrument. They had elected to take the bank as their debtor, rather than the defendants in error; and even if there were no subsequent transactions between them and the bank, it might well be questioned whether they could recover of the drawers. Certainly they could not without proof of the actual loss. And where a party both receives and uses a check, the presumption is that he realized the full amount thereof, and if thereafter he seeks to recover the amount from the drawers, it is incumbent on him to show that he did in fact fail to realize.

This appearing to us as a fatal objection to the plaintiff's right of recovery, it is unnecessary to consider the other questions discussed.

The judgment will be affirmed.

THOMAS W. TALLMAN and others v. EMELINE M. JONES.

July Term. 1874.

1. Instructions: Irrelevant: Effect of. Where the trial court gives an instruction to the jury which is good law in the abstract, but which is irrelevant, and not applicable to the case under the evidence, the court does not commit such an error as will require a reversal of the judgment, unless the irrelevant instruction may have misled the jury, or unless it may in some way have prejudiced the rights of the plaintiff in error. [Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. v. Hay, 31 Kan. 178; S. C. 1 Pac. Rep. 766.]
2. Married Women: Contracts of. Any married woman, under section 4 of the married woman's act, whether she previously has any separate estate of her own or not, may carry on any trade or business; and for the purposes of carrying on such trade or business may purchase on credit such property as is necessary to carry on such trade or business, and may hold the same as her sole and separate property. [Miner v. Pearson, 16 Kan. 28; Parker v. Bates, 29 Kan. 598.]
3. Trespass: Mortgaged Property: Damages. The mere fact that one person mortgages goods to another does not authorize any person ex-*439 cept the *mortgagee, or some person claiming under him, to take the property from the mortgagor; and if any such person other than the mortgagee, or some person claiming under him, does so take said property, he is liable for more than merely nominal damages.

Error from Bourbon district court.

Action by Emeline M. Jones to recover the value of a stock of goods seized and sold by Tallman, as sheriff, on an execution issued on a judgment against D. R. Cobb and Edward Jones, partners as Cobb & Jones. The goods were alleged to be worth $3,000. Cobb & Jones had kept a dry-goods store in the town of Marmaton from 1864 to 1870, when they were sold out under execution by one of their creditors. Their stock of goods was bought at such sale by one Foster, who carried on business as a merchant, in the same store-room formerly occupied by C. & J., until August, 1871. Foster did not give personal attention to said business, but intrusted its management to said Edward Jones, as his agent. In August, 1871, Foster sold his stock of goods to said Emeline M. Jones, who was the wife of said Edward Jones, and said Edward from that time, as agent and clerk for his wife, remained in the store, and assisted in the management of the business. In February, 1872, Tallman, as sheriff, took the goods in said store, and sold them at sheriff's sale for $1,481.12. The goods were seized under an execution in favor of the administrator of D. Foreman, issued upon a judgment against Cobb & Jones, which was rendered by the district court of Bourbon county, in July, 1871. At the time the sheriff made the levy said Edward Jones was in charge of said store, conducting the business thereof. It was claimed on the part of the sheriff (representing the execution creditor) that the goods were in the possession of said Edward Jones, and that they belonged to him, and not to his wife. The action was against the sheriff, and his sureties on his official bond, and was tried at the December term, 1872, of the district court, (C. W. B., judge pro tem., presiding.) The jury found in favor of the plaintiff, and assessed her damages at $1,915.50. New trial *440 *refused, and judgment on the verdict.

McComas & McKeighan, for plaintiffs in error.

The district court, among other things, gave to the jury the following instruction: "The exclusive, peaceable possession of goods and chattels, under a claim of ownership, is prima facie evidence of ownership, and a person in such possession may maintain an action against a mere trespasser, and recover the full value of such goods." Now, the theory of defendant in error was that she purchased these goods, and Edwards Jones continued in possession of the store as her clerk and salesman. She says she was in the store when the sheriff came in to levy, and that Mr. Jones had stepped out, while the sheriff says she was not, and that Jones was in. Our claim is that this sale from Foster was to Edward Jones, and that the name of his wife was introduced to cover up the goods from his creditors. This being the pivot of the dispute, what light does this instruction throw upon the case? None. To give it any application to the case, you must assume that this possession of Jones in the store was not in fact and truth his own possession, but that of his wife, held for her as her agent, and that the sheriff, who represents the creditors of Jones, was a mere trespasser, without any claim or color of right. Here Jones had held possession of these goods from the eleventh of August, 1871, until they were taken on execution. She claims the possession was hers. The creditors claim that it was not hers. The theory of the court was that this possession itself furnished prima facie proof that it was her possession. This is bad logic, because the right of possession here, and the ownership of the goods, must be in the same person; and to assume the one, and argue from such assumption the existence of the other, is reasoning in a circle. Either this instruction is justly liable to this criticism, or else it simply asserts an *441 abstract proposition of law that has no application to, and *can perform no office in, this case, except to mislead the jury.

The exact converse of the doctrine of this instruction is true, namely, "possession by the husband is supposed to be in his own right until the contrary be made to appear." "In a contest with the husband's creditors, proof of the wife's interest must be shown by clear evidence." Curry v. Bott, 53 Pa. St. 400. "Where the husband manages the store as salesman, the presumption is that the goods belong to him. If the wife claims as her separate property against her husband's creditors, she must satisfy the jury, by clear and indisputable evidence, that the goods in question were her own separate property." Welch v. Kline, 57 Pa. St. 428; Quidort's Adm'r v. Pergeaux, 18 N. J. Eq. 472; Hurlburt v. Jones, 25 Cal. 225; Otey v. McAfee's Adm'r, 38 Miss. 350; Winter v. Walter, 37 Pa. St. 155; Gillespie v. Miller, Id. 247; Black v. Nease, Id. 433.

Instructions asked by the plaintiff in error, and refused, present this question: Where a married woman has no separate property whatever, can she and her husband, upon their joint credit, purchase a stock of goods in the wife's name, to be paid for out of the business to be conducted by the husband, as her agent, when the wife has no separate estate; and are the goods thus purchased, and the profits and increase of the business thus carried on, exempt from the execution of the husband's creditors? If this question can be answered in the affirmative, then the ruling of the court was correct; otherwise, erroneous. We say in this case these goods belonged to the husband, and we had a right to have this hypothesis put to the jury. There are certain kinds of property owned by a married woman exempt from the control of her husband and his creditors, (chapter 62, p. 563, Gen. St. :) (1) The property owned at the time of the marriage, and the issues and profits thereof, are so exempt. (2) The earnings of any married woman from any trade or business carried on by herself are so exempt. But with these exceptions the rights of a married woman are, in this state, governed by the common law. Can a man who has failed in business buy a stock of goods jointly with his wife, upon their joint credit, pay for them out of the profits and pro-*442 ceeds of the goods, devote his labor to carry on the *business as agent for his wife, and by this device protect the goods from his creditors? If the wife had bought these goods upon credit given to her, or if the goods were paid for in the first place out of her separate property, and if the business had been increased by the labor of the husband, the law might be different; but the doctrine of the district court was that where the wife and the husband purchased the goods in the first place upon their joint credit, and where the business was conducted and managed by the husband, the wife having no separate estate, and adding nothing to the stock by her labor or services, that still she might own the goods as against her husband's creditors. We think this very question is decided in the case of Baringer v. Stiver, decided by the supreme court of Pennsylvania, (4 Amer. Law Reg. 559.) See, also, Wilson v. Loomis, 55 Ill. 352; Fisk v. Wright, 47 Mo. 351.

In this case the goods were mortgaged by the defendant in error and her husband to L. P. Foster. If the goods in fact were purchased by her as she claimed, then under this mortgage "the legal title thereto" was in Foster, the mortgagee. Gen. St. c. 68, § 15. If the "right of possession" and "the legal title" to this property was in Foster at this time, there being no stipulation in the mortgage to the contrary, then the only interest the defendant in error could have was a mere equity of redemption, and the court should have given the instructions asked for by plaintiffs in error upon this point.

This court will take judicial notice that M. V. Voss is judge of this district, and not C. W. Blair. Planing M. L. Co. v. City of Chicago, 56 Ill. 304.

Hulett & McCleverty, for defendant in error.

We submit there is no error shown by the record prejudicial to plaintiffs in error. The law undoubtedly is, in Kansas, that a married woman may acquire and hold property free and clear of all liabilities of the husband. The question presented to, and decided by, the jury was, who was the owner of this stock of goods? They answered it by their verdict in favor of the defendant in error.

*443 The question of *possession was a fact, submitted to the jury, and their verdict is conclusive. There was no intimation of any kind given by the court as to who had possession,—either this defendant in error, or her husband, Edward Jones.

The instructions asked by plaintiff in error, whether good law or not, make no figure in this action. The evidence shows that the defendant in error was purchaser of the original stock of goods, and all subsequent purchases. And it also shows a want of any evidence of increase or profit, either by the skill and labor of the husband, or otherwise. We submit that said instructions asked by plaintiffs in error are not law; but if they are, there was no evidence to warrant the court in submitting them to the jury.

The mortgage executed by defendant in error and Edward Jones to Foster embraced both real and personal property, and was executed by the husband and wife because required by Foster in making sale to defendant in error, and has no bearing in this case to relieve plaintiff in error from his liability. The jury having decided Mrs. E. M. Jones to have had the possession of the goods taken in execution, the sheriff finds no defense in showing title in Foster.

The court will not only take judicial notice that M. V. Voss is judge of this district, but will also conclude that C. W. Blair was the lawful judge pro tem., unless the contrary appear. The case cited by counsel for plaintiffs in error, (Planing M. L. Co. v. City of Chicago, supra,) merely decides that under their practice a bill of exceptions must contain the style and term of court allowing the same.

VALENTINE, J. The plaintiff in error, Thomas W. Tallman, who was defendant below, was sheriff of Bourbon county. He levied an execution on a stock of goods, and sold the same as the property of Edward Jones. Afterwards, Emeline M. Jones, the defendant in error, plaintiff below, and wife of said Edward Jones, sued said Tallman for the value of said goods. The real question litigated *444 was, who *did said goods belong to,—to Edward Jones, or to his wife, Emeline M. Jones? The sheriff found the goods in the possession of Edward Jones, but Emeline M. Jones claimed the same as her property. She claimed that they were in the possession of Edward Jones merely as her agent, and therefore that his possession was in fact her possession. The court below instructed the jury that "the exclusive, peaceable possession of goods and chattels, under a claim of ownership, is prima facie evidence of ownership, and a person in such possession may maintain an action against a mere trespasser, and recover the full value of such goods." This is good law in the abstract, although we do not see that the instruction has any application to this case. Mrs. Jones did not have possession of the property at all, except through her agent, Mr. Jones; and Mr. Jones, who had actual possession of the property, never claimed to own the same. As against every person except Mr. Jones, or some other person claiming under him, Mrs. Jones had constructively the legal possession of the property; for as against such persons the possession of Mr. Jones was merely the possession of Mrs. Jones. But as against Mr. Jones, or some person claiming under him, Mrs. Jones did not have possession of the property at all, or, at most, she did not have that kind of possession which proves ownership. In the present case the sheriff claims under Mr. Jones by virtue of said execution and levy, and therefore has a right to rely upon Mr. Jones' actual possession of the property; and hence we think the instruction is inapplicable to the present case. Actual possession and ownership were not united in the same person, as they should be in order to prove a prima facie case of ownership. But the instruction is merely inapplicable. We cannot see how it could have misled the jury, or in any other manner have prejudiced the rights of the plaintiff in error. The court below did not give the slightest intimation as to who had the possession of said property. The court did not even intimate that the possession of Mr. Jones could, under any circumstances, be construed to be the possession of Mrs. Jones. *445 Besides, there was ample evidence besides possession, and even against the possession, of Mr. Jones, to prove prima facie that Mrs. Jones was the owner of the goods, and there was nothing shown to rebut this prima facie case. The evidence clearly shows that Mrs. Jones purchased said goods herself, and for herself, and that she purchased them from a person not her husband, and that her husband did not and was not to pay for them. She was to pay for them. She purchased them, however, on credit; and she and her husband gave their promissory notes, and a mortgage on the goods and on a certain piece of real estate to secure the deferred payment for the goods. And prior to the purchase of said goods Mrs. Jones had no separate estate of her own. In whom the title to said real estate was vested, however, is not shown. Mrs. Jones expected to pay for said goods from sales made thereof, and it was not intended or expected that Mr. Jones should pay any portion thereof. Section 4 of the married woman's act reads as follows:

"Sec. 4. Any married woman may carry on any trade or business, and perform any labor or services, on her sole and separate account; and the earnings of any married woman, from her trade, business, labor, or services, shall be her sole and separate property, and may be used and invested by her in her own name." Gen. St. 563.

And under the facts of this case and the foregoing statute the only questions to be considered are as follows: First. Is said section 4 confined in its application to such married women only as have separate estates, or may it apply to "any married woman" who "may carry on any trade or business on her sole and separate account?" Second. If said section may apply to any married woman, then may a married woman who has no separate estate prior to her entering into trade or business, purchase property to carry on such trade or business, and make that property, as well as her subsequent earnings from such trade or business, her sole and separate property? We must answer both these questions in the affirmative. The *446 statute provides that "any married woman" (and this includes all married women) "may carry on any trade or business," etc.; and if "any married woman may carry on any trade or business," then, by necessary and unavoidable implication, she must be allowed to possess and own everything necessary to carry on that trade or business. Other portions of the married woman's act provide for a married woman owning other property separate and apart from her husband. For instance, section 1 of said act provides that all property owned by a woman prior to her marriage, and the rents, issues, profits, and proceeds thereof, and all property which may come to her by descent, devise, bequest, or the gift of any person except her husband, shall be and remain her sole and separate property. The latter part of said section 4 provides that "the earnings of any married woman from her trade, business, labor, or services shall be her sole and separate property." While the first part of said section 4 provides, as we have before said, by necessary and unavoidable implication, that all property necessary to carry on the trade or business of a married woman may be owned by her, and be her sole and separate property, she may never before have owned any property, and although she may have had to purchase such property on credit. Any other construction of the statute would be virtually saying that no married woman except such as previously have a separate estate of their own can engage in any kind of trade or business.

The mere fact that Mrs. Jones mortgaged said goods does not authorize any person except her mortgagee, or some person claiming under him, to take the property from her; and if any such person other than the mortgagee, or some person claiming under him, does so take said property, he is liable for more than merely nominal damages.

Counsel for plaintiffs in error say in their brief as follows: "This court will take judicial notice that M. V. Voss is judge of this district, and not C. W. Blair." What is meant by this language it is difficult to understand. There is nothing in the record, except a certain bill of exceptions, that shows that the case was tried, or judgment rendered, by any person except the regular judge of the district court of Bourbon county. On the contrary, the record, with the exception of said bill of exceptions, would seem to show that the case was regularly tried and judgment rendered by the regular judge of said court. It is true, said bill of exceptions shows that the case was tried and judgment rendered by C. W. Blair, judge pro tem. of said court; but the bill of exceptions was allowed and signed by C. W. Blair, judge pro tem. Now, if C. W. Blair was not regularly selected as judge pro tem., or if he had no authority in the case, then he could not allow and sign said bill of exceptions, and the same should be stricken from the record; and if said bill of exceptions were stricken from the record, then the plaintiff in error would not have the shadow of a foundation upon which to allege error. The whole case of the plaintiff in error in this court is founded upon said bill of exceptions.

The judgment of the court below must be affirmed.

LAWRENCE GANNON v. JOHN STEVENS.

July Term, 1874.

1. Error: Immaterial, Disregarded. A court may erroneously allow irrelevant testimony to be introduced on the trial, and may also erroneously allow leading questions to be put to witnesses, and yet, in some cases, such errors of the court may not be of such a substantial character as to require a reversal of the judgment of such court.
2. Evidence: Circumstantial: Competency and Admissibility. Where a party has no direct evidence to prove a certain fact in issue, but has to resort to circumstantial evidence to prove the same, great latitude must be allowed in the introduction of the evidence, and much that would otherwise be irrelevant will, in such a case, be both relevant and competent. For instance, where it becomes necessary (as in this case) to show by circumstantial evidence who killed a certain horse, it may be shown *448 *that the party charged with the killing had a motive as well as opportunity to kill the horse, by showing that the horse was in the habit of trespassing, and did immediately before the killing was done trespass, upon the corn crop of the party charged with the killing.
3. Witness: Examination of: Leading Questions. A direct question put to a witness, although it may be leading in form,—although it may be answered by “yes” or “no,” or by a simple affirmative or negative,—if it is upon some preliminary matter merely introductory to something else, and does not call for an answer which will tend to prove or disprove any issue in the case, is generally not leading.
4. ———. Where it has been shown on the trial, as in this case, that a certain witness had testified in chief and on cross-examination on a former trial of this same case, and has since died, and where the following question was then asked the witness, to-wit: “Do you recollect her testimony in chief on the trial of that case? Answer. Yes:” held, that such question is not leading.
5. ———. But even where nisi prius courts allow leading questions to be asked, still, as such courts have such a wide discretion in allowing or disallowing leading questions to be asked, appellate courts can seldom reverse their decisions for allowing such questions to be asked. It can only be done where the nisi prius courts have manifestly abused their discretion.
6. ———. The court below permitted the plaintiff to put the following question to his own witness, and allowed the question to be answered, to-wit: “Do you recollect of testifying at Erie that your uncle had an axe on his shoulder when he was leading the horse? Answer. I do not recollect.” Held, that the court below erred in permitting this question to be asked or answered, but that the testimony embodied in the answer is not sufficiently prejudicial to the rights of the plaintiff in error (defendant below) as to require a reversal of the judgment.
7. Evidence: Question of Competency: Supreme Court. Where it is amply shown that a certain person, now deceased, had “testified” as a “witness” on a former trial of this same case that she was examined in chief and cross-examined, and that her “testimony” was received by the court, and the point is made specifically for the first time in the supreme court, and was not made in the district court, it is not necessary to show more specifically that the testimony of said deceased witness was given under oath or affirmation.

8. ———. The death of such former witness was probably sufficiently shown before any evidence of what she had testified to was introduced, and hence the court below committed no error on that account in allowing said evidence to be introduced. But even if her death was not at that time sufficiently shown, still it was afterwards, and during the trial, shown by evidence that proved the same beyond all doubt, and hence
 *449 it *became wholly immaterial whether the court erred in allowing said evidence to be introduced or not.
9. Evidence: Deceased Witness. It is sufficient to prove the substance of what a deceased witness testified to on the former trial, and not necessary to prove his exact words.

Error from Neosho district court.

The action was commenced before a justice, where Stevens had judgment for $185 and costs. Gannon removed said cause to the district court by petition in error, where the judgment of the justice was reversed, and the action retained for trial as on appeal. A trial was had before a jury at the April term, 1872. The charge to the jury, omitting the formal parts, was as follows:

"(1) You are the exclusive judges of all the facts in the case, and for yourselves must say what effect the evidence should have upon your minds in the making up of your verdict. All the circumstances surrounding the several witnesses should be duly considered in weighing and deciding upon the weight of evidence.

"(2) If in your examination of the testimony in this case you should be satisfied that any witness has testified falsely and corruptly in reference to any material fact, you should disregard the whole of the testimony of such witness.

"(3) The defendant in this case is charged with a tortious act,—that of unlawfully killing plaintiff's horse. In cases of this nature all persons who aid, abet, or assist in the commission of the tortious act are regarded as principal actors, and are severally, as well as jointly, responsible to the injured party for damages sustained by such tortious act.

"(4) The plaintiff has called witnesses for the purpose of proving what Mrs. Patrick Gannon, now deceased, testified to before the justice of the peace in a former trial of the case. While such testimony is before you, and properly, yet you are to consider it with due caution, looking to the character of the witnesses who testified to the declaration of deceased, their recollection as to the facts which they attempt to detail, together with all the surrounding circumstances."

Verdict for the plaintiff for $150 damages.

*450 * C. F. Hutchings, for plaintiff in error.

The action was brought by Stevens, claiming damages for a horse (gelding) alleged to have been killed by Gannon. Upon the trial Stevens, after testifying to the ownership, death, and value of the horse, produced as a witness a young lad, Patrick Gannon, 13 years old, nephew of defendant, who, after a thorough examination, failed to throw any light on the matter, and spoke only of seeing defendant at one time leading a mare, and that he "thought it was his own mare." Although it did not appear that Stevens was taken by surprise, or had any reason to expect the witness would testify otherwise, he (Stevens) was allowed to impeach, contradict, and stultify his own witness, both by cross-examination, and by the testimony of another witness. His counsel asked the boy "if he recollected testifying at Erie that his uncle had an axe on his shoulder when he was leading the horse?" This was a direct attempt to impeach and vilify their own witness. They did not pretend that they were misled by the witness. But if they could be allowed to impeach their own witness, they could not be allowed to prejudice us by showing what he had sworn to before. That, certainly, was not competent testimony.

Stevens was permitted to prove by witness Miller what the testimony of one Mrs. Patrick Gannon had been before the justice when the case was originally tried. This testimony was objected to by Gannon; on the ground that no foundation had been laid for the introduction of such testimony. We invoke a careful scrutiny of the record on this point, as we think the district court erred in admitting this testimony. Let us see what foundation had been laid for the introduction of this testimony. The only evidence of the death of Mrs. Patrick Gannon was that of plaintiff, Stevens: "I knew the wife of Pat Gannon. She testified before 'Squire Williams in this *451 case. She is dead. I did not see her die, nor *see her after she was dead. I saw people going there to the funeral of old Pat Gannon's wife. I have not seen her since." There was no evidence whatever as to the nature of the oath, if any, that was administered to her. Although four years had elapsed since the trial before the justice, the only proof of means of recollection, or capacity to reproduce her testimony, required by the court, is in the testimony of Miller, as follows: "I saw a woman at that trial who said she was the wife of Pat Gannon. She testified in that case, I think. I remember her testimony in chief and on cross-examination." Upon this foundation the witness was allowed to give, not the testimony of Mrs. Gannon, in her words, but his opinion of what her testimony proved, and was even allowed to say what she meant by her language, and construe it for the benefit of the court and jury, as witness the following: "Miller. She spoke about her boy, and said he was present when defendant went by with the horse and axe. Stevens' Counsel. 'What boy did she refer to? Miller. It is Patrick Gannon,—the same boy that testified before Williams, and testified here in this case to-day." In the cross-examination of Miller, his want of means of knowledge is further shown. "The trial was in 1868. I took no minutes in writing. I have talked with the attorneys of plaintiff about the testimony of Mrs. Gannon. I think I have mentioned the case once or twice before, since it was tried," (four years before.)

as Miller; and, after putting to him several questions about his ability to testify "substantially," all of which he answered, "Yes," he is allowed to give his version of Mrs. Gannon's testimony. He says, however: "I cannot remember what she said on cross-examination. I do not think I have used one of the words she used when she testified before me. I could not testify whether she said it was a horse, or a mare. I do not recollect the testimony except what I used in making up my judgment. I do not recollect what she said *452 about bad feeling between herself and defendant; but *her actions showed it. I think there were several questions asked the witness on that trial that she did not answer."

It is well settled that where a party desires to introduce secondary evidence he must lay the foundation himself, and must show that it is the best evidence procurable. This rule is much more inflexible when the attempt is made to introduce the evidence of a deceased person, taken in a former trial, than in cases where the contents of lost written instruments are sought to be introduced. In this case the death of Mrs. Patrick Gannon was not satisfactorily shown. There was not one particle of evidence to show that any legal oath, or, in fact, that any pretense of an oath, was administered to her; and without the oath there is nothing to distinguish her statements from common hearsay. Instead of its appearing affirmatively that Miller and Williams had the requisite knowledge to enable them to testify concerning the alleged former evidence of Mrs. Gannon, it appears that they had no such knowledge, and they do not pretend to give even a "single word" that she said, but simply what they considered to be the substance of her testimony. It is not shown that Miller had any interest in the case, or any peculiar knowledge of such matters. He was simply an idle spectator of the trial, and, after four years, comes in, and is allowed to give his impression of what Mrs. Gannon testified to. Williams was the justice, and says he remembered only what testimony "he used" in making his judgment. Williams might conclude that Mrs. Gannon's testimony proved one thing; the jury might come to quite another conclusion, if they heard her testimony, and not Williams' conclusions on it. The rule ought to be strictly enforced concerning such testimony. The weight of the testimony of a belligerent Irish woman, who had hard feelings towards the defendant, and who refused to answer many questions, as the testimony shows Mrs. Gannon did in this case, would be materially increased when told by a sober and staid old justice; and, in fact, when you deprive the jury of the advantage of seeing witnesses face to face, and noting their personal appearance and their demeanor on *458 *the witness stand, you deprive them of one of the surest avenues to the truth. Hence we say the rule should be a strict one that allows the statements of a witness at second hand to be used in evidence. U. S. v. Wood, 3 Wash. 440; 1 Phil. Ev. 200; Ephraïms v. Murdock, 7 Blackf. 10; Com. v. Richards, 18 Pick. 484; v.13k—22

Warren v. Nichols, 6 Metc. 261. It must be shown that the witness was sworn. Sloan v. Somers, 20 N. J. Law, 66. The witness refused to answer questions, and was not fully examined at the former trial. Noble v. McClintock, 6 Watts & S. 58.

The issue was whether defendant had killed plaintiff's horse. To prove this issue on his part, plaintiff was allowed to testify that defendant was raising a crop of corn, and that said crop had been trespassed upon shortly before plaintiff's horse was killed. This was error, and prejudicial. It is by no means a logical deduction that because a man has a corn crop, or because his corn crop is trespassed upon, that he will kill or has killed a horse.

Many of the questions put to plaintiff's witnesses, on examination in chief, were so very suggestive and leading as to be incompetent for this reason alone. This question put to the plaintiff is a sample of these leading and suggestive questions: "State if any one came to you from the defendant to notify you that this horse or any stock was trespassing on his corn?" This, and all like questions, were allowed over the objection and exception of defendant.

After Stevens had closed his case, Gannon was introduced in his own behalf, and asked this question: "Did you ever lead a horse of Mr. Stevens' by Patrick Gannon's, and say you had caught the old prisoner, and would fix him?" This was for the purpose of giving a direct negative to what was alleged to be the testimony of the deceased witness. The court, however, ruled out this testimony. It requires no argument to show our right to disprove the truth of the alleged testimony of Mrs. Gannon, yet the court refused to allow us to do so. Although the court had refused to allow Mr. Gannon to deny the alleged testimony of deceased Mrs. Gannon, the court *454 allowed the most extraordinary cross-examination of *the witness, to-wit: "Did you ever stand within five feet of any man in that neighborhood, in that or any other year, and see him strike a horse with an axe?" We know of no rule which permits the cross-examination of a party as to matters that it would not be competent to cross-examine a witness who is not a party. In this case the plaintiff was permitted to go outside of the direct and proper cross-examination, and ask defendant, Gannon, all manner of questions to make out plaintiff's case, or to prejudice the defendant before the jury.

Plaintiff, Stevens, and his witness Miller, were recalled in rebuttal, and allowed to testify concerning the testimony of Gannon before the justice, in 1868. No foundation for impeaching Gannon had been laid. If this testimony was introduced on the ground of admissions against interest, it should have been in chief, and not in rebuttal; and, in any event, the questions are so grossly leading and suggestive, and being put to a witness who had certainly drawn suspicion on himself, that they were incompetent for that reason alone. Here is a specimen: Counsel producing witness, to his witness: "State whether or not the defendant at that trial stated that he drove the horse down to Pat Gannon's house, and caught him there?" Witness: "He did." Counsel: "State whether or not the defendant at said time and place stated that he stood within five feet of the horse at the time he was wounded, and saw him struck with an axe?" Witness: "He did."

The instructions are all in the record. We ask particular attention to these instructions. We claim that the application of the maxim, falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus, made by the district court, was erroneous. The jury are the exclusive judges of all the facts, and of the credibility of the witnesses. The court has no right to withdraw any competent testimony from the jury, nor to decide as to the credibility of any witness. The jury are to apply the maxim according to their own judgment. They are at liberty to believe any portion of the witness' testimony, especially if corroborated by other testimony or circumstances; and they are not, as a matter of law, bound to dis-*455 believe any witness. It was so *decided in Re Santissima Trinidad, 7 Wheat. 283; Hargraves v. Hiller's Adm'x, 16 Ohio, 344; State v. Williams, 2 Jones, Law, 257; Mercer v. Wright, 3 Wis. 645; Knowles v. People, 15 Mich. 411; Lewis v. Hodgdon, 17 Me. 267. We refer especially to Mead v. McGraw, 19 Ohio St. 55, and Hale v. Rawallie, 8 Kan. *136.

We claim, as applicable to the testimony in this case, that all parties "who aid, abet, or assist in the commission of the tortious act" are not liable as principals, and the court should have made some such distinction as those who willingly or purposely aid, abet, etc.; for if a person unwittingly and unintentionally aid, he is not liable.

And, again, whether Mrs. Patrick Gannon was dead, whether this case had been tried before a justice, whether Mrs. Patrick Gannon testified at that trial, and what she testified to, were alike questions of fact, solely for the jury; yet the court virtually instructed the jury that Mrs. Patrick Gannon was dead, and that she testified before the justice. The court might, with the same propriety, have instructed the jury what she testified to. Indeed, the court did say: "Such testimony is before you, and properly,"—that is, testimony is before you showing what she did testify to; and this latter remark, of course, neutralized any argument defendant may have made touching the reliability of this testimony, and acted, as it was intended, to ratify all the court had done in admitting such testimony, and destroyed all that counsel for defendant had done in cross-examination to show the improbability of a mere spectator in a justice's court remembering the testimony of a witness four years, without memoranda or other aid to memory. It is very evident that the jury in this case based their verdict upon the alleged testimony of Mrs. Patrick Gannon, and the instructions of fact given by the court; and we submit that a careful examination of the testimony in this case, in the light of human probability and belief, will not justify the conclusion of the jury. A new trial should have been granted.

*456 *VALENTINE, J. This was an action brought by John Stevens against Lawrence Gannon, for the sum of $250, as damages for the killing of a certain horse. The main question tried in the court below, if not the only contested question, was whether Gannon did in fact kill said horse. All other questions in that court grew out of the trial of that question. In this court the plaintiff in error (defendant below) has raised many questions founded upon supposed irregularities claimed to have occurred during the trial of the case in the court below. We do not think that it will be necessary for us to discuss all of the questions separately, for many of them may be discussed in groups, and some of them need not be discussed at all. In general terms, therefore, and without going into details, we would say that we think the court below erroneously permitted some irrelevant testimony to be introduced on the trial, and also erroneously permitted several leading questions to be put by the plaintiff below to his own witnesses. But still we think that none of these errors were of such a substantial character as to require a reversal of the judgment of the court below. Errors like these are often committed in the trial of causes in nisi prius courts, and yet it is seldom that any such errors are complained of in this court, and seldom that a judgment could be reversed on account of them. This case, as said before, was for killing a horse. No person except those who participated in the act saw the horse killed; and hence the plaintiff had, in the nature of things, to resort to circumstantial evidence to prove his case; and in such cases great latitude must always be allowed in the introduction of testimony. And therefore much of the evidence which the plaintiff in error supposes to be irrelevant testimony, and much that would, under other circumstances, be in fact irrelevant testimony, was, under the circumstances of this case, both relevant and competent. For instance, it was both relevant and competent for the plaintiff *457 to show that the defendant had some motive as well as an opportunity to kill the horse by showing that the horse was in the habit of trespassing, and did, immediately before he was killed, trespass upon the defendant's corn crop. But even if said evidence was both irrelevant and incompetent, it is still strange that the plaintiff in error should now ask us, as he does, to reverse the judgment of the court below on account of the following question and answer, to-wit: "Question. State what you know about stock trespassing on that corn at the time? Answer. I don't know; I never saw any stock in his crops." The witness did not at any time state that he knew anything about the matter, and yet the plaintiff in error asks us to reverse the judgment on account of his testimony.

With regard to leading questions, we would say that many of the questions put to witnesses which the plaintiff in error supposes were leading, were not leading. It is not every question that is put in a direct or leading form, or that may be answered by "yes" or "no," or by a simple affirmative or negative, that is leading. To ask an impeaching witness directly if he knows the general character of the witness to be impeached for truth and veracity, is not leading. And, generally, a direct question upon any preliminary matter, merely introductory to something else, and not calling for an answer which will tend to prove or disprove any issue in the case, is not leading. For instance, after it had been shown that Mrs. Patrick Gannon had previously testified in chief and on cross-examination, on a former trial of this same case, and that she had since died, the following question was asked, to-wit: "Do you recollect her testimony in chief on the trial of that case? Answer. Yes." This question was not leading. It did not call for any testimony which tended to prove or disprove any of the issues in the case, but simply called for the recollection of the witness,—a purely preliminary matter, introductory of what was to follow. But even where nisi prius courts allow leading questions to be asked, still, as such courts have such a wide discretion in allowing or disallowing such questions, appellate prove by any other witness what this witness had ever said at any other time or place.

*458 courts can seldom reverse their decisions for allowing such questions to be asked. It can only be done where the nisi prius courts have manifestly abused their discretion. The plaintiff below, Stevens, introduced as a witness Patrick Gannon, a nephew of the defendant below. The witness testified at one time he saw the defendant leading a mare which he thought was the defendant's own mare. He also said in his testimony "I do not recollect that he had any axe." The plaintiff then asked the witness the following question: "Do you recollect of testifying at Erie that your uncle had an axe on his shoulder when he was leading the horse? Answer. I do not recollect." This question was allowed to be asked and answered, over the objections and exceptions of the defendant. Of course, the court erred in allowing this question to be asked and answered. The witness was the witness of the plaintiff; and the plaintiff did not even claim that he was surprised, or that the witness testified differently from what he had expected, or that the witness did not testify to the truth, or that the witness had the slightest prejudices in the case. The question is objectionable for at least three reasons: First, it is leading; second, it is an attempt to prove the declarations of a person not a party to the record, nor interested therein, nor in privity with any person interested therein; third, it is an attempt to lay the foundation for an impeachment of the plaintiff's own witness without any reason being given therefor. But still we do not think that the defendant's rights were materially prejudiced by the error of the court. The witness himself stated nothing in response to this question in contradiction or corroboration of what he had already stated. His answer really amounted to nothing. And there was no attempt to.

The plaintiff introduced evidence, over the objections of the defendant, to show what Mrs. Patrick Gannon had previously testified to on a former trial of this same case. The defendant claims that the evidence was erroneously admitted for the following reasons:

First, that it was not sufficiently shown that Mrs. Gannon had *459 died since the former trial; second, * that it was not sufficiently shown that a legal oath had been administered to her before her testimony was given; third, that the witnesses proving her testimony were not sufficiently qualified therefor,—that is, that they were not able to give her exact words, but could give only the substance of her testimony; fourth, that it was shown that Mrs. Gannon refused to answer several questions on the former trial.

None of these reasons are sufficient. The first, second, and fourth are, in fact, superimposed upon very slender foundations. They are in fact not true. Nor were such reasons specifically urged in the court below. If such reasons had there been urged in the trial court, further evidence probably could have been supplied, and probably would have been supplied. Changing the order of the first two reasons, and taking up the second one first, we would say that it was amply proved by different witnesses that Mrs. Gannon “testified” as a “witness” at the former trial of this case; that she was examined in chief and cross-examined; and that her “testimony” was received by the court. Now, to “testify,” under such circumstances, certainly means to be examined as a witness under oath of affirmation. See Burrill’s, Bouvier’s, Webster’s, and Worcester’s Dictionaries, “Testify.”

Returning, now, to the first reason urged against the introduction of said testimony. Before any evidence was introduced to show what Mrs. Gannon had formerly testified to, it was shown that the plaintiff and Mrs. Gannon lived in the same neighborhood, and then the plaintiff testified as follows: “I knew the wife of Pat Gannon. She testified before ‘Squire Williams in this case. She is dead. I did not see her die, or see her after she was dead. I saw people going there to the funeral of old Pat Gannon’s wife. I have not seen her since.” This evidence was not objected to. After it was shown what Mrs. Gannon had testified to on the former trial, the defendant, who was also a neighbor of the plaintiff and of Mrs. Gannon, and a brother-in-law of Mrs. Gannon’s, became a witness, and testified as follows:

*460 “I knew Mrs. Patrick Gannon, deceased, in her lifetime. I remember the trial of this case * before Esquire Williams, in Erie township. At that time Mrs. Gannon and I were on very unfriendly terms. I was present a little after she died. She sent for me before she died.” We think it is evident, beyond all doubt, that Mrs. Gannon was dead at the time of the last trial of this case in the district court, and whether her death was sufficiently shown before the evidence of what she had formerly testified to was introduced, we think is now wholly immaterial; but still we are inclined to think that, for the purposes of this case, her death was sufficiently shown before any evidence of what she had formerly testified to was introduced.

As to the third reason given why said evidence should have been excluded, we would say that we think it was sufficient to prove the substance of what Mrs. Gannon testified to on the former trial, and not necessary to prove her exact words. 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 165, 166; 1 Phil. Ev. (5th Amer. Ed., Cow. & H. and Edw. Notes,) marginal page 395 et seq., note 115. This, we think, is the law, both upon reason and authority. The reasons for this being the law we think are so obvious that it is not necessary to state them. There was not a particle of evidence tending to prove that Mrs. Gannon refused to answer any question put to her on the former trial; and the claim that there was any such refusal is now made for the first time in this court. The evidence upon which we suppose this claim is made is the last portion of the evidence of the last witness that testified with regard to Mrs. Gannon's testimony, and is as follows: "I think there were several questions asked the witness on that trial that she did not answer." If this can be construed into a refusal to testify, or a refusal to answer questions, why was not the point made in the court below? Why did not the defendant move to strike out all the evidence concerning Mrs. Gannon's testimony? Or why did he not ask the court below to instruct the jury to disregard it? He is too late now to raise any question concerning it. From anything that appears in the record, the questions which Mrs. Gannon did not *461 answer may have been withdrawn by the party ask*ing them, or the court may not have permitted them to be answered. The court below did not refuse to allow the defendant to disprove Mrs. Gannon's testimony.

The cross-examination of the defendant was a proper cross-examination; and, indeed, the defendant had a very fair trial in every respect. The application of the maxim, falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus, was a proper application of that maxim, according to the decisions of this court. Campbell v. State, 3 Kan. *488; State v. Horne, 9 Kan. *131. In the judgment of the writer of this opinion, however, it is unfortunate that such decisions were ever made, and he thinks they should be overruled. Mead v. McGraw, 19 Ohio St. 55, and cases there cited; Paulette v. Brown, 40 Mo. 52, 57, et seq.; Blanchard v. Pratt, 37 Ill. 243, 246; Callanan v. Shaw, 24 Iowa, 441, 447. I shall certainly never be in favor of reversing the judgment of the district court for refusing to give such an instruction as the second one given in this case. The instruction referred to is as follows: "If in your examination of the testimony in this case you should be satisfied that any witness has testified falsely and corruptly in reference to any material fact, you should disregard the whole of the testimony of such witness."

The following instruction was not erroneous, to-wit: "In cases of this nature all persons who aid, abet, or assist in the commission of the tortious act are regarded as principal actors, and are severally, as well as jointly, responsible to the injured party for damages sustained by such tortious act." The fourth instruction was not erroneous, or, at most, it was not so erroneous as to require a reversal of the judgment. That Mrs. Gannon was dead there can be no doubt. The evidence sufficiently showed it, and there was no conflict of evidence upon this point. Her evidence was properly presented to the jury for their consideration, and the court properly instructed the jury to consider it with due caution. They were not told to believe it or disbelieve it, nor to believe or disbelieve any portion of it; nor were they told to believe or disbelieve any portion of the evidence of the witnesses who testified with regard to it, except, possibly, they were told inferentially that Mrs. Gannon was dead, and this the defendant himself admitted and testified to as a witness on the trial of the case.

We have already given this case more time and consideration than it merits, and shall therefore consider it no further. The judgment of the court below will be affirmed.

HUNTER'S ADM'R v. FERGUSON'S ADM'R.

July Term, 1874.

1. Record: Judicial Proceedings: Presumptions. Where a record of the proceedings of a court of general jurisdiction shows upon its face that the court had jurisdiction of both the parties and the subject-matter of the action, and where the whole of the record is introduced in evidence, all presumptions from silence on the part of the record should be construed in favor of the regularity and validity of the proceedings of the court, and not against the regularity and validity of such proceedings.<sup>1</sup>

S. was selected by the clerk to try the cause;" and where said record further shows that said court, as a circuit court, had jurisdiction of both the parties and the subject-matter of the action: held, that it will be presumed, in favor *463 of the regularity and validity of the proceedings of *said court, when such proceedings are attacked collaterally, that the regular circuit judge was incompetent to try said cause for some legal reason, and that J. G. S. was an attorney present in court.<sup>1</sup>

3. ———: Presumption: Judge de Facto. But even if it were presumed that the regular judge was competent to try the cause, and that J. G. S. was not an attorney, still, as the record shows that said J. G. S. was a special judge de facto for the trial of said cause, it must be further held that the proceedings are valid until reversed or set aside by a direct proceeding, and cannot be held void in a collateral proceeding.

4. Evidence: Judicial Notice: Laws of Another State. The statute of Alabama—section 758 (640) of the Revised Code—authorizing the selection of a special judge of the circuit court to try causes is in fact unconstitutional and void. But, as both parties in this case have agreed that said statute was and is valid and operative, the supreme court of this state cannot declare that it is not valid and operative, for said supreme court cannot take judicial notice of the laws of Alabama in cases of this kind.

Error from Franklin district court.

Action on a judgment of the circuit court of Barbour county, Alabama, for $1,910, with interest and costs, brought by James L. Pugh, as administrator of the estate of John L. Hunter, deceased, against Calvin Leonard, as administrator of the estate of Robert Ferguson, deceased. Petition filed April 19, 1873. Answer, general denial. The record shows that on the tenth of April, 1866, Hunter, the plaintiff's intestate, brought a suit in the Alabama court above named, against one Bertram J. Hoole and Ferguson, defendant's intestate, upon a promissory note. Ferguson and Hoole were both personally served with the summons and complaint on April 13, 1866. The cause came on to be tried May 22, 1867, and the plaintiff therein, Hunter, obtained judgment. Hunter having died, Pugh was duly appointed administrator of his estate. Ferguson came to Kansas, and died here, and Leonard was appointed administrator of his estate. Said Alabama judgment not having been satisfied, the plaintiff brought this suit in the Franklin district court. Trial at the August term, 1873. Plaintiff offered an exemplified copy of the Alabama judgment in *464 evidence. Defendant objected "that it does not show that *the presiding judge of the circuit court of Barbour county, Alabama, was incompetent to try the cause in said transcript set forth, 'by reason of relationship to the parties, or of having been engaged as counsel in the cause, or for any other reason;' nor that the said John Gill Shorter, selected by the clerk of said circuit court to try said cause, was an attorney present in court, according to the form of the statute of Alabama in such cases made and provided, and that said judgment in said transcript set forth is void." The district court sustained this objection, and ruled out the record, and gave judgment against the plaintiff for costs. Before offering the Alabama record, the plaintiff read in evidence section 5 of article 6 of the constitution of Alabama, and section 758 (640) of the Revised Code of Alabama, both of which sections were then admitted by the parties to have been in full force and operation in that state on May 22, 1867, and since hitherto.

The transcript was admissible as evidence of the record of a court of a sister state. Its legal effect or sufficiency is a different question. Slaughter v. Cunningham, 24 Ala. 260; Leavens v. Butler, 8 Port. (Ala.) 393.

The legal effect or sufficiency of the evidence is settled in Gunn v. Howell, 27 Ala. 663. There the court say "that the constitution of the United States, (article 4, § 1,) requiring 'full faith and credit' to be given to judgments of the courts of sister states, places them rather on the footing of domestic judgments, and not that of foreign judgments proper." When "duly authenticated and proved, the judgments of sister states are evidence prima facie of jurisdiction." And this is the law in Kansas, even as to courts or officers of "special jurisdiction." Butcher v. Brownsville Bank, 2 Kan. *80, *81; Burnes v. Simpson, 9 Kan. *663; Code, § 121. The fact is, however, the question of jurisdiction is not raised in this case, although the district court held that the Alabama record failed to show, by its silence as to certain facts, jurisdiction in the court of Barbour county. The only point presented by the record is whether or not John Gill Shorter, the pro tem. judge, had the right to hold that office, —a point entirely distinct from that of the jurisdiction of the court over the case. Ex parte Strang, 21 Ohio St. 616; In re Boyle, 9 Wis. 267. But the constitution of Alabama (section 5, art. 6) and the Revised Code of Alabama (section 758) were read in evidence. And it is insisted by defendant in error that the organic and the statute laws of that state impart no validity to the judgment sued on, because it is not recited in the judgment entry, and nowhere appears in the record, that "the presiding judge of the circuit court of said Barbour county was incompetent to try the cause set forth in the transcript by reason of relationship to the parties, or of having been engaged as counsel in the cause, or for any other reason." The sole question here is whether the judgment is void because it fails to recite the cause or "reason" why the presiding judge was incompetent to try the case. The Alabama statute expressly names two grounds, (relationship to the parties, or having been of counsel,) and then makes "any other reason" sufficient to disqualify. Who is the judge of the other reasons? Whom does the statute make the judge of the other reasons? It is said that the "other reason" must be recited, to enable the court that is called on to pass upon the validity of the judgment to decide whether the "other reason" is sufficient. If the other reason is open to the judgment of other judges than the presiding judge or the attorney who is selected as special judge by the clerk, where is the limit that would make any such judgment valid? If the "other reason" were in fact recited in the record, the sufficiency of that "other reason" is open to adjudication; and what is such a judgment worth unless it recites that the presiding judge was of kin or counsel? What becomes of the "other reasons?" But what is the manifest law of this case? It is that the presiding judge of the circuit court of Barbour county was the trier of the question of fact whether he was competent to try the cause or not. The language of the Alabama Code is, "When any judge of the circuit court is incompetent to try any case," etc. No one is named as the judge of *466 when the incompetency exists, or on what ground or "reason" it exists. Who, then, is the judge? Most assuredly the presiding judge. Who else can be? Until the fact of relationship, or some other cause or reason, is ascertained, the presiding judge is alone authorized to try the case, and who but himself determines his competency or incompetency? Then it is manifest that the presiding judge is alone charged by the Alabama statute with the ascertainment of the fact of his incompetency. And the authorities are conclusive of the legal proposition that, when a court of general or special jurisdiction is charged by law with the ascertainment of a jurisdictional fact, the simple recital in the record that the judge did ascertain the fact is conclusive. The recital imports absolute verity. Wyatt's Adm'r v. Rambo, 29 Ala. 510. The recital that "the presiding judge being incompetent," etc., is certainly the same in substance and legal effect as the recital that "the presiding judge being incompetent for other reason than that he was related to the parties, or had been of counsel in the cause," etc. The incompetency of the judge depended upon a fact or a reason. Why he was held incompetent the presiding judge fails to state. It may have been relationship or kinship or "other reason." The Kansas courts are bound to presume either that the presiding judge was related, or of counsel, or that there was "other reason" for his incompetency. What "other reason" is sufficient was left to the presiding judge, and he recites he was incompetent. The Kansas courts are bound to hold that the "other reason" was sufficient to show the incompetency of the presiding judge, otherwise he would not have so stated. But if another "reason" were named in the entry, this court, much less the district court, would have no power to question its sufficiency. That would be an inquiry that the supreme court of Alabama alone could enter upon, because such insufficient reason would make the judgment only erroneous, not void.

Again, it was objected that the Alabama record does not show "that John Gill Shorter, selected by the clerk of the circuit *467 court to try said cause," was an "attorney present in *court."

But may he not have been in fact such an attorney? Is there any presumption that the clerk violated the law by choosing an unqualified person? Is not the reverse to be presumed? "The rule by which inspection of the record is governed, is that legal presumptions do not come to the aid of the record, except as to acts or facts touching which the record is silent. In such case it will be presumed that what ought to have been done was not only done, but rightly done." Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391. Moreover, no objection was made at the trial to the authority of Mr. Shorter to act. In fact, the defendants, although personally served, chose to make default. "Jurisdiction over a party being obtained, continues until judgment; and he must therefore take notice of all the proceedings until that time." Freem. Judgm. § 142, p. 115; Case v. State, 5 Ind. 1; Feaster v. Woodfill, 23 Ind. 493; Pepin v. Lachenmeyer, 45 N. Y. 29, 32; Ex parte Strang, 21 Ohio St. 610; State v. Douglass, 50 Mo. 593. Unless the district court could legally infer from the mere silence of the Alabama record that all the officers of the Barbour county circuit court were either ignoramuses or knaves, or both, its action in excluding the transcript was erroneous.

Mason & Parkinson and Robt. McFarland, for defendant.

The transcript was not admissible as evidence of the record of a court of a sister state, since the record itself discloses the want of jurisdiction in the court rendering the judgment in Barbour county, Alabama. Slaughter v. Cunningham, 24 Ala. 269; Dozier v. Joyce, 8 Port. (Ala.) 312. The district court of Franklin county did not err in ruling out the transcript, since it was void on its face by the laws of the state of Alabama, and was properly so declared by said district court, which had the right to inquire into the jurisdiction of the court in Alabama rendering it. Section 5, art. 6, Const. Ala. Though the circuit courts of Alabama have original jurisdiction in civil and criminal cases, limited as to civil cases involving more than fifty dollars, "nevertheless, when a special authority has been conferred upon a circuit court by statute, it is, quoad hoc, an inferior and limited court, and must, like all other courts of limited *468 statutory jurisdiction, show upon its records every jurisdictional fact necessary to support its authority to adjudicate the subject-matter before it." Gunn v. Howell, 27 Ala. 675; Wilson v. Wilson, 36 Ala. 662; Thatcher v. Powell, 6 Wheat. 119; Holt v. School Com'rs, 29 Ala. 451; Commissioner's Court v. Thompson, 18 Ala. 694; King v. Shackelford, 13 Ala. 435; Wilkinson v. Harwell, Id. 662; Mechanics' Bank v. Seton, 1 Pet. 310. The supreme court of Alabama, in affirmation of the principle "that when a court of general jurisdiction has a special authority conferred on it by statute it is quoad hoc an inferior and limited court," has invariably held that everything required by the statute essential to the exercise of the right was necessary to the jurisdiction of the court, and must appear from its proceedings in the same manner as courts created by statute are required to set out in the record of their proceedings every fact necessary to give them jurisdiction; and the absence of such facts on the record renders void their proceedings. Couch v. Anderson, 26 Ala. 676; Bates v. Planters' & Merch. Bank, 8 Port. (Ala.) 99; Levert v. Planters' & Merch. Bank, Id. 104; Clements v. Branch Bank, 1 Ala. 50; Taliaferro v. Lane, 23 Ala. 369.

Section 758 of the Alabama Code is more special in its nature than a statute which confers additional powers on a court as such, in this: that it confers special authority upon the parties to a cause in court, and, on their failure to exercise the power conferred upon the clerk of the court to select a special judge from among the attorneys present in court at the time when the cause is called, to try the same, when the judge of the circuit court has been engaged as counsel, or is related within certain degrees to the parties, or has an interest in the suit, etc., and is thereby disqualified and prohibited by law from presiding. The first jurisdictional fact which must exist, and which must appear of record, to vest power and authority in the parties, or in the clerk, to nominate a special judge, is the one which renders the presiding judge disqualified to preside in the case. Then, when this has been shown, the next fact which must exist and appear of record is that the person selected by the parties or by the clerk is an attorney. The statute is imperative on this point also. Observe how restricted the power of a special judge is over this case, even if the record of the proceedings support his jurisdiction. He cannot try any other case on the docket, and his power over the particular case is limited to that term of the court. If the case is not tried, he can only make the necessary orders and continue it. We therefore say that the transcript of the Alabama record in this cause shows upon its face that the judgment is void. (1) It shows that the judgment was not rendered by the judge of the circuit court of Barbour county. (2) It does not show that the circuit judge had been counsel in the case, or was related to either of the parties, or that he had an interest in the subject-matter of the suit, and thereby rendered incompetent and disqualified by law to preside on the trial, and thus vest authority and power in the parties to the suit, or in the clerk of the court, where the parties fail to select—to nominate—some attorney to try the case. (3) It does not show that John Gill Shorter was an attorney. (4) Even if the record did show that John Gill Shorter was an attorney, still he would not, as special judge, have jurisdiction of the case, as the fact which disqualified the circuit judge nowhere appears on the record; and if the fact which in law disqualified the circuit judge to preside had appeared of record, the failure of the record to show that John Gill Shorter was an attorney would have rendered his judgment void for want of jurisdiction also.

The judgment entry, shown by the transcript, made by John Gill Shorter in the cause, while pending in the circuit court of Barbour county, Alabama, between Hunter, plaintiff, and Ferguson and Hoole, defendants, and the judgment rendered by said John Gill Shorter, are void; for, in the language of Chief Justice MARSHALL in the case of Thatcher v. Powell, 6 Wheat. 119: "When a court exercises an extraordinary power under a special statute which prescribes its course, that course ought to be strictly pursued, and the facts which give jurisdiction ought to appear on the face of the record, otherwise the proceedings are not merely voidable, but absolutely void, as being coram non judice."

VALENTINE, J. This was an action founded upon a supposed *470 judgment claimed to have been rendered by the circuit *court of Barbour county, Alabama. The defendant in error (defendant below) denies the validity of said judgment. The court below held it to be void; and the only question now presented to us is whether it is void or not. The only ground upon which it is claimed to be void is as follows: It is claimed that the judgment was not rendered by the regular judge of the circuit court of said county, nor by any other person authorized to render judgment in that court. The journal entry of said judgment reads as follows:

"[Title.]

JUDGMENT.

"MAY 22, 1867.

"The presiding judge being incompetent to try this cause, and the parties failing to agree upon any one to preside in his place, John Gill Shorter was selected by the clerk to try the cause; and thereupon came the plaintiff by attorney, and the defendants, being called, came not, but made default. It is therefore considered by the court that the plaintiff recover of the defendants the sum of $1,910 for his damages, and also the costs in this behalf expended, for which let execution issue."

Section 758 (640) of the Revised Code of Alabama reads as follows: "When any judge of the circuit court is incompetent to try any case standing for trial, by reason of relationship to parties, or of having been engaged as counsel in the cause, or for any other reason, the parties to the suit must, when the same is reached for trial, nominate some attorney present in the court, who must preside as judge for the trial of such cause during that term; and, if the parties fail promptly to make such selection, the clerk of the court must nominate the attorney who shall preside over and try the cause at that term."

It was admitted in the court below that said section was in full force and operation in Alabama at the time of the rendering of said judgment, and since hitherto. It is claimed that said judgment is void for the following reasons: First, the record thereof shows upon its face that the judgment was not rendered by the regular judge of said circuit court; second, it fails to show any specific disqualification on the part of said regular judge; third, and it fails to show that John Gill Shorter was an attorney present in court. Now, said section 758 (640) of the Alabama Code is a sufficient answer *471 *to the first objection, for under that section it was not necessary that the regular judge should try said cause; hence we need to consider only the second and third objections, and we shall consider both of these together.

The circuit court of Alabama is a court of record, with general original jurisdiction. This is shown by section 5, art. 6, of the constitution of Alabama, (read in evidence in the court below,) by the record of the proceedings of the said circuit court, and by the certificates of the clerk and judge of said court who authenticated said record. The said circuit court had jurisdiction as a circuit court of the subject-matter of the action in which said judgment was rendered. It had jurisdiction of both of the defendants in that action by personal service of the summons upon each of them; and the whole of the record of all the proceedings in that action was introduced in evidence in the court below in this action. Hence all presumptions from silence or absence on the part of the record of said judgment should be construed in favor of the regularity and validity of the proceedings of the said circuit court, and not against them. Galpin v. Page, 18 Wall. 350. It is a rule of universal application that, whenever a record of a court of general or superior jurisdiction is merely silent upon any particular matter, it will be presumed, notwithstanding the silence, that whatever ought to have been done was not only done, but that it was rightly done. Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 392. This is the universal doctrine of the courts. Hence we think it ought to be presumed, in accordance with the express declaration of the record of said judgment, that the presiding judge of said court was incompetent to try said cause, although the record does not disclose the facts which rendered him incompetent; and we think it ought to be presumed that John Gill Shorter was an attorney present in court, although the record does not show that he was an attorney. The Alabama decisions, referred to by defendant in error as applicable to this point, have really no application whatever. They amount simply to this: . Whenever some special matter not coming within *472 the ordinary jurisdiction of *the circuit court, but belonging of right to some other court possessing only special and limited jurisdiction, is conferred upon the circuit court, to be by it heard and determined because of some disqualification on the part of the judge of the court of special and limited jurisdiction, the circuit court will for such special matter become merely a court of special and limited jurisdiction, just like the court to which such special matter rightfully belongs; and therefore every fact necessary to give such circuit court jurisdiction of such special matter must affirmatively appear upon the face of the record of the proceedings of such circuit court, just as it should appear upon the face of the record of the proceedings of such court of special and limited jurisdiction, or such proceedings will be held to be void for the want of jurisdiction. That is, the record of the court of general and superior jurisdiction must, for this special matter, be just as full, with regard to jurisdictional facts, as the record of the court of special and limited jurisdiction. The record of the two courts for the special matter must be alike.

In the present case, however, the subject-matter of the action in which said judgment was rendered, does not belong to any court of special and limited jurisdiction. No court of special and limited jurisdiction could adjudicate upon it. But it belongs rightfully to the circuit court, and to no other court. The authority to hear and determine the subject-matter of said action is not a special authority conferred upon the circuit court, but it comes within its general and ordinary jurisdiction. It is not determined by some special statutory mode of procedure established for some court of special and limited jurisdiction, but it is determined by the ordinary mode of procedure established for the circuit court. The case is tried just as any other case is tried in the circuit court, except that it is tried before a special judge or judge pro tem. The record is made up in the same manner; the proceedings are under the control and within the custody of the same officers, and the record of the proceedings are authenticated in the same manner. The court, although temporarily presided *473 over by a special or pro tem. judge, is still *essentially the circuit court. It is not a court exercising merely a special and limited jurisdiction, but it is a court in the exercise of a general and superior jurisdiction, although presided over temporarily by a special judge; and therefore all the proceedings of said court should be examined and construed in the same manner as the proceedings of the circuit court are usually examined and construed. If otherwise, however,—if all presumptions from silence on the part of the record are to be construed against the regularity and validity of the proceedings of the circuit court in such cases,—then all such presumptions are not only to be drawn against the record of a court of general and superior jurisdiction, but they are also to be drawn against the intelligence, the care, and diligence, or the good faith, of the regular officers of that court. It must be presumed, against the officers, the judge, the clerk, and the sheriff, that they allowed a usurper to intrude into the judge's office, to take possession of all the paraphernalia of the court, and to preside over its deliberations. Such pre-sumptions should not be allowed. On the contrary, we think all presumptions should be in favor of the regularity and validity of the proceedings, and in favor of the intelligence, diligence, and good faith of all the officers. We would refer to the following authorities as applicable to this point: State v. Carroll, 38 Conn. 449; S. C. 12 Amer. Law. Reg. (N. S.) 165; Feaster v. Woodfill, 23 Ind. 493, 497; Starry v. Winning, 7 Ind. 811, 314.

In the case of Horton v. Pool, 40 Ala. 629, 632, Judge BYRD, of the supreme court of Alabama, in delivering the opinion of the court, says: "The record should have shown affirmatively that the person chosen to preside on the trial of the cause in the court below was an attorney of the court. Code, § 640. But, without determining whether the record so shows, we are satisfied that there is no error shown by the bill of exceptions of which the appellant can legally complain." This is all there is said upon the subject in his decision.

The supreme court of Alabama, by this decision, substantially *474 says that, although the record may be silent as to whether a special judge trying the cause is an attorney or not, yet that, even where the record is attacked directly on an appeal, no error in the record is affirmatively shown of which the party attacking the record can complain. What would the court have said if the record had been attacked collaterally, as in the case now before us? It is supposed that the court would have said that the judgment was void. The court in that case affirmed the judgment of the court below, although the record was silent as to whether the special judge trying the cause was an attorney or not. And whoever heard of an appellate court affirming a void judgment? Whoever heard of an appellate court making a void judgment valid by affirming the same? Even on appeal the appellate court will not examine to see whether the judge trying the cause was legally the judge, unless the question was raised in the trial court. State v. Anon. 2 Nott & McC. 27; Feaster v. Woodfill, 23 Ind. 493. A fortiori, a court will not examine such a question when the judgment is attacked collaterally.

But, for the purposes of this case, suppose that the regular judge of the said circuit court of Alabama was entirely competent in every respect to try said cause, and suppose that John Gill Shorter was not an attorney present in court, then is the judgment void? Is it a nullity when attacked collaterally, as in this case? We think not. The laws of Alabama, as admitted by the parties, provide for such an officer as a special judge pro tem. John Gill Shorter was regularly selected and regularly installed as such officer for the trial of said cause. He took possession and control of the office for that purpose. He was duly recognized by all the officers of the court, the parties present in court, and others, as such officer. A record of his proceeding was regularly kept and preserved as in other cases, and such record was, at the time it was made, and still is, recognized as a part of the records of said court. And the present judge and clerk of said court duly authenticate the very transcript of said record, which was offered in evidence in this case, which was held to be *475 *void by the court below. John Gill Shorter was in fact, beyond all doubt, a special judge de facto of said court. And as such judge de facto we do not think his proceedings can be attacked in the collateral manner in which they are now attempted to be attacked. They must be held valid and binding until attacked by some direct proceeding instituted for the purpose of attacking them. This doctrine, we think, is universally recognized and maintained. State v. Carroll, 38 Conn. 449; S. C. 12 Amer. Law Reg. (N. S.) 165; Feaster v. Woodfill, 23 Ind. 493, 497; Case v. State, 5 Ind. 1; Starry v. Winning, 7 Ind. 311, 314; Jones v. State, 11 Ind. 357; Taylor v. Skrine, 3 Brev. 516; State v. Anon. 2 Nott & M. 27; In re Boyle, 9 Wis. 264; State v. Bloom, 17 Wis. 521; State v. Douglass, 50 Mo. 593; People v. Bangs, 24 Ill. 184; Clark v. Com., 29 P. St. 129; Ex parte Strang, 21 Ohio St. 610; Pepin v. Lachenmeyer, 45 N. Y. 27, 32; People v. White, 24 Wend. 520; State v. Alling, 12 Ohio, 16.

We have considered said section 758 (640) of the Alabama Code as valid and operative, because the parties to this suit agreed that it was, and nothing was introduced in evidence which tended to show that it was not valid and operative. It is in fact, however, unconstitutional and void, and the supreme court of Alabama has recently held it to be unconstitutional and void. Ex parte Amos, decided by the supreme court of Alabama, July 30, 1874. We cannot take judicial notice of the constitution or laws or judicial decisions of Alabama, or of any other state. They must be proved by the introduction of evidence. Gen. St. 700, § 370; Porter v. Wells, 6 Kan. *455; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 489; 2 Phil. Ev. (5th Amer. Ed. Cowen & H. and Edw. Notes,) original page 428, note 1. It is true, for the purpose of construing our own laws or of determining what our own laws are, we take judicial notice of everything that can in any manner aid us in such construction or determination, for we are bound to know what our own laws are without any proof thereof. And, as we are bound to take ju-*476 dicial notice of *what our own laws are, we are bound to take judicial notice of everything that will in any manner aid us in determining what our own laws are. For this purpose, and so far as they are applicable, we may take judicial notice of the existence and history of the laws of every country and of every age. We may, indeed, take judicial notice of everything that can be known or understood of every law that has ever been passed, of every decision that has ever been promulgated, of every transaction that has ever occurred, of every event that has ever transpired, and of every fact that has ever existed. But except for the purpose of construing our own laws, and of determining what they are, we can know but very little except through the medium of evidence. Except for that purpose we can know the laws of other states only as they are proved to us, like other facts. Hence we cannot take judicial notice (against the agreement of the parties) that said section 758 (640) of the Alabama Code is unconstitutional and void. We have, however, examined the constitution of Alabama, and we agree with the supreme court of that state that said section 758 (640) is unconstitutional and void so far as it attempts to authorize the selection of a special judge of the circuit court.

The judgment of the court below must be reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings.

DANIEL GILTENAN v. B. W. LEMERT.

July Term, 1874.

Quieting Title: Title of Occupant: Adverse Title. A party in the quiet, peaceable, and rightful possession of real estate, claiming title thereto, has such an interest therein, although his title may be ever so defective, that he may maintain an action to quiet his title and possession as against any adverse claimant whose title is weaker than his, or who has no title at all. [Morrill v. Douglass, 14 Kan. 301.]

*477 *Error from Neosho district court.

The case is stated in the opinion.

Hutchings & O'Grady, for plaintiff in error.

The court erred in sustaining the demurrer to plaintiff's evidence. A demurrer to evidence does not alter the rule that the jury are the exclusive judges of the facts. The court upon a demurrer to evidence cannot weigh the testimony, and decide upon the preponderance. The only question to be decided by the court is whether there is an entire failure of proof on any material question raised in the pleadings, and necessary, under the law, to be supported by some proof in order to justify a recovery.

The plaintiff had shown an exclusive and continuous possession of the land since before the action was commenced. The deed from Chouteau (who had prior possession, coupled with an equity relating back to September 29, 1865, and which had ripened into a complete legal title at the commencement of this action) was certainly evidence that plaintiff's entry was lawful, and at the least must be construed to be license from Chouteau to enter. This possession was "an incipient or inchoate title," which would "in time ripen into a complete, perfect, and absolute title," and plaintiff could "maintain an action to quiet possession" against the defendant, who "had not a paramount right,"—in fact, who had not shown even the remotest right, but who "claimed adversely" in his answer. At the time of passing on this demurrer, so far as the court was informed or the record shows, Lemert's claim to this land was a mere idle and vexatious claim, without any foundation whatever. The patent showed the absolute legal title to be in Chouteau. That he obtained *478 his title *as a "head-right," under the fourteenth article of the treaty, is recited by the patent itself. Now, then, if no other force is given to the deed from Chouteau to Giltenan, it must be conceded that it was license from Chouteau to Giltenan, authorizing him to enter, and was given after the equity of Chouteau attached. Giltenan, then, had certainly made this case,—he was in possession of the land by written license, and consent of the owner of the fee, and a mere stranger, without a shadow of right, questioned his possession. The possession of Giltenan made out a prima facie case. "It is a maxim that the party in possession is presumed to have a valid title." "It is prima facie evidence of seizin in fee." Quiet and exclusive possession of real estate give the party holding the same a "right against every person who cannot establish a title." "This is the general rule, in respect to which there is no exception, and it has been established by a world of authorities, both in this country and in England." Tyler, Eject. pp. 70-72; Brenner v. Bigelow, 8 Kan. *496.

Did the court err in sustaining the demurrer of the defendant to the evidence of plaintiff? In other words, did all the evidence introduced support the petition, and entitle the plaintiff to the relief asked? The plaintiff based his right to relief on the ground that he held the legal title to, and was in the quiet and peaceable possession of, the premises. Proof that the plaintiff held the legal title alone would not sustain the action. Eaton v. Giles, 5 Kan. *24. Nor would proof of bare possession, without some claim of right thereto, be sufficient, (Nash, Pl. & Pr. 654; Seney, Code, 417, note b;) and we submit whether, in any case, possession without the legal title would be sufficient to sustain the action. In this case the right to possession, under the pleadings, depending upon plaintiff's holding the title, in order to make out a prima facie case it was necessary for the plaintiff to show both possession, and the right to possession, in himself. This he failed to do. The *479 only evidence of any title in him *was that shown by the deed of Gesso Chouteau, bearing date August 3, 1867, and a patent from the government to Chouteau, of date June 10, 1870. The patent from the government showed the legal title to the premises in controversy to be vested in Chouteau on the tenth of June, 1870. The deed of August 3d, from Chouteau to plaintiff, was incompetent as evidence, and the objection of defendant to its introduction should have been sustained. The deed was executed nearly three years before the patent, and, in order to be a proper instrument of evidence, it should have been sufficient in itself to vest in the grantee any subsequently-acquired title of the grantor. Comp. Laws 1862, p. 354,

§ 4. It contains no covenants whatever. It does not warrant the title. It is an ordinary quitclaim deed, and did not operate, either under the statute or by way of estoppel, to vest in the plaintiff any after-acquired title of Chouteau. Simpson v. Greeley, 8 Kan. *586; White v. Brokaw, 14 Ohio St. 339; Bruce v. Luke, 9 Kan. *201.

It does purport to convey "all the interest he may acquire by virtue of a head-right as an Osage Indian half-breed, or by virtue of priority of settlement" on the land. This language can give no extra effect to the deed. It only shows that the grantor intended to convey such right as then was vested in him, by virtue of rights then existing. There is no covenant as to his having any right by virtue of priority of settlement. It was a conveyance, then, in the present only, and could pass only such interests as the grantor then had. It does not purport to convey any greater interest than the grantor then had, in the meaning of section 4 of Compiled Laws above referred to. Hence, on the face of this instrument, showing as it did that the grantor did not have, nor undertake to convey, the legal title, and its execution being long anterior to the patent to Chouteau, it was not a proper subject of evidence.

Again, plaintiff, having introduced the patent in evidence, was bound by its recitals. Claiming title through the grantee in the patent, he cannot deny that its recitals are true. The patent *480 shows that Gesso Chouteau was designated as one of *the half-breeds to have a head-right under the fourteenth article of the treaty between the government and the Osage tribe of Indians of September 29, 1865; that this selection included the lands in controversy in this action; and that his selection was approved by the secretary of the interior, June 15, 1869. We submit, therefore, that as the evidence of plaintiff already introduced at the time the deed was offered showed that Chouteau was a member of a tribe of Indians, and that no title to the lands in controversy was vested in him until the issuance of the patent, that he had no legal capacity to convey, and the deed bearing date August 3, 1867, was void in its inception, and passed no right or interest in the premises to plaintiff. The plaintiff, then, having shown title in Chouteau, and not connecting himself with the title, had no such possession as the law will countenance. The case is within the rule laid down in Wood v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co., 11 Kan. *323. It can make no difference in its application whether the trespass is upon lands of the government or of an individual.

VALENTINE, J. This was an action to quiet title to certain real estate. Both parties, by their pleadings, claimed to own the property, and to have the right of possession thereto. A trial was commenced in the court below before the court and a jury. The plaintiff below (who is also plaintiff in error) introduced parol evidence showing that he was in quiet and peaceable possession of the property. He also introduced in evidence a quitclaim deed to himself for the land, executed August 8, 1867, by one Gesso Chouteau, a half-breed Osage Indian. He also introduced in evidence a patent for the land, issued June 10, 1870, by the government of the United States to said Chouteau. This patent was issued under the provisions of article 14 of the treaty with the Osage Indians of September 29, 1865. 14 U. S. St. at Large, 689. When all this evidence was introduced, the plaintiff rested his case. The defendant then demurred to the evidence, and *481 the court below sustained the demurrer, and rendered judgment for the defendant; and of this ruling the plaintiff now complains.

We are inclined to think that the court below erred,—that the case should not have been taken from the jury. A party in the quiet, peaceable, and rightful possession of real estate, claiming title thereto, has such an interest therein, although his title may be ever so defective, that he may quiet his title and possession as against any adverse claimant whose title is weaker than his, or who has no title at all. Gen. St. 747; Code, § 594. Now, according to the evidence, if the plaintiff did not own this property, then Chouteau owned it. There was not a particle of evidence tending to prove that any one else owned it. There was no evidence tending to show that the defendant had the least interest in the property. Hence it would have been proper for the jury to have found that the plaintiff held the property peaceably, quietly, and rightfully, under Chouteau, although possibly the legal title may still be in Chouteau. If Chouteau was satisfied to allow the plaintiff to hold possession of the property, and to claim title thereto under said quitclaim deed, no one else could complain. Except as against Chouteau, or some other person rightfully claiming under him, the plaintiff's title was and is sufficient. It will stand against the balance of the world. This case differs widely from the case of Wood v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co., 11 Kan. *328. In that case the plaintiff was merely a trespasser upon government land; in this, the plaintiff is neither a trespasser, so far as the evidence shows, nor is he located upon government land.

The judgment of the court below must be reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings.

*482      *J. P. BROWN and another v. E. C. HOLMES.

July Term, 1874.

1. Replevin: When Action Accrues: Demand and Refusal. The gist of the action of replevin, under our Code, is the wrongful detention, and this relates to the time of the commencement of the action. Where demand and refusal are necessary to make the detention by the defendant wrongful, such demand and refusal must be prior to the commencement of the action, and evidence of a subsequent demand is properly rejected. [Moses v. Morris, 20 Kan. 213; Bailey v. Bayne, Id. 659; Smith v. Woodleaf, 21 Kan. 720.]
2. Chattel Mortgage: Description of Mortgaged Property. A chattel mortgage in which the description of the property mortgaged is as follows: "23 head of beeves, four year old Texas cattle; 572 three year old Texas cattle; 29 two year old Texas cattle,—said goods and chattels now being in the possession of the said party of the first part, in Morris county, Kansas,"—is not void for uncertainty.<sup>1</sup>
3. Trial: Order of Evidence: Saving Questions. In the trial of an action of replevin, proof of the title of the plaintiff naturally precedes proof of a wrongful detention by the defendant; and where the evidence of plaintiff's title is ruled out, it is unnecessary for him, in order to preserve that question for review in this court, to offer evidence of a demand and refusal, or of any other facts going to show a wrongful detention by the defendant.
4. ———: Order of Proceeding: Presumption. Where testimony which, in the natural and logical order of a trial, ought to be the first presented, is offered and rejected, it will be presumed that it was so rejected because of some supposed intrinsic defect therein, and not by virtue of the court's control over the order in which evidence shall be introduced. [Taylor v. Mason, 28 Kan. 384.]
5. ———: Replevin. Where plaintiff in a replevin action offered evidence of a demand and refusal made subsequently to the commencement of the action, which was properly rejected, and then offered evidences of his title to the property, which were competent and sufficient therefor, but which were also rejected, the error in rejecting these evidences will not be adjudged immaterial because of a failure to offer evidence of a demand and refusal prior to the commencement of the action.
6. Agister's Lien. The lien for keeping and wintering cattle is paramount to the lien of a chattel mortgage on such cattle. Case v. Allen, 21 Kan. 217.]<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup>If a person who has a lien for the keeping and feeding of cattle claims to detain them in his possession on more than one ground, but expressly makes mention of his lien and charges, as one of his reasons for such detention, said declaration on his part will not be considered a waiver, or an abandonment of his lien. Brown v. Holmes, 21 Kan. 687. See, also, Kelsey v. Layne, 28 Kan. 218.

Replevin, brought by Brown and another, to recover the possession of ninety-two head of cattle. Plaintiffs claimed the cattle under a chattel mortgage given to them by F. Ledrick, dated October 31, 1871, duly executed and registered in Morris county, where the cattle then were. These cattle were part of 624 head mortgaged to *483 plaintiffs to secure Ledrick's note of that date for $6,142.90, due sixty days after date. The action was commenced in May, 1872, against Holmes, then in possession of the cattle in Chase county, who retained them upon a redelivery bond. Defendant, who was in default for want of an answer, applied to the court at the September term, 1872, for leave to answer, whereupon, "said motion being considered by the court, leave was given the defendant to file an answer instantly, and the cause to stand for trial at this term of court." To this order plaintiffs excepted. The answer was filed, and contained—First, a general denial; second, an allegation that the property had been taken from defendant's possession since the commencement of the action upon an execution against Ledrick, the mortgagor. Trial at the September term, 1873. Plaintiffs offered in evidence the chattel mortgage from Ledrick to themselves, which, on defendant's objection, the court refused to receive. The district court rendered judgment in favor of defendant and against plaintiffs for costs.

Defendant's objection to the introduction of the mortgage was "that said mortgage is so general in its terms, and uncertain in the description of the property mentioned therein, as to be void for uncertainty, immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent." The triple climax which closes the objection doubtless refers to the uncertainty in the description of the property; for that the mortgage was incompetent on other grounds does not clearly appear, and that it was irrelevant can hardly be claimed after defendant's admission that he got the cattle from Ledrick, and had no doubt they belonged to plaintiffs under their mortgage. Besides that, the mortgage and petition are consistent in the description of the property, and the identity of the cattle in question with those in the mortgage, could be shown by parol. Lawrence v. Evarts, 7 Ohio St. 194; Harding v. Coburn, 12

Metc. 333. But we understand the only question raised by the *484 objection is whether the mortgage is "void for uncertainty,"

"fatally defective" in the description of the property, and obnoxious to the rule in Golden v. Cockril, 1 Kan. *259; the hint directing attention to some source of information beyond the words of the parties, and enabling third parties to identify the property, aided by inquiries, which the mortgage indicates is found in the last clause of the description,—"said goods and chattels now being in possession of the said party of the first part, [Ledrick,] in Morris county." Golden v. Cockril, supra; Lawrence v. Evarts, 7 Ohio St. 194; Conkling v. Shelley, 28 N. Y. 360; Gardner v. McEwen, 19 N.

Y. 123. But however defective the description, the defendant was not thereby prejudiced. He himself identifies the property. He has both actual and constructive notice of the mortgage, and has no doubt of its binding force. Neither is he a third person, or innocent purchaser, to complain of these defects, but the agent of Ledrick. If the mortgage was good against Ledrick, it was good against his herder or agister.

But it is urged by defendant that the error in excluding the mortgage is immaterial, because plaintiff could not recover without proof of a demand before suit commenced, and that we have failed in this. We answer that the record does not profess to show all the evidence offered, nor can it therefrom be inferred that other evidence of a demand and tender was not or could not be offered to support our case beyond what the record shows. Why not as well urge that the record shows no proof of the value of the cattle, or that they were not taken on execution, etc.? Indeed, if we had offered the mortgage alone, and, that being erroneously refused, our basis of title rejected, and nothing before the court with which to connect other evidence, we might have appealed directly to this court upon that error, leaving the proof of other material facts to be offered upon that trial after the validity of our title had been established.

The petition and affidavit were filed May 15, 1872, and the property was taken under the writ the following morning. Witness Munkers went, as agent of plaintiffs, to demand the cattle from *485 the defendant, and pay or tender his *charges for wintering them, and met and conversed with defendant about the cattle on the same morning, but before the property was taken, or any papers served on Holmes. The sheriff was with Munkers, and had the summons and writ of replevin to serve in case Holmes would not give up the property voluntarily. In that connection Holmes said "he had no doubt the cattle belonged to J. P. Brown & Co. under their mortgage; that he himself had no claim upon them, except for wintering them, but that other parties claimed to have a bill of sale of the cattle from Ledrick, and they had ordered him not to turn them over to Brown & Co." Having shown the foregoing facts upon the trial, the plaintiffs offered to prove that Munkers then demanded the cattle from Holmes as agent for plaintiffs, and tendered his charges for wintering them, but the court refused the evidence upon the defendant's objection that it was immaterial, and that the demand and tender should have been made before the filing of the petition as well as before service of summons. This was the middle of May. Winter was over. Holmes was still keeping the cattle. Why? Was it to secure his pay for wintering? We would have shown that we offered to pay him, and still he refused to deliver them over; and thus we would have shown, in connection with his other admissions, that his possession of the cattle was that of an agent of those who claimed the cattle in defiance of our title, and that such possession was wrongful against us. Now, we ask, cannot the admission by the defendant of a material fact be received, though made after the petition is filed? and would not this admission show the character of the defendant's possession generally, as well before as after the filing of the petition?

Was a demand necessary? The mortgage recites that the cattle were in Ledrick's possession at the date of the mortgage. The date of the mortgage is October 31st, and of the registering, November 1st. The defendant "took the cattle of Ledrick to winter them," afterwards, of course. The defendant was no more entitled to *486 a demand than Ledrick would have been *had he retained the property. "The mortgagee of personal property shall have the legal title thereto, and the right of possession. Gen. St. 585, § 15. He is like one who buys and pays for an article which is to be delivered on payment. It is sufficient if he be ready to receive, and payment and delivery are immediate and concurrent acts. 2 Kent, Comm. 476, 497; 1 Pars. Cont. 571, note u. The language of the statute is not that the mortgagee shall have the right to demand possession, nor that he shall have the right of possession after demand; but his right of possession is complete under the mortgage. If the defendant had the right to retain the cattle until they were demanded, then both plaintiff and defendant had a complete right of possession at the same time, which is absurd. If the plaintiff has a complete and perfect right of possession, but the defendant has the possession, then we insist that the defendant's possession cannot be rightful. We prove the wrongful detention by the defendant when we show he withholds what belongs to us, namely, possession. Had we consented to the defendant's holding the property, the inference of wrong would have been repelled; but the record does not warrant that assumption. Whatever may have been the rights of Ledrick, while uninterruptedly and by sufferance of plaintiffs he retained the property, the case changes when he sends them out of the county, to be kept and held for keeping by a stranger. He had no right to pledge the property to our prejudice, nor to put them out of his hands.

But we submit that the evidence was admissible, even to prove a conversion, as in a case of rightful possession, since it was made before service of process, or any interference with the property by the officer, and while such service might be withheld, and the case dismissed by order of the plaintiff if the defendant should comply with the demand. Suppose you suddenly learn that the custodian of your property, living at a distance, is about to wrongfully dispose of it, shall you consume the time necessary to go and make a formal demand, *487 and thus enable him to accomplish his purpose, or *assume, on the other hand, the hazard of proving an overt act of conversion? The danger in such cases often requires the promptest action. If it be objected that the plaintiff could not truthfully make the required affidavit till after the demand and refusal, we reply that the refusal is but the expression of a purpose that may have been formed long before; that the defendant may be a wrong-doer before he declares it. We understand the question to be an open one, so far as this court is concerned, and the view here intimated is not inconsistent with Arthur v. Wallace, 8 Kan. *267.

There was error in permitting defendant to file his answer out of time. The petition was filed May 15, 1872. The order of delivery was issued at the commencement of the suit, and made returnable May 25th. The summons was returnable on the same date with the order of delivery. But defendant appeared in the action by filing a motion on the sixteenth of May, and filed an answer July 8th, which answer was stricken from the files as being too late. On the eleventh of September there were filed affidavits in support of a motion for leave to answer, and on the same day defendant's motion for leave to answer was sustained. Plaintiffs had previously asked judgment for default of answer, which the court refused. The second answer was filed on the eleventh of September. The record shows the answer to have been filed out of time, and the question is upon the sufficiency of the showing in the affidavits to warrant the court in permitting the answer to be so filed. Our objection to the affidavits is chiefly that they fail to show that Holmes had any valid defense to set up. The affidavits state that he has "a defense," which is but an opinion derived from facts which are not shown, and are unknown to the court. The affidavits prove nothing beyond the negligence of the defendant's attorneys. The statute governing is section 106 of the Code, that "the court may, in his discretion," etc. If this means, not an arbitrary, but a sound judicial discretion, exercised upon a fair showing of the propriety of the act, we submit that no force was given to this qualification in the statute.

*488 **R. M. Ruggles*, for defendant in error.

The first error alleged is as to the leave given defendant to file an answer. The action of the court was of course based on the right given by section 106 of the Code; and by this section there is especially given to the court, in all cases, the right to do just what the court did do in this case. The whole matter, by the very language of this section, is entirely confided to the discretion of the court. This court has often decided that when a statute leaves a matter to the discretion of a court, this court will not review an exercise of such discretion by the court below, unless such discretion is greatly abused. See Douglas v. Rinehart, 5 Kan. *392, *398.

The next alleged error is the rejection of certain evidence offered by plaintiffs. The first evidence offered by plaintiffs and rejected by the court, to which the plaintiffs excepted, was the question asked of plaintiffs' only witness, Munkers. The question was as follows: "State whether, as the agent of plaintiffs, you demanded the cattle in question from the defendant." This question was objected to by defendant on the ground that to be material it should be shown to have been made before the commencement of the action. To a correct appreciation of this question we must go back a little. The only witness called by the plaintiffs, Munkers, gave the following testimony immediately preceding the question asked him, above quoted: "I know the plaintiffs, J. P. Brown and W. C. Kinsolving; they are partners, doing business as J. P. Brown & Co. I know the defendant, E. C. Holmes. I went to the defendant, Holmes, on the sixteenth of May last, with written authority of the plaintiffs to demand from defendant the cattle in question, and pay or tender to him his charges for wintering the cattle through last winter. Met the defendant on that day nine miles west from Cottonwood Falls, in Chase county, and had a conversation with him about the cattle. He said that he took the cattle from F. Ledrick to winter them; that he had no doubt they belonged to J. P. Brown & Co., under their mortgage, *489 and that he had no claim on the cattle except for *the wintering of them; that there were other parties claimed to have a bill of sale of the cattle from Ledrick, and that they had ordered him not to turn them over to J. P. Brown & Co. This was on the same day, or on the next day after, the suit was commenced; that is, the petition had been filed, but no papers served. The sheriff was with me, and had the summons and writ of replevin to serve in case Holmes would not give up the property voluntarily." Then comes this question: "State whether, as the agent of the plaintiffs, you demanded the cattle in question from defendant." Now, we contend that there can be no dispute but that this question was put by plaintiff to show a demand made after the commencement of the action; for the witness had already testified that he went to defendant to make this demand on the sixteenth of May,—the same day, or the day after, the action was commenced,—and from the record we find that the petition was filed on the fifteenth of May, and the summons and writ of replevin were issued on the fifteenth of May. Therefore, by section 57 of the Code, the plaintiffs had commenced this action on the fifteenth of May; and by the testimony of this witness we find that the day after the commencement of this suit he went to make the demand. Now, we submit that if it was material for the plaintiffs, in order to make out their case to show a demand at all, (and if it was not, plaintiffs were not prejudiced by the refusal of the court to permit the question to be asked,) they must have shown such a demand before the commencement of the action.

Of course, the necessity of showing a demand at all could only arise in case the defendant had a rightful possession of the property until such a demand was made. Now, we say that the testimony of plaintiffs' own witness disclosed the fact that defendant had a rightful possession of the cattle. He had received them from F. Ledrick (the owner at the time, so far as the record discloses) to winter. He had kept them during the winter, and had a lien upon them for his charges for so keeping them. Now, we submit that the defendant could not wrongfully detain the possession of these cattle from the plaintiffs, or any one else, until his charges had first been *paid, and a demand made of him for them; and therefore, until there had first been a tender of these charges, and a demand made by the party entitled to the possession, he could not have wrongfully detained the possession, and the wrongful detention must exist at the time of the commencement of the action; for if it does not exist at the time of the commencement of the action, how can the plaintiff make the affidavit required by section 177 of the Code, and which was made in this case?

The next alleged error is the refusal of the court to receive in evidence a certain chattel mortgage. We have three reasons to give, each showing conclusively that there was no error in the refusal of the court below to receive this chattel mortgage in evidence: The first is that there is nothing in the record to show how, in the remotest way possible, the introduction of this chattel mortgage as evidence was material to any of the issues framed in the case. The only way we think it could possibly have been material was as evidence of the title of the plaintiffs to the property in question; but as the record does not show that it was offered for that purpose, it is going outside the record to raise even this presumption. Second. But to give the plaintiff the benefit of this presumption, what did it or could it have availed him to prove his title to the property in question, and his right of possession to it in order to maintain his action, without proving the wrongful detention of that property by the defendant? He must, in order to sustain his action, plead and prove this wrongful detention by defendant. Wilson v. Fuller, 9 Kan. *190, *191. And as the record nowhere shows that he proved a wrongful detention of the property by defendant, it could be no error that prejudiced him in the least for the court to refuse to permit him to prove his right of possession and title; as that, without proving the wrongful detention by defendant, would have given him no right to a judgment in the action, and therefore he could not have been prejudiced by the action of the court. Third. As against a third party, at least, this mortgage was absolutely void by reason of the uncertainty *of the description of the property sought to be conveyed by it. This court laid down the correct rule in the case of Golden v. Cockril, 1 Kan. *259, in declaring void a chattel mortgage, when the description in that chattel mortgage was fully as definite and certain as the description in this chattel mortgage under consideration; and unless this court now overrules its former decision, it must declare this mortgage void for the uncertainty of its description. And see Blakeley v. Patrick, 67 N. C. 40; McCord v. Cooper, 30 Ind. 9; Bullock v. Williams, 16 Pick. 33; Montgomery v. Wight, 8 Mich. 143.

BREWER, J. This was an action of replevin in the district court of Chase county, brought by plaintiffs in error to recover the possession of certain Texas cattle claimed by them by virtue of a chattel mortgage given by one Ledrick, the owner. The defendant asserted no title, but simply claimed a lien for wintering the cattle. Three errors are alleged.

Plaintiffs sought to prove a demand for the possession and a tender of the charges for keeping the cattle, made after the commencement of the action, but the court ruled out the testimony. We see no error in this. Under our Code the gist of the action of replevin is the wrongful detention, and this relates to the time of the commencement of the action. Town of Leroy v. McConnell, 8 Kan. *273, *276; Wilson v. Fuller, 9 Kan. *176. If demand and refusal were necessary to make the detention by the defendant wrongful, they had that effect only from the time they were made; and if defendant's possession was rightful at the time of the commencement of the suit, the action failed, and could not be upheld by proof that this rightful possession was changed into a wrongful one by a subsequent demand and refusal. Such testimony would therefore be improper. On the other hand, if the defendant's possession was wrongful, a subsequent demand and refusal were unnecessary, and the testimony was immaterial. In either case there would be no error in ruling it out. We may say, in passing, that from the facts as disclosed in the *492 record we think the defendant's *possession was rightful. He had a lien for the wintering of the cattle, and was entitled to the possession until his charges therefor were paid. This lien was paramount to the rights of the chattel mortgagee, as well as those of the mortgagor; nor would the fact that the mortgagor had, as is claimed, been guilty of a breach of duty towards the mortgagee in removing the cattle from the county in which the mortgage was given and filed, into another, affect the validity of this lien.

Plaintiffs offered their mortgage in evidence, but the court refused to receive it. It is insisted that this "mortgage is so general in its terms, and uncertain in the description of the property mentioned therein, as to be void for uncertainty." The description is as follows: "23 head of beeves, four year old Texas cattle; 572 three year old Texas cattle; 29 two year old Texas cattle: * * * said goods and chattels now being in possession of the said party of the first part, [Ledrick,] in Morris county, Kansas." We think this sufficient, within the rule laid down in Golden v. Cockrill, 1 Kan. *259. In that case the language of Mr. Justice SWAN, in Lawrence v. Evarts, 7 Ohio St. 194, is quoted approvingly, where he says: "The principle to be deduced from these cases is that any description which will enable third persons to identify the property, aided by inquiries which the mortgage itself indicates and directs, is sufficient." And among the descriptions which seem to have met the approval of the court are these: "All the mules the mortgagor had in the territory of Kansas, or the same then in the care of H. C. Branch, in Leavenworth county, Kansas." The similarity between the last description and that in the present case seems to render unnecessary any further discussion of these questions.

But counsel insist "that there is nothing in the record to show how, in the remotest way possible, the introduction of this chattel mortgage as evidence was material to any of the issues framed in the case."

We think counsel are mistaken in this. True, the pleadings *493 do not disclose how plaintiffs *obtained their title, but the affidavit filed for the writ alleges that they claimed the cattle by virtue of this chattel mortgage; and so much of the testimony as is in the record shows that defendant knew of the existence of this chattel mortgage, and had himself received from the mortgagor the cattle to winter. Again, counsel contend that proof of title in the plaintiffs would avail nothing without proof of "the wrongful detention of the property by the defendant," and as no proof of the wrongful detention was made, the error was immaterial. If it appeared affirmatively that there was no wrongful detention by the defendant, it might properly be held that any error in rejecting proof of title was immaterial. But in the trial, proof of title logically precedes proof of wrongful detention; and if, when offered, the evidences of title are rejected, it is unnecessary for the plaintiffs to proceed further, and attempt to show a wrongful detention, for if the plaintiff has no claim to the property, it matters not whether the defendant or some one else has. We are aware that the trial court has considerable discretion in deciding upon the order in which evidence shall be introduced on a trial, and may, in some cases, properly refuse to let certain evidence in until other testimony has been offered. In every such case, however, the reason for the decision should be given, or the dependence of the testimony rejected upon that not offered be apparent. When testimony, which in the natural order of things ought to be first presented, is rejected, it will be presumed that it was so rejected because of some supposed intrinsic defect therein. In this case no objection was made upon the ground that other testimony ought first to be offered. It was that the mortgage was void for uncertainty,—was immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent. This was the objection that was sustained. True, the plaintiffs first attempted to prove demand and refusal, and failed, and then offered this mortgage; but it did not follow that because they had failed to prove a demand at one time they could not prove one at another, and were not prepared to do so as soon as they had established title in themselves. We think, *494 there*fore, that the court erred in ruling out this mortgage, and that the error was material. For this error the judgment must be reversed, and the cause remanded for new trial.

It does not seem to us that the record discloses any abuse of discretion in permitting the defendant to file his answer out of time. Spratly v. Putnam Fire Ins. Co., 5 Kan. *155.

ALEXANDER PATTERSON v. JAMES H. CARRUTH.

July Term, 1874.

1. Taxation: Tax Sales: Effect of Injunction. Under the laws of 1860, when lands had been duly advertised for sale at the regular sale-days, and had not been sold on those days by reason of injunction or other judicial proceedings, they could have been sold at any time after the dissolution of the injunction or restraining order, upon ten days' notice.
2. ———: Tax Deed: Recitals. A deed, therefore, otherwise regular, and reciting a sale made more than ten days after the date of the first regular sale-day, is prima facie valid. [Morrill v. Douglass, 17 Kan. 293; Jordan v. Kyle, 27 Kan. 192.]<sup>1</sup>

Etror from Miami district court.

Ejectment, brought by Patterson, to recover the possession of a quarter section of land in Miami county. Carruth answered, claiming title in himself, and setting up such claim under a tax deed issued on the seventh of December, 1863, by the county clerk of Miami county, upon a tax sale of said lands made on the third of September, 1860, for unpaid taxes of 1859. Reply, general denial. The second trial was had at the September term, 1873, of the district court, (J. B. S., judge pro tem., presiding.) The plaintiff having shown a regular chain of title from the patentee to himself, rested. The defendant then showed the entry of the land, August 11, 1858, offered his tax deed reciting the assessment of said land in 1859, *495 and *the sale in 1860, as above stated. Plaintiff objected, but the tax deed was admitted in evidence. Finding and judgment for defendant.

W. T. Johnson and Sherry Baker, for plaintiff.

The tax deed offered in evidence by the defendant was erroneously admitted by the court. The general law governing the assessment and collection of taxes, in force at the time of the sale, (Comp. Laws, 866, § 36; Id. 873, § 70,) provides that the sale should be held on the first Tuesday of May, or the first Tuesday of September. In the year 1860, the first Tuesday of May was the first day of the month, and the first Tuesday of September was the fourth day of the month, —of which this court will take judicial notice. The tax deed recites that the sale was "begun and held on the third day of September, 1860." This could not be true under any special or general act then in force; and a sale at any other time than that authorized by law is a nullity. Blackw. Tax Titles, 268; Moore v. Brown, 11 How. 414; Ronkendorf v. Tay, 4 Pet. 349; Essington v. Neill, 21 Ill. 139; Hope <sup>1</sup>A tax deed is not void because it recites that the sale was made on May 6, 1870, "at the sale begun and publicly held on the first Tuesday of May, 1870," when in fact May 6, 1870, was Friday, and the first Tuesday of May, 1870, was the third day of the month. Harris v. Curran, 82 Kan. 589; S. C. 4 Pac. Rep. 1044. See Norton v. Friend, post, *532.

v. Sawyer, 14 Ill. 254; Wilkins' Heirs v. Huse, 10 Ohio, 139; Northop's Lessee v. Devore, 11 Ohio, 359; Park v. Tinkham, 9 Kan. *615. The tax deed offered in evidence by the defendant in error is therefore void on its face, and could not start the statute of limitations to running. Taylor v. Miles, 5 Kan. *508; Moore v. Brown, supra; Lain v. Shepardson, 18 Wis. 59.

B. F. Simpson, for defendant in error.

BREWER, J. The only question in this case is as to the validity of a tax deed; and the one single objection to the deed is that it shows upon its face that the sale was made at a time not authorized by law. Of course, if this be the case, the deed was void, and, under the circumstances appearing in the record, would not start the statute of limitations to running. Entekin v. Chambers, 11 Kan. *368. The *496 sale in this case *was for taxes of 1859, and was made on the third day of September, 1860. The deed recites that the sale was begun and publicly held on that day. This was the first Monday, and not the first Tuesday, of the month. The sale, therefore, was not upon a day named in the statute as one of the sale-days. But we find introduced into the tax law, for the first time, in 1860, this provision: that if lands duly advertised for sale at either of the regular sale-days are not sold because of injunction or other judicial proceedings, they may, after the dissolution of the injunction or restraining order, be sold at any time on ten days' notice. Laws 1860, p. 219, § 70. Under this authority a sale might, in certain cases, be legally held on any day more than ten days after the first sale-day,—the first Tuesday of May,—and a deed reciting a sale at such time would, if otherwise regular, be prima facie valid. Of course, such a deed could be shown to be void by proof that the sale on the regular sale-day had not been stopped by injunction or other judicial proceeding; but in the case before us no such proof was offered, and the case stands upon the prima facie showing of the deed alone. The case of Entekin v. Chambers, 11 Kan. *368, is not in point here, as the sale in that case was in 1859, and before the provision heretofore noticed was in force.

There being no other objection made to the deed, the judgment will be affirmed.

ST. JOSEPH &amp; D. C. R. CO. v. CHARLES T. CALLENDER.

July Term, 1874.

1. Eminent Domain: When Appropriated. Full compensation must be first made in money, or secured by a deposit of money, before any right of way can be appropriated to the use of a corporation.<sup>1</sup>

2. ———: Appeal: Judgment. This imperative rule of the constitution is not relaxed by the fact that the land-owner has appealed from the assessment of his damages by the commissioners, nor by the fact that on such appeal he has recovered a judgment for the amount thereof.

*497 *3. ———: No Right to Land nor Possession until Payment.

Where such judgment for damages is not paid, and it appears that pending the appeal the railroad company entered upon his land and constructed its road, and it does not appear that the land-owner had any actual knowledge of such entry and occupation, or in any manner consented thereto, a judgment in favor of the land-owner, in an action of ejectment for the recovery of possession, will not be reversed. [Central Branch U. Pac. R. Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 28 Kan. 465.]

Error from Washington district court.

Doniphan & Reid and J. D. Brumbaugh, for plaintiff in error.

The proceedings to condemn were commenced under sections 10 and 11 of the charter of the company, (Acts 1857, p. 196,) which have been fully complied with. The defendant, upon his appeal, obtained a judgment for a large sum of money, and cannot now be permitted to go back and eject the party, and then collect his judgment at law. There is no testimony to show the judgment is not good.

The owner having stood by for nearly two years, and permitted the expenditure of large sums of money in improving the property, will not be permitted to reclaim the property. Goodin v. Cincinnati & W. C. Co., 18 Ohio St. 169. The defendant in error had taken his option to obtain compensation by appeal, and acquiesced in the occupation of the land.

The district court seems to have ruled for defendant in error simply because plaintiff in error filed no bond, under section 2, p. 156, Laws 1870, after the appeal was taken, January 15, 1872. We claim that under our charter we could not be compelled to file any bond, and *498 that the provision regarding a bond was merely intended to aid the road to be built, and not to delay the work by injunction or dilatory proceedings, and it was optional with the company to file such bond in case either an action of injunction or ejectment was commenced against it while the road was building.

Here, as shown by the pleadings, the road was completed and running over the land long before the appeal was taken.

The plaintiff in error is operating a railroad over the land in controversy, and it has thereby become a public highway. Olcott v. Supervisors, 16 Wall. 678. It would be against public policy to prevent carrying passengers and mails over the road.

All the right the railroad could get would be an easement, (Kellogg v. Malin, 50 Mo. 498;) and ejectment will not lie for an easement, (Washb. Easem. & Serv. 660, 663; Wilklow v. Lane, 37 Barb. 244; Redfield v. Utica & S. R. Co., 25 Barb. 54.)

The essentials of ejectment, to entitle a plaintiff to recover, were, at common law, title, lease, entry, and ouster. We have no lease, but title. Entry and disseizin are still necessary. Adams, Eject. 18. Disseizin is the turning out. Tyler, Eject. 79. The right to a fee and easement can exist in the same estate. Each can sue to vindicate its rights: one to enforce its seizin, and the other to prevent disturbance of easement. Washb. Easem. & Serv. 660. The easement is not affected by a judgment in favor of a stranger against the owner of the separate estate, in ejectment. Washb. Easem. & Serv. 660; Hancock v. Wentworth, 5 Metc. 446; Ketchum v. Johnson's Ex'rs, 4 N. J. Eq. 371. Where the legislature authorizes an act to be done, the courts will not hold it a trespass if the law has been pursued. 1 Amer. Railway Cases, 166, 167.

A party may renounce his constitutional rights, and waive his claim. Sherman v. McKeon, 38 N. Y. 274; Baker v. Braman, 6 Hill, 47. The proper and only remedy on the part of defendant in error is to enjoin the use of the property when the suit in the district court upon the appeal is finally determined. Peterson v. Ferreby, 30 Iowa, 327. It seems, from the authorities in reference to ejectment against railroad companies, that the action cannot be maintained after the land-owner has permitted the road to be built and operated for the benefit of the public. The judgment in favor of the defendant in error in the district court is still in force, and binding upon plaintiff in error.

J. W. Rector and W. D. Webb, for defendant in error.

"No right of way shall be appropriated to the use of any corporation until full compensation therefor be first made in money, or secured by a deposit of money, to the owner." Const. Kan. art. 12, § 4; Williams v. New York Cent. R. Co., 16 N. Y. 97; Gray v. First Div. St. P. & P. R. Co., 13 Minn. 315, (Gil. 289;) Stewart v. City of Baltimore, 7 Md. 500; Carli v. Stillwater & St. P. R. Co. 16 Minn. 260, (Gil. 234;) Sedg. Const. Law, 526. The plaintiff in error should have deposited the amount of the judgment in the court below, at least; but a bond should have been executed to defendant in error immediately upon the taking of the appeal, and only upon the execution of such bond could the railroad company hold possession or use the land. Laws 1870, c. 74, pp. 155, 156. This not having been done, either injunction or ejectment will lie. Eidenmiller v. Wyandotte City, 2 Dill. 376; Henry v. Dubuque & P. R. Co., 10 Iowa, 540; Childs v. Shower, 18 Iowa, 259; Moss v. Oakley, 2 Hill, 269; McClinton v. Pittsburg, Ft. W. & C. R. Co., 66 Pa. St. 404; Shepardson v. Milwaukee & B. R. Co., 6 Wis. 605; Powers v. Bears, 12 Wis. 214; Loop v. Chamberlain, 20 Wis. 135.

BREWER, J. The facts in this case are briefly as follows: In June, 1871, the plaintiff in error commenced proceedings to condemn the right of way through lands of defendant in error, situate in the county of Washington. Commissioners were duly appointed, who assessed the damages at $66.10. This amount was deposited with the county treasurer. All the proceedings were regular, and conformed to the statute. Dissatisfied with the award of the commissioners, Callender appealed to the district court, and in August, 1872, obtained a verdict and judgment for $1,200. Notwithstanding the appeal the railroad company entered upon Callender's land, constructed its road, track, etc.,—is now using it for the running of its trains. Upon the taking of this appeal by Callender no bond was filed by the company, as required by section 1 of chapter 74 of the Laws of 1870, *500 and no other *money has ever been paid or deposited than the $66.10 awarded by the commissioners. The judgment of the district court remains unsatisfied. In March, 1873, Callender commenced an action of ejectment to recover the possession of the land taken by the company. The district court rendered judgment in his favor, and of this judgment plaintiff in error complains.

Upon the facts above stated, was Callender entitled to recover? The constitution, article 12, § 4, provides that "no right of way shall be appropriated to the use of any corporation until full compensation therefor be first made in money, or secured by a deposit of money, to the owner." The amount of compensation to which Callender was entitled has been finally determined to be $1,200. This has not been paid or secured by a deposit of money. The right of way has not, therefore, been appropriated to the company, and Callender is still the owner, and entitled to the possession. As against this, it is insisted that Callender has obtained and still holds a judgment for the damages, and that if permitted to recover in this action he will have both the land and judgment for damages for its appropriation; that he stood by for nearly two years, and permitted the company to occupy and expend large sums of money in improving this land, and therefore it is too late for him now to question its right to occupy; that he elected to pursue his remedy for damages, and must abide by that election. So far as regards the first part of this objection, it is enough to say that the recovery of possession would operate as a satisfaction of the judgment for damages, and any attempt thereafter to enforce its collection would be restrained, and satisfaction ordered to be entered of record; nor could the plaintiff assign his judgment so as to subject the company to double loss. Either his assignment would be so far a guaranty to the assignee of an irrevocable right to enforce the collection of the judgment as to estop him from disturbing the company's possession, or else the assignee would take the judgment subject to the risk of having it satisfied by the assignor's recovery of possession. This judgment is simply the final determination, in the manner pointed out by the statute, of the amount to be paid for the right of way. By payment the right of way passes to the company. Without it, nothing passes.

In regard to the latter part of the objection, it may be remarked that the record shows no formal assent to, nor even any actual knowledge of, the occupation by the company. The evidence is not preserved, and we have simply the pleadings, findings, and judgment. True, the court finds that Callender was the owner, and in possession prior to the entry by the company; but this may mean that constructive possession that follows title, or it may mean possession by tenant. It does not necessarily import actual occupation, or actual knowledge of the company's entry and improvement. Now, a party ignorant of another's entry upon his land, and expenditure of money and labor in improvements thereon, can hardly be said to have so acquiesced in such entry and improvement as to be estopped from thereafter setting up his own rights to the land. But conceding that possession, as stated in the findings, means actual occupation, and implies actual knowledge, and still we think the doctrine of estoppel will not help the plaintiff in error. Both the company and the land-owner act with knowledge that the right of way cannot be appropriated until full compensation therefor has been first made in money, or secured by deposit of money. Of course, this deposit must be such as secures full compensation. A deposit of $66.10 does not secure full compensation for $1,200 damages. The company initiates the proceedings, and summons the land-owner before a tribunal for the assessment of his damages. All the proceedings are in conformity to law, and the assessment is made,—an assessment in this case, as appears from the verdict of the jury, grossly inadequate to the actual damages sustained. All that the land-owner can now litigate, so far as these condemnation proceedings are concerned, is the amount of damages. There is no secret defect in those proceedings which he is now for the first time springing upon the company, ignorant of its existence. He concedes that all is regular. He initiates no new proceedings, but simply pursues those already initiated by the company. If he does not appeal, the company acquire the right of way, and he must be content with the award of the commissioners. Hence it seems hardly fair to say that he elected to pursue a mere claim for damages, and waived all his rights to the land. By his appeal, however, he gives notice to the company that the amount awarded is not full compensation, and that more must be paid before any right of way is appropriated. If after this notice, and without his consent, the company sends its workmen onto his land, and builds its road, what room is there for the application of the doctrine of estoppel? There is no misrepresentation—no concealment—on the part of the land-owner. The company acts with full knowledge of his rights and claims, and its own obligations. It was a trespasser ab initio, and ought rather to atone for the trespass than to attempt to make that trespass a means of wresting the land-owner's property from him without compensation. The case of Dater v. Troy T. & R. Co., 2 Hill, 629, is strongly in point. There the act incorporating the company authorized it to condemn the right of way, provided for the appointment of commissioners, and the assessment of damages, and declared that if, upon the making of such assessment, the amount thereof was deposited to the credit of the land-owner, and notice thereof given to him, the company should then become seized of the land in fee-simple. It also authorized an appeal from the assessment of the commissioners to the chancellor. Commissioners were appointed, the assessment made, the amount deposited, and notice given,—all in conformity to the statute. The company then entered and took possession of the land. Dater appealed, and on the appeal a larger amount was awarded him. This amount not being paid, he brought ejectment, and the action was sustained.

See, also, Loop v. Chamberlain, 20 Wis. 135; Henry v. Dubuque & Pac. R. Co., 10 Iowa, 540; Richards v. Des Moines V. R. Co., 18 Iowa, 259; McClinton v. Pittsburg, Ft. W. & C. Ry. Co., 66 Pa. St. 404.

We are aware of decisions seemingly adverse to the views here expressed. Among them are McAulay v. Western Vt. R. Co., 33 Vt. 311; Goodin v. Cincinnati & W. C. Co., 18 Ohio St. 169, and a late case, Provost v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., decided by the supreme court of Missouri, and reported in 1 Cent. Law J. 509. Yet these cases are not exactly parallel with this. In the opinion in each of those cases, stress is laid on the fact that the land-owner had full knowledge of the acts of the company in entering upon his land and constructing the road. In the first case the occupation had been continued some eight years before the action was brought. The land-owner had, prior to any occupation to the company, signed an agreement to take stock of the company in payment of his damages, (an agreement which he subsequently seemed anxious to avoid,) in reference to which the court says: "He does not seem to have insisted that the first appraisal should be deposited during the pendency of the appeal, and before the work proceeded further. His great desire seems to have been that the damages should be agreed upon, and that he should be released from all claim under the written agreement to accept stock. To this extent his remonstrances were loud, and sufficiently intelligible. It appeared, also, that after the damages had been finally ascertained the stock therefor was duly tendered and refused." It would seem a reasonable inference from the facts, as stated in that case, that the land-owner had waived his right to insist upon prepayment. In the second case the plaintiffs were stockholders in a canal company. A railroad company desired the bed of the canal for its railway track, and, the canal company being much embarrassed, the president of the railroad company bought up a majority of stock at very low rates, put in a new board of directors in the interest of the railroad company, and then the directory of the two companies, by agreement, and without referring the matter to any commissioners or jury, fixed the damages to be paid to *504 the canal company at a *grossly inadequate sum. The railroad company took possession of the canal, constructed its road, and was in full possession, operating its trains, etc., when the plaintiffs brought their action, asking that the pretended sale or condemnation be set aside, and the railroad company be enjoined from further use of the canal-bed. The supreme court, conceding the invalidity of the sale, held that the plaintiffs were too late to obtain relief by injunction, though they might proceed to obtain full compensation. Quoting from a prior opinion, the court says: "Before a stockholder can be entitled to a remedy by injunction against such departure from the original objects of the incorporation, he must have shown himself prompt and vigilant in the assertion of his rights as such stockholder. It will not do for him to wait until the mischief of which he complains is accomplished, fortunes expended, and great public interests created. If he does, he must be held to have acquiesced in the change, or to content himself with some other form of remedy." Prima facie, the transfer of the canal-bed was valid. The regular officers of the canal company had executed the proper conveyances. Upon the faith of this apparently valid transaction, improvements had been made, and large sums of money expended. The invalidity of the transfer grew out of the bad faith of the officers of the canal company. If the stockholders did not interfere at the first possible moment to prevent the wrong attempted by their officers, and to prevent innocent parties from expending money on the faith thereof, it might well be that equity would refuse to interfere further than to secure them adequate compensation. The case from Missouri is more nearly parallel. Indeed, the only important difference is that in that case it appears that the land-owner was present all the time, and had full knowledge of the company's operations in entering upon and constructing its road-bed over his land. His failure to object to this was held a waiver of his right to recover possession, though it was said that "a court of equity would unquestionably interfere, if necessary, and place the road in the hands of *505 receivers until the damages were paid from the *earnings."

It may be remarked, in reference to each of these cases, that the constitutions of those states have no such stringent imperative provision as is found in ours. At any rate, we cannot assent to the doctrine that, while litigating, in a proceeding which the company has instituted, the amount of damages to which he is entitled from the appropriation of his land to its use, the land-owner must also resist, by force or judicial proceedings, the entry upon his land, or lose the plain remedy which ordinarily accrues when another party is found in wrongful possession thereof.

The judgment of the district court will be affirmed.

St. Louis, K. C. & N. Ry. Co. v. G. W. PIPER.

July Term, 1874.

1. Common Carrier: Railroad Company as Carrier of Stock: Contract: Negligence. The St. Louis, Kansas City & Northern Railway Company, owning and operating a line of railroad from Kansas City to Mexico, and there connecting with another road running to Chicago, made a contract to "forward" certain cattle from Kansas City to Chicago, stipulating therein that the shipper should "take care of the cattle while on the trip," and that "it, and connecting lines over which such freight might pass, should not be responsible for any loss, damage, or injury which might happen in loading, forwarding, or unloading, by suffocation, * * * or by any other cause, except gross negligence," and that "it and such connecting lines should be deemed merely forwarders, and not common carriers, and only liable for such loss * * * as might be gross negligence only, and not otherwise." Held, that said St. Louis, Kansas City & Northern Railway was liable as a carrier for the transportation the entire distance, and was responsible for any loss or injury occurring from ordinary negligence, whether such negligence was on its own or connecting line.<sup>1</sup>
2. Trial by Court: General Finding; Conflict of Testimony. Where the case in the district court was tried before the judge without a jury, *506 and *no special findings of fact were made, but only a general finding, and judgment for the plaintiff, and there was some testimony tending to show negligence, this court will not reverse the judgment, although such testimony was not very conclusive, and although there was strong conflicting testimony. [Winstead v. Standeford, 21 Kan. 272.]

Error from Douglas district court.

The case is stated in the opinion.

Pratt & Ferrey, for plaintiff in error.

The contract in nowise tended to show a liability on the part of the railway company for loss or damage happening beyond its own line. By its terms the St. Louis, Kansas City & Northern Railway Company undertook simply the duties of a forwarder,—at least, beyond its own line. These duties it performed by delivering the cattle at Mexico to the Chicago & Alton Railway Company, the next connecting carrier in the line of transit from Kansas City to Chicago, by way of Mexico and Louisiana. Roberts v. Turner, 12 Johns. 282; 2 Redf. Rys. 114; Railroad Co. v. Manufacturing Co., 16 Wall. 318.

The railway company not being by law a common carrier beyond its own line, no reasons of public policy can intervene to prevent its stipulating, in the contract by which duties are assumed beyond its line, for such exemptions from liability as may be agreed upon. In the contract in question it was expressly agreed that this company should only be liable for such loss, damage, or injury as might be occasioned by gross negligence, and not otherwise.

If this court should construe this contract as imposing upon this company a liability for damage occurring beyond its own line, still there could be no recovery in this case without showing that the damage sustained was caused by gross negligence of this company, or of the connecting line; and upon the party claiming to recover devolved the burden of showing negligence. Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Reynolds, 8 Kan. *623. There was no proof of negligence of any degree or kind. The delay at Louisiana was caused by the formation of an ice gorge in the Mississippi river, and was simply an act of God. The unloading the cattle at Louisiana, and not taking them over the river the night of the arrival there, was, beyond any question, because Piper thought that the cattle had been a long time without water and feed, and did not wish to go on without feeding and watering them. On the direct examination of Piper he testified as follows: "When we got to Louisiana the cattle had been on the train 25 or 26 hours, which is considered a long time without feed." On his cross-examination he says: "I talked with Murray about sending the cattle on that night. He expressed himself anxious for me to stay over at Louisiana. I told him that the cattle had not been fed or watered for a long time, and he said he had rather I stayed over there than go on that night. He did not tell me I had better go over the river that night." This testimony of defendant determines two facts: First, that Piper thought that his cattle ought not to go beyond Louisiana without being fed and watered; second, that Murray, the agent of the Chicago & Alton Railroad Company at that point, did not refuse to transport the cattle over the river that night, but simply expressed his preference that Piper should stay over at Louisiana that night. The inference is obvious that if Piper had desired to go on that night he could have done so. What evidence is this of gross negligence, or of any negligence whatever, on the part of the railway company?

But, on examination of the testimony of Murray and Piper, the conclusion is irresistible that the cattle were unloaded and delayed over night at Louisiana simply because Piper would not go on until the cattle should have been fed and watered. To do this necessitated their being taken to the stock-yards and unloaded, and consequently detained till the train should leave for Chicago on the following day. The ferry-boat made but one trip after that. The fact that a delay occurred, and that the cattle in consequence lessened in weight or value, or that the price in market declined in the mean time, raised no presumption of negligence. Bankard v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 34 Md. 197; S. C. 6 Amer. Rep. 321.

If this contract had imposed all of the duties and liabilities of a common carrier upon plaintiff in error, both upon and beyond its own line, and contained no stipulations of exemption from liability, defendant in error would not be entitled to recover under the evidence. A common carrier is not an insurer as to time of delivery. His duty is to deliver in a reasonable time, and what is a reasonable time is to be determined from all the circumstances attending the carriage. If the carrier has used reasonable diligence, and there is a delay, he is excused, even if the delay is not caused by act of God. Angell, Car. §§ 283-289; Story, Bail. § 545a; Parsons v. Hardy, 14 Wend. 215; Wibert v. New York & E. R. Co., 12 N. Y. 245; Conger v. Hudson River R. Co., 6 Duer, 376.

After the obstruction in the river at Louisiana the carrier was not bound to send the cattle to Chicago by another route. 68 Pa. St. 302.

Thacher & Stephens, for defendant in error.

It is claimed by the motion for a new trial that the judgment is not sustained by sufficient evidence. The evidence and the written contract show that plaintiff in error, though employing a connecting line, was nevertheless a common carrier from the point of shipment to the terminal point. Hill Manuf'g Co. v. Boston & L. R. Corp., 104 Mass. 122. The contract was one to "forward" the cattle, which means the same as "transport" or "carry." Mercantile Mut. Ins. Co. v. Chase, 1 E. D. Smith, 121. The clauses of the contract which plaintiff in error relies on to shield itself from liability are as follows:

"And that the party of the first part, and connecting lines *509 *over which such freight may pass, shall not be responsible for any loss, damages, or injury which may happen to said freight in loading, forwarding, or unloading; * * * by any accident in operating the road, or delay caused by storm, fire, failure of machinery or cars, or obstruction of track from any cause, or by fire from any cause whatever; or by any other cause, except gross negligence; and that said party of the first part, and such connecting lines, shall be deemed merely forwarders and not common carriers, and only liable for such loss, damage, injury, or destruction of such freight as may be caused by gross negligence only, and not otherwise." While it may be an open question in this state whether common carriers will be permitted to limit their common-law liability, yet it cannot be doubted that courts more and more look with aversion on such contracts, and are disposed to construe such exemptions strictly. Missouri Val. R. Co. v. Caldwell, 8 Kan. *244; Alb.

Law J., April 26, 1873, p. 265. But the damage in the case at bar resulted from the grossest negligence, if not fraud, of plaintiff in error. It undertook to transport these cattle to Chicago by railroad, when it knew there was great danger of its being unable to do so, and yet concealed this fact from the shipper. The loss happened on account of this existing difficulty in crossing the river. Moreover, when the peril was first made known to Piper at Mexico, he urged the agent of the plaintiff in error to send him to Chicago by one of two routes, on which there was no obstruction, and so fulfill its contract. This the agent declined to do, but forwarded the stock to a point where he had good reason to believe there would be great difficulty in carrying out the contract. Moreover, the record shows inexcusable delay and negligence in not seizing the first opportunity after the cattle had been rested to send them on to their destination. No reason whatever is given why the cattle were not taken over the river the next morning, when the ferry-boat passed over. The company knew of the increasing hazard and danger from delay, and yet took no measures to expedite the cattle forward.

Then, too, it delayed several days in sending them over on *510 the private ferry. It could have done *so several days sooner than it did. Besides, it is disclosed that the carrier was urged to send the cattle by some other route after they reached Louisiana, as it could have done by sending them a three-hours ride back to Mexico. Now, the court, sitting as a jury, found that these acts, or failures to act, on the part of plaintiff in error amounted to a clear violation of its contract. This being the decision of the court on evidence clearly competent, and fully tending to establish the facts necessary to such a determination, it is difficult to see how any wrong has been done plaintiff in error.

BREWER, J. On the twenty-seventh of November, 1872, Piper shipped from the stock-yards at Kansas City, by the railway of plaintiff in error, a lot of cattle to Chicago. The shipment was under a written contract, of which the following is a copy:

"This agreement, made this twenty-seventh of November, 1872, between the St Louis, Kansas City & Northern Railway Company, party of the first part, and G. W. Piper, care Hugh, Reeves & Sturgis, party of the second part, witnesseth that the party of the first part will forward for the party of the second part the following freight, to-wit, two cars of cattle, 35 head, M. or L., from Kansas City to Chicago, at the rate of $70 per car, which is a reduced rate, made expressly in consideration of this agreement; in consideration of which the party of the second part agrees to take care of said freight while on the trip, and load and unload the same at his or their own risk and expense; and that the party of the first part, and connecting lines over which such freight may pass, shall not be responsible for any loss, damage, or injury which may happen to said freight in loading, forwarding, or unloading; by suffocation, or other injury caused by overloading cars; by escapes from any cause whatever; or by any accident in operating the road; or delay caused by storm, fire, failure of machinery or cars, or obstruction of track from any cause, or by fire from any cause whatever; or by any other cause, except gross negligence; and that said party of the first part, and such connecting lines, shall be deemed merely forwarders, and not common *511 carriers, and only liable for such loss, damage, in*jury, or destruction of such freight as may be caused by gross negligence only, and not otherwise; and the said party of the second part agrees to assume all risk of damage or injury to or escape of the live-stock, which may happen to them while in the stock-yards awaiting shipment. It is also further agreed between the parties hereto that the person or persons riding free under this contract in charge of the stock do so at their own risk of personal injury, from whatever cause. Charges, $28.50."

The transportation was delayed; the cattle were injured; their value in the Chicago market was depreciated; and the shipper was put to extra expense for feed, etc.,—for all of which he brought his action before a justice of the peace of Douglas county. He recovered a judgment of $300 before the justice, from which the company appealed. In the district court he recovered a judgment of $280.15, and of this the plaintiff in error now complains.

Upon the record two principal questions arise, and the first is, what liabilities were assumed by the plaintiff in error by this contract? It is insisted by counsel that the company, except as to its own line, was simply a "forwarder," and that its responsibility ceased when it delivered the cattle in good condition to the connecting line. We think this is a mistake. The company contracted "to forward the cattle from Kansas City to Chicago;" and the word "forward," as here used, seems to us to mean the same as "transport" or "carry." Mercantile Mut. Ins. Co. v. Chase, 1 E. D. Smith, 121. Having contracted to carry the cattle to Chicago,—a contract it was competent to make, even though the carriage involved transportation beyond its own line,—it became responsible as a common carrier, except so far as it limited that responsibility by special contract. A common carrier may, by contract, limit its common-law liability, but not so far as to discharge itself from loss occasioned by its own negligence, and this means ordinary negligence. By this contract, therefore, the plaintiff in error was only responsible for such injuries as

And this brings us to what, in our judgment, is by far the most serious question in the case: Does the testimony show negligence on the part of the carriers? The case was tried before the district judge without a jury. There were no special findings of fact, but only a general finding for plaintiff. That finding finds all the facts necessary to sustain the judgment,—finds, therefore, negligence on the part of the carrier. There is a direct and serious conflict in the evidence, and if the testimony of the company's witnesses was accepted as true, the company was not responsible; and even the plaintiff's evidence makes but a scanty showing of negligence. Still, the rule is well settled that limits the inquiry in this court to questions of law, and leaves questions of fact to be settled by the trial tribunals, to be disturbed only in cases of manifest error. The reasons of this rule have been often given, and its application enforced in very doubtful cases. See, among others, School-district v. Griner, 8 Kan. *224; Ulrich v. Ulrich, 8 Kan. *402; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Stanford, 12 Kan. *354. And in this case there was some evidence pointing to negligence. The cattle were shipped via Mexico and Louisiana, to cross the river at the latter place. The transportation across the river at that point was by ferry. The road of plaintiff in error stopped at Mexico, and it could thence either ship by Louisiana, to cross on a ferry, or by Quincy, to cross on a bridge. When the cattle reached Mexico the agent there was aware of trouble in crossing at Louisiana, on account of ice, and was requested by Piper, if there was any doubt about the crossing, to send the cattle by Quincy. The agent, however, forwarded them to Louisiana. When the cattle reached the latter place they were unloaded, put into the stock-yards, and kept all night. The next morning the ferry-boat ran on a bar, and was fast for several days. About eight days thereafter *513 the cattle were taken out of the yards, crossed on a private ferry, driven fourteen miles, and then loaded on the cars and forwarded to Chicago. The cattle were some twenty-six hours in transportation from Kansas City to Louisiana, while the ordinary running time between the two places was sixteen to eighteen hours. Eight or nine hours were consumed in stoppages between Kansas City and Mexico, and the regular stock train had already left the latter place when these cattle reached there. After a delay of some three hours the cars was sent forward by a passenger train. Both the stock and the passenger train crossed that night at Louisiana. The agent there knew of the ice gorge in the river, and the uncertainty of crossing, and the probability of the ferry being stopped, and still caused the cattle to be unloaded and kept on the west side of the river, instead of crossing them, as he could have done, that night. The private ferry was running some three or four days before the cattle were crossed. It seems, then, that but for the delay in the running of the train from Kansas City to Louisiana,—and no explanation is given of this delay,—the cattle would have crossed the river, and been forwarded without loss or trouble to Chicago; that at Mexico, where the line of the plaintiff in error stopped, the agent knew of the doubt as to crossing at Louisiana, and still chose to forward the cattle by that route instead of by one which avoided all danger; and that, at Louisiana, the agent, fully aware of the condition of the river, caused the cattle to be unloaded, and kept on the west side, instead of crossing them, thereby assuming the risks of the interruption of the ferry. We are not prepared to say that there was manifest error in finding from the facts, of which the foregoing is a general statement, that the company was guilty of negligence, and therefore the judgment must be affirmed.

*514 *J. R. BLACKSHIRE and others v. ATCHISON, T. & S. F. R. Co.

July Term, 1874.

Eminent Domain: Proceedings: Deposit by Railroad Company not Payment. Money deposited by a railroad company with a county treasurer for the damages awarded by commissioners in condemnation proceedings, remains with the treasurer at the risk of the company pending those proceedings; and if the land-owner appeal from the assessment of the commissioners, and recover a judgment in the district court, the company is not entitled to have the amount thus deposited credited upon the judgment.<sup>1</sup>

Error from Chase district court.

The case is stated in the opinion.

R. M. Ruggles, for plaintiff in error.

J. Safford, for defendant in error.

BREWER, J. In December, 1870, the defendant in error instituted proceedings to condemn the right of way through the land of Blackshire, one of the plaintiffs in error, situate in the county of Chase. The amount of damages awarded by the commissioners was $577.50, and this amount was duly deposited by the company with the treasurer of the county. Blackshire appealed from this assessment of damages, and recovered a judgment in the district court for $2,400. This judgment was brought by the company to this court, and affirm. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Blackshire, 10 Kan. *477.

Blackshire thereupon caused an execution to be issued on such *515 judgment, and placed in the hands of F. E. Smith, the sheriff of Chase county, the other plaintiff in error. The company tendered to the sheriff the full amount of the judgment, interest, and cost, less the amount theretofore deposited with the county treasurer, in full satisfaction of the judgment and costs. This tender the sheriff declined to accept, and thereupon the company brought its action to restrain any further proceedings for the collection of the judgment. A temporary injunction was granted by the judge of the district court restraining the collection of $577.50 on said judgment, being the amount deposited as heretofore indicated. A motion was made to dissolve this temporary injunction, which was overruled, and now the question is presented for our consideration: To whom does the money belong when deposited with the treasurer, and at whose risk does it remain there? We think it belongs to the company, and remains at its risk. The right of way over the land does not pass until the damages, as finally ascertained, are paid in money, or secured by deposit in money. Const. art. 12, § 4. See, also, St. Joseph & D. C. R. Co. v. Callender, ante, *496, (lately decided by this court.) By the appeal of the land-owner the assessment of the commissioners is vacated, even as the appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace vacates that judgment. There is then existing no determination as to the amount of compensation to which the land-owner is entitled. The parties still disagreeing, the company can get nothing until the amount of compensation is settled, and either paid or secured by a deposit of money. Until this question of compensation is settled, and payment made, the company can abandon the route selected, and select another. The fact that it has instituted condemnation proceedings does not compel it to carry them to a close, and pay the amount awarded. If it finds the assessment of the commissioners, or the award of the jury, so large as to render it expedient to go round a farm, instead of through it, it can decline to pay, and leave the land-owner undisturbed in his possession. In the case of Carli v. Stillwater & St. P. R. Co., 16 Minn. 260, (Gil. 234,) *516 it was held that "the title to this land taken does not vest in the railroad company until the time for an appeal from the award of the commissioners has expired without such appeal, but remains in the original owner; and a quitclaim deed of the premises, executed by such owner to a third person, after the award of the commissioners is filed, and within the time allowed for an appeal, conveys the premises to such third person; and the right to the damages passes to him as incident to his ownership, and he may take an appeal from the award of the commissioners within the time allowed by the statute." Upon the same principle a conveyance by the land-owner of the premises through which the right of way was sought, intermediate the taking of the appeal and the judgment, would pass the title, and with it the right to the damages. Stacy v. Vermont Cent. Ry. Co., 27 Vt. 39; Baltimore & S. R. Co. v. Nesbit, 10 How. 395.

Again, suppose the assessment of the commissioners had been $2,400, that amount deposited, and then the verdict of the jury only $577.50, could the land-owner elect to take the $2,400? Would he have a right to go to the treasurer, and collect the $2,400 there deposited? Would it for a moment be claimed that it had all passed beyond the power of the company to recover back? Or, again, if pending the appeal, and before the trial in the district court, the land-owner had actually received the deposit from the treasurer, would he be permitted to further prosecute his appeal? Could he take the amount of the assessment of the commissioners, and at the same time litigate its sufficiency? Clearly, it seems to us, the acceptance of the money would be an affirmance of the assessment, and a waiver of any errors in it; while, if the money were his, it seems he should be privileged to take it without losing his right to full compensation for the right of way appropriated. But it is argued that the money is subject to his order; that by the constitution the right of way can be appropriated, if compensation is secured by a deposit in money; that the law has designated the county treasurer as the depository; that the company has deposited this money with the legally-*517 named depository,—has set it *apart as a fund for the sole purpose of being applied to payment of all damages that have been, or may be, awarded the land-owner; and that it is unjust to require the company, not merely to place its money in the hands of the law, but to become responsible for its safe continuance there. So far as the justice of the case is concerned, it is not more unjust that, in case of loss, the company should lose the money, than that the land-owner should lose his land. Indeed, as the company is the moving party, and is seeking to take from the land-owner, it is more just that it should carry all risks pending the proceedings. While it is true that the right of way may be appropriated if full compensation therefor is secured by a deposit of money, yet that deposit must be adequate security for full compensation. A deposit which is only partial security amounts to nothing. When the time for appeal has expired, then the right of way is appropriated, even though the land-owner has not received the money, and from that time the money remains with the treasurer at his risk. The deposit with the treasurer is security for the assessment of the commissioners, but the appeal vacates that assessment. The amount of damages is thenceforth an unknown quantity, and how can it be said to be secured by the deposit? We have considered and disposed of this case upon the substantial question involved in it, leaving undecided the minor questions of practice raised by counsel on either side.

The case will be remanded to the district court, with instructions to vacate the temporary injunction.

*O. B. TAYLOR v. JOHN HOSICK, Adm'r, etc.

July Term, 1874.

1. Parties: Proper: Necessary. Where an administrator, in pursuance of an order by the probate court, sells certain lands, belonging to the estate which he is administering, and the purchaser does not pay the purchase money; and the administrator reports all the facts connected with the sale to the probate court; and the court, without notice to the purchaser, confirms the sale; but afterwards, and without notice to the purchaser, sets the sale aside, and orders a new sale; and the administrator then sells the land a second time, and to a second purchaser; and the second sale is confirmed; and the administrator executes to said second purchaser a deed for the land; but said second purchaser neglects and refuses to pay the purchase money, and the administrator then sues him therefor: held that, although the first purchaser may be a proper party to the action, he is in no sense a necessary party.
2. Filing Pleadings: Discretion of Court: Leave to Reply. Where the plaintiff was in default for want of a reply, and the case was called for trial; and the court allowed the plaintiff to file a verified reply, putting in issue the truth of the new matter alleged in the defendant's answer; and immediately proceeded with the trial, over the objections of the defendant; but the defendant gave no reason why he did not wish to go to trial: held, that the whole matter was within the sound judicial discretion of the court, and, as the defendant gave no reason why he did not wish to proceed with the trial, the court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the reply to be filed, and immediately proceeding with the trial. [Grant v. Pendery, 15 Kan. 242; Wright v. Bacheller, 16 Kan. 266; Rice v. Hodge, 26 Kan. 168.]
3. Administration: Letters: Irregularly Granted. Where a probate court has jurisdiction to appoint some person administrator, and makes an appointment by issuing letters of administration to a person not a relative or creditor of the deceased, and without citing any of the relatives or creditors to appear and either take or renounce the administration, held, that although the appointment may have been erroneous, yet that the letters of administration cannot be attacked collaterally, and especially not by a person who is neither a relative, nor a creditor of the deceased. [Brubaker v. Jones, 23 Kan. 412.]
4. ——: Notice of Sale of Realty. Where the probate court orders that notice of an application for an order to sell lands belonging to an estate shall be given to "all persons interested," etc., by publication in a newspaper, and notice is so published, and is directed to "all persons interested," etc., without giving the names of those interested, and the probate court afterwards considers the notice sufficient, and in pursuance thereof orders the sale to be made, held, that this court will consider the notice as sufficient.
- *519 *5. Probate Court: Power to Set Aside Administrator's Sale.
The probate court has power to set aside an administrator's sale of real estate, where the same ought to be set aside; and where an administrator sells real estate, and the purchaser does not pay the purchase money, and the report of the administrator shows all the facts connected with the sale, and the probate court, without notice to the purchaser, confirms the sale, and the purchaser then not only neglects, but refuses, to pay the purchase money, the court may then, in its discretion, and without notice to the purchaser, set aside the sale, and order another sale to be made.

Error from Leavenworth district court.

The case is stated in the opinion.

Clough & Wheat, for plaintiff in error.

Taylor's answer to the amended petition was, first, a general denial. A second defense, among other things, stated that Mitchell left no wife or child, or other descendants, surviving him, but that he did leave surviving him several brothers and sisters, residents and inhabitants of said county, and that neither of them ever renounced administration of said estate, and that they were not any of them ever cited for that purpose; and that said Mitchell left several creditors, citizens, residents, and inhabitants of said county; and that said Hosick was not next of kin to or of said Mitchell, nor a creditor; and that said probate court never had or acquired jurisdiction to appoint Hosick. A third defense was that one P. F. Meagher claimed that he and Mitchell were partners, and bought said lots with their partnership funds, and continued doing business as such till the *520 death of Mitchell, and that said *business is still unsettled; and that said Meagher was not cited or required by said probate court to give bond as surviving partner, and that Meagher was an inhabitant of said county; that Hosick, as such administrator, on the sixth of November, 1869, in pursuance of the orders of the probate court, sold said undivided half of said lots 29 and 30 to said Meagher for $325, and that said probate court had approved and confirmed said sale to said Meagher, and ordered said Hosick, as such administrator, to make a deed to said Meagher therefor as said purchaser thereof; and that Meagher claims that he paid said $325 to said Hosick, and is entitled to such deed; and that Meagher was in possession as such partner and purchaser, etc. By a fourth defense Taylor set up defects in the proceedings under which the property was sold. This answer was filed on the third of January, 1872. More than a year afterwards, to-wit, on the fifth of March, 1873, said Hosick, with leave of said district court, filed a verified reply to said answer, and then Taylor asked to have the counter-claims, causes of action, and for relief, set up in his said answer, taken as true against his co-defendant, Meagher; but the court overruled his motion in that respect, and dismissed the case as to Meagher. And then, on that fifth of March, the cause was called for trial, but Taylor announced that he was not ready, and objected to the trial then being proceeded with; but said court overruled his objection, and the trial was then proceeded with, and was concluded on that day.

From the findings of the court it appears that Hosick, as administrator, sold said lots to said Meagher; that afterwards such administrator petitioned said probate court to set said sale aside, and for leave to resell, because said Meagher had refused to pay the purchase money aforesaid; and that said probate court then ordered that said administrator proceed and sell the interest of the deceased in and to the undivided half of said lots, but that said order was made without any notice to or appearance by Meagher. As we understand that order, the sale to Meagher was not set aside, but said probate court, without notice to Meagher or any other person, *521 *on Hosick's application, concluded it would be a good thing to resell said undivided half of said lots, and therefore ordered Hosick to do so. We submit said probate court had not power or jurisdiction to make that order. We claim that it could not have set said sale aside at that time, after having as aforesaid confirmed said sale to Meagher, otherwise than in a proceeding instituted under sections 568 to 576 of the Code of 1868. But whether it could or not, we submit that after so confirming said sale, and ordering said Hosick, as such administrator, to make a deed of the property sold to said Meagher, it could not again order the property sold. As the said Hosick complied with the requirements of law in the matter of so selling said lots, when said probate court so confirmed said sale said Meagher became entitled to a deed from said Hosick for said undivided half of said lots. Of course, there is no power in the probate court to make or direct a second sale of real estate of a decedent after having confirmed the first sale, and ordered a deed to the purchaser. The statute only authorizes the sale of a decedent's real estate; it does not authorize the probate court to sell lands a second time because of non-payment of purchase money.

And we further submit that even if said probate court had pretended to set said sale to Meagher aside, its order in that respect would have been void, both for want of notice to Meagher, and because the power of that court in the premises was exhausted by the orders in pursuance of which the property had been sold to Meagher. Whether Meagher had paid the purchase money to Hosick or not was immaterial, and furnished no reason for ordering a resale. Ferguson v. Tutt, 8 Kan. *370. And if we are right in claiming that such non-payment of the purchase money was not a sufficient reason for ordering a resale, it follows that said order of the eleventh of November, 1869, ordering a resale, was void, because the petition that day filed on which said order was made does not present or show such a case as is required to give that court jurisdiction to order a sale of land, and no power was ever given it to order a resale after confirmation. *522 *That orders of sale of the probate court are void unless a sufficient petition therefor is presented to it, see Magee v. Rice, 27 Tex. 491; Haynes v. Meeks, 20 Cal. 312; Fitch v. Miller, Id. 352; Gilliland v. Sellers' Adm'rs, 2 Ohio St. 223; State v. Warren, 28 Md. 338, 355; Washington v. McCaughan, 34 Miss. 304; Beal v. Harmon, 38 Mo. 435; Snyder's Appeal, 36 Pa. St. 166; Lamson v. Schutt, 4 Allen, 359; Hall v. Chapman's Adm'rs, 35 Ala.

553; Ackley v. Dygert, 33 Barb. 176; Davenport v. Young, 16 Ill. 548; Hollingsworth v. Barbour, 4 Pet. 466. If Meagher did not pay so soon as he ought to have done, the only remedy for such non-payment was a suit for the purchase money in any court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter thereof.

It further appears from the findings that said lots were resold to Taylor, December 18, 1869, and that Hosick delivered the deed to Taylor; but it appears that Taylor has not asserted any right to said lots, nor any interest therein. We submit that this last-mentioned sale is void because of the objections to the said order for a resale, and for the reason that Hosick had already once sold the same property under the order of thirtieth September, 1869, and thus exhausted his power in that respect. If for any reason said sale to plaintiff in error is void, then Hosick could not recover the purchase money. Williams v. Morton, 38 Me. 47; Jones v. Smith, 22 Mich. 360; Hamilton v. Lockhart, 41 Miss. 460; Baines v. McGee, 1 Smedes & M. 219; Esty v. Snyder, 41 Ill. 363.

We claim that the judgment in favor of Hosick, as such administrator, and the judgment dismissing the suit as to Meagher, ought to be reversed for error occurring at and before the trial. We submit that, under the circumstances of this case, Meagher was a proper party defendant, and that justice required that any rights and claims of his to said undivided half of said lots 29 and 30 should have been determined in the action before rendering judgment against Taylor for the purchase money thereof. The question involved in the action was whether Hosick, as such administrator, sold the property to Taylor; which he did not do if the sale to Meagher remained a valid sale, nor if said lots were partnership property of Mitchell and Meagher, and, of course, Meagher was a necessary party to a complete determination or settlement of those questions. Not only so, but if the judgment in favor of Hosick remains unreversed, those two *523 questions, including the question as to whether Meagher did or did not pay for the property so sold to him, or made improper default in the performance of his contract of purchase or not, remains an open question as to and so far as Meagher is concerned. And we submit that justice requires that those questions should be settled and determined as to Meagher before Taylor is required to pay.

Under section 118, p. 455, Gen. St. 1868, the probate court, on the ninth September, 1869, required that all persons interested in said estate be notified of the application made by Hosick for the sale of said property by publication, etc. The notice is simply "to all persons interested,"—to no one by name; and therefore we submit it was not such a notice as required by the order of ninth of September, and therefore we submit that the order of sale made on the thirtieth of September was void. There is no notice to or appearance by Meagher shown. Hargis v. Morse, 7 Kan. *415; Higginbotham v. Thomas, 9 Kan. *328, *390.

Hosick was permitted to give evidence of his appointment and qualification as administrator, but the court refused to permit Taylor to sustain his second defense by proof, or to collaterally attack the appointment of Hosick. We submit that the probate court has not power to appoint any person it chooses, administrator, in cases where the decedent has relatives residing in the county of his residence, until after those first entitled to administration have been cited, as required by section 12, p. 432, Gen. St. 1868. By said second defense it is, among other things, alleged that Hosick was neither creditor, next of kin, nor any relative of the decedent, and that said probate court did not acquire jurisdiction to make the appointment. There is nothing in the case to show that Hosick was in anywise interested in the estate, and there was no allegation in the petition of any citation or renunciation by those first entitled to administration. Hosick's appointment was void, and it was competent for Taylor to show it, and we rely thereon as a reason why the sale to him was void. In this connection, see Cook v. Carr, 19 Md. 1, 4; Freedman v. Thompson, 41 Miss. 49; Holderman v. Graham, 41 Ill. 363; Crosby v. Leavitt, 4 Allen, 410; Adams v. Adams, 36 Ga. 236; Alfred v. McKay, Id. 440; Kearney v. Turner, 28 Md. 408.

*524 *Hosick failed to reply within time, but waited until the case came on for trial, and then put in a verified general denial, with leave of the court, to which Taylor excepted; and the court then, on that same day, caused the trial to be proceeded with on the issues between Hosick and Taylor. We submit that it is contemplated by the Code and its amendments (see sections 105, 128, 313-315, Code, and sections 3-5, pp. 277, 278, Laws 1871) that a defendant should have a few days' time in which to prepare for trial after the filing of a reply; and we submit that it was an extreme abuse of the discretion of the court, and a great irregularity in its proceedings, for it to permit said reply to be filed out of time, and then on the same day to force Taylor to a trial of the issues made by the filing of that verified reply. Of course the presumption of law is that Taylor was thereby prevented from having a fair trial. Mallory v. Leiby, 1 Kan. *97, *102; Irwin v. Paulett, Id. *418.

VALENTINE, J. This was an action brought by John Hosick, administrator de bonis non of the estate of David N. Mitchell, deceased, against O. B. Taylor, for $700 and interest. The principal facts upon which the action is founded are substantially as follows: David N. Mitchell, a resident and property holder, died intestate in Leavenworth county, March 7, 1868. On June 24th next following, the probate court of said county appointed John Hosick administrator de bonis non of the estate of said Mitchell. On September 30, 1869, the probate court, on the application of the administrator, ordered certain real property belonging to the estate, among which was the undivided half of lots 29 and 30, in block 78, in Leavenworth city, to be sold for the purpose of paying certain debts due from the estate which could not otherwise be paid. In pursuance of said *525 order said lots were sold November 6, 1869, *P. T. Meagher being the purchaser, and the sale was confirmed on the same day. But Meagher neglecting and refusing to pay the purchase money, the probate court, on November 11, 1869, on the application of the administrator, ordered the property to be again sold. The property was this time sold to O. B. Taylor, December 18, 1869, for $700. On the same day the sale was confirmed by the probate court, and immediately the administrator executed a deed to Taylor for the property, and delivered it to him on the same day; but Taylor has never yet paid the purchase money for the property. Hence this action was brought and is now prosecuted by Hosick, as administrator, against Taylor, for the recovery of said purchase money. At first Hosick filed his petition in the court below against Taylor alone, but afterwards he filed an amended petition, making both Taylor and Meagher parties defendant. Taylor filed an answer to this amended petition, setting up new matter. The court gave Hosick and Meagher until January 20, 1873, to reply to this answer. They did not, however, reply within that time. Indeed, Meagher never filed any pleading of any kind, except a demurrer to the plaintiff's petition, which demurrer was sustained by the court. On March 5, 1873, the case was called for trial. Hosick's petition had not been amended since the court had sustained Meagher's demurrer thereto, and neither Hosick nor Meagher had replied to Taylor's answer. The court then dismissed the action as against Meagher, and both Hosick and Taylor excepted. The court then allowed Hosick to file a reply to Taylor's answer, verified by affidavit, and Taylor excepted. The court then proceeded with the trial of the case, over the objection of Taylor, and Taylor excepted. During the trial Taylor raised the following questions: That Hosick's letters of administration were not rightfully granted, and therefore all that Hosick had done as administrator was void; that the notice of the application for the sale of said property to pay debts was insufficient, and therefore that all the subsequent proceedings connected therewith, including both sales, were *526 *void; that the first sale was valid and subsisting when the order for the second sale was made, and therefore that the order for the second sale and the second sale itself were both void. All the rulings of the court below on these various questions were against Taylor, to which rulings Taylor duly excepted, and now assigns the same for error in this court. Although Meagher may have been a proper party to this action, we do not think that he was in any sense a necessary party. He has no possible interest in the $700 in controversy between Hosick and Taylor; and there is no possible defense which Meagher alone, or Meagher and Taylor together, could interpose to defeat Hosick's claim, which Taylor alone could not, with at least equal propriety and equal effect, interpose.

2. The court, in its discretion, had a right to allow said verified reply to be filed after the time for filing the same had elapsed; and also, in its discretion, as we think, had a right to immediately proceed with the trial. The reply was only a general denial, simply putting in issue the truth of Taylor's answer; and if Taylor was then as ready to prove the facts alleged in his answer as he ever could be, it would not seem that there could be much reason for him to complain of the ruling of the court. But he did not claim that he could ever be any better prepared to prove his answer than he then was; nor did he claim that he could ever be better prepared to disprove the allegations of the plaintiff's petition than he then was. Indeed, he did not even claim that he could ever be any better prepared in any respect for trial than he then was. He gave no reason why he did not wish to proceed immediately with the trial. Hence we think there was no abuse of judicial discretion in proceeding immediately with the trial.

3. The probate court unquestionably had a right to appoint some person administrator. The facts already stated gave the court jurisdiction. But it is claimed that the court should have appointed a brother, sister, or creditor of the deceased; or that the court *527 should have cited all the broth*ers, sisters, and creditors of the deceased to appear, and take or renounce the administration, before the court could appoint Hosick. As the brothers and sisters of the deceased were his nearest kin living, the court should have done as Taylor claims; and if the court did not do so, then the brothers, sisters, or creditors of the deceased would, in a proper proceeding, have a right to complain. But still these are not jurisdictional matters. Even if the probate court erred in the appointment of Hosick, still the appointment is valid until set aside by proper authority, and in a proper proceeding. The appointment cannot be attacked collaterally, as Taylor now attempts to do, and especially not by himself, who is neither a relative nor a creditor of the deceased. Letters of administration can be attacked collaterally only when the probate court for some reason has no jurisdiction to make the appointment, and never when the court has merely committed an error by appointing one person (who is eligible) when the court should have appointed some other person.

4. It is claimed that the notice of the application for the sale of the said property was insufficient, because, as Taylor claims, it did not follow the order made by the probate court. The order was "that all persons interested in said estate be notified of said application by publication of a notice in some newspaper," etc. The notice published under this order was directed to "all persons interested in the estate of David N. Mitchell, deceased," etc. Taylor claims that the notice should have given the names of all the persons to whom it was directed. The probate court, however, considered this notice to be sufficient, and in pursuance thereof ordered both the first and the second sale thereunder. We therefore think it was sufficient. Gen. St. 455, c. 37, § 118.

5. We think the order of the probate court directing that the property should be sold a second time was valid. It is claimed that said order was and is void—First, because the first sale was valid, *528 and because the probate court has no *power in any case to order a second sale to be made; second, because no notice of the application for the order was previously given to Meagher; third, because the first sale was not set aside before the second sale was ordered, but is still subsisting and in full force.

First. It must be recollected that Meagher, the purchaser at the first sale, never paid the purchase money. The administrator substantially reported this to the probate court when he made his return of the sale. The administrator did not report that "the purchase money had been paid," but, on the contrary, reported "that the parties are now ready to pay said sum of money upon delivery to them of deeds," etc., plainly showing that the purchase money had not yet been paid when he made his report. And upon this return the probate court confirmed the sale. Now, a court that has power to confirm a sale, as the probate court in this state has, (Gen. St. 457, § 132,) we should think undoubtedly has the power to refuse to confirm in cases where the sale should not be confirmed; and when a court has erroneously or unadvisedly confirmed a sale, it undoubtedly has the power to set the confirmation aside; and when the court has rightly either refused to confirm a sale, or has set the confirmation aside, it undoubtedly has the power to order another sale. These propositions seem to us self-evident. The court in every case undoubtedly has the right to treat the sale as not a completed sale, or indeed substantially as no sale, until the purchase money has been paid or tendered. And if the court should at any time before that time be of the opinion that the sale should be set aside, it would undoubtedly have the power to set it aside merely for reason that the purchase money had neither been paid nor tendered. Until the purchase money is paid or tendered, the whole matter probably rests in the discretion of the court; and the court may, as it chooses, (exercising a sound judicial discretion,) hold the sale as valid, or set it aside.

Second. No notice was ever given to Meagher, or to any one *529 else, that the sale would be confirmed; and as Meagher *never completed his purchase by paying, or offering to pay, the purchase money, he had no right to expect, certainly none to demand, that the sale should ever be confirmed. He forfeited his rights by refusing to pay the purchase money; and as the sale was confirmed without notice to Meagher, and as he had no right to ask that it should be confirmed, it might properly be set aside without any notice being given to him. Of course, if Meagher had at any time, before or after the confirmation, paid or tendered the purchase money, then the sale could not have been set aside without notice to him, and without some good reason for setting it aside being given. In cases of this kind we think it is better for the administrator and probate court to have the power to either set aside the sale and sell again, or to sue the purchaser for the purchase money, as they may think best.

Third. We think that the first sale was in fact set aside. It is true that it was not done in very explicit terms, but the petition of the administrator asked that the sale should be set aside, and a new sale ordered, and the court, in pursuance of said petition, ordered the new sale.

The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

L. H. JOHNSON v. EPHRAIM BROWN.

July Term, 1874.

Sunday: Contracts. Under the Sunday laws of this state, a contract made on any day to perform any kind of labor on Sunday, save "the household offices of daily necessity, or other works of necessity or charity," is void; but a contract made on Sunday to perform labor on any other day is valid.<sup>1</sup>

Error from Lyon district court.

Johnson sued Brown before a justice of the peace, to recover *530 ten dollars alleged to be due upon a contract for the *services of plaintiff's horse. Brown's answer was—First, a general denial; second, "that the supposed contract for the services of said stallion, set forth in plaintiff's bill of particulars, was made on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, and the services of said stallion were had or performed on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, wherefore said supposed contract was and is void, and of no effect." The evidence was clear that the contract was made on Sunday. The testimony was conflicting whether the services of the horse were had on Sunday, or on some other day. The justice instructed the jury as follows:

"(1) If you find from the evidence that the plaintiff and defendant, on a Sunday, made a contract, and that such contract contemplated, and required that the services of the horse were to be done on Sunday, then such contract would be void, and plaintiff could not recover.

"(2) But if you believe from the evidence that the plaintiff and defendant made a contract for the services of the horse, * * * and that such services were rendered * * * on any other day than Sunday, * * * the fact that the contract was made on Sunday will make no difference, and it will be your duty to find for the plaintiff."

The jury found for the plaintiff, and the justice rendered judgment on the verdict. Brown removed the case to the district court by petition in error, and that court, at the March term, 1873, reversed the judgment of the justice, and ordered that the case stand for trial in such court as upon appeal. From such order of reversal Johnson now appeals, and brings the record here by petition in error for review.

R. M. Ruggles, for plaintiff in error.

Bachelor & Skinner, for defendant in error.

BREWER, J. The question in this case is whether a contract made on Sunday is valid. The services contracted for were not necessarily, or by the contemplation of the parties, to be rendered, and *531 were not in fact rendered, on Sunday; for *while there is a conflict in the testimony as to when the services were rendered, the verdict of the jury, under the instructions, settles that they were not rendered on Sunday. At common law a contract on Sunday was valid; but in England, and in every state of the Union, have been enacted what are familiarly known as Sunday laws, for the prevention of labor and business upon that day. Most of these statutes prohibit both labor and business; and under the latter term the making of contracts has in many states been decided to be within the prohibition. Our own statute simply prohibits labor. 'It reads:

"Sec. 255. Every person who shall either labor himself, or compel his apprentice, servant, or any other person under his charge or control, to labor or perform any work, * * * on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor," etc. Gen. St. c. 31, p. 373.

In this it closely resembles the statutes of New York, Ohio, and Missouri, and the decisions in those states place the making of a contract outside the limits of the prohibition. Merritt v. Earle, 29 N. Y. 120; Kaufman v. Hamm, 30 Mo. 887; Bloom v. Richards, 2 Ohio St. 387. In the latter case is a lengthy and able opinion from Judge THURMAN, pointing out the distinction between the terms "labor" and "business," as well as discussing generally the subject of Sunday laws. We refer to that opinion as a clear and convincing argument that the making of a contract is not within the prohibition of a statute like ours. The thing prohibited is labor, and a contract made on any day to perform labor on Sunday, save "the household offices of daily necessity, or other works of necessity or charity," is a contract to do a thing prohibited, and therefore void; but a contract made on Sunday to perform labor on any other day is valid.

The order of the district court will be reversed, and the case remanded, with instructions to affirm the judgment of the justice.

*H. B. NORTON v. PATSEY FRIEND.<sup>1</sup>

July Term, 1874.

Taxation: Tax Sales: County as Purchaser: Deed Reciting Illegal Sale Void. A certain tax deed recites, among other things, that at a certain tax sale held in Lyon county, May 6, 1863, "the treasurer of the county of Lyon having offered to pay" for the land described in said tax deed "the whole amount of the taxes, interest, and costs then due and remaining unpaid on" said land, "and payment of said sum having been by Lyon county made to the said treasurer, the said property was stricken off to said county at that price;" and there is nothing in said deed, nor in the evidence, that shows or tends to show that the land could not have been sold to some other person for said sum, provided the treasurer had not made his said offer. Held, that the said sale and the said deed are both void. [Magill v. Martin, 14 Kan. 80; Babbitt v. Johnson, 15 Kan. 254; Larkin v. Wilson, 28 Kan. 516.]

Error from Lyon district court.

The case is stated in the opinion.

Almerin Gillett, for plaintiff in error, contended that the tax deed was in proper form,—the form prescribed by statute,—was duly executed, witnessed, acknowledged, and certified, and should have been received in evidence.

Ruggles & Plumb, for defendant in error.

The objections to this deed are, first, that it shows the sale of two separate tracts of land together "in lump." The land is described as "the north-west quarter of section No. 9, and the south-west quarter of section No. 9, all in township 20, range 12." These tracts join, and together form the west half of a section; but they are none the less two separate tracts of land, as described in the deed. Each description is that of a legal subdivision, according to the United States survey; and if both were to be sold together as one
*533 tract, then the proper *description to indicate that union of the two tracts would have been "the west half of section No. 9," or "the north-west and south-west quarters of section 9." The use of the word "all," following the description of the last tract, shows that more than one tract was intended. Suppose the description had been of town lots, and said "lot No. 63, on Congress street, and lot No. 65, on Congress street, all in the town of Emporia," both lots in fact joining,—and even suppose both to have been assessed, and rightfully, to the same person,—would there not be a clear indication that two tracts of land had been sold together? If the two quarters as above set out describe but a single tract, then an entire township or county might be lumped together, and sold in the same manner. The statute requires a separate listing, taxing, and sale of each tract of land. General Tax Law, §§ 11, 22, 23, 25, 30, 31, 33, 39, 42, 46, (chapter 107, Gen. St.) That a sale "in lump" avoids the deed, if shown on its face, see Boardman v. Bourne, 20 Iowa, 134; Pitkin v. Yaw, 13 Ill. 253; Spellman v. Curtenius, 12 Ill. 413. In the case of Spellman v. Curtenius the land was assessed as "the S. W. & S. E. sec. 9, T. 8 N., R. 8 E., 150 acres," and the court held that such a description was that of a single tract of land; which presents quite a different case from the one here, as will be readily seen.

The deed recites the sale as having taken place "at the adjourned sale of the sale begun and publicly held on the first Tuesday of May," while there could not be in point of law an "adjourned" sale held in May, or at any other time. A subsequent sale, to take place in September, was provided for, but this sale took place in May. If not the regular sale, then it could not be legally held, and that it was not we here call the deed to witness.

The land was not sold or bought in the manner prescribed by law. The deed recites that the treasurer of Lyon county "having offered to pay," etc. The treasurer is not authorized, as such, to bid, except upon certain conditions specified in the law, and is not authorized to *534 "offer to pay" *anything whatever. The deed further recites that "payment of said sum having been by Lyon county made to the said treasurer, the said property was stricken off to said county at that price." This is a transaction wholly unknown in the law; for in the only case in which lands can be bid off for the county, the county is not required to pay anything whatever to the treasurer. It looks as though the county was speculating in tax titles. These recitals cannot be held to be evidence that the land could not be sold for the "amount of tax, penalty, and charges thereon," and was therefore "bid off by the county treasurer for the county for such amount." Section 42, p. 867, Comp. Laws; Gen. St. § 112, c. 107. The treasurer can only bid off for the county in the absence of other bidders, and the deed should show that there were no other bidders, and that in consequence of such lack of bidders the county treasurer had bid it off for the county for the amount of taxes, etc., then due. These are conditions precedent, without which the treasurer has no authority in the premises, and as such they ought to be shown. Bush v. Davison, 16 Wend. 554.

The county had no authority to enter the list as a competitor against private parties for the purchase of lands sold for taxes. It is necessary that the deed should show that the land was duly sold, as the statutory form requires it. In the case of sales to the county, the form must be "substantially" that prescribed in the case of sales to individuals; that is, it must show that the land was properly sold. But even if the deed would be good if the treasurer had failed to make any mention whatever of the circumstances of the sale, yet as the deed sets out, first, what he did do, and that being illegal, how can the court strike all that out, and in its stead insert other and different words, or at least a legal presumption, establishing an entirely different conclusion?

The statute provides that a deed substantially in the form therein stated shall be prima facie evidence of the regularity of the proceedings up to the execution of the deed. Upon sound reason, and *535 according to the authority of this court in *the case of Bowman v. Cockrill, 6 Kan. *311, that means that the form is to be varied according to the varying facts required to be recited, covering the same points, however; that is, stating the various steps taken and necessary to show the authority to make a deed. Take the case under consideration: In the case of a sale to a private party the statutory form requires a statement that the land sold was the "least quantity bid for." This is designed to secure competition in bidding, to prevent combinations, and to protect the rights of the owner by preventing a sacrifice of the whole of his estate where a part only is necessary. So, in the case of a sale to a county, substantially the same averment must be made, to-wit, "that the land was bid off by the county treasurer for the county for the reason that it could not be sold for the amount of the tax, penalty, and charges thereon." Such a construction is in harmony, not only with the language of the statute, but also with the intent of the legislature in enacting it.

The deed does not show a proper and legal assignment of the certificate of sale.

VALENTINE, J. This was an action of ejectment, brought by the defendant in error against plaintiff in error to recover the possession of certain lands and tenements situate in Lyon county. The defendant below (plaintiff here) answered, admitting his possession of the premises in question, and denying title of plaintiff. On the trial plaintiff offered in evidence a patent from the United States government to herself for the land in controversy, and rested. The defendant, then, to maintain the issues on his part, offered in evidence a tax deed, of which the following is a copy:

"Know all men by these presents, that whereas, the following described real property, viz., the north-west quarter of section No. nine, and the south-west quarter of section No. nine, all in township No.

twenty, of range No. twelve, situated in the county of Lyon and state of Kansas, was subject to taxation for the year 1862; and \*536 whereas, the taxes \*assessed upon said real property for the year aforesaid remained due and unpaid at the date of the sale hereinafter mentioned; and whereas, the treasurer of said county did, on the sixth day of May, 1863, by virtue of authority in him vested by law, at adjourned sale of the sale begun and publicly held on the first Tuesday of May, 1863, expose to public sale, at the county-seat of said county, in substantial conformity with all the requisitions of the statute in such case made and provided, the real property above described, for the payment of the taxes, interest, and costs then due and unpaid on said property; and whereas, at the place aforesaid, the treasurer of the county of Lyon and state of Kansas, having offered to pay the sum of nine dollars and ten cents, being the whole amount of taxes, interest, and costs then due and remaining unpaid on said property, for the N. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  and S. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 9, township 20, range 12, which was the least quantity bid for, and payment of said sum having been by Lyon county made to the said treasurer, the said property was stricken off to said county at that price; and whereas, the said Lyon county did, on the fourth day of August, 1868, duly assign the certificate of the sale of the property as aforesaid, and all its right, title, and interest to said property, to H. B. Norton, of the county of Lyon and state of Kansas; and whereas, the subsequent taxes of the years 1863 and 1864, amounting to the sum of twenty dollars and sixty-two cents, have been paid by the purchaser as provided by law; and whereas, two years have elapsed since the date of said sale, and the said property has not been redeemed therefrom, as provided by law: now, therefore, I, J. L. Williams, county clerk of the county aforesaid, for and in consideration of the sum of ninety-one dollars and sixty-seven cents, taxes, costs, and interest due on said land for the years 1862, 1863, and 1864, to the treasurer paid as aforesaid, and by virtue of the statute in such case made and provided, have granted, bargained, and sold, and by these presents do grant, bargain, and sell, unto the said H. B. Norton, his heirs and assigns, the real property last hereinbefore described, to have and to hold unto him, the said H. B. Norton, his heirs and assigns, forever; subject, however, to all the rights of redemption provided by law.

"In witness whereof, I, J. L. Williams, county clerk as aforesaid, *537 said, by virtue of the authority aforesaid, have hereunto *subscribed my name, and affixed the official seal of said county, on this fourth day of August, 1868.

"[Seal.]

J. L. WILLIAMS, County Clerk.

"Witness: O. Y. HART."

The execution of said deed was duly acknowledged and certified, and said deed was duly recorded.

The plaintiff below objected to the introduction of this deed on the ground that the same was irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial, and showed on its face that it was void, which objection was sustained, to which ruling of the court the defendant excepted. The defendant offering no further testimony, the court then proceeded to render judgment for plaintiff. Defendant then moved for a new trial upon the ground of error occurring at the trial and excepted to by him, and that the decision was not sustained by sufficient evidence, (expressly waiving his right to demand a second trial under statute,) which motion was overruled, to which ruling defendant excepted.

The defendant in error (plaintiff below) now claims that the said tax deed is void for the following, among other, reasons: The deed shows upon its face that the land was not struck off to the county because it could not be sold to other bidders for the amount of the taxes, penalty, and charges thereon, but that the county, through the county treasurer, entered the list as a competitive bidder, made the first bid on the land, offering itself to pay for the land the amount of the taxes, penalty, and charges thereon, and thereby prevented others from making that bid, or, indeed, from making any bid as advantageous to themselves as that bid would have been, and thereby the county got the land. This claim seems to be true; and if true, it will invalidate the deed. The statute provides that "if any parcel of land cannot be sold for the amount of tax, penalty, and charges thereon, it shall be bid off by the county treasurer for the county for such amount." Comp. Laws 1862, p. 867, § 42; Laws 1866, p. 277,

§ 72; Gen. St. p. 1047, § 88. And this is the only law that *538 authorizes county treasurers to bid off "lands at tax sales for the county, and this law does not authorize the county treasurer to offer to pay anything for the land, and the county is not required to pay anything therefor when the land is so struck off to the county. The deed, however, recites in this case that "the treasurer of the county of Lyon, * * * having offered to pay" for said land said "amount of taxes, interest, and costs then due and remaining unpaid on" said land, "and payment of said sum having been by Lyon county made to said treasurer, the said property was stricken off to said county at that price." There is nothing in the deed, nor in the evidence, that shows, or tends to show, that the land could not have been sold to some other person for the same price, provided the treasurer had not made his said bid or offer. Hence we think that said sale, and the tax deed founded thereon, are both void. The statute does not authorize counties or county treasurers to enter the lists as competitive bidders; nor does the law authorize counties or county treasurers to bid at all at tax sales unless the land cannot be sold to other bidders for the amount of the taxes, penalty, and costs then due thereon. Before a county or a county treasurer can bid at all, the treasurer must wait until all others have failed or refused to bid on the land the required amount. This does not seem to have been done in the present case. A tax deed should follow the form given by statute only so far as it can do so truthfully, and where it cannot do so truthfully, it should state the facts as they really exist. The form given by statute is for tax deeds for land sold at tax sales to individuals, and when this form is used for a tax deed for land sold to a county, the form of the deed should be so modified as to correspond with the law and the facts of the case.

The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

*CITY OF LEAVENWORTH v. D. P. STILLE.

July Term, 1874.

1. Municipal Corporations: Contract for Grading Streets: Special Taxes: Liability. In 1866 D. P. Stille, under a contract with the city of Leavenworth, graded a certain street. Afterwards the city levied a special tax on certain real estate belonging to Stille's wife, and occupied by himself and wife as a homestead, and on other real estate abutting on said street, to pay for said grading, but did not provide any means for collecting said tax. Stille then commenced an action against the city to recover compensation for said grading. Held, that Stille had a right to insist that the tax levied on his wife's property, as well as on the other property, should be collected and paid to him, and therefore that, as the city failed to provide any means for collecting said tax, said action may be maintained as well for the grading done in front of his wife's property as for that done in front of other property.

[2. Homestead: Interest of Husband or Wife. The interest of the husband in the homestead, the legal title of which is vested in the wife, is a mere right of occupancy, with a restriction on the wife's power of alienation.]

Action commenced by Stille, in March, 1869, to recover from the city $20,229.35, with 7 per cent. interest thereon from the twenty-third of May, 1866. In December, 1865, Stille agreed with the city to grade Fifth street, from Spruce street to Thornton street, in a certain specified manner, under the superintendence and control of the city engineer. By the same contract the city agreed to pay him 43 cents per cubic yard for the grading, and to levy a special tax therefor upon the adjoining lots and parcels of ground, as the work progressed; and it was in and by said contract further agreed that Stille should look exclusively to such special tax for his pay, if the city levied a legal tax therefor. The grading was done and accepted, and the acceptance confirmed. Certificates were issued to Stille for such grading, from time to time, as the work progressed; and the city, by ordinance passed September 4, 1866, levied a special tax on certain lots and pieces of ground to pay said sum of $20,229.35, that sum having been ascertained as the cost, under the contract, of the work done; and on the second of November, 1866, the city treasurer sold the lots or parcels of land against which such certificates were issued, *540 and said special taxes remained unpaid; *said sale being made under the supposed authority of ordinance No. 90, passed June 24, 1863, which was the only ordinance by which the city pretended to authorize a sale of lots and lands for such unpaid special taxes. This ordinance No. 90, so far as it pretended to authorize such sale, was held void in Paine v. Spratley, 5 Kan. *525; City of Leavenworth v. Laing, 6 Kan. *274; and City of Leavenworth v. Mills, Id. *288.

To plaintiff's petition the city answered, setting up several defenses, of which those material here are as follows: First, plaintiff performed a part of the work, but did not perform all of said work; second, that plaintiff had assigned and transferred to A. A. Higinbotham all the certificates issued to him for such grading, except those issued against his own and his wife's property, and as to such assigned certificates plaintiff was not the real party in interest; third, that for the distance of more than half a mile along the west side of said Fifth street plaintiff had graded the abutting lots to the width of thirty feet, leaving an equal width of said street along the east side thereof ungraded; fourth, that plaintiff had fraudulently procured a much larger estimate of work completed than he had performed, and for such excess had fraudulently procured certificates to be issued to him, which certificates were void. Another of the defenses set up in the answer is as follows: "And for a further defense the defendant states that at the time of the grading of said Fifth street mentioned in said petition, and for a long time prior thereto, the plaintiff and his wife, Elizabeth M. Stille, were the owners and resided upon lots 13, 14, 15, and 16, of Clark's addition of outlots, containing together twenty acres, more or less, said lots fronting on said Fifth street, and the east half of them being liable for the special tax for grading said Fifth street; that said property was prior to said grading aforesaid of but little value except as farming land, as it was inaccessible from the business portion of the city except by way of Fifth avenue and rear of 'Seigle Garden,' so called, some two miles or more, in a roundabout way; that the said plaintiff, by petition and false representations to the city council, and against the protest of a large majority of *541 the property owners who were liable of *being taxed for the grading of said Fifth street from Spruce street to Thornton street, induced the city council to order the grading of said Fifth street, as last aforesaid, a distance of three-fourths of a mile beyond where there were any persons residing on or near said Fifth street, except one or two families besides this plaintiff, and where more than four-fifths of the grading and filling on said street was done, and whereby this defendant was obliged to expend large sums of money in the building of bridges and the construction of sewers to accommodate said plaintiff. And defendant further says that while the legal title of a portion of said above-mentioned lots 14, 15, and 16 was, at the time the plaintiff performed the work above described, and for which this suit is brought, in said Elizabeth M. Stille, wife of the plaintiff, yet, in truth and in fact, the lots above mentioned were the property of the plaintiff, and bought with his money. And for a further defense, defendant says that the said plaintiff, as said contractor, received and accepted the certificates issued for doing all of said work, including those issued to him against the lots and tracts of land above mentioned in Clark's outlots owned by himself; and also those owned by his wife, Elizabeth M. Stille, for whom he acted as agent,—in full and complete satisfaction for the work done by him as aforesaid in grading said Fifth street, from Spruce street to Thornton street."

A demurrer was interposed by plaintiff to these two defenses, and the demurrer was sustained. The action was tried at the November term, 1869, of the district court. The district judge gave his opinion in writing. The following are the material parts of such opinion:

"The conclusions I have reached in this case are that the court must dispose of the case under an instruction to the jury to find a special verdict. * * * Really, there is but one new point in this case. All the other points raised, as far as I recollect, have been raised in other cases of a similar nature, and determined uniformly by this court in a certain way. This new question is as to the liability of the city to the contractor, where the tax is legal. In this case, according to the uniform ruling of this court, the evidence shows that the city did not levy a legal tax.

"The evidence shows that an ordinance was passed declaring *542 the improvements of Fifth street to be necessary, and *ordering the work to be done; that the city engineer totally failed to do his duty as prescribed by the ordinance in such case. The ordinance says he shall forthwith, after the passage of any ordinance declaring it necessary for the work to be done, make a plat of the street to be improved, together with the adjacent property liable to be taxed, and he shall prepare plans and specifications for doing the same. The ordinance contemplated that this shall be done before the city advertises for bids. The evidence shows that the engineer wholly failed to comply with the ordinance. Indeed, he made no effort to discharge that duty; and, so far as there have been cases before me, the evidence invariably shows that the city engineer has paid no attention to the ordinances requiring him to do that. So, it seems to me, if the city keeps an engineer in its employ who, as I might say, willfully disregards his express duty, the city ought to be held responsible for willful negligence in keeping such an officer in its employ. * * * It is one of the principal objects in having a plat and plans and specifications prepared and on file in the engineer's office that bidders may bid intelligently, so they may know what amount of earth is to be excavated. Prices for work vary very much, according to circumstances, and a person could not probably bid in the work unless he had some knowledge before him. This requirement is for the interest of the property owners, and their benefit, and the court ought to see that that duty is performed.

"The charter contemplates that the clerk shall not advertise for bids until those plans and specifications are prepared; yet the city clerk advertises the next morning in the newspapers that bids will be received until a certain day. And he does that without taking the trouble to find out whether there are plans or specifications on file or not. In all cases the advertisement says the work is to be done in accordance with plans and specifications on file in the engineer's office, when the city clerk could have found out by stepping in the next door that there were no such plans and specifications on file. It seems to me, if I would be governed by the invariable rule, and the principles followed by courts in determining the validity of tax titles and taxes, the departure from the prescribed mode would be sufficient to invalidate the tax. It is not form without substance; it has in it something of substance. * * *

*543 "The city may levy this tax in either of three ways: It *may levy it on the property, according to its value, without regard to improvements; or according to its value generally, taking into consideration its condition, improved or otherwise; or it may levy it on the property according to its area. I think there can be no question but two of these modes are constitutional. * * *

"Here the power to improve streets is conferred on the city council. The particular mode in which that power shall be exercised is not prescribed or regulated by the statute, but is left to the city authorities. Then there is a provision in our city charter, in substance, that in no event shall the city be liable for any work or improvements done under the provisions of this act, but that the contractor shall look exclusively to the special tax for pay, provided the city shall levy a legal tax. What is a reasonable interpretation of this clause? What is the evident meaning of the language of that proviso? It seems to me it is equivalent to saying, if the city levies a legal tax, the contractor shall look to it for his pay; if they do not, the city shall be liable.

"Counsel have admitted to the court that they have failed to sustain the various charges of fraud and collusion alleged against the plaintiff. It seems to me it cannot be held that the taking of these tax warrants or certificates of sale amount to a satisfaction of his claim against the city, for the reason that these certificates are void. The proof shows that the plaintiff was not and is not the owner of the lots described in those certificates to which I have alluded, and in which the assessments undertaken to be levied have not been paid; so the evidence fails to show he sustained any such relation to the property that he was under any obligation to pay it. The proof shows the property belonged either to Levi Clark or plaintiff's wife; and, in either case, he would have the right to recover. The mere fact that the property belonged to his wife would not prevent his recovering from the city. I shall therefore instruct the jury to find for the plaintiff, and assess his damages at thirty-three hundred dollars."

The jury, in accordance with said instructions, returned a verdict in favor of Stille for $3,300.

*544 **H. Miles Moore* and E. Stillings, for plaintiff in error.

Stille in his petition alleges against the city as grounds for a recovery that the city failed to have plats made, and appraisement, etc., and to levy a legal tax. There was no allegation in the petition of any failure to make sale. The tax was levied in the language of the law, so that if the facts alleged why the tax was not legal fail to show such to be the case, we suppose the petition did not even state a cause of action. As we understand the case made by the petition, the reasons there given why plaintiff should recover have all been decided in the case of City of Leavenworth v. Mills, 6 Kan. *288, and that according to that decision the tax in this case was a legal tax. The further question decided in that case, as to whether the city ordinance authorized the sale, has not been made in this case. If the petition did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, of course the several demurrers to the answer should have been overruled.

Stille had sold all the tax warrants except those affecting his own or his wife's property. The evidence shows that he was in possession of the property, claiming it as his own, and that he took this contract for the purpose of enabling himself to pay the taxes on this property by doing the work himself; and after thus presenting himself before the city council as the owner of this property, and getting the contract, and collecting or selling, and having collected by others, the taxes on all other property, except that of which he was possessed, he sued the city to collect this tax, and the court instructed the jury to find for the plaintiff. We submit that it was the duty of Stille to pay the taxes, and that any purchase by him of the land was in fact a payment. If this be true, the question should have gone to the jury whether the transaction of striking this property off to Stille (at the city treasurer's tax sale for said special taxes) was not in fact a payment. If it was incumbent on him to pay as well as receive the amount, the debt was of course satisfied when made. That it *545 was his duty to pay those *taxes, we refer to Cooley v. Waterman, 16 Mich. 366; Bernal v. Lynch, 36 Cal. 136; Barrett v. Amerein, Id. 322; Bassett v. Welch, 22 Wis. 175; Douglas v. Dangerfield, 10 Ohio, 152; Voris v. Thomas, 12 Ill. 442; Gardiner v. Gerrish, 23 Me. 46; Warren v. Fish, 7 Minn. 432, (Gil. 347.) And in such a case a purchase by him would be simply void, even if it had been admitted to be his wife's property; but this was a question on which there was evidence both ways, and one which it was proper that a jury should decide.

The instructions of the court to the jury show clearly the grounds of its decision, and, with the exceptions of two tax warrants, and the mixed question of possession and ownership of the land on which this tax had been levied, present the questions in the case as they arose on the evidence. The decision so made, and the reasons for it, we understand to be overruled in the Case of Mills, above referred to. The case itself presents to the court one of the extreme cases of human depravity which it so often becomes the duty of courts and lawyers to witness. Stille had urged the city to do this work, and, after receiving the benefit of it in the greatly enhanced value of his property, and after directly and indirectly collecting $18,000 off the parties who resisted the doing of this work because it was a burden, and no benefit to them, he brings this suit to recover of the city his share of the tax, and thereby compel those of whom he has already collected to contribute to pay his share of this improvement, made for his particular benefit more than that of any other person.

Clough & Wheat, for defendant in error.

We claim that Stille was, as matter of law, entitled to the verdict returned,—not only to that verdict, but to one much larger in amount. If the assessment of special taxes to pay for the grading of Fifth street is illegal, the judgment in favor of Stille against the city should be affirmed, it being immaterial whether the right to such judgment is founded on the contract to pay, or by force of the proviso in section 11, p. 129, Laws 1864, the work having been done, and *546 no legal tax levied with provision to collect the same; or, as a matter entirely independent of the contract, because Stille did work for the city, which it accepted, and by its ordinance admitted the value of. Kearney v. City of Covington, 1 Metc. (Ky.) 339; Maher v. City of Chicago, 38 Ill. 264; City of Louisville v. Hyatt, 5 B. Mon. 199; Phillips v. City of Hudson, 31 N. J. 143; Payne v. Mayor of Brecon, 3 Hurl. & N. 572; Chapman v. City of Brooklyn, 40 N. Y. 372; Cumming v. Mayor of Brooklyn, 11 Paige, 596; Baldwin v. City of Oswego, 41* N. Y. 132, 136; Corbin v. City of Davenport, 9 Iowa, 239; Fisher v. City of St. Louis, 44 Mo. 482.

We suppose that it is not material to inquire whether Stille's right of action for any of the tax levied was transferred to A. A. Higginbotham by the contract between him and Stille, because the tax apportioned against the lots 13, 14, 15, and 16, in Clark's addition of outlots, and lots 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16, in Henry's addition, (mentioned in and excepted from the last-mentioned contract,) as required by section 5, p. 127, Laws 1864, as shown by the city engineer's estimate, amounted to the sum of $4,003.54, which, less such sum, if any, as should be deducted therefrom, would amount to more than the sum of said verdict as rendered. It was the general duty of the city and its officers to determine where Fifth street was located; and under the contract, as well as by the requirements of law, it was the duty of the city and its officers to determine when and how, and in what manner, it would have Fifth street graded. Stille did the work under the directions of the officers of the city, where the city and its officers claimed the street was. And the city having induced him to spend his time, labor, and money in grading the street where it directed him to, could not afterwards be heard to say he did not do his grading in the street. City of Leavenworth v. Laing, 6 Kan. *274; Sleeper v. Bullen, 6 Kan. *300; Mayor v. Sheffield, 4 Wall. 189; Kearney v. City of Covington, 1 Metc. (Ky.) 339.

If it shall be claimed that Stille had not performed the conditions and requirements of the contract on his part, then we refer to section 10, p. 129, Laws 1864, from which we see that the engineer's acceptances aforesaid, and the confirmations thereof by the city council, were final and conclusive evidence that the (work) improvement was done by Stille in accordance with the terms of the contract; and that, because of the acceptances and confirmation, no court *547 could, in any case, inquire *into the question whether the improvement so accepted was done in accordance with the terms of the contract or not. Porter v. Purdy, 29 N. Y. 106; Evansville R. Co. v. City of Evansville, 15 Ind. 419, 423; Columbia B. L. Co. v. Meier, 39 Mo. 53; City of Camden v. Mulford, 26 N. J. Law, 49; County of Knox v. Aspinwall, 21 How. 539.

Of course, if Stille was, as a matter of law, entitled to a verdict for as much as $3,300, it is entirely immaterial what defenses, if any, existed against the whole, or any part of the remainder, of the claim by him set forth in his petition. Of course, it was competent for Elizabeth, the wife of Stille, to own lots. And Stille did not pretend to do, and could not himself do, any act which would prejudice her in any matter connected with the special tax, any more than though she had not been his wife. Section 17, p. 699, Comp. Laws; Moore v. Wade, 8 Kan. *380; Going v. Orns, Id. *85; Gatling v. Rodman, 6 Ind. 292; Maher v. City of Chicago, 38 Ill. 266. The city agreed with Stille to levy a legal tax, and provide means for enforcing and collecting the same, against all the lots and pieces of ground within the proper distance, (each tract its proper share,) and it was not material to the effect of that contract whether his wife owned a portion of the same or not.

The pretended sale certificates were void. Among other reasons, because the city had not, after the passage of the act of 1864, authorized a sale of the lots; and such certificates of sale being void, it was not, even as to such of the lots as had been illegally sold, necessary to have produced the sale certificates. City of Leavenworth v. Laing, 6 Kan. *274; Fisher v. City of St. Louis, 44 Mo. 482.

VALENTINE, J. This was an action, brought by D. P. Stille, against the city of Leavenworth, for services rendered by him in grading a certain street. The contract was made, and work done, under chapter 69, Laws 1864, p. 124, §§ 3-11. Nearly every substantial question involved in this case has been decided by this court in the case of Leavenworth City v. Mills, 6 Kan. *288. Indeed, every substantial question except one has been decided either in that case, *548 or in the cases of Leavenworth City v. Laing, 6 Kan. *274, and Sleeper v. Bullen, 6 Kan. *300. That question is whether Stille can recover for grading done by him in front of his wife's property, occupied by himself and wife as a homestead. This is the only question we shall discuss; and, indeed, it would seem that this question should need but little or no discussion; for in this state husband and wife have the power and the right to own property separate from and independent of each other, and each may contract and be contracted with, sue and be sued, with reference to his or her separate property, in the same manner, to the same extent, and with like effect, as though they were not married, except that they must join in the conveyance of their real estate, whether held separately or jointly. It is true, the husband has some interests in his wife's real estate which they occupy as a homestead, and that no other person has any such interest; but such interest is merely a right of occupancy, with a restriction upon the wife's power to alienate the property. It is no estate. The whole estate is vested in the wife, and at her death it descends to her heirs, or, if alienated before death, the consideration therefor belongs to her. See Jenness v. Cutler, 12 Kan. *515 et seq. Therefore everything that benefits such real estate is really a benefit to the wife, and all taxes that may be levied thereon are really taxes against the wife. And as the husband and wife have, or may have, separate interests in this state, we can see no good reason why the city could not levy taxes on the real estate of the wife (although it be occupied as a homestead) to pay the husband for grading a street in front of such real estate; nor can we see any good reason why the husband may not, if he chooses, insist upon such a thing being done. The question in such a case is, simply, whether the husband or the wife shall own and control the money due for the grading,—whether the money shall be collected from the wife and paid to the husband, or whether the wife shall be allowed to retain the money. In this state, where husbands and wives are allowed to hold separate property and carry on separate business, we see no good reason why said money may not be *549 collected from the wife *and paid to the husband. If the husband should sue some person on a promissory note, no one would claim that such person could plead in set-off a promissory note against the wife. As we have before said, the husband has some interest in the real estate of the wife occupied by themselves as a homestead, but the interest is not such as renders the husband individually liable for any taxes that may be imposed thereon. Therefore, when the husband sues the city for a debt due to himself individually, the city cannot plead in set-off taxes due on the real estate of the wife, although such real estate be occupied as a homestead by the husband and wife.

There are some other questions suggested. Stille petitioned, along with others, for the grading to be done. He sometimes, in speaking of said real estate, called it his. It is claimed that he did not do the full amount of the grading that he agreed to do, and that some of it was not in the street; but it was done where the city engineer instructed that it should be done, and just as the city engineer instructed that it should be done; and the city engineer afterwards inspected and accepted the work, and made a report thereof to the city council, and the city council regularly confirmed the engineer's report, and levied a tax to pay for the grading. As to the effect of such confirmation, see Laws 1864, p. 128, § 10. But the city never provided any means for the collection of said tax. It is true, the city treasurer sold some of the property on said street to pay said tax, but the sale was unauthorized and void. Stille sold and assigned a large portion of his claim against the city for grading; but deducting that from his claim, and deducting all that Stille has ever received or been paid on his claim by any person or from any source, and deducting everything else that ought to be deducted, and still he ought to recover at least the amount allowed him by the court below, provided, however, that he is entitled to recover anything. We do not choose to discuss this case in its moral aspect; for, whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover or not in a strictly moral point of view, we think he is legally entitled to recover.

The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

Error from Allen district court.

The action below was by Swartz as plaintiff, on a promissory note and indorsements. The note is as follows:

"$987.

HUMBOLDT, KAN., June 8, 1871.

"One day after date I promise to pay to the order of Redfield & Co. nine hundred and eighty-seven dollars, with interest thereon at 12 per cent. per annum, value received in labor and material furnished in building the Landreth Hotel. J. L. LANDRETH."

Redfield & Co. was a firm composed of J. C. Redfield, W. A. Redfield, and E. F. Wright. On the tenth of June, 1871, said note was indorsed as follows: "Pay to the order of E. F. Wright. REDFIELD & Co." February 7, 1872, an action was commenced on said note, and to foreclose a mechanic's lien on the Landreth Hotel, by J. C. Redfield, W. A. Redfield, and E. F. Wright, Partners, etc., Plaintiffs, against J. L. Landreth, Sophia L. Fussman, and Henry Nagle, Defendants. Fussman and Nagle were joined as subsequent incumbrancers. While this action was pending another action was brought by Swartz, as plaintiff, against said Landreth and several others, as defendants, to foreclose a mortgage on said Landreth Hotel, given by Landreth to Swartz to secure certain notes held by him. In the last-mentioned action said Redfield & Co. were joined with Landreth as defendants, and they filed their separate answer, setting up the same facts as alleged by them in their action to foreclose said mechanic's lien, claiming a prior lien on said mortgaged premises to the amount of said note so given to and held by them. While these two actions were so pending, said Wright indorsed said note to Swartz, as follows: "Pay to order of D. G. Swartz. E. F. WRIGHT." And at the same time Wright executed and delivered to Swartz the following paper, to-wit:

"In consideration of the sum of $987, in hand paid me by David G. Swartz, of Lancaster, Penn., I hereby guaranty to him, said David G. Swartz, that the claim of Redfield & Co. v. The Landreth Hotel, in Humboldt, Kan., is just, and in the amount of $987, as per promissory note dated at Humboldt, Kansas, June 8, 1871, signed by J. L. Landreth, and that there is no legal set-off or defense against the same.

"Witness my hand this tenth day of July, 1872.

"E. F. WRIGHT."

Both of said actions were, at the July term, 1872, of the district court, referred to L. W. K. and N. F. A. for trial. The record (in this case) does not show what disposition was made of the action of Redfield & Co. v. Landreth and others, but one of the referees testifies that "it was dismissed by Redfield & Co." after said note had been transferred to Swartz. Another witness testifies that he was present when Wright indorsed the note and executed the guaranty to Swartz, as above, and that it was then agreed by Swartz and Wright "that said note, being then in suit as the property and claim of Redfield & Co., should be prosecuted to final judgment under the title in which it was instituted." The record shows that the mortgage foreclosure case of Swartz v. Landreth, Redfield & Co. and others was tried before said referees in November, 1872; that before the trial Landreth deceased, and Watson Stewart, as administrator of his estate, had been substituted as a defendant; that the referees in that case, and with respect to the answer and said claim of Redfield & Co., find as facts "that, after the making and delivering of said note as aforesaid, the said note was, by writing on the back thereof, *552 made payable to the order of E. F. Wright, and also, by *writing on the back thereof, the said note was made payable to the order of D. G. Swartz;" and, as conclusion of law, said referees find "that they, the said Redfield & Co., are not the legal owners or holders of said note so given by Landreth as aforesaid, and that they are not entitled to a personal judgment for the amount of money specified in said note, nor for any sum whatever." The referees made their report to the district court, and said report was confirmed November 18, 1872. This action was commenced by Swartz on the sixteenth of January, 1873. He made Stewart, (as administrator of Landreth,) J. C. Redfield, W. A. Redfield, and Moses Neal (as administrator of E. F. Wright, deceased) defendants. Trial was had at the March term, 1873, of the district court. Findings and judgment in favor of Swartz against Stewart, as Landreth's administrator, for the amount of said note, ($987 and interest,) and against Swartz, and in favor of the other defendants, for costs. From this last judgment Swartz appeals, and brings the case here on error.

The finding of facts is insufficient, one of the material facts proven not having been found upon. The testimony in the record shows that, at the date of the transfer of the note sued on, Landreth, the maker of the note, was already dead; for Redfield & Co. at the date of said transfer were prosecuting their claim on said note before referees in an action wherein said Landreth's administrator was defendant. The present action was brought January 16, 1873, within less than one year from Landreth's death, which occurred some time subsequent to February 8, 1872; at which date summons was served upon him in the action brought against him by Redfield & Co., on the note now sued on by plaintiff. Therefore the court should have made an additional finding that the assignment of the note by defendants, and the institution of this suit, took place within less than one year after Landreth's death. The mercantile law, like the common law, continues in force in this state only so far as it has *553 not been *abrogated by statute; and this omitted finding brings this case within our statutory provisions respecting executors and administrators, by which demand and notice are not required. Farnum v. Fowle, 12 Mass. 91; Oriental Bank v. Blake, 32 Pick. 206; Bell v. Norwood, 10 La. 485; Davis v. Francisco, 11 Mo. 575; 1 Pars. Notes, 364. The evidence also shows that the defendants caused or procured the plaintiff to continue the prosecution of the claim in the name of the defendants; and the court should have found that this action of the defendants, in causing said claim to be prosecuted after transfer, was a waiver of right to demand and notice.

Should the court decline to examine the evidence to see whether or not the proper findings of fact were made, if the findings of facts be correct, why should a party be compelled to apply for a new trial upon the facts? Why should the remedy reach further than the error complained of? Indiana & I. R. Co. v. Williams, 22 Ind. 198.

The conclusions of law are not supported by the findings of facts. We recognize the general rule that, in case of transfer of negotiable promissory notes after maturity, the indorser is entitled to demand upon the maker, and notice within reasonable time; and that, so far as demand and notice are concerned, the parties stand upon the same footing as in case of parties to inland bills of exchange payable on demand. But we say the facts found show the defendants were not entitled to notice. 1 Pars. Notes, 535. At the date of the transfer of this note the defendants were, and for six months had been, attempting to collect this same note by suit against the maker. The continuance of this litigation was due to one or the other of two causes: either the maker of the note was unable to pay the note, or he was unwilling; and the defendants, at the time of indorsing the note, well knew that the maker was unable or unwilling to pay the note. How, then, can it be claimed they had reasonable grounds for believing the note would be paid? Where the fund drawn on is already in *554 litigation, (at date of indorsement,) demand and notice are *unnecessary to charge the indorser. 1 Pars. Notes, 534; Benoist v. Creditors, 18 La. 522. The remarks of the court in the latter case may well be applied to the case at bar: "This [a claim in litigation] was, indeed, a poor prospect for the collection of a bill of exchange, and almost equal to the drawees having no funds in their hands belonging to the drawers."

The pendency of a suit of defendants against the maker of the note, and the continuation of said suit in the name of the defendants, was a continuing demand and a continuing refusal; and all the defendants had full knowledge of such demand and refusal. Payment was demanded by the suit brought by defendants against the maker of the note prior to its transfer, (February 7, 1872,) and payment was again demanded when Redfield & Co. appeared before the referees, and prosecuted their claim upon the note. The defendants had full notice, for they themselves prosecuted the claims, and such demand and notice inured to the plaintiff. Trowbridge v. Baker, 1 Cow. 252; Lee v. Clark, 1 Hill, 57.

J. B. F. Cates, for defendants in error.

The only question presented by the record is as to whether demand and notice of non-payment was necessary to fix the liability of the defendants in error upon the note sued on. The contract of an indorser upon a note or bill is conditional, upon non-payment by the principal debtor after due presentment and notice. Story, Prom. Notes, §§ 133, 135; Byles, Bills, 258, 282; Gen. St. 115, §§ 6, 7. A bill or note indorsed after dishonor is in the nature of a new bill payable on demand, and to hold an indorser thereon, the same strictness as to demand and notice is required as in cases of indorsement before due. Colt v. Barnard, 18 Pick. 260; Keith v. Jones, 9 Johns. 121; Dwight v. Emerson, 2 N. H. 159; Greely v. Hunt, 21 Me. 455; 3 Hunt, 171; Lockwood v. Crawford, 18 Conn. 361; Allwood v. Haseldon, 2 Bailey, 457; Branch Bank v. Gaffney, 9 Ala. 153; Beebe v. Brooks, 12 Cal. 308; McKinney v. Crawford, 8 Serg. & R. 357.

It is claimed that there was demand and notice in the case of *555 the note sued on; that a knowledge on the part of the defendants that suit was being prosecuted on said note by this plaintiff against the principal debtor was waiver of further demand and notice. Suppose this to be proper demand, the suit was a continuing demand, and not complete until the termination of such suit. The notice required by the law-merchant is not notice of demand alone, but notice of non-payment after demand, which in this case would have been after the action thereon was terminated. The defendants had no notice that judgment was not obtained thereon, and satisfied by execution, until the bringing of this action, so far as the record shows. Neither was there a motion for new trial in the court below.

BREWER, J. The material facts of this case are as follows: On the eighth of June, 1871, J. L. Landreth executed his note, due in one day after date, to Redfield & Co. Thereafter Redfield & Co. indorsed to E. F. Wright, one of the partners in the firm of Redfield & Co., and on July 10, 1872, Wright indorsed it to the plaintiff. At the time of the indorsement to plaintiff, and for months prior, Redfield & Co. were prosecuting their claim on said note against the maker. This action (or their said claim) was terminated adversely to them on the eighteenth of November, 1872, on the ground, as appears from the report of the referees, that they had no interest in the claim. On the sixteenth of January, 1873, this action was instituted by plaintiff, seeking to charge both the maker and the indorsers. No proof was made of demand by the plaintiff of payment from the maker or notice to the indorsers. Were the latter liable? It is conceded that a bill or note indorsed after maturity is in the nature of a new bill, payable on demand, and that, to hold an indorser thereon, the same strictness as to demand and notice is required as in the case of the drawer of an ordinary inland bill. But it is insisted that upon the facts shown the indorsers were not entitled to notice; that the rule is that if the drawer had not at the time reasonable grounds to *556 expect that the bill would be honored, he is not *entitled to notice; and that as at the time of the indorsement the indorsers were vainly attempting to collect the note by suit, they had no reasonable grounds to expect that the maker would pay it to the indorser. We are inclined to think that the facts as stated do not make an exception to the ordinary rule, and that no demand and notice having been shown the indorsers were not liable.

The principle is thus stated in 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 61: "The whole principle of exception, then, appears to be that where the non-acceptance or non-payment of the bill is caused by the fraudulent act of the drawer or indorser,—or, in other words, where the drawing or issuing of the bill, or the leaving it to be presented, is a fraud in any party liable on the bill,—such fraudulent party is not entitled to notice, and it is believed that there are no other exceptions to the general rule requiring demand and notice. In some of the cases the rule is stated to be that notice is excused wherever the drawer or indorser could not possibly be injured by the want of it, (Commercial Bank of Albany v. Hughes, 17 Wend. 94;) but, practically, that amounts to the same thing; for there is always in law a possibility of being injured by the want of notice, and the law will never refuse to take notice of that possibility, except in case of a fraudulent drawer or indorser. The well-settled principle that bankruptcy, or notorious insolvency of the drawer, will not excuse notice; that having actual knowledge will not excuse regular legal notice; and that the holder neglecting to give legal notice is not permitted to show that no injury has in fact been sustained,—all of which points are settled beyond the possibility of question,—clearly show that the application of the fixed rule as to notice is no longer affected by what may once have been the reason for it."

In the first volume of Parsons on Notes and Bills, on page 535, the rule is differently stated, and in these words: "The true test, in our opinion, in each case, is this: Had the drawer, under the circumstances of the case, a right to draw? This depends upon the fact whether he had a reasonable ground to expect that the bill would be honored or not. If he had such reason to expect it to be hon-*557 ored, he is *entitled to a regular presentment and notice, and refusal to accept or pay; and if not so entitled, he cannot complain either for negligence in presenting and in forwarding notice, or for entire neglect to do either. The reasonable grounds required by law are not such as would excite an idle hope, a wild expectation, or a remote probability that the bill might be honored, but such as create a full expectation and a strong probability of its payment,—such, indeed, as would induce a merchant of common prudence and ordinary regard for his commercial credit to draw a like bill."

Now, there was certainly no fraud in the indorsement of this note. It was a valid instrument,—a legal promise to pay. No suggestion is made of anything tending to impeach it. Being a contract in writing, it, under our statutes, imported a consideration, (Gen. St. 183, § 7,) and there is nothing to raise a suspicion that full value was not given for it. To transfer a valid obligation, given for value, involves nothing of fraud. If it be regarded as a new bill, it is a draft on funds, and an accepted draft at that. If it be said that there was no reasonable grounds to expect payment, no more is there when the maker or acceptor is notoriously insolvent; yet demand and notice in such a case are unquestionably necessary. Many of the most eminent English judges have expressed regrets that there was ever any exception made to the rule of demand and notice to charge a drawer or indorser, and the current of authority tends to limit rather than extend the cases of exception. The indorsement effectuates two things: it transfers the title, and creates a conditional liability. The first is often, in the contemplation of the parties at the time of the transfer, the only thing sought; and if afterwards recourse is sought on the indorser, he may well insist on an exact compliance with all the steps necessary to change the conditional to an absolute liability. See, further, on this subject, Byles, Bills, pp. 232, 234, and notes; Story, Prom. Notes, § 367; 3 Kent. Comm. marginal page 110, and note. In this last citation the author says:

*558 “Nor does knowledge in the indorser, when he indorsed the paper, of the insolvency of the maker of the note or drawer *of the bill, do away the necessity of notice in order to charge him.”

The judgment will be affirmed.

JAMES DE LONG and another v. JONATHAN STAHL.<sup>1</sup>

July Term, 1874.

1. Referees: Limit of Powers: Reports. The powers of a referee are limited by the order appointing him, and when in such order he is directed to make his report within a certain time, and such time passes without any report, his powers are at an end, and a report thereafter is a mere volunteer report, and without validity.

<sup>1</sup> Review of report, Murray v. Kelley, 23 Kan. 666; mutual accounts, Galbraith v. McCormick, 23 Kan. 706; construction of report, Griffiths v. Reimert, 24 Kan. 226; conclusiveness of findings, Campbell v. Phillips, 28 Kan. 753; Walker v. Eagle Works, 8 Kan. 267, and cases cited; when motion to set aside is made too late, Grayson v. Hinkle, 29 Kan. 277; power of referee, Arn v. Coleman, 11 Kan. *461; what report must state, Oaks v. Jones, 11 Kan. *443; presumption, Simpson v. Woodward, 5 Kan. 347; oral submission—effect, Bulsom v. Lamptman, 1 Kan. *324; waiver of errors, Lannan v. Clavin, 3 Kan. *18; not a final order, Savage v. Challiss, 4 Kan. *319; setting aside report, Owen v. Owen, 9 Kan. 64.

2. ———. It is error for the court to confirm any such volunteer report.
3. ———: Completing Report: Notice: Bills of Exception. Trial courts should, by general rule, or in each order of reference, require notice to be given by the referee of the completion of his report to each party, a reasonable time before its filing, in order to give opportunity for the preparation and presentation of a bill of exceptions.

Error from Montgomery district court.

Action by Stahl against De Long, as mayor of the city of Independence, and one William Mott, to set aside a certain deed executed by De Long, as mayor, to said Mott. The report of the referee, G. C., was in favor of Stahl, and the district court, at the August term, 1873, confirmed said report, and gave judgment thereon in favor of Stahl, and De Long and Mott bring the case here on error.

Nathan Cree, for plaintiffs in error.

The court below erred in overruling defendant's motion to set *559 aside the report and reinstate the case for trial. We *maintain that the report of the referee, being made after the time fixed by the order, was a nullity, the authority of the referee having expired. The argument of the case before the referee was closed on the twenty-fifth of March. The April term of our court commenced on Monday, the 7th, thus giving the referee ample time to make his report according to the directions of the order of reference. Hanner
v. Coffin, 1 Or. 99; Townsend v. Glen's Falls Ins. Co., 10 Abb. Pr.
 (N. S.) 277; Ryan v. Dougherty, 30 Cal. 218; Francis v. Ames, 14
 Ind. 251; Steel v. Steel, 1 Nev. 27; Smith v. Warner, 14 Mich. 152;
Rhodes v. Bairn, 16 Ohio St. 573; Potter v. Sterrett, 24 Pa. St. 411;
Small v. Thurlow, 37 Me. 504; Denman v. Bayless, 22 Ill. 300. It has been expressly decided that "when a rule of reference requires a report within a limited time, power ends at expiration of that time."
Brower v. Kingsley, 1 Johns. Cas. 334; White v. Puryear, 10 Yerg.
 441.

There can be no valid decision unless notice be given. Morse, Arb. 118. By reference to the affidavits, it will be observed that defendants had no notice of the final decision of the referee, or of its character. This voids the report, for it utterly precluded a motion for new trial or review. Exceptions must be taken, or there can be no motion for a new trial. Branger v. Chevalier, 9 Cal. 353; Cappe
v. Brizzolara, 19 Cal. 609. Defendants expected notice of the decision, and noted many exceptions to the rulings of the referee on the trial. The Code, §§ 293, 295, fixes the method of trial before the referee, and the manner in which his decision is to be made.
 The trial is to be conducted in the same manner as before the court, and exceptions to "any order or decision" made in the case must be signed and delivered with their report. Phelps v. Peabody, 7 Cal.
 50; Dinsmore v. Smith, 17 Wis. 20. The referee can sign no exceptions after he files his report. He is then functus officio. This has repeatedly been determined. Voorhis v. Voorhis, 50 Barb. 119; Indiana Cent. Ry. Co. v. Bradley, 7 Ind. 49; Niles v. Price, 23 How. Pr. 473; Morse, Arb. & A. 226. It follows that if a report is filed without exceptions, a motion for a new trial must prove nugatory. Exceptions must appear of record or it will be presumed that none were made. Sutherland v. Rose, 47 Barb. 144. No tribunal of review will consider a decision unless it be excepted to, or give a new trial except on objections distinctly made on the trial. As *560 plaintiff below claimed the right to *have judgment entered on the report of the referee, it only remained for defendants to obtain an order against it, and to ask for the reinstatement of the case for trial. As the failure to allow us to except entirely cut off our rights, it placed the decision of the referee on the same footing as any other judicial act performed without notice; that is, rendered it void. People v. Bacon, 18 Mich. 247; Kitsmiller v. Kitchen, 24 Iowa, 163; Blackw. Tax Titles, 213. Our mere right to except implied that we should have notice. Norton v. McLeary, 8 Ohio St. 210; Redman v. Gulnac, 5 Cal. 148. When a case is referred to arbitrators, notice of the time and place of meeting must be given, or the award is void.

"The findings of fact by a referee have equal force with the findings of fact by a court, or the special verdict of a jury," (Walker v. Eagle Works Manuf'g Co., 8 Kan. *397;) and no exception is taken to the report of the referee that his findings of fact are "not sustained by sufficient evidence," (Code, § 306.) By what rule or law of judicial procedure is the plaintiff in error enabled to present the questions raised in this case for consideration on appeal? It appears from the record that the referee filed his report with the clerk of the district court, May 1, 1873, during the term of the court. It further appears that defendant in error filed his motion for judgment on the report of the referee on the same day. It also appears that plaintiff in error did not move against the report of the referee until the fourteenth of August, 1873, when he files his motion for the first time, and objects to the rendition of and entry of any judgment on the report of the referee. The Code, §§ 306, 308, 309, provides how and where a party may move against "a verdict of the jury, report of a referee, or a decision by the court," and the grounds on which such motion must be based. "The application must be made at the term the verdict, report, or decision is rendered," (section 308,) and "shall be within three days after the verdict or decision was rendered." And "the application must be by motion, upon written grounds filed at the time of making the motion." Section 309. It is not pre- *561 tended that plaintiff in error has complied with either or any of these provisions. The only act of plaintiff in error prior to the filing of his written motion at the next term was an objection against the entry of the judgment on the journal of the court proceedings.

The entry of judgment is a mere clerical act of the clerk. "The report of the referee, upon the whole issue, stands as the decision of the court, and judgment may be entered thereon in the same manner as if the action had been tried by the court," (Civil Code, § 293;) and "judgment is entered upon the report of a referee as a matter of course, and the only mode of taking advantage of it is by moving to set it aside as on motion for a new trial," (3 Estee, Pl. & Pr. 491, § 47.)

Motion for a new trial must be made at the term at which the verdict was rendered. Odell v. Sargent, 3 Kan. *80. Application at the next term after the verdict must be by petition. Code, § 688. Motion to set aside the report is analogous to a motion for a new trial, may be made in like cases, and is governed by the same rules. Wait, N. Y. Code, 501, note d. The decision of a referee to whom all the issues are referred is entitled to the same respect as a judge. Wait, 503, note i; Hancock v. Hancock, 22 N. Y. 568; 3 Estee, 490.

Plaintiffs in error complain of the action of the referee in not giving them notice of the filing of the report, and that they were thereby deprived of a right to except to the findings of fact and conclusions of law. Assuming that his exceptions must be taken and noted to the report prior to the filing of the same with the clerk of the court, still there is no foundation for this complaint against the referee, any more than there would be against a jury, for not notifying either party, in advance of the returning into court their verdict, what that verdict would be; or against the court, where a jury is waived, not advising a party or counsel what the finding would be before it was amended by the court. The proper time to move against the report of a referee is after it is made and filed in court, and not before, just as a verdict of a jury, or the finding by the court when the cause is tried *562 *by the judge. Plaintiff in error had ample opportunity to object, and save his exception on the record, to any order or decision of the referee during the progress of the trial. And it is not claimed that any exception was taken to any order or decision of the referee during the progress of the trial, from beginning to the end thereof, which the referee refused to note, give a bill of exceptions, or failed or neglected to return the same with his report to the court. The great error complained of in the court below was that the referee did not show plaintiff in error his findings of fact and conclusions of law before he filed his report with the clerk, and thereby prevented plaintiff in error from excepting, and making a bill of exceptions, to the report, assuming (as has already been said) that the exceptions to the report must be made and bill of exceptions signed to the report before it is filed with the clerk, instead of afterwards.

There being no part of the testimony in this case in the record, the findings of fact by the referee will not be considered by the court; and there is nothing presented in the record for the consideration of the court but objections which are more technical than substantial.

BREWER, J. The issues in this case were, at the December term, 1872, of the district court of Montgomery county, referred to a single referee, with instructions to report his determination ten days before the beginning of the next term. No report was filed within the time named, but one was filed on the last day of that next term. This report is dated of the day it was filed. There is nothing in it to show when the trial before the referee was completed or his decision rendered; and if you are to look at the affidavits filed on the motion to set it aside, it would appear that his decision was not made until the day before the filing. At any rate, it does not appear from the report or otherwise that the trial was completed and the decision made prior to the time fixed by the court for filing the report. A *563 motion to set it aside, *on the ground that at the time of filing the referee had no power to act, was overruled, and judgment entered on the report. In this we think the court erred. The referee is an officer whose power and duties are created by the order of the court. If he go outside the limits of that order, his acts are void. When the time within which, by the terms of the order, he must act has expired, his office has ceased, and his powers are ended. Neither party is obliged to take any further notice of the reference. Here he was ordered to make his report by a specified time. When that time had passed without the filing of a report, his powers as referee were at an end, and any further action was as though no order of reference had ever been made; nor did the confirmation of the report make valid that which was before void. The report, when filed, was no more than a volunteer report; and a court cannot by confirmation breathe life into such a document. Hanner v. Coffin, 1 Or. 99; Brower v. Kingsley, 1 Johns. Cas. 334; White v. Pivyer, 10 Yerg. 441; Ryan v. Dougherty, 30 Cal. 218; Francis v. Ames, 14 Ind. 251; Smith v. Warner, 14 Mich. 152.

Before disposing of the case we desire to notice one other matter. No exceptions were filed with this report, and several affidavits are filed to show that plaintiffs in error had no knowledge of the determination of the referee until after the filing of the report, and no opportunity to prepare and present a bill of exceptions to the referee. The statute requires the referee to sign exceptions, and return them with his report. In practice, a party does not generally like to write out exceptions and have them signed, unless the findings are against him. To do so pending the hearing works disagreeable delays. Hence a referee ought always, after the preparation of his report, to give notice thereof to the parties a sufficient time before the filing for them to prepare exceptions if desired. The writer of this opinion, when upon the bench of the First judicial district, made a general rule, requiring, in all cases of reference, five days' notice to each party before the filing of the report. It would be well for all trial

*564 courts, if *they have no general rule applicable, to prescribe in each order of reference the length of notice to be given before the filing. In this way the defeated party can always save his exceptions; and whenever, in the absence of any general rule or special order, it appears that a defeated party has, without any laches on his part, been deprived, through the action of the referee, of an opportunity to prepare and preserve his exceptions, the report should be set aside.

In taking advantage of this case to make some suggestions as to references, we do not wish to be understood as intimating that the facts in this case show any misconduct on the part of the referee. So far as those suggestions are concerned, we speak not in criticism of the present, but in advice for future cases. The judgment of the district court will be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

KINGMAN, C. J., concurring.

VALENTINE, J. I concur in the decision of this case upon the first ground stated in the opinion and syllabus.

ST. LOUIS, K. C. & N. RY. CO. v. S. O. THACHER.

July Term, 1874.

Principal and Agent: Contract by Agent in His Own Name: Parties to Action. Where a person acting for himself, and also acting as the agent for a certain principal, entered into a contract in his own name with a railway company for the transportation of certain specific cattle, a portion of which belonged to himself and the other portion belonged to his principal, and the name of his principal was not disclosed in said contract; and the cattle were injured during their transportation through the negligence of the railway company; and the principal commenced an action against the railway company for the loss sustained by himself, not making the agent a party to the action; and no claim was made that there was any defect of parties, either plaintiff or defendant, but the action was tried upon its merits, and judgment rendered for the plaintiff: held, that in such a case the action may be maintained.<sup>1</sup>

*565 *Error from Douglas district court.

Action by Thacher, as plaintiff, to recover for damages sustained to 17 of the 35 head of cattle mentioned in the contract set out in the case of St. Louis, K. C. & N. Ry. Co. v. Piper, ante, *506, *510. Thacher had judgment at the September term, 1873, of the district court.

<sup>1</sup>Same principle applied, Carter v. George, 30 Kan. 48; S. C. 1 Pac. Rep. 58; Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. v. Simpson, 30 Kan. 649; S. C. 2 Pac. Rep. 821; Tracy v. Gunn, 29 Kan. 512; after a written contract is executed, it is competent to show by parol evidence that both of the contracting parties were agents for other persons, and acted as such in making the contract, Nutt v. Humphrey, 32 Kan. 100; S. C. 8 Pac. Rep. 787; see Butler v. Kaulback, 8 Kan. 451, and note; as to knowledge of agent affecting principal, see note to Huff v. Farwell, 25 N. W. Rep. 255.

Pratt & Ferrey, for plaintiff in error.

Thacher was not one of the contracting parties, nor an assignee, and could maintain no action for damages for its breach. Whether parol testimony could have been admitted to show that Piper was but an agent in making this contract, and Thacher the sole principal, it is unnecessary to discuss, as no such claim was made. While the most respectable courts of England and of the United States have differed, and still do differ, upon this question, and although the weight of authority in numbers is with the affirmative, yet no case, we believe, can be found where parol testimony was admitted to show that a written contract was made partly for the benefit of one named therein as principal, and partly for the benefit of an undisclosed principal, so as to give to each a separate right of action. To admit such testimony would be to subject a party contracting, as he supposes, with but one person, to as many different claims and suits as the subject of the contract would admit of. Fenly v. Stewart, 5 Sandf. 101. The district court held that the defendant in error could show by parol that this contract was made partly for himself, and maintain an action upon it for each part, and this we think was error.

All actions must be prosecuted in the name of the real party *566 in interest. As to the cattle of Thacher, Piper could not maintain an action, or, if he could, it would inure to the benefit of the real party owning them, and he would only be a nominal party. But no objection was raised in the court below that Thacher was not the proper party, nor that Piper was a necessary party.

VALENTINE, J. On November 27, 1872, G. W. Piper shipped thirty-five head of cattle from Kansas City to Chicago, under a written contract between himself and the plaintiff in error, a copy of which contract will be found in the case of this same plaintiff in error against Piper, recently decided in this court. St. Louis, K. C. & N. Ry. Co. v. Piper, ante, *510. Eighteen head of said cattle belonged to Piper, and the other seventeen head belonged to the defendant in error, S. O. Thacher. With reference to these seventeen head of cattle, Piper was merely the agent of Thacher for their transportation and sale. There were delays in their transportation claimed to have been caused by the negligence of the railway company, in consequence of which delays the cattle were injured, their value depreciated, and extra expenses incurred. Piper and Thacher then sued the railway company, each bringing a separate action for his own separate loss, and each obtained a judgment against the railway company. The railway company then brought both of the cases to this court for review. We have already decided Piper's case, and in that decision have disposed of every legal question involved in this case except one. That question is whether Thacher can maintain a separate action for his own separate loss, notwithstanding the fact that the railway company contracted with Piper alone, and had no knowledge of Thacher's interest in the transaction. That Piper could alone maintain an action for the whole loss, including that sustained by Thacher as well as that sustained by himself, we suppose will not be questioned; for "a person with whom or in whose name a contract is made for the benefit of another * * * may bring an action without joining with him the person for whose *567 benefit it was *prosecuted." Civil Code, § 28. But whether what might be a single cause of action in favor of Piper may be so divided as to give to Piper and Thacher each a cause of action for that portion of the loss which each has severally sustained, is the question now to be considered by this court. If Thacher had owned all the cattle, instead of only a portion of them, he could unquestionably have maintained an action for the whole loss sustained; for it is generally conceded that under our Code, as well as in equity, where a contract is made by an agent for the benefit of his principal, the principal may sue on the contract, even though the agent may also have the right to sue, and even where the contract is made in the name of the agent, and the principal's name is not disclosed. Erickson v. Compton, 6 How. Pr. 471; Union India Rubber Co. v. Tomlinson, 1 E. D. Smith, 364; Morgan v. Reid, 7 Abb. Pr. 215; Thompson v. Thompson, 4 Ohio St. 333; Brooks v. Minturn, 1 Cal. 481; Ruiz v. Norton, 4 Cal. 358. The principal, in every such case, is "the real party in interest," and under our Code the rule is that "every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest." Code, § 26. Every action allowed to be prosecuted in any other manner constitutes an exception to a general rule.

But these exceptions are, generally, not exclusive. For instance, there are many actions that may be prosecuted in the name of the agent, or in the name of the principal, at the election of the parties; and if Thacher had owned all the cattle in this case, this unquestionably would be one of such actions. 1 Waite, Pr. 96. This should be so; for, on the one hand, there are many cases where the principal resides in another state, and could not well attend personally to the suit himself; and, on the other hand, there are other cases where the agent may have been discharged, and no longer has any interest in the principal's affairs. Indeed, the agent's interests may become hostile to those of the principal's, and, in such a case, it would not be well for the agent alone to have the power to prosecute the action for the principal. In the present case Piper's *568 agency ceased when he *shipped said cattle to Chicago and sold them, and it would seem absurd that he alone could sue for Thacher's loss. Suppose he should neglect or refuse to sue, would

Thacher be without a remedy? And having no interest in Thacher's loss, he might well neglect or refuse to sue. As the railway company were liable on only one contract, and as both Piper's and Thacher's actions were prosecuted in the same court, and at the same time, it is possible that the railway company could have compelled a consolidation of the two suits; or it is possible that they could have compelled Thacher to make Piper a party, either plaintiff or defendant, in Thacher's suit. But none of these questions having been raised in the court below, we do not choose to decide them now. There was no attempt made to consolidate the two suits; there was no attempt made to make Piper a party in Thacher's suit; and there was no claim made that there was any defect of parties, either plaintiff or defendant. The suit was tried upon its merits, and upon its merits Thacher recovered the judgment of which the plaintiff in error now complains; and, under the circumstances of this case, we think that the judgment was correct, and that the court below did not err in rendering the same. And, by allowing Thacher to recover, it can hardly be said that it is a division of a single cause of action into two separate causes of action. It is true that the contract under which both Piper's and Thacher's causes of action arose is a single contract, yet, as the cattle belonged to separate owners, the railway company, by causing the cattle to be injured, created two causes of action,—one in favor of Piper, and the other in favor of Thacher; and each was created at the same time, neither having precedence of the other with regard to time. And the rule is, as we have before seen, that Thacher should sue for his own loss, although by way of exception to the rule Piper might also sue for Thacher's loss, if Thacher himself had not done so. But if Piper should have sued for both his own loss and that of Thacher's, in the same suit, and as one cause of action, it would properly have been the consolidation of two *569 causes of action. To recapitulate: The *railway company, by injuring the cattle, created two causes of action. These may be prosecuted separately by the respective owners of the cattle, or may be consolidated and prosecuted by Piper alone. But even if by allowing each owner of the cattle to prosecute for his own loss would be to divide a single cause of action into two separate causes of action, still it is possible that such a thing may be done. In New York it has been held that when an entire demand had been assigned in parts, to several persons, the assignee of one of the parts may maintain an action to recover his part. Cook v. Genesee Mut. Ins. Co., 8 How. Pr. 514; Field v. Mayor of New York, 6 N. Y. 179; Christie v. Herrick, 1 Barb. Ch. 258, 259. But it would seem in such cases that all persons interested in the matter should be made parties to the action, if any party should demand it.

The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

CITY OF EMPORIA and others v. H. E. NORTON and others.<sup>1</sup>

July Term, 1874.

1. Statutory Construction: Constitutional Law: Rule. A law may be so completely at variance with some constitutional provision as to be absolutely and under all circumstances void; or it may be valid as to some classes of cases, and void as to others; or it may be fairly susceptible of two constructions, one of which conflicts, while the other harmonizes, with the constitution. In the first class of cases the decisions would be uniformly against the law, and all rights claimed thereunder; in the second, they would vary with the class of the case for which the support of the law was invoked; while in the third, that construction which supports would be preferred to that which destroys the law.
2. Municipal Corporation: Power to Relevy Taxes: Constitutional Law. Section 41 of chapter 100 of the Laws of 1872, which purports to grant to cities of the second class power in all cases of insufficient levy or assessment to relevy and reassess, may be placed in the second class of cases above named. Pur*porting to cure all defects, it cures all within the power of the legislature to cure. Though containing no restriction on the power to levy taxes, it is not in conflict with section 5 of article 12 of the constitution.
3. Taxation: Legislative Power: Curative Acts. Where the original purpose for which the power of taxation is invoked is one of the ordinary purposes of municipal government, and within the powers granted; and where there is no fraud or oppression in the creation of the debt or burden, and no inequality or injustice in the apportionment of the tax: held, that the legislature can, by subsequent enactment, cure any defect in the proceedings to collect the tax which it could in the first instance, by prior enactment, have made immaterial.
4. —: Relevy of Taxes: Municipal Corporations. The city of Emporia, a city of the second class, was authorized to improve its streets. It caused one to be curbed, guttered, and macadamized. It attempted to assess and collect the cost thereof from the adjoining lots, but failed, owing entirely to the fact that no estimate of the cost had been made by the engineer and submitted to the council prior to the contracts therefor. Subsequently, by general law, the legislature authorized a reassessment and relevy by cities of the second class in all cases of prior insufficient assessment and levy. Held, that this cured the defect caused by the omission of the estimate, and that the city could proceed to reassess and collect the taxes therefor.

Error from Chase district court.

This action was first commenced in Lyon district court, in October, 1871, by Norton and twelve others, as plaintiffs, against the county clerk and county treasurer of Lyon county, to restrain the collection of assessments levied to pay contractors for macadamizing, curbing, and guttering Commercial street, in the city of Emporia. The city of Emporia was not then a party. In April, 1872, judgment was rendered for plaintiffs below, and injunction made perpetual. The case was brought here on error at July term, 1872, and reversed. 10 Kan. *491. In the mean time the legislature had passed a special act attempting to make valid the assessments in question. Laws 1872, p. 13; 10 Kan. *503, *505. On June 14 and June 28, 1872, under section 35 of the new city-charter act passed February 28, 1872, (Laws 1872, c. 100,) the city council, by ordinances, provided for issuing "street bonds" to pay the contractors for balance due for the said improvements under their contracts, and immediately thereafter issued the bonds as provided in said ordinances; and *571 in August following said city council, to pay said contractors, and to meet and pay off the bonds when the same should mature, relieved said special assessments or taxes upon the said plaintiff's said several lots, under section 41 of said city-charter act. In February, 1873, plaintiffs filed amended petition, being verbatim the original petition, with the addition of the City of Emporia and its officers as defendants, to meet the decision of this court in Gilmore v. Fox, 10 Kan. *509. The defendants answered—First, a general denial; second, the regularity of proceedings on the part of the city council, including making and submission to council of estimates by city engineer, the special act of the legislature, and the relevy of said assessments. The cause went to Chase county on change of venue, and was there tried at the October term, 1873. The district court found against defendants, finding that no estimate was made; that all the exhibits attached to defendants' answer were duly executed; that the special act was passed, and referred to the assessments in question; that the relevy was made as alleged; but held the special act void, and that the relevy could not cure the want of such estimate; and therefore rendered judgment against defendants below, making the injunction perpetual.

The special act of the legislature (Laws 1872, p. 13) made these assessments, as at first levied in 1871, valid and binding, and cured the omission of the engineer's estimate, which is the only omission, error, or irregularity found by the court. I wish to enter upon the discussion of this first point unembarrassed, and therefore refer the court to its former decision herein, (10 Kan. *503,) where I attempted to raise this question; but the court held that the supplemented answer then filed "was a separate and independent pleading," and as it "did not deny any allegations of the plaintiffs' petition," and as "the *572 allegations of the petition were substantially that certain persons voluntarily, and without any authority, macadamized, curbed, and guttered Commercial street, and that afterwards the city authorities levied an assessment on the adjacent or abutting lot-owners to pay for the same, at the time the work was done, (according to the allegations of the petition,) neither the city of Emporia nor the lot-owners were liable to pay for the same;" and also to the concluding remarks upon that point: "All that we now decide is that the legislature cannot pass a special act which will cure all such irregularities." An examination of the present answer will show a denial of every allegation of the petition, (except the city's organization,) and the findings will show every legal step taken except the estimate. Hence this "voluntary" and charitable work, pro bono publico, evaporates. The allegations of the petition are not only denied in the answer, but are wholly and absolutely disproved by the findings, and the exhibits which are a part of the findings, so far as material. In this connection, see City of New Haven v. Fair Haven & Westville R. Co., 38 Conn. 422.

As it must be conceded that both statutes under which the city claims are within the province and scope of legislation, let us consider the two points upon which the city relies. The special act made these assessments valid. Cooley, Const. Lim. 371, 379; Dill. Mun. Corp. 288; Drexel v. Com., 46 Pa. St. 38; State v. City of Cincinnati, 20 Ohio St. 35; Servier v. Holliday, 2 Ark. 527; Sticknoth's Estate, 7 Nev. 223; Thomson v. County of Lee, 3 Wall. 327; Waldo v. Portland, 33 Conn. 371; Bartholomew v. Harwinton, Id. 410; Stewart v. County of Polk, 30 Iowa, 9; Merryman v. David, 31 Ill. 405; Edmunds v. Goodins, 24 Ind. 173; King v. City of Portland, 2 Or. 146; People v. County of Ingham, 20 Mich. 95; May v. Holdridge, 23 Wis. 93; Dean v. Charlton, Id. 590; Brewster v. City of Syracuse, 19 N. Y. 116, 118; Bradley v. Lee, 38 Cal. 366; Kunkle v. Town of Franklin, 13 Minn. 128, (Gil. 119;); National Bank v. City of Iola, 9 Kan. *696. The principle established by these authorities is that no man can have a vested right in escaping his proportion of equitable tax or assessment; that it is against the policy of the law for him to permanently enjoy such exemption from his share of the public burden; that what the legislature might have dispensed with, it may cure by retroactive legislation; that any ratification by a legislature is good if the original defect is merely lack of legislative consent, and even if it were void ab initio. Dean v. Charlton, 23 Wis.

590; S. C. 27 Wis. 522; Lucas v. San Francisco, 7 Cal. 463; *573 People v. Swift, 31 *Cal. 26; White W. Val. C. Co. v. Vallette, 21 How. 414. In the case at bar the "established principle" of taxation was followed and adhered to; the tax was levied for an "authorized purpose;" the work was done "according to contract;" it was "well done, and done cheaply, and was a valuable and lasting improvement;" and the plaintiffs below do not even complain of an unjust tax. Hence the injunction should have been dissolved. The city council "are, in fact and in law, agents for the property owners," and fairly and fully protected the plaintiff's interests in the premises. Warden v. County of Fond du Lac, 14 Wis. 618; Cameron v. Cameron, 15 Wis. 9; Hasbrouck v. City of Milwaukee, 17 Wis. 284; and see, especially, Hannewinkle v. Georgetown, 15 Wall. 547.

This special act violates neither section 17, art. 2, nor section 1, art. 12, of our constitution. While many authorities can be cited, we think the following conclusive that it is not objectionable as a special act: Walker v. City of Cincinnati, 21 Ohio St. 14; Bernal v. Hovious, 17 Cal. 547; Hall v. Bray, 51 Mo. 288; State v. Hitchcock, 1 Kan. *178; Jones v. State of Kansas, Id. *273; State v. Thompson, 2 Kan. *432; National Bank v. City of Iola, 9 Kan. *690; Beach v. Leahy, 11 Kan. *23. It does not violate art. 12, § 1. City of Wyandotte v. Wood, 5 Kan. *603; Land G. Ry. v. County of Coffey, 6 Kan. *255; National Bank v. City of Iola, 9 Kan. *692; Sticknoth's Estate, 7 Nev. 223; Schenley v. Com., 36 Pa. St. 29; Shaw v. Norfolk Co. R. Co., 5 Gray, 180; McCallie v. Chattanooga, 3 Head, 317; Lemon v. Johnson, 6 Dana, 400; Robinson v. Gardiner, 18 Grat. 514. The only power the city of Emporia ever assumed to exercise in the premises was to improve and make passable the business street of the city, and assess the expenses thereof on the adjoining lots; and that power it has possessed ever since its organization, in 1870. This special act does not assume to confer a new power, nor an additional power, nor any power, but to legalize the manner of procedure, and waive omissions which had been made in the exercise of a power previously granted, and this it is competent for a legislature to do. If these assessments as first levied in 1871 were invalid, it was not because of any constitutional ground, nor want of power generally, but for "lack of legislative consent," and this consent was given by the special act.

The court finds that the city made the contract as alleged, and that the work was done accordingly,—well done, done cheaply,—and was a valuable and lasting improvement; hence the city was liable in the first instance. This is not a case of ultra vires. Now, *574 as the city, under the law of 1868, had full *power (if the estimate had been made) to do all that it did do, and as the making of an estimate was only necessary because the legislature had required it, and was in no sense constitutionally or naturally necessary, it follows that the legislature might waive and cure that defect, and that, too, without "conferring" any "power" whatever. It will be borne in mind that this is a case where the property was "subject to taxation," the tax a proper and equitable one, and the levy not excessive, and where plaintiffs attempt no equitable showing.

In the former decision in this case it was conceded "that the legislature may, in some cases, pass special curative laws for corporations." This language cannot mean that the legislature may by special act simply cure irregularities, because mere irregularities will not be noticed by the court in suits to enjoin the collection of taxes. Missouri River, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. v. Morris, 7 Kan. *231; Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Russell, 8 Kan. *561; Parker v. Challiss, 9 Kan. *155; Adams v. Beman, 10 Kan. *37; City of Lawrence v. Killam, 11 Kan. *499; City and County of San Francisco v. Certain Real Estate, 42

Cal. 517; Stoddert v. Ward, 31 Md. 562. And to say that the legislature might only cure what the courts would disregard, is equivalent to denying the legislature any "curative" power by special act.

The relevy made these assessments legal, valid, and binding liens on plaintiffs' lots. It will be remembered that the district court finds "that a relevy of said taxes and assessments was made as alleged in said defendants' said answer;" hence it was made under section 41, Laws 1872, p. 204, and in accordance with the provisions of that section. See, in this connection, proviso to section 35, Laws 1872, p. 203, and State v. City of Wyandotte, 4 Kan. 434. This section 41 certainly covers the want of an estimate, which is the only thing shown at all irregular; and the cases above cited are conclusive that it is within legislative power to enact this section. That the relevy was proper, and cured all defects, see, in addition to the above-cited cases, the following: Jackson v. Lodge, 36 Cal. 41; Hackett v. Richards, 13 N. Y. 140; McInerny v. Reed, 23 Iowa, 410; Howell v. City of Buffalo, 37 N. Y. 268; McCulloch v. State of Maryland, 4 Wheat. 428; State v. City of Newark, 34 N. J. 236.

I concede from the "findings" in this case that the levy, when made in 1871, for these local improvements, was void as to the abutting lot-owners, because the estimate was not made. *But the contracts between the city and contractors were valid; and the contractors could have sued the city on those contracts for the work, according to their terms. It was fully in the power of the city to do just this work, and make just these contracts. It was the city, and not the lot-owners, that these contractors looked to for their pay, and the city has already paid them; and a relevy under said section 41 of the new city-charter act was not only valid, but was mere justice to reimburse the city. Of the many reasons which are given by the courts for upholding these reassessments, perhaps that in Warden v. County of Fond du Lac, 14 Wis. 618, is as satisfactory as any, in which case it is said that such tax "is a debt due the government, which the owner of the property has no more right in equity and conscience to withhold than the most sacred debt of a private nature."

R. M. Ruggles, for defendants in error.

The plaintiffs in error hang their case, as they themselves state in their brief, on two propositions, viz.: (1) The special act of the legislature (Laws 1872, p. 13) made these assessments, as at first levied in 1871, valid and binding, and cured the omission of the engineer's estimate, which is the only omission, error, or irregularity found by the court; and (2) the relevy in August, 1872, made these assessments valid and subsisting liens upon the property in question. Of these in their order.

In order to get a full understanding of the matter, it will be well to refer to the statute in force in 1871 in relation to the necessity for an estimate by the city engineer of the cost of any proposed work before a contract should be let therefor. The section of the statute is as follows, (Gen. St. p. 169:)

"Sec. 31. Before the city council shall make any contract for building bridges or sidewalks, or for any work on streets, or for any other work or improvement, an estimate of the cost thereof shall be made by the city engineer, and submitted to the council; and no contract shall be entered into for any work or improvement for a price exceeding such estimate; and in advertising for bids for any such *576 work, the council *shall cause the amount of such estimate to be published therewith."

The court below found, as matters of fact, that the city engineer never made any estimate of the cost of the work, and that the contract for the macadamizing was let to Brown, and the contract for the curbing and guttering was let to Chaplin. No estimate ever having been made by the city engineer, or any one for him, of course it follows that the above contracts for said work were entered into without an estimate being first made. We suppose it cannot be successfully questioned that the making of an estimate by the city engineer of the cost of the proposed work was a condition precedent to the letting of a valid contract,—a statutory requirement absolutely necessary to be performed in order to form a valid basis for proceedings to subject the property of abutting lot-owners to the cost of doing said work, and without which the contracts for said work, and all proceedings thereafter had in relation to said work, including the levy of the special assessments upon the property of defendants in error to pay for the same, were absolutely void, at least so far as the abutting lot-owners were concerned. Indeed, plaintiffs in error impliedly admit such to be the case, but seek to avoid its effect by claiming (1) that the special act of 1872 (Laws 1872, p. 13) made the first assessments, levied in 1871, valid and binding; and (2) that the second assessment or relevy, made in August, 1872, as they claim under section 41, Laws 1872, p. 204, was valid and binding. As to the effect of the failure to have an estimate made, we refer the court to the case of City of Leavenworth v. Rankin, 2 Kan. *357, as being precisely analogous to the case at bar. The court in that case uses this language, (2 Kan. *371:) "When the law prescribes a prerequisite to their [the city council's] ability to contract, the obligation to observe it cannot, with impunity, be disregarded; nor will a subsequently attempted ratification cure the defect. Such a construction would render nugatory the most salutary safeguards, and, in effect, make municipal corporations omnipotent. They must contract, if at all, within *577 *the prescribed limits, and according to the prescribed forms."

We suppose that in the case above quoted, and in the case at bar, the contractors might, perhaps, recover on a quantum meruit against the city,—not upon the contract, nor under or by virtue of it, nor the price stipulated in it, nor any other particular price; but if recovery could be had at all against the city, it should be the value of the benefit of the work to the city, and because the city had accepted it; and when such an action is brought, the question whether the work was "well and cheaply done," whether it was "necessary," or whether it was a "lasting and valuable improvement," will form proper subjects of investigation, but not till then. We utterly deny that abutting lot-owners can be made liable, or their property taken either by taxation or otherwise, unless the forms of law in force at the time the property is sought to be made subject to the charge are at least substantially complied with, when such forms, as in the present case, go to the very foundation of the right to incur the liability at all. Dean v. Charlton, 23 Wis. 610; Welker v. Potter, 18 Ohio St. 87, 88; People v. Davis, 61 Barb. 469.

But it is said by plaintiffs in error that the special act (Laws 1872, p. 13) heals and cures the original defect. To this we answer—First, the legislature had no constitutional power to pass such an act; and, second, the act by its terms does not purport to attempt to cure the omission of the city engineer to make an estimate as required by law. It seems to us clear that said special act is in violation of section 1, art. 12, of our state constitution. That the act in question is a special act seems to be beyond all controversy. It refers to the city of Emporia alone, and to no other city of the second class in the state. That the above constitutional provision refers to and embraces cities, is settled by the cases of City of Atchison v. Bartholow, 4 Kan. *124; City of Wyandotte v. Wood, 5 Kan. *607; Gilmore v. Norton, 10 Kan. *491; National Bank v. City of Iola, 9 Kan. *689. Then the question remains, did the above special act confer corporate powers? We answer, clearly so. The act, in effect, says that in every other city of the second class in the whole state of Kansas the city engineer must make an estimate of the cost of *578 work of the kind in question before a contract for the *performance of it can be entered into, but the city of Emporia can enter into such contract notwithstanding no estimate was ever made; which, as we have before seen, is a condition precedent to the making of any valid contract at all. The proposition that such an act does not confer corporate power is so ridiculous that to state it is its own refutation, (Gilmore v. Norton, 10 Kan. *503;) and as to the power of the legislature to pass such an act, making abutting lot-owners liable, see Baltimore v. Horn, 26 Md. 194.

This special act is also in violation of section 17, art. 2, of our constitution. In effect it says that the general statutes of the state in relation to cities of the second class shall have a uniform operation in all and every of such cities throughout the state, except in the city of Emporia; and to hold such an act valid is to say that the legislature may, by special act, limit the uniform operation throughout the state of a general law. This proposition also is too ridiculous to be discussed. As to such an act, see Darling v. Rodgers, 7 Kan. *592;

Gilmore v. Norton, supra. All the cases cited in plaintiffs' brief, where such acts have been held valid, are in states where there are no such constitutional restrictions as in our state. The learned counsel for plaintiffs in error refers the court particularly to Hannewinkle v. Georgetown, 15 Wall. 547. That case decides that an injunction will not lie to restrain the collection of a tax on the sole ground of the illegality of such tax; and so this court has decided in Barnes v. City of Atchison, 2 Kan. *489; and such was and is the equity rule. But after the decision in Barnes v. City of Atchison, supra, and in consequence thereof, such an action is provided for and authorized by express statutory enactment. Civil Code, § 253; Laws 1867, c. 74, § 1. The counsel also cites several other authorities, noticeable among which is Beach v. Leahy, 11 Kan. *23. This case expressly holds that cities, towns, and villages are corporations proper, and within the constitutional prohibition in regard to special acts; and just as squarely decides that counties, townships, and school-districts are merely political subdivisions, and not within the purview of *579 section 1, *art. 12, of the constitution. We conclude that the plaintiffs in error "take nothing" by the special act of 1872.

Said special act of 1872 only purports to cure "irregularities and omissions" on the part of the mayor and councilmen. That this was not intended to obviate the consequences of a non-performance of a condition precedent, see Welker v. Potter, 18 Ohio St. 85. That the legislature only intended to hear irregularities is further evidenced by a comparison of the language used in said special act, and that in section 41 of the city charter act providing for a relevy.

Now, if we are right in our assumption that the contract under which the work was done was void by reason of no estimate having been made by the city engineer, and if said special act is void, then we suppose it will be conceded that the relevy made in August, 1872 was void also, unless the powers given by section 41 of the city charter act helped the matter out. To give this section the construction claimed by plaintiffs in error, (viz., that no matter how void or illegal, either "for want of sufficient authority, or other cause," a tax or assessment may have been, let the city council make a relevy and the whole thing is cured,) is, as we think, to bring said section 41 in conflict with section 5 of article 12 of the constitution, and thereby render said section void. That there must be some restriction in any act of the legislature which purports to confer on cities the power of taxation or assessment has been decided by this court. Hines v. City of Leavenworth, 3 Kan. *204. If the city council of any city can, by a single relevy, under said section 41, cure any and all defects arising, either from "want of sufficient authority or other cause," then we say there is no restriction. If this court shall hold that that construction or effect claimed by counsel for plaintiffs in error of said section 41 is the correct one, then a city council may disregard all restrictions, no matter how wise or salutary, or how well calculated for the protection of the property owner, and may incur any and all manner of indebtedness; and when the tax-payer objects, and perhaps seeks his remedy in the courts, the council may let the matter rest *580 until the next annual levy, *make a relevy of the void tax, and straightway the whole thing is cured. Such a doctrine is monstrous, and cannot be the law. Besides, the learned counsel for plaintiffs in error is hardly entitled to a patent for his invention in dragging forth said section 41 to save the relevy. The same provision was in force in 1871. City Charter Act 1871, c. 62; Laws 1871, § 20. This section 20, at a first glance, does not seem as broad as said section 41 of the Laws of 1872, by reason of the omission of the word "assessments" therefrom, yet we find that the word "taxes," as used in this section 20 of the Laws of 1871, included the word "assessments," (Hines v. City of Leavenworth, supra;) and that, therefore, said section 20 of the act of 1871 is just as broad in its scope as said section 41 of the act of 1872. Therefore we find that the legislature in enacting said section 41 did not intend to enact any new curative act, but only intended to re-enact an already existing law. Consequently we see that this same section 41 was in full force at the time of the first levy and assessment made by the city to pay for this grading, etc. Therefore we submit that as there was just the same power and authority delegated to the city at the very time this work was done for the city, and at the time the first assessments were made by the city to pay for it, as can possibly be claimed to have been delegated and given to the city by the subsequent enactment of 1872, it follows that the logic of the position of plaintiffs in error upon this point is just this: that though the section of the constitution above quoted requires the legislature to restrict the power of cities in reference to "taxation, assessment, borrowing money, contracting debts, and loaning their credit," and that although the legislature had fixed the restrictions and limitations provided for by this provision of the constitution by prohibiting cities from doing these things, or any of them, unless they first complied with these restrictions and limitations as conditions precedent, yet all that was necessary for a city to do in order to successfully evade this provision of the constitution, and the laws of the legislature enacted for the purpose of enforcing it,

*581 was to go on and exercise the power *of taxation, assessment, borrowing money, contracting debts, loaning its credit, with utter disregard to restrictions and limitations placed upon these powers by the constitution and the acts of the legislature, (as was done in the case at bar;) and when these powers had so been exercised in such utter violation of the laws of the land, all that such a city need do would be, in the first instance, to levy a tax or make an assessment to pay the void indebtedness resulting from the exercise of such powers in such an unlimited and unrestricted manner, and then, when the tax-payers against whom these taxes are levied refuse to pay, the city makes a relevy or a reassessment under section 20, p. 151, Laws 1871, or section 41, Laws 1872, p. 204, and the whole matter becomes at once cured, and the indebtedness made valid, and thus this constitutional provision is successfully evaded. If this be the proper construction of said section 20 of the act of 1871, or section 41 of said act of 1872, or if these sections can be made to operate to produce such a result, then we say that they are in direct conflict with said section 5 of article 12 of the constitution, whenever such a construction is sought to be given to them, or such a result sought to be produced by their operation, and are of course void, to the extent at least of producing such results. Hines v. City of Leavenworth, 3 Kan. *204; Foster v. City of Kenosha, 12 Wis. 616.

It of course follows as a corollary to the rule laid down by this court in Hines v. City of Leavenworth, 3 Kan. *204, that any law passed by the legislature to evade this constitutional provision is absolutely void in so far as it accomplishes such purpose; and that also, when any construction is sought to be given to any law of the legislature which will have the effect of giving to such law the intention of evading this provision, (as is sought to be done by the argument of plaintiffs in error in the case at bar,) such construction will not be given by the courts, or, if given, they will be compelled to hold the law unconstitutional. Therefore we submit that the provisions of section 20 of the city charter act of 1871, re-enacted by section 41, p. 204, Laws 1872, are only valid so far as they apply to cases *582 of assessment or levy of taxes which *were authorized by law in the first instance, but were void by reason of some irregularity or neglect to comply with the law regulating proceedings in such cases, and that as to such cases only can this section 41 make valid a subsequent re-levy or assessment. The supreme court of Wisconsin, in construing just such a statute as this section 41, in relation to just the same constitutional provision, says: "But it would be a strange abuse of such a statute to say that it would extend to the assessment of a tax which was defective, not on account of mere irregularity in the proceedings, but from an entire want of authority." Dean v. Charlton, 23 Wis. 610; Hopkins v. Mason, 61 Barb. 469. As we have seen, the city of Emporia not having had the power in the first instance to make these contracts, in utter disregard of the limitations and restrictions imposed upon their contracting power, the contracts when made were ultra vires; and this being the case, it follows, as a matter of course, that the first assessments made to pay these contracts were not void by reason of some mere irregularities, but were void because the city had not the power to make these contracts, and therefore not the power to enforce their payment. And we here assert to the court, without fear of contradiction, that the only safety of the inhabitants of cities in this state from oppressive and ruinous taxation lies in the courts adopting as a rule of construction of such statutes as section 41 the rule above quoted from Dean v. Charlton, rather than the construction sought to be given by the learned counsel for plaintiffs in error. And this is specially so in such cases as the one at bar, as the right to make these assessments against the defendants is as an asserting of the right to compel a few to pay for that which, if of any benefit at all, is as much a benefit to the whole public as it is to the few; and we submit, as a rule in such cases, that the assertion of such a right is in derogation of individual rights, and must be strictly construed and rigorously observed; and if there is a failure to comply with any material requirement, such failure will make the whole proceedings so *583 absolutely void that *it will be even beyond the power of a legislature to cure such a failure.

BREWER, J. In May and June, 1871, the city of Emporia entered into two contracts, one for the curbing and guttering, and the other for the macadamizing, of Commercial street. The work was done under these contracts, was well and cheaply done, was accepted by the city, and was a valuable and lasting improvement. No estimate of the cost of the work was ever made by the city engineer or submitted to the city council. In July, 1871, the city attempted to provide for the payment of this work by special assessment on the adjoining lots. At the time of these proceedings the following provision of the statute applicable thereto was in force:

"Sec. 31. Before the city council shall make any contract for building bridges or sidewalks, or for any work on streets, or for any other work or improvement, an estimate of the cost thereof shall be made by the city engineer, and submitted to the council; and no contract shall be entered into for any work or improvement for a price exceeding such estimate; and in advertising for bids for any such work, the council shall cause the amount of such estimate to be published therewith." Gen. St. 169, § 31.

In consequence of the omission of this estimate, the proceedings of the city council were without authority, and the collection of the contract price by the assessments, so far at least as the lots of defendant in error are concerned, was a failure. In 1872 the legislature passed a special act validating these assessments. Laws 1872, p. 13, c. 13. It also passed a general law for cities of the second class, the forty-first section of which is as follows.

"Sec. 41. In case the corporate authorities of any city have attempted to levy any taxes or assessments for improvement or for the payment of any bonds or other evidence of debt, which taxes, assessments, or bonds are or may have been informal, illegal, or void, for the want of sufficient authority or other cause, the council of such city at the time fixed for levying general taxes shall relevy and reassess *584 any such *assessments or taxes in the manner provided in this act." Laws 1872, p. 204.

Under this section the city proceeded to make a relevy of these assessments, and this action was brought to restrain any further proceedings on the part of the city. The judgment in the district court was in favor of the lot-owners, and the city brings the question here for re-examination.

It is conceded that but for the legislation of 1872 the lot-owners would be entitled to their restraining order; but it is contended—First, that the special act made valid and legal the assessment of 1871; and, second, that the relevy made the assessments valid and binding liens on the lots. A consideration of the second question is all that will be necessary, for it seems to us that the proposition therein contained is correct. This section was passed after the levy of 1871, and by its terms is manifestly applicable to a case like the present. Indeed, we do not understand counsel as disputing that it is within the very letter of the statute, but the contention is that to give to this section the sweeping and comprehensive construction that its language will permit, is to bring it into conflict with section 5 of article 12 of the constitution. That section of the constitution is as follows:

"Sec. 5. Provision shall be made by general law for the organization of cities, towns, and villages, and their power of taxation, assessment, borrowing money, contracting debts, and loaning their credit shall be so restricted as to prevent the abuse of such power."

Upon this counsel for defendants in error argues: "That there must be some restriction in any act of the legislature which purports to confer on cities the power of taxation or assessment, has been decided by this court. Hines v. City of Leavenworth, 3 Kan. *204. If the city council of any city can, by a simple relevy, under said section 41, cure any and all defects arising either from 'want of sufficient authority, or other cause,' then we say there is no restriction. If this court shall hold that the construction or effect claimed by the counsel for plaintiffs in error of said section 41 is the correct one, then a city council may disregard all restrictions, no matter how wise or *585 salutary, or how well calculated for the protection of the property owner, and may incur any and all manner of indebtedness; and when the tax-payer objects, and perhaps seeks his remedy in the courts, the council may let the matter rest till the next annual levy, make a relevy of the void tax, and straightway the whole thing is cured. Such a doctrine is monstrous, and cannot be the law." Hence counsel concludes that it is only valid so far as it "applies to cases of assessment or levy of taxes which were authorized by law in the first instance, but were void by reason of some irregularity or neglect to comply with the law regulating proceedings in such cases, and that as to such cases only can this section 41 make valid a subsequent relevy or assessment." It would seem to be conceded by this statement of counsel that this section was not intrinsically and absolutely invalid, but only so in application to certain cases.

Now, it is well known that a statute may be attacked for unconstitutionality in more than one way. It may be so wholly and directly at variance with some constitutional provision that it is under all circumstances, and in all applications, absolutely void. A law granting a divorce, one reducing the terms of county officers to one year, and one making the state a stockholder in a banking institution, are examples of such void enactments. Again, a legislative act may be entirely valid as to some classes of cases, and clearly void as to others. A law might be void as violating the obligation of existing contracts, but valid as to all contracts which should be entered into subsequent to its passage, and which would therefore have no legal force except such as the law itself would allow. Cooley, Const. Lim. 180. And, again, an act may be fairly susceptible of two constructions, one of which conflicts while the other is in harmony with the constitution. In the first case the decision would be uniformly against the law, and all rights claimed to be derived therefrom; in the second, the decisions would vary according to the circumstances of the particular case for which the support of the law was invoked; while in the third, that construction which supports would be preferred to that which *destroys the law. It *586 seems to us that this section may be placed in the second class; that it is valid as applicable to certain cases, and invalid as to others. It purports to authorize a relevy in all cases of a prior insufficient levy. It is thus curative in its nature. But there are some things beyond the power of cure. As to these, it is invalid and inoperative. But purporting to cure all, it cures all within the power of cure. Nor should we look to this section for the restrictions contemplated by the section of the constitution heretofore quoted, but rather to the original act by which the power to levy was granted. If there were no sufficient restrictions in that, then that act was void, and there was ab initio a failure of power. But we should not expect to find in a merely curative act limitations and restrictions on an original grant of power.

But what defects may a legislature cure, and is the defect in this case within the power of cure? Two or three things may be remarked. The original purpose for which the power of taxation was invoked was not one of the extraordinary, but one of the common, purposes of municipal government. It was for the purpose of improving one of the thoroughfares of the city. As to the difference, if any, which exists between those two classes of cases, in the extent of the power to cure, see Hasbrouck v. Milwaukee, 13 Wis. 37, and the comments thereon, in the same court, by Chief Justice Dixon, in the subsequent case of Mills v. Charleton, 29 Wis. 413; and see, also, Cooley, Const. Lim. 380, and note. Again, there is nothing inequitable in subjecting these lots to the payment of this assessment. The work, as it appears from the findings, was well and cheaply done, and was a lasting and valuable improvement. There was no fraud in the making of the contracts by which excessive and unjust burdens were imposed. There is no inequity in casting the burden of a street improvement upon the adjoining lots. There was no partiality or oppression in the appraisement of those lots. In fact, nothing appears to invalidate the proceedings except the mere omission of *587 the *engineer's estimate. Again, this defect was one as to a matter which might have been omitted by the legislature in the first instance. There is nothing in the nature of things which requires that an estimate of the cost be made prior to the letting of the contract and the doing of the work. It may be a very proper precaution, but it is within the unquestioned power of the legislature to authorize such improvements without it. "If the thing wanting, or which failed to be done, and which constitutes the defect in the proceedings, is something the necessity for which the legislature might have dispensed with by prior statute, then it is not beyond the power of the legislature to dispense with it by subsequent statute." Cooley, Const. Lim. 371.

In May v. Holdridge, 23 Wis. 93, PAINE, J., says: "This rule must, of course, be understood with its proper restrictions. The work for which the tax is sought to be assessed must be of such a character that the legislature is authorized to provide for it by taxation. The method adopted must be liable to no constitutional objection. It must be such as the legislature might originally have authorized, had it seen fit. With these restrictions, where work of this character has been done, I think it competent for the legislature to supply a defect of authority in the original proceedings, to adopt and ratify the improvement, and to provide for a reassessment of the tax to pay for it."

In Mills v. Charleton, 29 Wis. 400, DIXON, C. J., referring to this case, says: "It will be seen by examining the facts in May v. Holdridge, as stated on pages 95 and 96 of the report, that the original proceedings were as void for want of authority in the aldermen as it is possible to conceive the original proceedings to have been here; and yet the power of the legislature to legalize and authorize the reassessments was upheld. * * * The principle upon which these and other similar decisions rest, is that the taxing power, when acting within its legitimate sphere, and unrestrained by positive constitutional provisions, is a far-reaching and unlimited power, which knows no stopping place nor moderation of force until it has accomplished the purpose for which it exists, namely, the actual enforcement *588 and collection of the tax. It moves constantly forward to its object until that is accomplished, and, if turned aside by any obstacles or impediments, may again and again return to the same tax or assessment, until, the way being clear, the tax is paid or the assessment collected." See, also, Thomas v. Leland, 24 Wend. 65; Town of Guilford v. Supervisors Chenango Co., 13 N. Y. 143; Brewster v. Syracuse, 19 N. Y. 116; Grim v. Weissenberg School-dist., 57 Pa. St. 438; Musselman v. City of Logansport, 29 Ind. 533; Howell v. City of Buffalo, 37 N. Y. 267; State v. Mayor, 34 N. J. 236; Dean v. Borchsenius, 30 Wis. 236; People v. Holladay, 25

Cal. 300; Brevoort v. Detroit, 24 Mich. 322. In this last case, noticing the objections to the reassessment, the court says: "One is that, the original assessment being void, there was no constitutional power in the legislature to order a reassessment. This, however, may depend upon the nature of the original infirmity. If the difficulty there was that the sums assessed did not constitute any just or equitable charge for public purposes upon the property upon which it was sought to be imposed, it is quite clear that the legislature could not make it such a charge; but if the defect consisted in some irregularity of proceeding, or in some oversight in the law itself, in consequence of which a just and equitable claim had failed to be legally imposed, there could be no good reason why the legislature should not retrospectively supply the omission or cure the irregularity."

The case may then be summed up thus: The city had the power to make these improvements. They were among the ordinary objects of municipal government. It is equitable that the adjoining lots should bear the burden of such improvements. There was no fraud in the contracts, no excessive, oppressive expenditures made. There was no inequality or injustice in the apportionment. The defect was on a matter which the legislature might have dispensed with in the first instance. It was therefore a defect which by subsequent enactment a legislature could cure; and a general act authorizing, in all *589 cases of insufficient assessment *and levy, a reassessment and relevy, is applicable to and cures this defect.

The judgment of the district court will be reversed, and the case remanded for further proceedings in conformity to the views herein expressed.

STATE OF KANSAS v. WALTER BEEBE.

July Term, 1874.

Escape: Failure of Sheriff to have Copy of Recognizance. Where a person charged with the commission of a criminal offense is at liberty on bail, and his sureties, with his consent, but without any copy of the recognizance, deliver him to the sheriff, taking his receipt therefor, held, that the sheriff, without having any copy of the recognizance, cannot lawfully hold the accused in custody against his will; and therefore that the accused in such a case may escape from the custody of the sheriff without committing a felony; and also that any other person may assist him to escape without committing a felony.<sup>1</sup>

Appeal from Sedgwick district court.

In October, 1873, one Joseph Lowe was arrested upon a warrant charging him with the commission of a felony. He waived an examination, and entered into a recognizance in the sum of $2,000, with two sureties, for his appearance to the next term of the Sedgwick district court. On the eighth of December afterwards his sureties, "at Lowe's request, [as they testify,] turned Lowe over to the sheriff verbally, and took the sheriff's receipt for him." The receipt is as follows:

"Received of S. H. K. and R. M. S., sureties on the recognizance of Joseph Lowe, the body of said Joseph Lowe.

"December 8, 1873.

"WM. SMITH, Sheriff of Sedgwick Co."

On the thirteenth of said December, Lowe escaped, and the *590 de*fendant, Beebe, was charged by information with aiding and assisting in such escape. The action against Beebe was tried at the December term, 1873, of the district court. Verdict of guilty, and judgment on the verdict.

Tucker & Fischer, for appellant.

The principal question in the case is whether Lowe was in the lawful custody of the sheriff at the time of his escape. The facts, as disclosed by the evidence, are as follows: Lowe was charged with shooting one William Anderson, with intent to kill. Lowe was out on bail. On the eighth of December, before court commenced, at the request of Lowe, his sureties surrendered him to the sheriff, and took a receipt for him. This surrender was made by turning him over to the sheriff without delivering any copy of Lowe's recognizance with him. The sheriff then delivered Lowe to one John Nugent to guard. Nugent was not a deputy nor sworn bailiff. On the thirteenth of December Lowe made his escape from Nugent.

We claim, on the part of the appellant, that Lowe was not in the lawful custody of the sheriff at the time of his escape; and, if not, then Beebe could not be punished for the crime of assisting him to escape. Section 177 of the crimes act refers expressly to aiding persons to escape from the lawful custody of the officers or other persons. If the custody of the sheriff was not lawful, then Nugent's could not be. This question of lawful custody involves a construction of sections 148 and 150 of our Criminal Code. Section 148 provides for the surrender of a principal by his sureties, and requires that they procure a certified copy of the recognizance, by virtue of which they can take the principal and surrender him to the sheriff. Section 150 requires that the sureties must deliver such copy, with their principal, to the sheriff, and the sheriff must acknowledge the surrender in writing. We claim that Lowe was not in the lawful custody of the sheriff for the reason that these sections have not been complied with.

*591 The district court instructed *the jury that this surrender was good, and sufficient to warrant the jury in finding that Lowe was in the lawful custody of the sheriff. We think this is not the law of the case. The defendant asked the court to instruct the jury that if they found, "from the evidence, that Lowe was out on bail, and had been delivered up to the sheriff by his bail, in order to render his custody lawful Lowe's bail must deliver a certified copy of his recognizance to the sheriff with the body of Lowe," which the court refused. We think the instruction asked by defendant embodied the law in the case, and should have been given.

The court seemed to think that the fact that Lowe's surrender was made with his consent, or at his request, would obviate the necessity of a compliance with said sections 148 and 150. Lowe's consent or request in that behalf could certainly make no difference with the appellant in this case. The sheriff should have something to show by what authority he held the prisoner, and in this case it should have been a copy of Lowe's recognizance. Lowe was being guarded by Nugent, who, as the evidence shows, was not an officer of the law; and he had nothing but the verbal order of the sheriff for Lowe's detention. Unless the sheriff had the lawful custody of Lowe himself, he certainly could not transfer it to a private individual, and one in the pay of Lowe; and the evidence shows that Lowe was to pay Nugent for his time in guarding him. Upon the subject of escapes, we again refer to section 177 of the crimes act, and to 2 Bish. Crim. Law, § 1034. In some cases the principal might be liable, and the aider not, but in this case neither would be liable. If Lowe could not have been punished for an escape, certainly Beebe could not for assisting him.

H. C. Sluss, Co. Atty., for the State.

The point relied upon by the appellant is that the sureties in the recognizance for the appearance of Lowe did not procure a copy of Lowe's recognizance, and deliver it with Lowe to the sheriff. The *592 object of procuring the copy of the recognizance, under section 148 of the Criminal Code, is to enable the surety to take the principal. Having a copy the surety is armed with evidence of an existing fact which enables him to overcome the will of the principal, and take him without his assent. It is not the copy that gives the power; it is the existence of the fact of the recognizance that gives the power to take and surrender the principal. A certified copy is but evidence of the fact. Without the evidence of the fact, the surety cannot compel the principal contrary to his will; but where the principal comes voluntarily, and requests his surety to surrender him, and voluntarily places himself in the custody of the surety for that purpose, there is no will to overcome,—the assent of the principal is obtained. There is no taking to be done, and the necessity for the sureties having a copy of the recognizance is obviated by the act of the principal. There is no necessity of evidence of the fact of the recognizance, for that fact the principal admits by his action, and waives all right to demand the production of the copy of the recognizance. Now, in such a case, if it is not necessary for the sureties to have a copy of the recognizance in order to accept the principal's voluntary surrender of himself, it is certainly not essential for him to deliver such copy to the sheriff in order to enable the sheriff to accept the surrender from the sureties. Perhaps Lowe might have refused to be taken and surrendered without a copy of the recognizance being produced; but when it is done at his own request, it ought to be considered that he waived the formality.

It is questionable, from the language of section 148, whether it is intended to apply where the principal is found in the county where the recognizance is of record, and the proceeding pending; for, independently of this statute, the bail has the right to surrender his principal. The recognizance is of record in the court of the county where the principal must appear; in the other counties of the state it is not. The object of the provision of section 148 was twofold: to arm the surety with the evidence of his authority in those counties where such authority was not a matter of public record, and also to *593 give immunity *to the principal from an otherwise unauthorized arrest. But it seems reasonable that this immunity is one of the rights which a man may waive. Lowe stood charged with crime. He voluntarily placed himself in custody, and the sheriff had the right to hold him, and that is the test of "lawful custody."

VALENTINE, J. The defendant was tried and convicted upon a charge for feloniously aiding a prisoner to escape. It seems that one Joseph Lowe was charged with the offense of assault with the intent to commit murder. He entered into a recognizance for his appearance at the next term of the district court. Afterwards, at his own request, he was delivered by his sureties to the sheriff of the county, and the sheriff gave the sureties a receipt therefor. The sheriff then delivered him into the custody of one John Nugent, to be guarded, and by agreement Lowe was to pay Nugent for his services. While in the custody of Nugent he escaped, and the defendant Beebe, assisted him to escape, by furnishing him with a horse with which to ride away. From the time Lowe entered into said recognizance up to the time he escaped, neither the sureties, nor the sheriff, nor Nugent ever had any warrant of any kind, or any copy of the recognizance, or any other instrument in writing, for the detention, imprisonment, or custody of said Lowe. Under these circumstances, was the escape a felony? This is a difficult question. It is one upon which good lawyers may differ. It is one upon which we know that good lawyers do differ. We have therefore given the question a very careful consideration. We have searched the text-books and the reports for something to throw light upon the subject, but have found nothing. The real question is whether Lowe escaped from lawful custody. Now, there is no ambiguity in the language of the statute upon this subject. The statute plainly enough prescribes what shall be done in such cases in order to place the person charged with the offense in lawful custody. But the difficulty arises in cases where the *594 statute has not been fully complied with. May the *accused be in lawful custody, although the statute prescribing how he shall be placed in such custody has not been complied with? Lowe was at liberty on bail, and no one had any right to restrain him of his liberty except in a particular manner. The statute provides that "when the surety desires to surrender his principal he may produce [procure] a copy of the recognizance from the clerk, by virtue of which the bail or any person authorized by him may take the principal in any county within the state." Crim. Code, § 148. The sureties in the present case did not comply with this statute. They procured no copy of the recognizance from the clerk. The principal, however, voluntarily surrendered himself to them. But still it can hardly be questioned that if the principal, at any time before he was delivered to the sheriff, had refused longer to remain in the custody of his bail, and had chosen to depart therefrom, he could have done so legally, and without committing any offense. They could hold him as long as he voluntarily chose to remain with them, but when he chose to depart therefrom they could hold him no longer. After his voluntary surrender to his bail they transferred their custody of him to the sheriff, and, as we are inclined to think, they transferred nothing more. Then, had the sheriff any more right to hold said principal in custody than his surety had? While he chose to remain with the sheriff he was, of course, in the lawful custody of the sheriff; but when he chose to depart therefrom he was no longer in the lawful custody.

The statute provides that "the bail must deliver a certified copy of the recognizance to the sheriff with the principal, and the sheriff must accept the surrender of the principal, and acknowledge it in writing." Crim. Code, § 150. Now, the bail did not deliver to the sheriff any certified copy of the recognizance; and the sheriff had no such copy, nor any other written authority, by which to hold said Lowe when he escaped from Nugent. Even if we should be of the opinion that the bail impliedly (they did not do so expressly) authorized the sheriff to procure a certified copy of said recognizance, *595 still the sheriff did not procure the same. *Then what was there to prevent Lowe from escaping, if he chose to do so? There is no authority anywhere given to the sureties on a criminal recognizance to arrest their principal, or to hold him in custody, or to deliver him to the sheriff, without a copy of the recognizance; and there is no authority anywhere given to the sheriff to receive such principal, or to retain him in custody, unless he is also furnished with a copy of the recognizance. If the sheriff can hold a person in custody under such circumstances, without such copy, it is by virtue of some authority not found in the statutes. Under our system of criminal jurisprudence we are of the opinion that no person can be deprived of his liberty on account of some criminal charge against him except by virtue of some written authority therefor, except in cases where the accused may be arrested before any warrant has ever been issued. But even in cases where the accused may be arrested without warrant, he must be immediately taken before a magistrate, and a complaint be filed against him, and a warrant issued wherewith to hold him, or the custody of him would become unlawful. But where a person has been arrested on a criminal charge, and afterwards set at liberty on a recognizance, then he is as much entitled to his liberty as he ever was before, and cannot again be deprived of his liberty except by following the law. There can be no excuse for again arresting him, or holding him in custody, without written authority. The sureties may take a certified copy of the recognizance when they execute the same, or they may require ample security from their principal before they become his bail. They have ample time to take every precaution necessary; hence we think they ought to follow the law. Before a man can be deprived of his liberty, even the forms of law should be complied with. In such cases, even the forms of law become matters of substance. And it would hardly seem that a man should be charged with committing a felony for merely failing to recognize certain proceedings as valid and binding where the proceedings themselves are not in conformity to *596 law. And, of course, if Lowe did not commit a felony in *escaping, Beebe did not commit a felony in assisting him to escape. We have come to the conclusions we have in this case with some doubts; but our conclusions are that the sheriff could not legally hold Lowe in custody against his will, except by having a certified copy of the recognizance as the law requires; and therefore that Lowe did not commit a felony in escaping; and therefore that Beebe did not commit a felony in assisting him to escape.

The judgment of the court below is reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings.

STATE OF KANSAS v. PETER MARSH.

July Term, 1874.

Grand Jury: Irregularity in Calling. While a grand jury should only be called by order of the district court, yet when one has been called by order of the judge in vacation, and has been impaneled, charged, and sworn by the court, it is a de facto grand jury, and, under section 79 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, no objection is good to an indictment presented by it on account of the manner of its organization, which does not imply corruption in such organization.

Appeal from Mitchell district court.

January 13, 1874, the judge of the Mitchell district court, in vacation, made and transmitted to the county clerk, an order, as follows: "You are requested hereby to draw from the jury-box of said county, according to law, the names of fifteen persons to serve as grand jurors for the ensuing April term of the district court of said county." Pursuant to this order a grand jury were drawn and summoned.

By act approved March 3, 1874, (Laws 1874, p. 93,) the *597 spring term of the district court for Mitchell county *was changed from April to the fourth Monday of March, on which day said court convened, and said grand jury was impaneled and sworn. Said jury returned twenty-nine bills of indictment, one of which was against the defendant, Marsh, for selling intoxicating liquors without license. At the August term, 1874, of said district court the defendant was tried and convicted of the offense charged in said indictment.

H. & L. Cooper and A. J. Banta, for appellant.

The grand jury finding and presenting the indictment in this case was drawn and summoned by authority of a written request of the judge of the district court made at chambers, and addressed to the county clerk. The power to order grand juries to be drawn and summoned to attend the sittings of the district court is, by statute, vested in the court only; and a body of fifteen men, drawn and summoned by authority of a request of the judge at chambers, is not a legally constituted grand jury, and its proceedings are absolutely void. Gen. St. 833, § 73; Id. 535, § 9; Id. 538, § 24. The judge at chambers can only exercise the powers given by law. Const. § 16, art. 3. The power to order a grand jury to be drawn and summoned was at one time by law vested in the judge of the district court at chambers, (Laws 1864, § 7, p. 113;) but this section was amended by the law now in force, which gives the power to order a grand jury to be drawn and summoned to the court alone. Gen. St. 1868, § 73, p. 833. The change in the language of the statute shows clearly that the intention of the legislature was to take the power from the judge of the district court at chambers, and give the power to the court in term time.

The district court seems to have thought that the grand jury was not properly ordered, but held it to be a mere irregularity in their selection, not amounting to corruption, deciding on section 79 *598 of the Criminal Code. Here we think the court erred. *That section is not applicable to the question here raised. This is not a question of the irregular exercise of a power given by law; but the question here raised is, is the power which has been exercised given by law to the judge at chambers? The court could not acquire jurisdiction by an indictment presented by a grand jury, the proceedings of which were absolutely void. Vattier v. State, 4 Blackf. 73; State v. Bolt, 7 Blackf. 19; State v. Hensley, Id. 324; Bellair v. State, 6 Blackf. 104; Montgomery v. State, 3 Kan. *263; 1 Bish. Crim. Proc. § 749.

Clark A. Smith, Co. Atty., for the State.

Two questions are raised: First. Has the judge of the district court in vacation, or at chambers, power to order the drawing of a grand jury? Second. If the judge has not such power under the law, but nevertheless makes such an order, and a grand jury is regularly drawn, impaneled, sworn, and charged, and such grand jury proceeds regularly to find sundry indictments, is it such an irregularity as to avail a defendant so indicted, on a plea to the jurisdiction of the court, or in abatement?

By chapter 76, Laws 1873, the spring term of court was fixed for April. By chapter 60, Laws 1874, it was changed to March. Under section 2 of the act last mentioned, (Laws 1874, p. 94,) if this grand jury would have been a legally constituted grand jury for the April term, had no change been made in the law, it certainly was a legal grand jury for the March term, as changed. The objections of the appellant are founded entirely on section 73 of the Criminal Code, which provides that no grand jury shall be drawn unless ordered by the court. And it is claimed that the order for the drawing of the grand jury which found the indictment in this case, being made by the judge of the court in vacation, was absolutely void, and that all proceedings of the grand jury drawn in pursuance of such order are void. We submit that such proceedings are not void, but valid. Com. v. Smith, 9 Mass. 107; People v. Jewett, 3 Wend. 314. It was but an irregularity in the drawing or selecting the grand jury; *599 and as this irregularity did not amount to corruption, the *district court did not err in overruling the appellant's motions to quash the indictment, and for the arrest of judgment.

BREWER, J. The defendant was indicted by the grand jury at the March term of the district court of Mitchell county. He objected that the grand jury was not legally constituted, and raised this objection by a plea to the jurisdiction, a plea in abatement, a motion to quash the indictment, and a motion in arrest of judgment; so that if the objection was well taken, he placed himself in a proper position to avail himself of it. The grand jury was drawn in pursuance of an order made by the judge of the district court in vacation. The record shows that on the first day of the term such jury was duly impaneled, sworn, and charged. The statute provides that "grand juries shall not hereafter be drawn, summoned, or required to attend the sittings of any court in any county in this state, unless ordered by the court." Crim. Code, § 75; Gen. St. 833; and see, also, Gen. St. 535, § 9; Id. 538, § 24; Id. 835, § 89. Was this grand jury properly constituted? and, if not, was the defect fatal to the indictment? Section 79 of the Criminal Code provides that "no plea in abatement, or other objection, shall be taken to any grand jury duly charged and sworn, for any alleged irregularity in their selection, unless such irregularity, in the opinion of the court, amounts to corruption, in which case such plea or objection shall be received." It is claimed by counsel for appellant that a grand jury is created only by the order of the court, and that without such order it has no legal existence; and that the section last quoted refers simply to the manner in which the order for its creation is executed, and not to the order itself. We think the section is broader in its scope, and that it includes everything antecedent to the impaneling of the jury. The section first quoted is a restriction on the calling, not the impaneling, of the jury. The jury is impaneled and charged by the court, so that thereby the court recognizes that body as a valid *600 and legal grand *jury. And we think this section means that whatever body is duly charged and sworn as a grand jury, and recognized as such by the court, is to be taken, like any other officer or tribunal, as a de facto jury, whose acts are valid as to the public; and that no objection to the manner of its creation will be recognized unless it be one that implies corruption. A de facto prosecuting attorney legally prosecutes; a de facto judge legally tries and sentences; and a de facto grand jury may, with equal propriety, legally indict.

The legislature has elsewhere used this word "selection" as embracing the order for the grand jury as well as the manner of its execution. Chapter 54 of the General Statutes, is entitled "An act providing for the selection and summoning of grand and petit jurors;" and sections 21, 23, and 24 provide for the orders of the court or judge.

There being no other question presented, the judgment of the district court must be affirmed.

It is understood that another case against the same defendant, and the cases of State v. Seright and State v. Lowry, brought to this court by appeal, and now pending here, involve only the same question, and must be decided in the same way.

COMMISSIONERS OF SEDGWICK Co. v. H. W. BAILEY.<sup>1</sup>

July Term, 1874.

1. Constitutional Law: Titles of Bills and Laws. The constitutional provision that "no bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title," is mandatory; and if the legislature should clearly violate this provision by putting something in the body of an act clearly not embraced in the title thereof, or wholly foreign to the title, it would be the duty of the courts to declare such portion of the act void. If any bill, while pending in the legislature, should, in any of its stages, be in conflict with this provision, it would be the imperative duty of the legislature, on or before the final passage of the bill, to correct it, so as to make it harmonize with said provision, and if they should fail to do so, the bill itself, or some portion thereof, would be void.
2. ———: Chapter 97, Laws 1872: Section 6 Held Void. Where the legislature, on March 3, 1868, passed an act entitled "An act defining the boundaries of counties;" and afterwards on the twenty-ninth of February, 1872, passed another act entitled "An act amendatory and supplemental to an act entitled 'An act defining the boundaries of counties,' approved March 3, 1868;" and by section 5 of the last-mentioned act created the new county of Harvey, taking a portion of the county of Sedgwick and placing it within the boundaries of Harvey; and by section 6 of said last-mentioned act provided, by an arbitrary rule, for taxing the territory detached from Sedgwick county and attached to Harvey county, to assist in paying certain old debts of Sedgwick county: held, that the matters contained in section 6 were not expressed in the title to the bill, and therefore that said section 6 is unconstitutional and void.

Original proceedings in mandamus.

On the sixth of November, 1873, the plaintiff made application to the chief justice of this court for an alternative writ of mandamus. Said application was based on the affidavit of the county attorney of Sedgwick county, alleging, among other things, that the entire length of the Wichita & Southwestern Railroad, between the town of Newton and the town of Wichita, is  $26\frac{1}{4}$  miles; that when said railroad was constructed it was wholly within Sedgwick county; that by section 5 of chapter 97 of the Laws of 1872, approved February 29th, (Laws 1872, p. 184,) a portion of said Sedgwick county was detached, and the territory so detached was annexed to, and made a part of, the county of Harvey, a new county created by said chapter 97; that the town of Newton, by such change in the boundary of Sedgwick county, and by force of said section 5, became a town of said Harvey county; that of said  $26\frac{1}{4}$  miles length of said Wichita & Southwestern Railroad,  $9\frac{7}{8}$  miles thereof was now situated in said Harvey county, and  $15\frac{3}{8}$  miles thereof in said Sedgwick county; that said

Long, 27 Kan. 692; State v. Barrett, Id. 218.

Sedgwick county had duly and legally issued its bonds in the sum of $200,000 to the Wichita & Southwestern Railroad Company in payment of its *subscription to the stock of said company in that amount; that the interest on said bonds, at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, was payable semi-annually on the first of January and first of July; that the interest on such bonds to become due in 1874 was $14,000; that by section 6 of said chapter 97 of the Laws of 1872 said "territory detached from the county of Sedgwick, and made a part of the county of Harvey," should "pay the same proportion of said ($200,000) indebtedness as the length of the W. & S. W. Railroad within the county of Harvey bears to the entire length of said railroad between Newton and Wichita;" that the proportion of said $14,000 interest for the year 1874 to be paid by Harvey county was $5,166.98; that the defendant, H. W. Bailey, was the county clerk of said Harvey county; that on the first of September, 1873, the county clerk of Sedgwick county had duly certified to the defendant, as county clerk of said Harvey county, said sum of $5,166.98, "as the amount of taxes to be levied upon the said territory detached from said county of Sedgwick, and made a part of said county of Harvey, to pay the said interest on the said bonds accruing on said first of January and the first day of July, 1874, and delivered said certificate to said defendant; that said defendant had neglected and refused, and still neglects and refuses, to apportion said amount upon the taxable property situated in the territory detached from Sedgwick county as aforesaid, and insert the same so apportioned in the tax-roll of the county of Harvey," etc. An alternative writ was allowed, commanding Bailey to apportion said sum of $5,166.98 upon the taxable property in said detached territory, and insert the same in the tax-roll of Harvey county, to be collected on the assessment of the year 1873, or to show *603 cause, etc.<sup>1</sup> Bailey appeared, and moved to quash the *alternative writ on the ground that said section 6 of said chapter 97 of the Laws of 1872, which undertakes to prescribe the duty which it is sought by the writ to compel him to perform, is unconstitutional and void.

An action of this same title and character, and between these same parties, was determined in this court at the July term, 1873, and is reported in 11 Kan. 631. That action was commenced in December, 1872, to compel the defendant, Bailey, to apportion the amount of $5,166.98 of the $14,000 interest on said $200,000 bonds, payable in the year 1873, on the taxable property in said detached territory, and insert the same in the tax-rolls of Harvey county, to be collected upon the assessment thereof for the year 1872. To the alternative writ issued in that case Bailey answered, setting up four several defenses, each of which was considered and determined by the court on the final hearing. But no one of the defenses in that action raised the question which is raised in this action, (to-wit, whether section 6 of said chapter 97 of the Laws of 1872 is constitutional,) nor was this question suggested even in the briefs of counsel in that case. 11 Kan. 632-635. The court did not consider any question in that case except those raised and presented on the answer of the defendant, and, not regarding those defenses as sufficient, awarded a peremptory mandamus.

C. S. Bowman and J. J. Barker, for defendant, in support of the motion to quash the alternative writ.

We contend that section 6 of the act mentioned and referred to in the alternative writ of mandamus—"An act entitled 'An act amendatory of, and supplemental to, an act entitled "An act defining the boundaries of counties," approved March 3, 1868,' " (Laws 1872, c. 97, p. 183)—is in direct conflict with section 16 of article 2 of the constitution, which provides that "no bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title." People v. Denahy, 20 Mich. 349. The provisions of the fundamental law that the subject shall be expressed, and clearly expressed, are mandatory. Every word contained in the constitution must have a meaning, and intend what it says. Harvey v. Coffin, 5 Ind. 567; Newell v. People, 7 N. Y. 83; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 188; Indiana C. Ry. Co. v. Bradley, 7 Ind. 49; Van Horne v. Dorrance, 2 Dall. 308; People v. Allen, 42 N. Y. 404; Weaver v. Lapsley, 43 Ala. 229; Potter's Dwar. 354.

The framers of the constitution classified the important subjects of legislation under appropriate heads. They assumed that different subjects of legislation existed; and in the constitution the subject of counties, their organization, etc., was wisely kept entirely separate and distinct from the subject of finance and taxation. Const. arts. 9, 11; Bright v. McCullough, 27 Ind. 226. In determining whether more than one subject is contained in an act, the true test is: "Might this identical matter reasonably be looked for under this particular head?" Bright v. McCullough, 27 Ind. 227; Ryerson v. Utley, 16

Mich. 277; City of St. Louis v. Tiefel, 42 Mo. 591; *McGill v. *604 McGill*, 4 La. Ann. 268; Banker v. Brent, *4 Minn. 524, (Gil. 408;) Town of Fishkill v. Fishkill B. P. R. Co., 22 Barb. 643; People v. O'Brien, 38 N. Y. 195; City of New York v. Colgate, 12 N. Y. 146. The title must cover the subject of the act. Town of Fishkill v. Fishkill B. P. R. Co., 22 Barb. 642; Ryerson v. Utley, 16 Mich. 279; Igoe v. State, 14 Ind. 240; State v. Bowers, Id. 195; City of St. Louis v. Tiefel, 42 Mo. 578; People v. Mellen, 32 Ill. 181; Gas-kin v. Anderson, 55 Barb. 259; Smith v. City of New York, 34 How. Pr. 508; City of New York v. Colgate, 12 N. Y. 146; State v. Brandon, 6 Kan. *255.

And even if we should concede that the title of the act in question might have been made sufficiently comprehensive to cover the provisions of section 6, the fatal objection would still remain that this was not done. Cooley, Const. Lim. 149; Ryerson v. Utley, 16 Mich. 278; Mewherter v. Price, 11 Ind. 201; Foley v. State, 9 Ind. 363; State v. Hixon, 41 Mo. 39; People v. Mellen, 32 Ill. 181; Town of Fishkill v. Fishkill B. P. R. Co., 22 Barb. 642; Waters v. Langdon, 40 Barb. 408; State v. Bowers, 14 Ind. 196; Prothro v. Orr, 12 Ga. 41.

The legislature may make the title of an act as restrictive as it pleases, and the courts cannot enlarge its scope. The constitution has made the title the conclusive index to the legislative intent. Cooley, Const. Lim. 149; Wolcott v. Wigton, 7 Ind. 49; Township of Green-castle v. Black, 5 Ind. 567; City of St. Louis v. Tiefel, 42 Mo. 592. "When a statute which applies to the state at large contains provisions of a local or private nature, not disclosed by its title, the later provisions are void." People v. County of Chautauqua, 43 N. Y. 10. Nothing can be incorporated in an amendment which was not included in the title of the original act. State v. Bowers, 14 Ind. 198.

We insist that section 6 of the act mentioned in the alternative writ of mandamus is in direct contravention of section 17 of article 2 of the constitution, which provides: "All laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation throughout the state; and in all cases where a general law can be made applicable, no special law shall be enacted." Thomas v. County of Clay, 5 Ind. 4.

Section 6 of the act in question specially prescribes the duties of certain officers in a special case. This special provision cannot find a place in a general statute. People v. County of Chautauqua, 43 N. Y. 10; Pullman v. City of New York, 54 Barb. 169; People v. O'Brien, 38 N. Y. 193; Smith v. City of New York, 34 How. Pr. 511. And it is the duty of the courts, and not the legislature, to say whether a general law can be made applicable. County of Knox v. Jones, 7 Ind. 4; Smith v. City of New York, 34 How. Pr. 511.

*605 **H. C. Sluss*, Co. Atty., for plaintiff.

"No bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title." So says the constitution; and we deem it unnecessary for the purposes of this case to discuss the question as to whether this provision is to be considered mandatory or directory. Respectable authorities, however, hold it to be merely directory of the mode of legislation. Washington v. Page, 4 Cal. 388; Miller v. State, 3 Ohio St. 475, 484; Pierpont v. Crouch, 10 Cal. 315; Pim v. Nicholson, 6 Ohio St. 176, 180. It seems to be pretty well settled that the subject of a legislative enactment may be broad and comprehensive "as the common law itself," and that the legislature, in its discretion, may determine how broad it may be, or how restricted it shall be, and with what degree of clearness and particularity that subject shall be expressed in the title of the enactment. Cooley, Const. Lim. 144; Bowman v. Cockrill, 6 Kan. *311, *335. The subject expressed in the title of the act in question (chapter 97, Laws 1872) is to amend and add to an act entitled "An act defining the boundaries of counties." It is consistent with this subject to enlarge, diminish, or change the boundaries of counties then existing, and, as a result of such change, to form and define the bounds of the new and additional counties. The original act (chapter 24, Gen. St.) declared into what counties the state was divided, gave names to them, and defined their boundaries. To change this, to some extent, was the subject and purpose of the act in question. This subject is comprehensive enough to include the provisions to create the county of Harvey, and the purpose to create the county of Harvey is sufficiently clearly expressed in the title of the act. Cooley, Const. Lim. 146; Morford v. Unger, 8 Iowa, 82; Duncombe v. Prindle, 12 Iowa, 1. It was legitimate for the legislature to incorporate in the act all such exceptions, saving clauses, and provisions which it might deem essential to protect vested rights, to effectuate the object of the act, or to provide for any contingency that might arise in consequence of the new state of affairs produced by the passage of the act itself, so that such provisions were not entirely inconsistent with and repugnant to the general subject and purpose expressed in the title. State v. Squires, 26 Iowa, 340; People v. Mahaney, 13 Mich. 481; Harriman v. State, 2 Iowa, 280. There is nothing contained or enacted in section 6 of the act in question inconsistent with or repugnant to the subject of creating the new county of Harvey, or inconsistent with the subject of amending and adding to the original act defining the boundaries of counties. There is nothing contained in section 6 that would require distinct and independent legislation to effect. If it was legitimate or appropriate for the legislature to make the provision contained in section 6 at all, it was legitimate and proper that it should be done in and as a part of the very act creating the county of Harvey; and that it had the power, there is no question. Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 30, 36, 37, 127-129; Cooley, Const. Lim. 191-193.

As to the second proposition advanced in defendant's brief, we refer to State v. Hitchcock, 1 Kan. *178, which, we think, sufficiently disposes of the point.

VALENTINE, J. On March 3, 1868, an act of the legislature was passed entitled "An act defining the boundaries of counties." Gen. St. 228. Under this act the boundaries of 79 counties were defined and established. In 1872 another act was passed entitled "An act amendatory and supplemental to an act entitled 'An act defining the boundaries of counties,' approved March 3, 1868." Laws 1872, p. 183. Under this act the boundaries of four counties were defined and established. Two of these counties were created by the act, and the other two simply had their boundaries changed. Section 5 of the act created the new county of Harvey, and in doing so took a portion of the county of Sedgwick and placed it within the boundaries of the county of Harvey. Section 6 reads as follows:

"Sec. 6. The territory detached from the county of Sedgwick, and made a part of the county of Harvey, by this act, shall not in anywise be relieved from its obligation to pay its proportion of all indebtedness of Sedgwick county which may be occasioned by the issue of bonds for or in aid of any railroad, which issue of bonds has heretofore been voted by the said county of Sedgwick; and the territory so detached shall pay the same proportion of said indebtedness as the length of the Wichita & Southwestern Railroad within the county of Harvey bears to the entire length of said railroad between Newton and Wichita. The county clerk of Sedgwick county shall annually certify to the county clerk of Harvey county the amount of the taxes to be levied on territory so detached, to pay the interest and principal of said indebtedness as the same shall become due; and the county clerk of Harvey county shall apportion the same upon the taxable property situated in said detached territory, and insert the same in the assessment roll of his county; and the same shall be collected as other taxes; and, when collected, shall be paid over by the county treasurer of Harvey county to the county treasurer of Sedgwick county, to be applied in the same manner as if collected by him." Laws 1872, pp. 184, 185.

The first part of section 16 of article 2 of the constitution of Kansas reads as follows: "No bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title." Now it is claimed that said section 6 is in conflict with this provision of the constitution, and therefore void. This is the only question involved in this case. About twenty-seven states have constitutional provisions similar to that of ours. In two of these states—Ohio and California—the provision is considered merely as directory to the legislature; but in all the others in which decisions upon the subject have been made, the provision is considered as mandatory. And it ought to be so considered. It would be a dangerous doctrine to announce that any of the provisions of the constitution may be obeyed or disregarded at the mere will or pleasure of the legislature, unless it is clear, beyond all question, that such was the intention of the framers of the instrument. It would seem to be a lowering of the proper dignity of such an instrument to say that it descends to prescribing mere rules of order in unessential matters, which may be followed or disregarded at pleasure. Judge COOLEY uses the following language: "The fact is this: that whatever constitutional *608 *provision can be looked upon as directory merely, is very likely to be treated by the legislature as if it was devoid even of moral obligation, and to be therefore habitually disregarded. To say that a provision is directory, seems, with many persons, to be equivalent to saying that it is not law at all. That this ought not to be so, must be conceded. That it is so, we have abundant reason and good authority for saying. If, therefore, a constitutional provision is to be enforced at all, it must be treated as mandatory." Cooley, Const. Lim. 150. Now, whether what Judge COOLEY says is true or not, we have no doubt, both upon reason and authority, that the said constitutional provision should be considered as mandatory; and whenever the legislature clearly violates the provision by putting something in the body of an act which is clearly not embraced in the title thereof, or is wholly foreign to the title, the courts should declare such portion of the act void.

The language of this constitutional provision differs in some respects in the different states. We shall notice some of these differences. In some of the states the word "bill" is used, where in others the word "act," or "law" is used. But, as the question is usually presented to the courts, it can probably make but little if any difference which one of the words is used. Each, as presented to the courts, means the final determination of the legislature upon the particular subject embraced in such "bill," "act," or "law." The word "act" is probably the best word to use, for it includes no action of the legislature, or of any person, prior to the final passage of the act by the legislature, and it includes the whole of the act,—nothing more and nothing less. The word "law" is probably the worst word to use, for a portion of any act may be law, as well as the whole of the act. "Law," however, as here used, is intended to be synonymous with "act." Our constitution, as well as those of Ohio, Nebraska, Pennsylvania, New York, Wisconsin, and perhaps some of the other states, uses the word "bill." The word "bill" means the bill as it is first introduced *609 into one of the houses of the legislature, and as it *may at any time be, in any of its stages, until it is finally passed by both houses of the legislature, signed by the officers of each house, signed by the governor, and filed away by the secretary of state, as the highest evidence of what the law is. When the bill is thus filed it is called the "enrolled bill." It is then the embodiment of the "act"—the "law"—that finally passed the legislature, and should contain but one subject, which subject should be clearly expressed in its title. In our opinion, said constitutional provision is an imperative mandate to the legislature, commanding them that "no bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title;" and if any bill, in any of its stages, should be in conflict with this provision, the legislature should, on or before its final passage, correct it, so as to make it harmonize with said provision; and if the legislature should fail to so correct it, the bill itself, or some portion thereof, would be void.

In Florida, Indiana, Iowa, Nevada, and Oregon their constitutional provision upon this subject is that every act or law "shall embrace but one subject, and matters properly connected therewith, which subject shall be expressed in the title." [In Florida and Nevada the language is, "which subject shall be briefly expressed in the title."] In the Kansas constitution the above words in italics are omitted. Hence in Florida, Indiana, Iowa, Nevada, and Oregon the legislature may, without violating their constitution, place in the body of the act matters properly connected with the subject expressed in the title thereof, (although these matters themselves may not be expressed in the title,) while in this state, under our constitution, such a thing could not be done. This difference will account for certain decisions made in some of the above-mentioned states. These are the only differences of which we shall take notice.

The next question is whether said section 6, or any part thereof, is not expressed in the title of the act. We suppose there can be but one answer to this question. Neither the act of 1868, nor the *610 act of 1872, mentions any subject except that of *"defining the boundaries of counties." This title is probably broad enough to authorize the changing of county lines, the establishing of county lines, the creation of the boundary lines of new counties,—substantially the creation of new counties; but still it can do nothing more than to authorize the defining and establishing of the territorial boundaries of either old or new counties. It cannot authorize the establishment of an arbitrary rule, or, indeed, of any rule, for taxing the inhabitants of that portion of Sedgwick county attached to Harvey county. The title of the act is not broad enough to include assessment or taxation of any kind. Of course, the legislature could have passed a bill under a title broad enough to include all that is contained in said sections 5 and 6, and such bill would have been valid; but they did not do it. Who would think of looking for any kind of assessment or taxation under such a title as that prefixed to said chapter 97 of the Laws of 1872? And who would think of finding under such a title an arbitrary rule of assessment and taxation, differing in almost every particular from the general rule established for the other counties in the state? As the legislature will frequently be called upon to change the boundary lines of counties, it would probably be better for them to pass a general law for the assessment and collection of taxes from territory detached from one county and attached to another, where one county is more in debt than the other; otherwise they will have to make the title to the act in each case broad enough to include assessment and taxation to pay previous indebtedness, as well as to include the changing of boundary lines.

Whether the rule attempted to be established for taxing the territory detached from Sedgwick county, and attached to Harvey, is just or not, we cannot tell. It would seem that if said territory should continue to assist in paying the old debts of Sedgwick county it ought to be relieved from assisting to pay the old debts of Harvey county. And it would further seem that if said territory is still to continue to assist in paying the old debts of Sedgwick county, it ought in doing so to pay as a property tax the same percentage on the value *611 *of the property within said territory which the territory still remaining in Sedgwick county does on its property. The rule that "the territory so detached shall pay the same proportion of said indebtedness as the length of the Wichita & Southwestern Railroad within the county of Harvey bears to the entire length of said railroad between Newton and Wichita" may be unjust, and it is certainly very arbitrary. We cannot, however, take judicial notice that it is unjust, and therefore could not, in the absence of evidence showing the same to be unjust, declare that the rule is unconstitutional for that reason. County of Sedgwick v. Bailey, 11 Kan. *631, *635.

Section 5 of said act defining the boundaries of Harvey county, and detaching a portion of the territory of Sedgwick county, and attaching it to the county of Harvey, does not depend for its validity upon section 6 of the act which provides for levying and collecting taxes from said detached territory to pay certain old debts of Sedgwick county, and therefore the whole of said section 6 may be void and the whole of section 5 be valid. Hence no argument can be made that it was necessary to pass section 6 in order to pass section 5.

This provision of the constitution, found in the constitutions of the most of the states, is elaborately discussed in Sedgwick's Statutory and Constitutional Law, (second edition.) See, also, Cooley, Const. Lim. 141-151.

The motion to quash the alternative writ of mandamus will be sustained, and judgment rendered for the defendant for costs.

*612      *J. F. BABBITT v. AMANDA CORBY, Adm'x, etc.

July Term, 1874.

1. Error: Waiver. A party who voluntarily takes all the benefits of a judgment will not be permitted to say there was error in such judgment.<sup>1</sup>
2. ———: Assent to Judgment. Where a party claimed title by virtue of tax deeds, but such title was adjudged void, and judgment given him for the money paid therefor, held, that a voluntary acceptance of the money thus adjudged to him was a waiver of any error in the judgment as to title.

Error from Brown district court.

Mrs. Corby, as administratrix of the estate of John Corby, deceased, in June, 1872, recovered a judgment in the district court against Royal Baldwin, which became a lien on his lands. W. W. Guthrie, J. F. Babbitt, C. H. Jones, and F. F. Miles, respectively, had or claimed liens on a certain quarter section of land belonging to Baldwin, by reason of which no sale of said lands could be made under said judgment in favor of Mrs. Corby against Baldwin. To determine their liens, and subject said land to sale under her judgment, Mrs. Corby <sup>1</sup> A party holding the fee in mortgaged premises, and against whom a decree of foreclosure is entered, cannot, after voluntarily taking the surplus arising from the sale of said premises upon such decree, maintain a proceeding in the supreme court, to set aside the decree of sale, Hoffmire v. Holcomb, 17 Kan. 378; same principle applied, Rasure v. McGrath, 23 Kan. 601; where a party in an action of ejectment elects, after the verdict is rendered, to institute proceedings under the occupying claimant law, and demands a jury for that purpose, he is estopped from instituting proceedings in error to reverse the judgment rendered in such action; and this, although the judgment had not yet been rendered when the election and demand were made. Bradley v. Rogers, 5 Pac. Rep. 874.

brought suit against Guthrie, Babbitt, Jones, and Miles, and said Baldwin and his wife. Babbitt answered, claiming title to said quarter section of land under and in virtue of two tax deeds duly issued to him, one dated June 15 and duly recorded June 25, 1864; said deed being issued upon a tax sale made in September, 1860, for unpaid taxes levied on said land for the year 1859; and the other of said deeds being issued May 7, 1872, and duly recorded August 12, 1872, being issued upon a tax sale made in May, 1869, for unpaid taxes levied on said land for the year 1868. He also alleged that he had paid taxes on said lands since 1862, in addition to those for which the deeds were issued, to the sum of $133.15, exclusive of interest. On the trial the district court, at the April term, 1873, found that "the said tax deeds set up by said defendant J. F. Babbitt in his said answer are each invalid as any conveyance, or to vest any *613 title, but the said second-described tax deed is valid *as a lien in favor of said Babbitt for the amount of taxes by him paid on said land, with interest thereon as provided by law, as is set up in his answer, which the court finds is the sum of $147.57." Upon the trial of the whole case the court decreed that said land be sold, and decreed that said sum of $147.57 should be paid to Babbitt out of the proceeds of such sale. From such decree Babbitt appealed to this court. After the petition in error and transcript were filed in this court, the lands were sold under said decree, and the amount of Babbitt's lien was paid to and accepted by him. Whereupon Mrs. Corby; defendant in error, filed a motion to dismiss, and brought the fact of such payment to the record by affidavit.

Guthrie & Metcalf, for defendant in error.

W. D. Webb and Ira J. Lacock, for plaintiff in error.

Since this case came into this court, it is alleged that Babbitt has taken the money that was deposited for the taxes that he had paid, and it is contended that he can no longer contest his right to the land. We admit that when one person tenders to another the amount that he admits is due to that other, on a claim made by him, and the tender is made as a full satisfaction of the claim, then, if it is accepted, that would be deemed the condition of the acceptance, and no action could be sustained to recover the amount. But here is an attempt made to set aside two deeds. It is not an offer to buy our land, to pay us an amount that we claim against Corby, nor does a receipt of the amount by us give Corby a right to our land, or set aside our deeds. Our title cannot be divested in that way.

BREWER, J. Plaintiff in error was with others a defendant in an action brought in the district court by defendant in error. In *614 that action he claimed title to the premises involved in the suit by virtue of two tax deeds. The court found against the validity of the deeds, but found that by reason thereof he was entitled to a repayment of the money paid by him therefor, and interest, and ordered such sum paid out of the proceeds of the sale of the property. To this plaintiff in error excepted, and commenced this proceeding in error to reverse such judgment. After commencing this proceeding he voluntarily accepted the amount found due and ordered paid to him. In other words, he has voluntarily accepted the benefits of a judgment which he was seeking to reverse. Defendant in error has filed a motion to dismiss this proceeding on account of such acceptance, and we think her motion should be sustained. By voluntarily accepting the proceeds of the judgment, the plaintiff in error waived any errors, if errors there were, in it. A party who complains of a judgment must be consistent in his conduct with reference to it. If he recognizes its validity, he will not be heard to say that it is invalid. And surely there can be no clearer recognition of a judgment than is shown here. He claimed title. The court found against his title, but decreed him money. He says there was error in decreeing him money instead of title, and then voluntarily receives the money. The two are inconsistent, and, having received the money, he will not now be permitted to say there was error in giving it to him.

The motion to dismiss will be sustained.

CASES IN 13 KANSAS

13 KAN. 17, BOARD OF EDUCATION OF CITY OF ATCHISON v. SCOVILLE

Garnishment—Nature and enforcement of order.—Cited in C. H. Fitch & Co. v. Manhattan Fire Ins. Co., 23 Kan. 366; Morgan v. Saline Valley Bank, 4 Kan. App. 668, 46 Pac. 61; Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Cunningham, 7 Kan. App. 47, 51 Pac. 972—holding justice's order not a final adjudication of the garnishee's liability: Phelps v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 28 Kan. 165, holding that garnishee proceedings in justice court did not reach a liability incurred by the garnishee subsequent to the service of the garnishee summons; Muse, Spivey & Co. v. Lehman, 30 Kan. 514, 1 Pac. 804, holding that an order, on appeal from justice court, that the garnishee pay over money, was not res judicata as to a mortgagee who claimed the money; C. L. Mull & Sons v. Jones, 33 Kan. 112, 5 Pac. 388, holding that a justice's order on a garnishee to pay over money was not conclusive on the defendant; Miller v. Noyes, 34 Kan. 13, 7 Pac. 602; Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. v. Gough, 35 Kan. 1, 10 Pac. 89—holding a justice's order against a garnishee was neither a judgment nor a final order, and was not reviewable; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Reid, 34 Kan. 410, 8 Pac. 846, holding that injunction would lie to restrain the enforcement of an execution issued on a judgment rendered by a justice against a garnishee in the garnishment proceeding; Linder v. Murdy, 37 Kan. 152, 14 Pac. 447, holding that the plaintiff by his garnishment proceeding obtained only such right to enforce payment against the garnishee as the defendant had; Bank of Le Roy v. Harding, 1 Kan. App. 389, 41 Pac. 680, holding that a justice's order on a garnishee to pay money into court is not a judgment.

Followed in Atlantic & P. R. Co. v. Hopkins, 94 U. S. 11, 24 L. Ed. 48, holding that execution could not issue against a garnishee upon his failing to make payment as ordered.

Distinguished in New Mexico Nat. Bank v. Brooks, 9 N. M. 113, 49 Pac. 947, holding that a judgment against a garnishee, being made final by statute, was res judicata as to a defendant with notice of the garnishment proceeding.

Supplementary proceedings.—Cited in note in 100 Am. Dec. 511, on proceedings supplemental to execution.

Interpleader.—Cited in Schloredt v. Boyden, 9 Wyo. 392, 64 Pac. 225, holding a third party could not interplead and be made a party to a garnishment proceeding.

Cited in note in 35 Am. Dec. 700, 710, 711, on interpleader in equity; in 91 Am. St. Rep. 597, on right of interpleader.

Imprisonment for debt.—Cited in notes in 34 L. R. A. 638; 37 Am. St. Rep. 759—on statute violating prohibition against imprisonment for debt.

Mechanics' liens.—Cited in note in 35 L. R. A. 145, on mechanics' liens on public property.

13 KAN. 35, AMERICAN BRIDGE CO. v. MURPHY

Cited in Freeman v. Duncan, 27 Kan. 784.

Appeal and error—Review of evidence.—Cited in Kansas Pac. R. Co. v. Kunkel, 17 Kan. 145, holding that a verdict sustained by evidence on every essential fact will not be disturbed on review, though the evidence preponderates against it; Chicago, R. I. & Pac. R. Co. v. Doyle, 18 Kan. 58; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Perego, 36 Kan. 424, 14 Pac. 7—holding that a judgment will not be reversed on the ground alone that the verdict is not sustained by sufficient evidence; Fanson v. Harris, 21 Kan. 734; Radway v. Ellis, 37 Kan. 256, 15 Pac. 220—holding that, where there was some testimony of every fact necessary to the verdict, the judgment would not be disturbed; Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. v. Foster, 39 Kan. 329, 18 Pac. 285, holding that the court properly overruled a demurrer to the evidence and sustained a verdict for plaintiff, who had made out a prima facie case.

Receipt as evidence of payment.—Cited in Ellicott v. Barnes, 31 Kan. 170, 1 Pac. 767, holding that a receipt could be explained by evidence aliunde; Clark v. Marbourg, 33 Kan. 471, 6 Pac. 548, holding that a party may show that a receipt in full was given by mistake; Solomon R. Co. v. Jones, 34 Kan. 443, 8 Pac. 730, holding that receipts are not conclusive on a party who neither reads them nor has opportunity to read them; St. Louis, Ft. S. & W. R. Co. v. Davis, 35 Kan. 464, 11 Pac. 421, holding that a receipt in full given upon payment of only a part, did not discharge the full debt, and that a receipt was merely prima facie evidence of payment; Brooks v. Hall, 36 Kan. 697, 14 Pac. 236, holding that the rule that a receipt is open to explanation was inapplicable, where the settlement in which the receipt was given was not impugned; Neely v. Thompson, 68 Kan. 193, 75 Pac. 117, holding check to have been accepted as full settlement; Fire Ins. Ass'n v. Wickham, 141 U. S. 564, 12 Sup. Ct. 84, 35 L. Ed. 860, holding that a receipt in full, which did not partake of the nature of a contract, was not conclusive.

Distinguished in Jersey Island Dredging Co. v. Whitney, 149 Cal. 269, 86 Pac. 509, 691, holding that an indorsement on a disputed bill that a certain amount was paid "in full satisfaction of all claims" discharged all claims.

13 KAN. 41, BRADY v. SWEETLAND

Officers—Restraining interference with office.—Distinguished in Neeland v. State, 39 Kan. 154, 18 Pac. 165, holding that injunction would not lie to protect county officers, where no intrusion of their offices was threatened, or to determine title to the office; Butler v. White, 83 Fed. 578, holding that the appointing power may be enjoined from removing officers in violation of the civil service act; Howe v. Dunlap, 12 Okl. 467, 72 Pac. 365, 895, holding, in a dissenting opinion, that a city attorney, who had not been removed, could enjoin other city officers from interfering with him in discharging his duties, by recognizing another as city attorney; State ex rel. Fairbanks v. Superior Court of Snohomish County, 17 Wash. 12, 48 Pac. 741, 61 Am. St. Rep. 893, holding that the court had jurisdiction to protect a de facto councilman against intrusion by one claiming the office de jure.

Same—Mode of action by board.—Distinguished in Aikman v. School District No. 16, Butler County, 27 Kan. 129, holding that a teacher's contract, signed by two of the three members of the school board in the absence of each other, without any meeting, was not binding.

13 KAN. 45, TUTT v. FERGUSON

Referred to in Scroggs v. Tutt, 23 Kan. 181 (subsequent appeal in related case).

Restraining enforcement of judgment.—Cited in Noble v. Butler, 25 Kan. 645, holding that one who negligently permitted a judgment to be rendered against him, could not enjoin its enforcement.

Cited in note in 31 L. R. A. 39, on negligence as a cause for, and as a bar to, injunctions against judgments; in 31 L. R. A. 771, on injunctions against judgments for defenses existing prior to rendition; in 32 L. R. A. 323, on equitable jurisdiction in regard to injunctions against judgments.

13 KAN. 62, CAMPBELL v. BLANKE

Continuance.—Cited in Tucker v. Garner, 25 Kan. 454, holding that a continuance was properly denied, where no sufficient diligence to procure the absent testimony was shown; Clouston v. Gray, 48 Kan. 31, 28 Pac. 983, holding that the refusal of a continuance was not reversible error, where the affidavit set forth the ultimate fact in issue, instead of the absent testimony by which affiant expected to prove such fact; Keffer v. State, 12 Wyo. 49, 73 Pac. 556, holding that refusal of a continuance was not error, where it appeared that the absent witnesses resided outside the state and defendant relied solely on their promise to attend.

Cited in note in 74 Am. Dec. 146, on continuance of civil causes.

Pleading—Attached copies part of petition.—Cited in State v. School District No. 3, Chautauqua County, 34 Kan. 237, 8 Pac. 208, holding that the contents of attached copies of instruments should be considered as part of the petition.

13 KAN. 64, ALEXANDER v. TOUHY

Fixtures—Replevin of dwelling.—Cited in Central Branch R. Co. v. Fritz, 20 Kan. 430, 27 Am. Rep. 175, holding that a dwelling house which had been wrongfully removed could be recovered by replevin as a chattel.

Same—Effect of agreement.—Cited in note in 19 L. R. A. 443, on effect of agreement to prevent fixtures from becoming part of realty.

Forfeiture of lease.—Cited in Kansas Natural Gas Co. v. Harris, 79 Kan. 167, 100 Pac. 72, holding that the lessee's violation of an oil lease did not work a forfeiture, where the lessor agreed that he would accept a valuable consideration as full performance.

13 KAN. 70, CITY OF TROY v. ATCHISON & N. R. CO.

Records—Defects and parol evidence to supply.—Cited in State v. Board of Com'rs of Pratt County, 42 Kan. 641, 22 Pac. 722, holding that the failure of the county clerk to enter of record the order calling the election did not invalidate the election; City of Denver v. Spencer, 34 Colo. 270, 82 Pac. 590, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 147, 114 Am. St. Rep. 158, holding that the proceedings of a park commission could be shown by parol where no record was kept.

Cited in note in 74 Am. Dec. 309, 310, on effect of failure to record corporate resolutions and acts; in 13 Am. St. Rep. 551, on conclusiveness of records of town meetings, etc., and power to amend same.

Estoppel against city.—Cited in Boise City v. Wilkinson, 16 Idaho, 150, 102 Pac. 148, holding that the doctrine of estoppel may be invoked against a city, seeking to eject one from a portion of a street which it has deeded away and long recognized as being privately owned, while valuable and permanent improvements were being placed upon it.

Cited in note in 137 Am. St. Rep. 371, on estoppel of county or municipal corporation to contest illegal claims or expenditures.

13 KAN. 74, POWERS v. KINDT

Appeal and error—Errors insufficiently presented.—Cited in State v. Skinner, 34 Kan. 256, 8 Pac. 420, holding that, no reference to costs being made in defendant's briefs, exceptions thereto would not be reviewed; State v. Coulter, 40 Kan. 673, 20 Pac. 525, holding that the Supreme Court on rehearing would consider only such errors as were specifically pointed out on the original hearing.

Trespassing animals.—Cited in Hefley v. Baker, 19 Kan. 9, holding that one in peaceable possession could recover at least nominal damages against a trespasser who drove his cattle upon the premises; Swanson v. Groat, 12 Idaho, 148, 85 Pac. 384, holding that a party is liable who drives his stock upon another's lands, though uninclosed; Monroe v. Cannon, 24 Mont. 316, 61 Pac. 863, 81 Am. St. Rep. 439; Jones v. Blythe, 33 Utah, 362, 93 Pac. 994; Cosgriff Bros. v. Miller, 10 Wyo. 190, 68 Pac. 206, 98 Am. St. Rep. 977—holding that one was liable who intentionally herded his sheep upon another's land, though it was unfenced; Walker v. Bloomingcamp, 34 Or. 391, 43 Pac. 175, 56 Pac. 809, holding that one is liable who grazes his stock upon another's uninclosed land; Hecht v. Harrison, 5 Wyo. 279, 40 Pac. 306, on liability for stock trespassing on insufficiently fenced land, without any holding on the point.

Cited in notes in 22 L. R. A. 60, 64; 49 Am. Dec. 255, 258; 73 Am. Dec. 149 (par. 3)—on liability for injuries by trespassing animals; in 81 Am. St. Rep. 449, 451, on liability of owners of stock herded or ranging on lands of another without lawful fence.

13 KAN. 78, LARIMER v. KELLY

New trial—Juror drinking intoxicants.—Cited in State v. Tatlow, 34 Kan. 80, 8 Pac. 267; State v. Sorter, 52 Kan. 531, 34 Pac. 1036—holding that the mere drinking of intoxicating liquor by some of the jurors during the trial did not require the granting of a new trial.

Cited in note in 35 Am. Dec. 258, on misconduct of jurors as ground for new trial.

13 KAN. 80, JENNINGS v. STATE

Distinguished in State v. Jarrett, 46 Kan. 754, 27 Pac. 146.

Warrant—Sufficiency.—Cited in State v. Tennison, 30 Kan. 726, 18 Pac. 948, holding preliminary warrant sufficient where, together with the testimony on the preliminary examination, it disclosed to the defendant the nature and character of the offense charged; State v. Reedy, 44 Kan. 190, 24 Pac. 66, holding that the warrant prior to a preliminary examination need not give a detailed description of the offense; State v. Arnstein, 9 Kan. App. 697, 59 Pac. 602, holding that a warrant which referred to the filing of the indictment and described the offense as "a certain crime of violating the prohibitory liquor law" was sufficient.

Cited in note in 20 L. R. A. 424, on effect of writ or process issued without seal of court.

Recognizance—Sufficiency.—Cited in Kansas City v. Hescher, 4 Kan. App. 782, 46 Pac. 1005, holding that a recognizance on appeal from police court was not void in failing to state the particular offense charged; United States v. Eld- ridge, 5 Utah, 161, 13 Pac. 673, holding that, to hold the sureties on a forfeited recognizance, it was not necessary for the recognizance to have been filed.

Same—Action.—Cited in Swerdsfeger v. State, 21 Kan. 475, holding that the petition in an action on a forfeited recognizance was sufficient, where it conformed to the statute.

13 KAN. 92, GOLDEN v. ELLIOTT

Discretion as to mandamus.—Cited in State v. Board of Com'rs of Anderson County, 28 Kan. 67; Evans v. Thomas, 32 Kan. 469, 4 Pac. 833—holding that the courts may exercise considerable discretion in allowing and refusing writs of mandamus.

13 KAN. 96, LIGHT v. POWERS

Parol promise to accept bill.—Cited in note in 26 L. R. A. 621, on validity of parol promise to accept an order or bill of exchange.

13 KAN. 99, BARTLETT v. STATE

Public interest—Who entitled to sue.—Cited in Crowell v. Ward, 16 Kan. 60, holding that, after the ward became of age, she could maintain an action in her own name on her guardian's bond, which was executed in the name of the state as obligee; State ex rel. Reed v. Commissioners of Marion County, 21 Kan. 419, holding that action to enjoin county commissioners from letting a contract could be brought by the state on relation of county attorney; State ex rel. Taggart v. Addison, 76 Kan. 699, 92 Pac. 581, holding that an action to oust city officers illegally appointed was properly brought by the state on the relation of the county attorney; State ex rel. Roberts v. Lawrence, 76 Kan. 940, 92 Pac. 1131, holding that the state, on the relation of the county attorney, could maintain an action to compel the delivery of the county treasurer's records to the person declared in contest proceedings to be entitled to the office, though an appeal was pending; State v. Shufford, 77 Kan. 263, 94 Pac. 137, holding that a private person could not maintain quo warranto in the name of the state to disorganize an incorporated city, so as to withdraw his property from taxation; State ex rel. Young v. City of Neodesha, 3 Kan. App. 319, 45 Pac. 122, holding that the county attorney could maintain an action in the name of the state to enjoin city officers from doing an unlawful act; Board of Education of Territory v. Territory, 12 Okl. 286, 70 Pac. 792, holding that a county attorney could bring an action triable in his county to enjoin the board of education of Oklahoma territory from misappropriating public funds; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Huston, 27 Okl. 606, 113 Pac. 190, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 380, holding that a county could maintain an action in the name of the state to enjoin state officers other than the Governor from misapplying public funds.

Distinguished in Baughman v. Nation, 76 Kan. 668, 92 Pac. 548, holding that a party in possession of the office of police judge could not maintain an action to oust defendant from the distinct office of judge of the city court.

13 KAN. 104, HOUSER v. PEARCE

Measure of damages.—Cited in Skagit Railway & Lumber Co. v. Cole, 2 Wash. 57, 25 Pac. 1077, on measure of damages for breach of a contract to furnish supplies for logging operations.

13 KAN. 107, FURROW v. CHAPIN

Cited in Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Houseman, 41 Kan. 300, 21 Pac. 284.

Judgment—Parties.—Cited in Palmer v. Meiners, 17 Kan. 478, holding that it was error to render judgment against persons not parties to the action; Kinney v. Hynds, 7 Wyo. 22, 49 Pac. 403, 52 Pac. 1081, holding that plaintiff was not prosecution for contempt for violating a writ of mandamus; In re Barnhouse, 60 Kan. 849, 58 Pac. 480, holding that the statute has deprived judges of the power at chambers to punish for contempt.

Cited in note in 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 595, on character of contempt for violation of injunction to protect private right.

Same—Parties punishable.—Cited in State v. City of Pittsburg, 80 Kan. 710, 104 Pac. 847, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 226, 133 Am. St. Rep. 227, holding that all parties who attempted to defeat the purpose of an injunction were guilty of contempt of court, though they may not have violated any injunction directed expressly against them.

Distinguished in Re Reese, 98 Fed. 984, holding that a nonresident could not be punished for contempt for violating a federal restraining order, where he was not made a party to the injunction proceeding even by description.

Same—Jury trial.—Cited in State ex rel. Curtis v. Durein, 46 Kan. 695, 27 Pac. 148, holding party charged with contempt for violating an injunction not entitled to a jury trial.

13 KAN. 136, STATE v. GRAHAM

Quo warranto proceedings.—Cited in State v. Wilson, 30 Kan. 661, 2 Pac. 828, holding that the Legislature cannot increase, diminish, or abolish the general jurisdiction in quo warranto proceedings which is conferred upon the Supreme Court by the Constitution.

Same—Determination of right to office.—Cited in State v. Wilson, 30 Kan. 661, 2 Pac. 828, holding that the Supreme Court may oust one from an office, though his right to or forfeiture of the office has not been determined by any other court.

13 KAN. 145, SHEARER v. DOUGLAS COUNTY COM'RS

Eminent domain.—Cited in note in 31 Am. Dec. 375, on compensation for property taken under power of eminent domain.

13 KAN. 149, COMMISSIONERS OF JEFFERSON COUNTY v. McOLEARY

13 KAN. 153, REED v. WILSON

13 KAN. 155, FOOTE v. SPRAGUE

Denial of indorsement.—Cited in Underwood v. Quantic, 85 Kan. 111, 116 Pac. 361, holding that a limited denial of an indorsement, standing alone, was insufficient.

Attorney's fees on foreclosure.—Cited in Dorman v. Crozier, 14 Kan. 224, holding that it was error to tax attorney's fees, which the mortgagor had not agreed to pay.

Contract for a penalty.—Cited in Condon v. Kemper, 47 Kan. 126, 27 Pac. 829, 13 L. R. A. 671, holding that a stipulation for "liquidated damages" was for a penalty and void.

Parol evidence.—Cited in note in 20 L. R. A. 712, on extrinsic evidence to show who is liable as maker of note.

13 KAN. 161, ALBINSON v. ROBERTS

13 KAN. 164, HOOK v. BIXBY

Computation of time.—Cited in English v. Williamson, 34 Kan. 212, 8 Pac. 214, holding to exclude Sunday and include the next day, when the last day of the time to be computed falls on Sunday; Schultz v. American Clock Co., 39

EXTRA ANNOTATION
TO PRECEDING VOLUME

Settler's receipt and certificate as evidence.—Cited in Barnhart v. Ford, 41 Kan. 341, 21 Pac. 239, holding that a settler's receipt for the fees for filing his declaratory statement and his certificate were admissible on the issue of rightful possession.

13 KAN. 245, SMITH v. ROWLAND

Creation of vendor's lien.—Cited in Andrews v. Alcorn, 13 Kan. 351, holding a vendor's lien may be created by express contract of the parties; Greeno v. Barnard, 18 Kan. 518, holding a vendor's lien cannot be created by mere operation of law or of the rules of equity.

Equitable mortgage.—Cited in note in 4 Am. St. Rep. 706, on what constitutes an equitable mortgage.

13 KAN. 251, RUCKER v. DONOVAN, 19 AM. REP. 84

Stoppage in transitu.—Cited in A. B. Symns & Co. v. Wm. Schotten & Co., 35 Kan. 310, 10 Pac. 828, holding that goods stored by the carrier awaiting payment of freight are presumed to be still in transit, with the right of stoppage in the vendor.

Cited in notes in 29 Am. Dec. 387, 393, 394; 1 Am. St. Rep. 312, 313—on right of stoppage in transitu.

Issues in replevin.—Cited in Bartlett v. Ridgley Nat. Bank of Springfield, Ill., 70 Kan. 126, 78 Pac. 414, holding that the defendants could not by their pleading in replevin raise an issue distinct from the plaintiff's right to possession at the commencement of the action.

Carriers—Freight charges.—Cited in Coit v. Schwartz, 29 Kan. 344, holding that the seller was liable for freight and cartage, where the goods shipped were not as ordered; Spangler v. Butterfield, 6 Colo. 356, holding that a lien for freight and storage was paramount to the claim of an attaching creditor.

Same—Assignment of bill of lading.—Cited in note in 105 Am. St. Rep. 365, on rights and liabilities of assignees of bills of lading.

13 KAN. 257, WILLIS v. SPROULE

Objections to evidence.—Cited in Humphrey v. Collins, 23 Kan. 549; Long v. Kasebeer, 28 Kan. 226—holding that an objection to evidence must run to the specific evidence objectionable.

County commissioners and other inferior tribunals—Records—Extrinsic evidence.—Cited in Com'rs of Wabaunsee County v. Muhlenbacker, 18 Kan. 129, holding that, before viewers are appointed in highway location proceedings, the record should show that all the petitioners are householders; Oliphant v. Commissioners of Atchison County, 18 Kan. 386, holding that, while the fact that petitioners for a highway are qualified house-holders may be shown by evidence aliunde the record, such fact must in some way be made to appear; Crawford v. Board of Com'rs of Elk County, 32 Kan. 555, 4 Pac. 1011, holding order laying out public road to be prima facie valid, where the records of the board complied with the statutory requirements; Asbell v. Edwards, 63 Kan. 610, 66 Pac. 641, holding that a live stock commission's order was invalid, where the record did not show jurisdictional facts, but not deciding whether evidence aliunde of such facts would have been admissible; Hentzler v. Bradbury, 5 Kan. App. 1, 47 Pac. 330, holding that facts necessary to the jurisdiction of a township board of supervisors must be shown, and will not be presumed, but may be shown by evidence aliunde.

Same—Jurisdiction of county commissioners.—Cited in State v. Horn, 34 Kan. 556, 9 Pac. 208, holding that a county board will be kept strictly within the limits of its jurisdiction.

Same—Petitions and reports.—Cited in St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Mossman, 30 Kan. 336, 2 Pac. 146, holding that names on herd law petition would be presumed to be the genuine signatures of legal voters of the county.

Report of railroad right of way commissioners.—Cited in Leavenworth, N. & S. R. Co. v. Meyer, 50 Kan. 25, 31 Pac. 700, holding that the report of commissioners to condemn a railroad right of way will be reasonably construed.

Same—Notice of proceedings.—Distinguished in Troy v. Board of Com'rs of Doniphan County, 32 Kan. 507, 4 Pac. 1009, holding that a road cannot be vacated without notice.

Highways—Width.—Cited in Graham v. Bailard, 157 Cal. 96, 106 Pac. 215, holding that proceedings establishing a highway were not impeachable because the highway was of less width than the minimum prescribed; Board of Com'rs of Wyandotte County v. Abbott, 52 Kan. 148, 34 Pac. 416 (dissenting opinion), holding that failure of viewers to determine width of a road does not invalidate the road.

13 KAN. 269, AYRES v. CRUM

Justice of the peace—Error to district court—Motion for new trial.—Cited in Rice v. Harvey, 19 Kan. 144; Central Branch R. Co. v. Phillipi, 20 Kan. 9 (dissenting opinion)—holding that the evidence in justice court could not be reviewed, in the absence of a motion for a new trial; Tyler v. Sooy, 19 Kan. 593, holding that it could not be found that the district court erred in overruling motion for a new trial, where the motion was not in the record.

Same—Petition in error.—Cited in Greenwell v. Greenwell, 28 Kan. 413, holding defendant could not take the case from justice court to the district court on petition in error.

13 KAN. 274, STATE v. SMITH

Cited in State v. Graham, 13 Kan. 299 (appeal in related case).

Embezzlement.—Cited in State v. Lillie, 21 Kan. 728, holding that a conviction could be had for embezzling certain United States treasury notes and certain national bank notes; State v. Bancroft, 22 Kan. 170, holding that an agent of the state could be convicted of embezzlement from the state; State v. Hubbard, 58 Kan. 797, 51 Pac. 290, 39 L. R. A. 860 (dissenting opinion), holding that a receiver may be prosecuted for embezzlement; Adams v. People, 25 Colo. 532, 55 Pac. 806, holding that, under evidence showing a number of distinct items, a clerk of the district court could be convicted of failure to pay over money collected.

Cited in notes in 98 Am. Dec. 168, 172, 173; 87 Am. St. Rep. 46, 47—on embezzlement.

Same—Indictment and information.—Cited in United States v. Bornemann, 36 Fed. 257, holding that an indictment need not state the particular kind of money embezzled by a treasury cashier; State v. Carrick, 16 Nev. 120, holding that an indictment against a county treasurer for embezzlement need not state the particular kind of funds embezzled or when received; Territory v. Hale, 13 N. M. 181, 81 Pac. 583, 13 Ann. Cas. 551, holding an indictment charging embezzlement of a certain sum of money, then and there in defendant's possession, a better description being "to the grand jurors unknown," was sufficient; State v. Neilon, 43 Or. 168, 73 Pac. 321, holding that it is unnecessary to prove the particular kind and character of the money embezzled by a public officer.

Distinguished in Moore v. United States, 160 U. S. 268, 16 Sup. Ct. 294, 40 L. Ed. 422, holding that, where an indictment against an assistant postmaster for embezzlement did not allege that the money came into his possession in such capacity or describe the money, it was insufficient.

Preliminary examination.—Cited in State v. Spaulding, 24 Kan. 1, holding that a preliminary complaint charging embezzlement as city clerk was sufficient to sustain an information charging embezzlement as clerk, as agent, as officer, etc.; State v. Bailey, 32 Kan. 83, 3 Pac. 769, holding that it is sufficient that the preliminary examination papers and evidence notify the defendant of the nature and character of the offense charged; State v. Tennison, 39 Kan. 726, 18 Pac. 948, holding that the preliminary warrant was sufficient where, considered with the evidence at the preliminary examination, it showed the nature and character of the offense charged; State v. Reedy, 44 Kan. 190, 24 Pac. 66, holding that the preliminary warrant in an incest case was sufficient, though the exact relationship between the parties was not stated; State v. Myers, 54 Kan. 206, 38 Pac. 296, holding that the accused could not, after information filed, revoke his waiver of a preliminary hearing; In re Stewart, 60 Kan. 781, 57 Pac. 976, holding that technical averments are not required in the warrant of the committing magistrate.

Same—Plea in abatement.—Cited in State v. Bailey, 32 Kan. 83, 3 Pac. 769, holding that the question whether a preliminary examination has been held may be raised by a plea in abatement.

Burden of proof.—Cited in State v. Kuhuke, 26 Kan. 405, holding that, in a prosecution for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors, the burden was on the state to prove the invalidity of a license introduced by the defendant.

Questions for jury.—Cited in State v. Wilson, 62 Kan. 621, 64 Pac. 23, 52 L. R. A. 679, holding an instruction, which in effect directed a verdict of guilty, to be erroneous; State v. Truskett, 85 Kan. 804, 118 Pac. 1047, holding that, where there were no eyewitnesses to the homicide, what actually took place was for the jury and not for the court.

Board of Com'rs of Pratt County*, 24 Kan. 71, holding that a probate judge elected at a special election held only until the next general election and the qualification of his successor; State v. Mechem, 31 Kan. 435, 2 Pac. 816, holding that an appointee to the office of county attorney holds only until the next general election; State v. Foster, 36 Kan. 504, 13 Pac. 841, holding that temporary county officers held until election and qualification of successors; Davis v. Patten, 41 Kan. 480, 21 Pac. 677, holding that one could not hold the office of county treasurer for more than two successive terms, though one term was not full two years; Killion v. Herman, 43 Kan. 37, 22 Pac. 1026, holding that officers of newly organized county held only until qualification of those chosen at the next general election; State ex rel. Little v. Wentworth, 55 Kan. 296, 40 Pac. 648, holding that superintendent, assistant superintendent, steward, and matron of insane asylum hold for three years from the date their appointments take effect; dissenting opinion, maintaining that appointees to positions in insane asylum prior to the expiration of a regular three-year term should hold only until the expiration of such term and the qualification of their successors; State ex rel. Dawes v. Breidenthal, 55 Kan. 308, 40 Pac. 651, holding that an appointment of a bank commissioner to fill an exceptional vacancy lasted only until the commencement of the next regular term; Wilson v. Clark, 63 Kan. 505, 65 Pac. 705, holding that, where the Legislature by the biennial election law postponed an election to secure uniformity, it could provide for filling the offices during the interval; State v. Andrews, 64 Kan. 474, 67 Pac. 870, holding that a district judge appointed by the Governor pursuant to the biennial election law was entitled to the office during the interval before the next regular election, as against a judge attempting to hold over; Pruitt v. Squires, 64 Kan. 855, 68 Pac. 643, holding that the Governor had no authority under the biennial election law to appoint any one to the office of sheriff.

Same—Election.—Cited in Odell v. Dodge, 16 Kan. 446, holding election of justice of the peace for Great Bend township in November, 1875, to be valid; Morgan v. Board of Com'rs of Pratt County, 24 Kan. 71, on the right to elect a probate judge at a general election; State v. Mechem, 31 Kan. 435, 2 Pac. 816, holding that the amendment to the Constitution in 1875 did not change the definition of general election as the annual fall election; State v. Board of Com'rs of Kearny County, 42 Kan. 739, 22 Pac. 735, holding that it was legal for a new board to canvass election returns without compulsion.

Abolition or change of counties or townships.—Cited in Commissioners of Ottawa County v. Nelson, 19 Kan. 234, 27 Am. Rep. 101, holding "An act to regulate taxation on the change of boundary lines" to be constitutional, the Constitution not applying with the same rigidity to new townships as to older ones.

Same—Effect on offices.—Cited in Re Hinkle, 31 Kan. 712, 3 Pac. 531, holding that the abolishing of a township abolished its officers.

Change in counties or townships.—Cited in People ex rel. Lincoln County v. George, 3 Idaho, 72, 26 Pac. 983 (dissenting opinion), holding that a statute dividing a county was constitutional.

Mandamus.—Cited in *Light v. State ex rel. Administration of partnership estate—Necessity of presentation of claim.—Cited in Franklin v. Trickey, 9 Ariz. 282, 80 Pac. 352, 11 Ann. Cas. 1105, holding that it was not necessary to present a claim against partnership property which the administrator held in trust as the decedent had held it, and not as a part of the decedent's estate.

Same—Rights of surviving partner—Possession of property.—Cited in Blaker v. Sands, 29 Kan. 551, holding that a surviving partner had a right to the possession of the partnership property until he should have failed to give bond after being cited; Trickett v. Moore, 34 Kan. 755, 10 Pac. 147, holding that a debtor of a partnership cannot be made a garnishee in an action against one partner; Shattuck v. Chandler, 40 Kan. 516, 20 Pac. 225, 10 Am. St. Rep. 227, holding that a partnership estate, after the death of one partner, can be settled only as provided by statute; Teney v. Laing, 47 Kan. 297, 27 Pac. 976, holding administratrix of deceased partner could not take possession of the partnership property until the surviving partner, being cited, failed to give bond, and the administratrix had given a bond covering such property; Towler v. Bull, 3 Kan. App. 626, 44 Pac. 30, holding that, where a surviving partner appears and demands that the general administrator give bond to cover the partnership estate, he waives his right to demand that he be permitted to settle such estate; Hackett v. Pratt, 5 Kan. App. 586, 49 Pac. 100, holding that surviving partner could not reimburse himself out of partnership estate.

General appearance.—Cited in Neosho Valley Investment Co. v. Cornell, 60 Kan. 282, 56 Pac. 475, holding that, by contesting judgment on nonjurisdictional grounds, defendant entered a general appearance.

Limitations in favor of administrator.—Cited in Allen v. Bartlett, 52 Kan. 387, 34 Pac. 1042, holding that the statute of limitations did not begin to run in favor of an administrator until he unequivocally indicated an intention to repudiate his trust.

Appeal from justice's judgment—Effect.—Cited in St. Joseph & D. C. R. Co. v. Casey, 14 Kan. 504, holding that defendant's appeal discharged the attachment; N. B. Brown & Co. v. Tuppeny, 24 Kan. 29, holding that an ordinary appeal bond did not bring up for review proceedings against a discharged garnishee; Roll v. Murray, 35 Kan. 171, 10 Pac. 472, holding that an order of a justice of the peace discharging an attachment was not appealable; Becker v. Steele, 41 Kan. 173, 21 Pac. 169, holding that an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace did not carry up the attachment proceedings, so as to authorize the constable to retain the attached property; dissenting opinion maintaining that, while an attachment which had been discharged before a justice's judgment on the merits cannot be taken up on appeal, yet an undischarged attachment was taken up.

Amendment of appeal bond.—Cited in Lovitt v. Wellington & W. R. Co., 28 Kan. 297, holding that, where the appeal bond from a justice court ran to a stranger, it was not error for the district court to refuse a new bond; Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Abilene Town-Site Co., 42 Kan. 97, 21 Pac. 1112, holding that, since an insufficient appeal bond in condemnation proceedings may be amended, the district court acquired jurisdiction, though the bond was not in double the amount of the award.

13 KAN. 414, STATE v. POTTER, Same case on subsequent appeal, 15 Kan. 302

Referred to in State v. Potter, 16 Kan. 80, as a subsequent appeal of the same case.

Appeal—Presumptions.—Cited in Higby v. Ayres, 14 Kan. 331, holding that the right of a judge pro tem. to act could not be raised for the first time on appeal; Garvin v. Jennerson, 20 Kan. 371, holding that the record need not state the mode or reasons of selection, or the qualifications of a pro tem. judge.

De facto officers—Collateral attack.—Cited in Commissioners of Saline County v. Anderson, 20 Kan. 298, 27 Am. Rep. 171, holding that county clerk de jure had no right of action against the county board, which had paid the salary to a clerk de facto pending litigation over the office; State v. Williams, 61 Kan. 739, 60 Pac. 1050, holding that the title of a de facto police judge to office could not be collaterally attacked; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Preston, 63 Kan. 819, 66 Pac. 1050, holding that the acts of a de facto judge could not be questioned collaterally; State v. Miller, 71 Kan. 491, 80 Pac. 947, holding that the judicial acts of one duly elected and acting as justice of the peace were not subject to collateral attack; McDowell v. United States, 159 U. S. 596, 16 Snp. Ct. 111, 40 L. Ed. 271, holding acts of a judge de facto were not open to question, so far as they affected third persons; McDowell v. United States, 74 Fed. 403, 20 C. C. A. 476, holding orders of judge de facto continuing the term were not open to question.

Quieting title—Rights of action and defenses.—Cited in Morrill v. Douglass, 14 Kan. 293, holding that one who has neither title nor possession cannot maintain an action to quiet title; Neve v. Allen, 55 Kan. 638, 41 Pac. 366, holding that defendants' naked legal title to a one-third interest did not deprive plaintiff in possession under equitable title to whole premises, of his right to have his title quieted; Waller v. Julius, 68 Kan. 314, 74 Pac. 157, holding that an invalid deed could be set aside at the suit of one in possession under claim of ownership; Cramer v. McCann, 83 Kan. 719, 112 Pac. 832, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 108, holding that the defendant in proceedings to quiet title must prove title before he can question the title of a plaintiff in possession; Prizer v. Taylor, 3 Kan. App. 690, 44 Pac. 902, holding that a plaintiff in possession under color of title may maintain an action to quiet title against an adverse claimant who cannot show a superior title; Muckle v. Good, 45 Or. 230, 77 Pac. 743, holding that a naked adverse claim without color of title was insufficient to entitle one not in possession to sue to quiet title.

Cited in State v. Sowders, 42 Kan. 312, 22 Pac. 425.

Replevin—Against whom maintainable.—Cited in Moses v. Morris, 20 Kan. 208, holding replevin not maintainable against a sheriff after sale of the property attached; Davis v. Van De Mark, 45 Kan. 130, 25 Pac. 589, holding that replevin would not lie against one not in actual or constructive possession.

Same—Demand and refusal.—Cited in Smith v. Woodleaf, 21 Kan. 717, holding that a tender after petition in replevin was filed and process issued was not made before the commencement of the action.

Same—Affidavits and pleading.—Cited in Bailey v. Bayne, 20 Kan. 657, holding that the defendant in replevin was not required to allege the nature of the process under which he held the property, or the jurisdiction of the justice to issue the process; Bartlett v. Ridgley Nat. Bank, 70 Kan. 126, 78 Pac. 414, holding that an affidavit in replevin by a mortgagee was sufficient, though it alleged ownership in the mortgagee.

Chattel mortgages—Description of property.—Cited in Shaffer v. Pickrell, 22 Kan. 619, holding that a description of the mortgaged chattels as 250 stock hogs owned by the mortgagor in a certain county of this state was sufficient; Tootle, Hanna & Co. v. Lyster, 26 Kan. 589, holding chattel mortgage to be void as to third parties where, aided by inquiries which the mortgage suggested, they could not identify the property; Sims v. Mead, 29 Kan. 124, holding that the description of growing wheat was sufficient, though it did not designate how the wheat was to be divided; Muse, Spivey & Co. v. Lehman, 30 Kan. 514, 1 Pac. 804, holding sufficient a description of chattels as 35 acres of winter wheat, standing and growing on a certain quarter section; Griffiths v. Wheeler & Barber, 31 Kan. 17, 2 Pac. 842, holding description of cattle and other property in chattel mortgage to be sufficient; Corbin v. Kincaid, 33 Kan. 649, 7 Pac. 145, holding that a description of the mortgaged chattels as a flock of 600 sheep and increase for 1882, owned and in possession of mortgagor in a certain county, was sufficient; Souders v. Voorhees, 36 Kan. 138, 12 Pac. 526, holding insufficient a description from which the mortgaged growing corn could not be identified; Crisfield v. Neal, 36 Kan. 278, 13 Pac. 272, holding that a description of mortgaged chattels as a certain number of sheep of a certain kind in a certain county and belonging to the mortgagor was sufficient; Schmidt v. Bender, 39 Kan. 437, 18 Pac. 491, holding that the description of mortgaged chattels as "two brown mules, aged 8 and 12 years," was sufficient; Inter-State Galloway Cattle Co. v. McLain, 42 Kan. 680, 22 Pac. 728, holding that a chattel mortgage was not void because the cattle mortgaged were not separated from the herd; Scraf-ford v. Gibbons, 44 Kan. 533, 24 Pac. 968, holding description of mortgaged chattels to be sufficient, though not as full as it should be; Scott v. Wagner, 2 Kan. App. 386, 42 Pac. 741, holding that the judgment on foreclosure of a chattel mortgage should definitely describe the property, an indefinite description, which may be sufficient for the mortgage, not being sufficient for the judgment; Shattuck v. Hall, 3 Kan. App. 374, 42 Pac. 1101, holding that a chattel mortgage was not void for misdescription of the land upon which the mortgaged wheat was growing; Alferitz v. Ingalls, 83 Fed. 964, holding that a chattel mortgage was not void for uncertainty of the description of the property as 8,000 sheep and increase, now in a certain county and state.

Order of proof.—Cited in Taylor v. Mason, 28 Kan. 381, holding the order of admitting testimony is discretionary with the trial court.

Agister's lien.—Cited in Case v. Allen, 21 Kan. 217, 30 Am. Rep. 425, holding an agister's lien on cattle to be paramount to a chattel mortgage; Kelsey v. Layne, 28 Kan. 218, 42 Am. Rep. 158, holding that a farmer was entitled to a lien for his feed and care of another's stock.

Distinguished in National City Bank of Lafayette, Ind., v. Henderson, 59 Wash. 354, 109 Pac. 1038, holding agister's lien inferior to chattel mortgage executed prior to the statute giving the lien.

Hollon*, 22 Kan. 580, holding that an information charging an escape, which did not allege that the officer had a copy of the sentence or other paper under which to hold the defendant at the time of the escape, was insufficient.

Cited in note in 15 L. R. A. 191, on justification of prison breach.

Right to take bail.—Distinguished in McKie v. State, 74 Kan. 21, 85 Pac. 827, holding that, the defendant being lawfully in custody, the sheriff was authorized to take bail.

13 KAN. 596, STATE v. MARSH

Grand jury—Collateral attack.—Cited in Territory v. Chartz, 4 Ariz. 4, 32 Pac. 166, as to attack on proceedings of grand jury summoned upon an open venire from the body of the county; State v. Skinner, 34 Kan. 256, 8 Pac. 420, holding that the court properly excluded evidence to support pleas in abatement charging that the grand jurors were not properly drawn and summoned; State v. Donaldson, 43 Kan. 431, 23 Pac. 650, holding that defendant's plea in abatement, based on the disqualification of two grand jurors, was properly overruled; State v. Williams, 61 Kan. 739, 60 Pac. 1050, holding that the title of a de facto police judge to his office could not be collaterally attacked; In re Davies, 68 Kan. 791, 75 Pac. 1048, holding that the legality of a de facto grand jury could not be collaterally attacked in a habeas corpus proceeding.

Cited in note in 140 Am. St. Rep. 205, on de facto officers; in 27 L. R. A. 787, on organization of grand jury.

13 KAN. 600, COMMISSIONERS OF SEDGWICK COUNTY v. BAILEY

Constitutionality of statutes.—Cited in Board of Com'rs of Wyandotte County v. Abbott, 52 Kan. 148, 34 Pac. 416, on the necessity of statutes conforming to the Constitution.

Titles of statutes and ordinances.—Cited in Commissioners of Sedgwick County v. Bunker, 16 Kan. 498, on unconstitutionality of the act creating Harvey county, on account of its title; Prescott v. Beebe, 17 Kan. 320, holding title of a statute as "An act to provide for the sale of the school lands" to be sufficient; Swayze v. Britton, 17 Kan. 625, holding a statute unconstitutional which did not express its subject-matter in its title; Burgess v. Memphis, C. & N. W. R. Co., 18 Kan. 53, on the sufficiency of the title of a statute, without deciding the point; Evans v. Adams, 21 Kan. 119, holding that two amendatory acts were to be considered as portions of the original act, where any other construction would leave their titles insufficient; State v. Bankers' & Merchants' Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 23 Kan. 499, holding that an act, entitled "An act to amend sections 2, 4, 17, 41 and 59" of a prior act, was invalid in so far as it sought to amend section 72; Shepherd v. Helmers, 23 Kan. 504, holding a statute unconstitutional where its subject-matter was not expressed in its title; Philpin v. McCarty, 24 Kan. 393, holding that the title of an act for "the preservation of peace in unorganized counties" was sufficient to embrace the creation of an unorganized county into a municipal township; State v. Barrett, 27 Kan. 213, which states rules in respect to the title of a statute; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Long, 27 Kan. 684, holding title of a statute to be insufficient to comply with the constitutional requirement; John v. Reaser, 31 Kan. 406, 2 Pac. 771, holding title of an act (Laws 1879, c. 177) as "An act amendatory of and supplemental to chapter 25 of the General Laws of 1868," to be sufficient; Stebbins v. Mayer, 38 Kan. 573, 16 Pac. 745, holding that a city ordinance, not clearly expressing its subject in its title, was void; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. City of Wyandotte, 44 Kan. 32, 23 Pac. 950, holding that a city ordinance containing two distinct subjects was void; State v. Lewin, 53 Kan. 679, 37 Pac. 168, holding that the title of "An act in relation to the state penitentiary" was insufficient; Clark v. Board of Com'rs of Wallace County, 54 Kan. 634, 39 Pac. 225, holding that the title of "An act to protect fruit trees," etc., was insufficient, where the statute provided bounties for gopher scalps; State v. Guiney, 55 Kan. 532, 40 Pac. 926, holding that the title of "An act to prescribe the punishment for certain offenses against railroad property," etc., is insufficient; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Board of Com'rs of Kearny County, 58 Kan. 19, 48 Pac. 583, holding that an act attaching H. county to another and purporting by its title to attach K. county was unconstitutional; State v. Sholl, 58 Kan. 507, 49 Pac. 668, holding the title of "An act to repeal or strike out certain redundant, obsolete, and inoperative provisions," etc., to be insufficient; State v. Haun, 61 Kan. 146, 59 Pac. 340, 47 L. R. A. 369, holding that, in view of its title, it was not the purpose of the "scrip law" to alter and amend corporate charters; Howard v. Schneider, 10 Kan. App. 137, 62 Pac. 435, holding act entitled "An act to abolish survivorship in joint tenancy" unconstitutional, in so far as it attempted to abolish estates in entirety; In re Fourth Judicial District, 4 Wyo. 133, 32 Pac. 850, holding a statute creating new judicial district and providing for a judge contains but one subject, which is clearly expressed in its title.

Taxation.—Referred to in Commissioners of Sedgwick County v. Bunker, 16 Kan. 498, on certain tax questions not reconsidered.

13 KAN. 612, BABBITT v. CORBY

Waiver of error by assent to or acceptance of benefit under judgment.—Cited in Hoffmire v. Holcomb, 17 Kan. 378, holding that a grantee of the mortgagor, by accepting the surplus, was estopped to attack the validity of the foreclosure sale; Rasure v. McGrath, 23 Kan. 597, holding that a party was bound by a compromise settlement of a judgment made by attorneys, yet retained by her; Bradley v. Rogers, 33 Kan. 120, 5 Pac. 374, holding that a party in ejectment, having elected his remedy after verdict, waived error in the judgment; Fenlon v. Goodwin, 35 Kan. 123, 10 Pac. 553, holding that one who voluntarily released the attached property pending his appeal waived any error in discharging the attachment; Hodson v. Welden, 35 Kan. 409, 11 Pac. 164, holding that a settlement of the matters in litigation after the judgment waived any errors; Price v. Allen, 39 Kan. 476, 18 Pac. 609, holding that plaintiff, having elected to take under his judgment in ejectment, waived all errors prior to the election; State Journal Co. v. Commonwealth Co., 43 Kan. 93, 22 Pac. 982, holding that a company, which voluntarily executed a bond which discharged a receiver, could not contest the costs of the receiver; Guaranty Savings Bank v. Butler, 56 Kan. 267, 43 Pac. 229, holding that plaintiffs, having accepted the benefits of a judgment of foreclosure, could not secure its reversal in so far as it released the defendants from personal liability; Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. Kep-ley, 66 Kan. 343, 71 Pac. 818, holding that one who made a judgment the basis of a suit against other parties, could not have it reviewed; Seaverns v. State, 76 Kan. 320, 93 Pac. 163, holding that one who purchased school land from the state at public auction was estopped from prosecuting his appeal from a prior judgment denying his right to purchase as a settler; Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Gruendel, 3 Kan. App. 53, 44 Pac. 439, holding that a railroad company, by paying the amount of the appraisement and occupying the land condemned, waived its right to appeal; Smith v. Powell, 5 Kan. App. 652, 47 Pac. 992, holding that one who accepted the proceeds of an order of distribution could not maintain proceedings in error; Barnes v. Lynch, 9 Okl. 11, 59 Pac. 995, holding that where plaintiffs in a suit to quiet title, after an adverse judgment, instituted proceedings to establish a lien upon the property, they were estopped to prosecute an appeal from such judgment.

Cited in note in 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 2, 9, on right to appeal from unfavorable, while accepting favorable, part of decree, judgment, or order.

SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF KANSAS.

JULY TERM, 1874.

PRESENT:

HON. SAMUEL A. KINGMAN, Chief Justice.

HON. D. M. VALENTINE, } Associate Justices.
HON. D. J. BREWER, }

*9                    *SAMUEL LAPPIN v. JAMES E. MUMFORD.<sup>1</sup>

July Term, 1874.

1. Administration: Claim: Personal Property. A claim existing in favor of an estate, for services rendered by the decedent in his life-time, is personal property, which may be sold by the administrator.
2. ——: Sale of Personalty. The legal title to the personal property of a decedent is vested in his executor or administrator, and, except as restricted by provisions of statute, such executor or administrator can legally alien and dispose of any or all of such property.
3. ——. Section 63 of the executors act does not restrict the power of sale. Its purpose is to enable the administrator or executor to obtain proper credit for doubtful claims without subjecting the estate to expense.
4. ——: Order of Sale. Where personal property is ordered by the probate court to be sold at private sale, and the court intends to impose no other than the statutory restrictions as to price, it is unnecessary to specify such restrictions in the order.
5. ——. The court may not order a private sale at less than three-fourths of the appraised value, and it may increase the limit to any extent deemed best for the interests of the estate.
6. Administrator's Sale: Presumption. Where a party sues on a claim purchased from an estate, and alleges in his petition that the court ordered such claim sold at private sale; that it was sold, and an assignment to him made, with the approval of the court; and gives a copy of such *10 order and assignment; and it appears that such order *and assignment are both silent as to the price,—it will be presumed that both court and administrator complied with the requirements of the statute, and such a showing of a sale will be held sufficient on demurrer.

<sup>1</sup>An administrator has no power to compromise any claim, debt, or demand belonging to the estate in his hands to be administered, and accruing in the life-time of the deceased, so as to bind the estate, without the consent of the probate court, Aetna L. Ins. Co. v. Swayze, 30 Kan. 118; S. C. 1 Pac. Rep. 86; administration of partnership estate, see Carr v. Catlin, 18 Kan. *393, and note.

Error from Nemaha district court.

In November, 1858, Mumford made a contract with James R. Herd, then a land agent at Kickapoo, to locate a certain land certificate held by Mumford on government lands situate in the Kickapoo land-district, for which services Herd was to receive five cents an acre, to be paid in lands selected at the price of one dollar an acre. Herd located 16,760 acres, for which (under said contract) he was entitled to receive 838 acres of land. Herd died in 1860. Said claim for 838 acres of land, or its value, remained unpaid. In October, 1870, the probate court of Leavenworth county, "In the Matter of the Estate of James R. Herd, deceased," made the following order: "Upon the petition of George H. Rushmore, adm'r de bonis non of said estate, for authority to sell personal property of said estate, the following order is made by said probate court: The court having duly considered, examined, and filed the foregoing petitions, and being fully advised in the premises, it is ordered that said administrator de bonis non sell the claim in his said petition mentioned, at private sale, for cash in hand, and for the highest and best sum, in his opinion, obtainable for the same." Under this authority said administrator, on the twenty-fourth of October, 1870, sold said claim to plaintiff, Lappin, the assignment thereof being as follows: "For value received, and by authority in me vested by the order of the probate court of the county of Leavenworth and state of Kansas, I, George H. Rushmore, administrator de bonis non of the estate of James R. Herd, deceased, do hereby transfer, assign, and set over to Samuel Lappin, all right, title, and interest of the said estate in and to the within contract made between James R. Herd and J. E. Mumford, by which the said Herd agrees to locate a certain quantity of land for said Mumford, and for the heirs of Louis Lourimer. Witness," etc. *Mumford resided in Missouri at the time of making his contract with Herd, and ever since. In 1872, Lappin, assignee, as plaintiff, brought suit to recover the amount due on said contract, and caused certain lands of Mumford, in Nemaha county, to be attached. Mumford appeared, and demurred to the petition. The district court, at the April term, 1873, sustained the demurrer.

W. W. Guthrie, for plaintiff.

It is said that Lappin got nothing by his assignment—First, for want of power in the administrator to assign; and, second, for want of form in assignment; and Hardmann v. Bowen, 39 N. Y. 196; People v. County of Otsego, 51 N. Y. 401; Grantman v. Thrall, 31 How. Pr. 464; and City of New York v. Furze, 8 Hill, 612,—are relied on. These were cases where authority to perform certain duties having been neglected by public authorities, upon proceedings against such officers to compel performance of these duties, it was held that such authority was mandatory, not permissive. That proposition has no application to any question involved in this case. Ventress v. Smith, 10 Pet. 167, also cited by defendant, not only fails to support his proposition, but decidedly maintains the contrary. See page 168. "The grant of the power carries with it all the usual, ordinary, and necessary means to effectuate the beneficial exercise of the power."

But the power of an administrator exists at common law to settle and compromise. Short v. Johnson, 25 Ill. 496. It is insisted by Mumford that the administrator had no power to do anything with "claims, debts, or demands," except to receive the money from the debtor by ordinary collection, or compromise with the debtor, or turn them over to the heirs or creditors, to make what they could out of them. In other words, that, in all cases where it is not absolutely certain that the debt can be collected in full, the debtor must have the monopoly of shaving his own paper, or certain of the creditors the sole right to gamble on it; and if these resorts fail, that *12 then the claim must be allowed to go to waste; that *sections 62 and 63 of the executors' act are grants of power, in their nature excluding the exercise of any other in the disposition of "claims;" and that the sale to Lappin was ultra vires. We think that they are additional provisions, to be exercised under supervision of the court in unusual cases, where the expense of disposition might otherwise exceed the returns. This "claim" was a part of "the personal property belonging to the estate," and, like a bond, note, or scrip, was the subject of sale. Section 69, p. 445. It was the subject of "specific bequests,"—then, why not of sale? But the authority to compromise with the debtor would authorize a sale to another when more could thus be realized. Ventress v. Smith, supra.

Questions of regularity in appraising, inventorying, etc., are not the subject of inquiry in this action in this court. But we insist that the probate court is a court of record, and that its adjudications cannot be collaterally attacked in this court. This rule applies in all cases where the court rendering the decision had jurisdiction. Fox v. Hoyt, 12 Conn. 491; Coit v. Haven, 30 Conn. 199; Freem. Judgm. 94, § 123. In this state probate courts and district courts are authorized by the same constitution, each "having such jurisdiction as may be provided by law." Article 3, Const. §§ 1, 6, 8. And to the extent of the jurisdiction thus conferred, the jurisdiction is equally general in each case. Haynes v. Meeks, 10 Cal. 118; Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 412.

A. G. Otis and C. G. Foster, for defendant.

We maintain that the demurrer was properly sustained by the court below. The petition and exhibits show that the plaintiff's claim is based wholly upon a pretended assignment to him from the administrator de bonis non of the estate of Herd, deceased. The so-claimed assignment is of a claim existing in favor of the estate of the decedent, against the defendant, Mumford. It seems to have been made under an order of the probate court of Leavenworth county, October 24, 1870, about twelve years after the death of Herd, who died in March,

1860. Now, if the assignment to plaintiff is invalid, either for want of authority in the administrator to make it, or of the court *13 *to order and affirm it, or if the requirements and forms of the statute as to the powers and duties of executors and administrators were not complied with, then Lappin took no title to the claim, and has no cause of action against defendant.

Under the constitution and laws of Kansas the administrator has no authority or power to assign and transfer a chose in action, or claim existing in favor of the estate he represents; nor can the probate court confer any such power, or make valid any such assignment. The constitution, art. 3, § 8, provides that the probate court shall have such probate jurisdiction as may be provided by law; limiting its jurisdiction to probate matters, and to such probate matters as shall be provided by law. See further, as to the probate court being a court of limited jurisdiction, Kirkpatrick v. State, 5 Kan. *678; Stemle v. Hewling, 2 Ohio St. 228; Davis v. Davis, 11 Ohio St. 390; Cooper v. Sunderland, 3 Iowa, 114; Corwin v. Merritt, 3 Barb. 343; Smith v. Rice, 11 Mass. 511; and cases cited in Glass Co. v. Ludlum, 8 Kan. *46. Being a court of special jurisdiction, it must follow strictly the terms and authority prescribed by law. Gridley's Heirs v. Phillips, 5 Kan. *354; 2 Washb. 570; Gregory v. McPherson, 13 Cal. 577; Thatcher v. Powell, 6 Wheat. 127. See, also, as to the sale of personal property, Ventress v. Smith, 10 Pet. 175. In Gen. St. 443, (Executors' Act, § 62,) is prescribed the duty of the administrator as to choses in action. He must collect the assets within one year, as far as he is able. Sections 63 and 68 prescribe explicitly the duty of the administrator as to doubtful or desperate claims, or when the debtor is insolvent. These sections are complete in themselves upon this subject, and prescribe clearly and fully the course to be pursued, the remedy to be taken, and the manner of the adjustment between the administrator and the debtor. The rights of the heirs and the creditors are fully protected. There seems to us no implication that another, and a wholly different, remedy and course can be pursued, as has been attempted in this case. "May," in section 62, is to be construed as "must." Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Reynolds, 8 Kan. *628; City of New York v. Furze, 3 Hill, 612; People v. County of Otsego, 51 N. Y. 407.

Aside from the plain provisions of the statute, the policy of the law forbids the authority here sought to be exercised. It *14 would open the door for fraud and collusion. Speculators, *by skillful manipulation, would buy these claims for a trifling consideration, and then invoke the aid of the courts to enforce full payment, to their own advantage, and to the injury of heirs and creditors. The law seeks to bring the embarrassed debtor and the representative of the estate together, without the interference of a middle-man, to the end that the claim may be compromised and settled to the best advantage of the estate.

But it may be urged that this claim is "personal property," and subject to sale as personal property. If so, then the attempted transfer is void. There was no appraisement as required by law. See sections 42, 46, 47, and also section 61, of Executors' Act. These sections distinctly provide for an appraisement of all personal property, and an approximate estimate of the amount that can be collected on all notes, bills, claims, choses in action, and accounts due the estate. The order to sell at private sale, with no appraisement, and without providing that it should not be sold for less than three-fourths of its appraised value, is clearly unauthorized and void. See section 71, Executors' Act. We insist that this claim is not personal property, within the meaning of that act, and the sections cited clearly draw the distinction between personal property to be appraised on actual view, and notes, accounts, etc., as to which it is made the duty of the appraisers to make an approximate estimate of what can be collected thereon. Sections 46, 47. Section 69 makes it the duty of the administrator to sell all the "personal property" within three months, which section, construed with sections 62, 63, and 68, clearly points out the distinction between those classes of assets. The law nowhere authorizes such claims to be sold. There is authority for a compromise, under certain conditions and restrictions; or it may be filed for the benefit of the heirs or creditors. Sections 63, 68. In either view of this case, whether it be deemed a chose in action, and governed by sections 63 and 68, or personal property, and governed by the other sections referred to, the law has been disregarded and violated in this attempt to speculate in the assets of the estate.

*15 *The record and exhibits of the probate court are incomplete.

It being a court of inferior and limited jurisdiction, nothing is presumed as to its powers. The complete record should have been produced. No order could be made without a petition therefor, and no order of sale at private sale could be made for less than three-fourths of the appraised value. Section 70.

BREWER, J. The question in this case was raised on demurrer, and the substantial facts are these: One James R. Herd had, in his life-time, a claim against the defendant for services performed in the location of a land certificate. After his death, the claim not having been paid, the administrator de bonis non of his estate, by order of the probate court, sold and assigned it to this plaintiff. In reference to this sale and assignment two propositions are asserted by counsel: First, that the probate court had no power to order, and the administrator none to make, such a sale or assignment; and, second, that if the power existed, it was not so exercised as to accomplish a valid transfer.

In reference to the first proposition, we think the court had the power to order the sale of such a claim. At common law the full legal title to the personal estate of a decedent was vested in his administrator, and such administrator could dispose of it, passing a good title as freely and fully as the decedent himself could in his life-time. His indorsement transferred the title to negotiable paper. Riddick v. Moore, 65 N. Car. 382; Thomas v. Reister, 3 Ind. 369; Hamrick v. Craven, 39 Ind. 241. In Dayton on Surrogates, at page 259, it is said: "But generally speaking an executor or administrator, in his own life-time, may dispose of and alien the assets of the testator. He has absolute power over them for that purpose, and they cannot be followed by the creditors of the deceased." See, also, same volume pp. 307, 310; Williams, Ex'rs, 562; Anderson v. Gregg, 44

Miss. 170; Booyer v. Hodges, 45 Miss. 78; Harth v. Heddle-
 *16 *stone, 2 Bay, 321. The provisions of our statutes, and similar ones in other states, prescribing the manner and conditions of sale, are to be regarded rather as restrictions upon this otherwise absolute power than as original grants of power. The administrator who, independent of such provisions, could sell when he pleased, and upon such terms as suited him, responsible to the creditors and heirs only for reasonable fidelity in his trust, must now proceed in accordance with the regulations of the statute. Whatever an administrator can do without an order, the court has power to order him to do. He has power, and it is his duty, to sell at public sale the personal property; and the term "personal property," which, according to its ordinary significance, as well as its statutory definition, (Gen. St. 999, cl. 9,) includes such a claim as the one in question, is expressly, in the section requiring him to sell, made to include such a claim. "The whole of the personal property belonging to the estate, which is liable to the payment of debts, and is assets in his hands to be administered," is the language used. Executors' Act, § 69.

It is true, bonds, notes, bills, and accounts are not ordinarily sold, and in most cases ought not to be. They are regarded as personal property, in a sort of intermediate condition between goods and chattels and money, the standard of value; as it were, the former in process of reduction to the latter. Hence, the interests of the estate are generally promoted by the collection, rather than the sale, of such property. But nevertheless they are personal property, and, as such, subject to sale. Nor does section 63, cited by counsel, remove this power of sale. The purpose of that section is to enable the administrator to obtain proper credit for doubtful claims without subjecting the estate to expense. It permits the court to authorize the administrator to compromise certain doubtful claims, or file them in court for the benefit of such heirs, devisees, or creditors as will sue for them, and declares that such order of the court shall be a sufficient *17 voucher. Granting authority to com*promise does not take away the power to sell.

In regard to the second question we do not think it is fairly before us. We think the allegations of the petition are sufficient, as against a demurrer. It alleges that the administrator was duly authorized to sell by an order of the probate court; that in pursuance thereof he sold, and, with the approval of such court, executed and delivered a written assignment of such claim. The order of the court and the assignment are attached to the pleading. The first, after showing that a petition therefor had been filed, orders the administrator to sell "at private sale, for cash in hand, and for the highest and best sum, in his opinion, obtainable for the same." The second is simply an assignment of the claim, declaring that it was made in pursuance of the order of the probate court. The order does not direct the administrator to sell for not less than three-fourths the appraised value, and the assignment does not show for what sum the sale was made, nor that it was for not less than three-fourths of such value. But we think it is unnecessary that this should appear either in the order or the assignment. The statute reads: "The probate court may order the executor or administrator to dispose of said personal property at private sale, at not less than three-fourths of its appraised value." Gen. St. 446, § 71. The statute fixes the lowest limit at which personal property may be sold at private sale, viz., three-fourths the appraised value. It authorizes the court to fix a higher limit. In ordering a private sale it may require four-fifths, or even the entire appraised value, or more. If the order is silent, the law fixes the limit; for this section must be understood, not as specifying the language of the order, and leaving all discretion as to the amount above the statutory limit to the administrator, but rather as limiting the power of the court, and prescribing the amount below which the court may not order a sale. Here the order is silent. In the absence of any showing to the contrary, we must presume that both court and administrator kept within the requirements of the law, and that the *sale was made for not less than three-fourths the appraised value. If it should hereafter appear that no appraisal was made, or that the sale was for less than three-fourths of the appraised value, it will be time enough then to consider the effect of such omission.

The judgment of the district court will be reversed, and the case remanded, with instructions to overrule the demurrer.

A. B. STODDART v. R. J. VANLANINGHAM.

July Term, 1874.

1. Injunction: Evidence on Motion for Temporary Order. On an application for a temporary injunction, where notice of the same has been required to be given to the defendant, and notice has been so given, the defendant may, on the hearing of the application, even before answer filed, introduce any legal evidence that would tend to show that the injunction should not be granted. He is not confined to evidence that merely tends to disprove the allegations of the plaintiff's petition.
2. Contested County-Seat Election: Another Action: New Parties: Discretion: Refusal of Injunction not Error. Where an election for the location of a county-seat has been held, and two places are voted for,—one place being at the time the county-seat, and the other place not; and the board of county commissioners afterwards duly canvass the votes, and declare that the other place has received a majority of all the votes cast, and has thereby become the county-seat; and a certain person, being friendly to the old county-seat, afterwards commences an action, under section 5 of the act providing for the contest of county-seat and other elections, (Laws 1871, p. 192,) against the county clerk, to perpetually enjoin him from moving his office from the old county-seat to the new county-seat; and the said action is prosecuted in good faith, in the district court, to final judgment, upon its merits, and the final judgment is rendered in favor of the defendant and against the plaintiff; and where another person, also friendly to the old county-seat, immediately afterwards commences another action, under said section 5, to
  - *19 perpetually enjoin the register of deeds from moving *his office from the old county-seat to the new one; and also, at the same time, applies to the judge of the court at chambers for a temporary injunction to restrain said register of deeds from moving his office until the action could be heard and finally determined; and notice of the application is required and given to the defendant; and the judge, upon the hearing of the application, refuses to grant the temporary injunction: held, that the judge, exercising a sound judicial discretion, did not commit any error.<sup>1</sup>

Error from Neosho district court.

Injunction, brought to contest the county-seat election held March 26, 1872, and the same election which was in controversy in the case of Butler v. McMillen, 13 Kan. *385. Final judgment was entered in the Butler-McMillen case, in the district court, on the tenth of July, 1873. On the eighteenth of said July, Stoddart filed his verified petition in the same court against Vanlaningham, register of deeds, to enjoin defendant from removing his office from Osage Mission to Erie. The board of county commissioners, as canvassers, had determined that 3,391 votes were cast in the county,—1,712 for Erie and 1,679 for Osage Mission; majority for Erie, 33. The poll-books returned from Erie precinct showed 595 votes cast at that precinct,—590 for Erie and 5 for Osage Mission. The ground of contest stated in Stoddart's petition was "that 168 of the votes returned from Erie precinct [setting forth the names and numbers of the illegal electors, as they appear on the poll-books] were illegal, false, and fraudulent; and more than 100 others, the names and numbers of which plaintiff cannot give, were illegal, as Erie precinct only contained 300 legal voters at the time of the election."

Application being made for a temporary injunction, the district judge required notice to be given to defendant of the hearing of such application, and such notice, with notice that affidavits would be read in support of said motion, was served on defendant. The application was heard before the district judge, at chambers, on the third of August. In support of his application Stoddart read his verified petition,

*20 and the affidavits of several parties relating to the conduct and validity of the election held at Erie precinct; and thereupon Vanlaningham, in opposition, over plaintiff's objection and exception, read a large number of affidavits in regard to the validity of said election; and also the affidavit of one Peter Walters, as follows:

"Peter Walters, upon his oath, doth depose and say that heretofore, in the district court of Neosho county, and since March 26, 1872, a certain other action was pending and determined in said court, which said action had the identical objects and purposes in view that the present action has, as will more fully appear by the record, judgment, and decree, a certified copy of which is hereto attached, marked 'Exhibit A,' and made a part of this affidavit. Said action was entitled 'Thomas H. Butler, Plff., v. G. W. McMillen, County Clerk of Neosho County, Deft.' Affiant further states that said Butler was only the nominal plaintiff, and the town of Osage Mission the real plaintiff and party in interest. And the said McMillen, the county clerk of Neosho county, was only the nominal defendant, and the town of Erie, in said county, the real defendant and party in interest. Affiant further states that said action was brought and prosecuted for the express purpose of contesting the election had and held on the twenty-sixth March, 1872, and especially the poll-book used at Erie precinct on said twenty-sixth March, which said election so had and held was an election for the purpose of relocating the county seat at Neosho county. Affiant further states that said action was duly tried, and was determined at the July term of said court, 1873, which more fully appears by said Exhibit A, hereto attached. Affiant further states that said judgment, determination, and decree were duly had and given before the commencement of this present action. Affiant further states that the real parties in this action are the same and not other and different from those in said former action, which judgment is now in full force and effect, and not reversed or modified." Annexed to this affidavit, as said Exhibit A, was a "certified copy" of the journal entry of July 18, 1873, in the Butler-McMillen Case, showing the findings of fact, conclusions of law, and judgment. (The plaintiff in error in this case, Stoddart, claims in this court that the original "certified copy," offered and read in evidence as part of Walters' affidavit, although duly signed by the clerk, was not authenticated

To the reading of Walters' affidavit, and said Exhibit A, in evidence, before the district judge, plaintiff interposed at the time the following objection: "The affidavit is incompetent, immaterial, and irrelevant, and consists of statements of law, arguments, and conclusions of law, and not of statements of facts; and said exhibit is incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial; that no plea or answer to the petition of plaintiff has been filed; that a plea in bar of this action could not be heard and determined at chambers; and, further, neither said exhibit nor affidavit contains a transcript of the case of T. H. Butler v. McMillen, or any other case; that no foundation has been laid for the introduction of said testimony; that the pleadings in said case of Butler v. McMillen were the only proper evidence of the issues in said case; and that the same should be introduced before said exhibit; and said exhibit is not any evidence of any fact in issue on the application for an injunction in this case." Said objections were overruled, and the affidavit and exhibit were read. The judge refused a temporary injunction.

C. F. Hutchings, for plaintiff in error.

The case presents for consideration by this court the following questions: (1) Where the verified petition, under section 5, p. 192, Laws 1871, states a cause of action, and is supported by affidavits, can the judge, on application, before answer is filed, refuse to grant a temporary injunction? (2) Can the judge at chambers, on such application, hear and determine the merits of the case on affidavits, and, by refusing a temporary injunction, thereby refuse to permit plaintiff to contest the election in the court, on evidence? (3) Can the defendant, on an application at chambers for a temporary injunction, before answer, in a proceeding under the above statute, set up a plea in bar, as an estoppel by former judgment? (4) If so, is the affidavit of Walters, that the case is res adjudicata, evidence of that fact, even though it be accompanied by what purports to be

*22 a copy of a judgment not even certified under *the seal of the court? (5) Is a copy of a judgment, even though duly certified under the seal of the court, or proved, sufficient evidence, without the pleadings or any other part of the record, to sustain a plea of res adjudicata? (6) Is a judgment in the case of Butler v. Mc-

Millen a bar in action between Stoddart v. Vanlaningham, where there is no privity between the parties to the two actions? (7) Is a judgment in an action to contest an election, on the ground that the poll-books returned from Erie precinct are forged, a bar to an action to contest the same election on the ground that "John Snobb" and 167 others, whose names were returned on the poll-books of Erie precinct, are fraudulent voters? (8) Are the rules of evidence so much less applicable to proceedings before judges at chambers than before judges and juries in term, that affidavits containing mere conclusions of law, and nothing else, (such as, "the election in Erie was conducted according to law," and transcripts of courts of record certified without seals,) can be read, against objection?

The law of evidence is equally as binding on judges at chambers as in term. Besides the formal part of the affidavits, (except that of Walters,) they contain nothing but a mere conclusion of law, to-wit, "the said election was conducted according to law." This is never competent evidence. If the affidavits contained any competent evidence, it might be said the judge could and would be presumed to consider only that which was competent; but as no part of these affidavits was competent, we must believe that the judge considered the statement "that the election was conducted according to law," as competent and sufficient evidence that the votes cast at the election were legal. And, if he did consider such affidavits as competent evidence, is there any doubt that we were prejudiced? There was no question raised as to the legality of the election, but only as to the legality of certain votes. The affidavits of C. C. Miller and others were introduced, we suppose, to affect the credibility of plaintiff's witnesses, whom they disputed. We claim that these affidavits were in-

*23 competent, because the judge is not, under the law, authorized to try the case at chambers. This proceeding to contest the election is an anomalous statutory proceeding, and must be construed and carried out so as to effect the result intended. The election is to be contested by the court, and not by the judge. If the judge at chambers refuses to grant a temporary injunction, it is useless to have any such proceeding, for the officer removes, and a judgment against him on final hearing is fruitless. The object of this proceeding is to prevent officers from moving until the election is contested. The plaintiff is required to verify his petition, and set forth the names of alleged illegal voters. It is clearly intended that any party filing the proper verified petition may contest the election, and a temporary injunction shall issue of course, on a prima facie showing; otherwise the law is futile, as the judge may say: "You shall not contest the election; I will try this case at chambers, and decide on the preponderance of affidavits, and you shall not go into court, where you can subpoena witnesses." The refusal of the temporary order is simply a denial of the remedy pointed out by law, and the attempt to try the case by affidavits is simply a farce. To so construe the statute is to say that a person may contest the election, and have the benefit of an injunction to keep matters in statu quo until the final decision, provided he can produce more affidavits before the judge than the other party. The object of contesting the election is to ascertain which place received a majority of the legal votes; but the theory of the district judge was that you must prove which place received a majority of the legal votes before you can be allowed to contest.

But, surely, even if the judge at chambers could hear and determine the truth of the petition upon the preponderance of affidavits, he could not hear and determine the truth of a plea in bar by the defense, before answer, on affidavits, or any other testimony. While in ordinary applications at chambers, for temporary orders, the truth of the motion or petition will be heard and determined, we believe it has never been the practice, and would be destructive of the *24 rights of *all plaintiffs in such applications, if the defendant before answer, and without notice, could set up a temporary plea in bar, which depends upon record testimony almost entirely for proof or rebuttal, and require the truth of it to be determined. Again, no provision is made for the production of other evidence than affidavits, on an application for injunction. The Code, by implication, says affidavits alone shall be used on applications, (Civil Code, § 249;) hence the plea of res adjudicata could not be interposed in an application at chambers, and the admission in evidence of the affidavit of Walters, and the pretended record of a judgment, was error.

But, reasoning from the hypothesis that any defense may be made by affidavit, on a motion at chambers for a temporary injunction, that could be made to the action, and that the application is fully tried on the petition and temporary defense, and decided on the preponderance of affidavits and other testimony; or, in other words, that the case must be tried once at chambers, on the petition, and whatever defense the caprice of counsel may suggest, and again (if the application is sustained) in term, on the petition, and perhaps some other defense, or many others: is the evidence offered in this case in support of defendant's plea sufficient to sustain such plea? "Estoppels are not favored in law. That a party alleging them can take nothing by intendment, argument, or inference, is well established." "No presumption should be indulged in favor of an estoppel which is designed to conclude a party by excluding evidence of the truth." Dunckel v. Wiles, 11 N. Y. 420; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 528. The affirmative of the issue was on defendant. He must make a clear case that the precise point in issue had been once adjudicated between the same parties or their privies. How could he prove, or how could the court determine, what (if anything) had been adjudicated, without the pleadings? The judgment or decree proves nothing of itself. "It is a very familiar principle that the judgment concludes the parties only as to the facts covered by it, and the facts necessary to uphold it; and although a decree, in express terms, professes to affirm *25 a particular fact, *yet if such fact was immaterial, (under the pleading,) and the controversy did not turn upon it, the decree will not conclude the parties in reference to that fact." People v. Johnson, 38 N. Y. 65; Sweet v. Tuttle, 14 N. Y. 465.

The defendant and the district judge were undoubtedly misled in reference to the sufficiency of the judgment alone as evidence. In New York, where the question has frequently recurred, the books speak of a "judgment record." This, as all lawyers familiar with the New York practice know, is not merely the "judgment," but contains the pleadings, and every step taken in the case. It is precisely such a record as is described by section 417 of our Civil Code. Gen. St. p. 707. This "complete record," as it is usually called in this state, is made only by order of the court. In New York such a record is made in every case, and is called a "judgment record." And where the books speak of such evidence being introduced to support the plea of res adjudicata, it means, not the judgment alone, but all other matters necessary to make a "complete" or "judgment" record, as above described. A judgment, we contend, is conclusive on nobody as to any questions except those legally raised by the pleadings. The judgment must respond to the issues legally made in the case, and if it goes outside of this it is not conclusive; hence it must be shown, "either that the matter was actually determined in the former suit, or that it might have been litigated under the issue then joined." Campbell v. Consalus, 25 N. Y. 616; Campbell v. Ayres, 6 Iowa, 839; 26 Ind. —. In the case at bar it was not shown what the issues were.

But the copy of the judgment was not even legally certified, but was attempted to be proved by the affidavit of Peter Walters. The affidavit of Walters is a novelty. It does not state, properly speaking, a single fact. It is a summary of the law of the case, sworn to by him. Why should a learned judge occupy the bench to determine abstruse legal controversies, if Peter Walters can settle all these disputed questions of law in an affidavit of five folios? It must be *26 evident that the judge either considered the pretended copy *of the judgment as importing absolute verity, and concluding the plaintiff as to everything recited therein, or must have considered Walters' affidavit as conclusive of the law and fact, or he must have taken judicial notice of what was adjudicated, (which is insisted upon by defendant's counsel.) In either case the error is glaring. Fitzpatrick v. Gebhart, 7 Kan. *44, shows the practice in this state as to introducing the pleadings, etc. People v. Johnson, 38 N. Y. 63, as to "judgment record," shows the pleadings were in evidence, and from them the court said the judgment there offered was res inter alias acta.

But admitting, arguendo, that the affidavit and exhibit of Walters proves the judgment in the case of Butler v. McMillen, does that judgment create an estoppel against plaintiff in this case? If the pleadings and record in Butler v. McMillen were before the court, it would not be difficult to show that the only question tendered by plaintiff in that case, as held by the court on the trial, was this: "Were the poll-books used at the election in Erie township destroyed, and forged and altered ones substituted and transmitted to the county clerk?" No names were set forth in the petition as illegal voters. The question was not, whether illegal votes were cast, but whether the poll-books were forged. We claim that the petition in that case does not state a cause of action under the statute. If the petition did not set forth the names of alleged illegal voters, it was not sufficient under the statute. The statute is simply for the purpose of contesting the question of illegal voting; it does not pretend to furnish a remedy by declaring the poll-books spurious. If there were no poll-books, or if the original ones were lost, the court would not declare the election void, but would go behind the poll-books to the election, and ascertain how many legal votes were cast for each party. Morris v. Vanlaningham, 11 Kan. *269. Hence the allegation that the original poll-books "were lost" is not sufficient, especially under a statute which requires the names of alleged illegal voters to be set out under oath. If the court *27 had no jurisdiction, or the pleadings did *not state a cause of action, the judgment is void, and is no adjudication. Poin-dexter v. Anderson, 6 Alb. Law Reg. 100; Com. v. Peters, 12 Metc. 387; Marston v. Jenness, 11 N. H. 156. The above facts, of course, do not appear by this record, nor can we ask this court to take judicial notice; but we claim that enough is fairly deducible from the judgment and findings to show that the questions involved in the two cases were not identical, or even similar. Taking all the findings in the Butler-McMillen suit concerning Erie precinct, and it will be seen that the only question decided is as to the poll-books. Not a single word is said as to illegal votes, and no finding upon that question, as far as Erie township is concerned, is made. If any such question had even incidentally been raised by the pleadings, of course some finding would have been made concerning it. When we come to the conclusions of law we have this: "That the election held in the precinct of Erie, on said twenty-sixth of March, was in conformity to law, and the returns from said precinct were properly transmitted to the clerk of said county." And this: "That, as far as appears from the evidence, the determination of said * * * canvassers * * * was * * * in conformity to law." Nothing is said about illegal votes, and the question of illegal voting was not raised by the plaintiff, or even incidentally passed upon by the court, so far as Erie township is concerned. There is no identity, then, between the question adjudicated in Butler v. McMillen and the question sought to be adjudicated in this case. In order to avail himself of this defense of res adjudicata, the defendant in error must show, without the aid of presumptions or inference, that the identical question has been adjudicated. Simply because the court determines in one case, upon certain issues, that Erie is the county-seat, does not conclude every question involved in that proposition, but simply the question determined in the particular case in order to arrive at such conclusion.

To illustrate: A finding that the poll-books returned from Erie were not forged, does not determine whether John Snobb is a legal voter or not. A finding in one case that a will, though duly executed *28 was not in conflict with the statute, where the action *was to have the will so declared, does not estop the same parties, in another suit, from raising the question of the due execution of the will. Mason's Ex'r's v. Alston, 9 N. Y. 28; Freem. Judgm. 224; § 259; Cannon v. Brame, 45 Ala. 262; Davis v. Pawlette, 3 Wis. 304; Marvin v. Treat, 37 Conn. 102; Clegg v. Dearden, 12 Q. B. 576; Crockett v. Routon, Dudley, 254; Kirkpatrick v. Stingley, 2 Cart. 273; New England Bank v. Lewis, 8 Pick. 113; U. S. v. Cushman, 2 Sum. 426; Jones v. Fales, 4 Mass. 255; Tyler v. Wilkerson, 27 Ind. 451.

In the case of Butler v. McMillen the evidence was as to the forgery of poll-books; in this, as to the competency of John Snobb and 167 others to vote at the county-seat election. Would the evidence in one case sustain the issue in the other? In Doty v. Brown, 4 N. Y. 71, it is held that the question must be "directly involved in the suit," in order that the judgment thereon shall be a bar in a second suit "between the same parties," and that proof aliunde is proper and necessary where the pleadings or judgment is indefinite. This is the tone of every decision in that or any other state, and we challenge the production of a respectable authority that militates against it, or holds that a proposition affirmed by a judgment is conclusive between the same parties in another suit, unless such proposition was directly in issue under the pleadings in the first suit. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 528; 22 Iowa, 368. Would an adverse judgment, in an action contesting the election on the ground that Erie was not within the limits of the county, be a bar to an action to contest the election on the ground of fraudulent voting? Would an adverse judgment, in an action to contest on the ground of illegal votes cast in Chetopa township, be a bar in an action to contest on the ground of fraudulent voting in Erie? If not, then why should an adverse judgment, in an action to have certain "returns" declared spurious and forged, be a bar to an action to show that illegal votes enough were cast to change the result of the election? This court, in Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Commissioners of Jefferson Co., 12 Kan. *127, (following Benz v. Hines, 3 Kan. *390,) have said that, "to make a matter res adjudicata there must be concurrence of the four conditions following, namely: (1) Identity in the things sued for; (2) identity in the cause of action;
 *29 (3) identity of persons *and parties to the action; (4) identity of the quality of the persons for or against whom the claim is made." Has the defendant brought himself within these requirements? There is no identity of parties. The statute (section 5, p. 192, Laws 1871) gives "any elector or electors" the right to contest the election. The maxims nemo debet bis vexari pro una et eadem causa, and "that the judgment of one court directly upon the point is, as a plea, a bar between the same parties, upon the same matter, directly in question, in another court," (Broom, Leg. Max. 321, 328,) are of no more force than the other: "that a transaction between two parties ought not to operate to the disadvantage of a third." Greenleaf says that "parties," in this connection, includes "all who are directly interested, and had a right to make defense, or to control the proceedings, and appeal from the judgment. This right also involves the right to adduce testimony and to cross-examine. Parties not having these rights are strangers to the cause." 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 522, 523.

Tested by this rule, is Stoddart concluded? The doctrine of estoppel was never intended as an instrument wherewith, by artifice, cunning inferences, and sophistical presumptions, to weave a web in which to imprison truth. Stoddart had no notice of the action of Butler v. McMillen. Butler was not a public officer, representing the interests of Stoddart, his constituent, nor did he have any interest in common with Stoddart, so far as the record shows. Stoddart had no more control over, or opportunity to be heard, to introduce testimony or cross-examine, or to appeal from, the judgment in the case of Butler v. McMillen, than Walters, or any other stranger. Stoddart, upon his application for an injunction at chambers, was confronted with a pretended judgment, in a case to which he was as much a stranger as the sultan of Turkey, and it was sought to conclude him thereby. When he examined that judgment he did not even find it certified under the seal of the court in which it purported to have been rendered. When he inquired what the issues may have been in that case, no pleadings were presented, but he was informed that every fact which was affirmed by the decree therein, whether in response to questions presented by the pleadings or not, was binding and conclusive on him. He had not been notified by the filing of an answer, or otherwise, that such a defense would be made to his application. When Stoddart inquired who the man Butler might be that it was claimed had represented, and in another action concluded, him, he was pointed to the affidavit and exhibit of Peter Walters, but found nothing to show whether Butler was a citizen and elector of Neosho county; and for aught the affidavit of Walters, the findings, judgment, and other evidence, disclosed, Butler may have been a citizen of Erie, whose interests were directly antagonistic to those of Stoddart, or he may have been a non-resident of the county. We submit that the order of the judge refusing the temporary injunction, and thereby sustaining the plea of res adjudicata at chambers, was so totally at variance with the enlightened and equitable doctrine of estoppel, and is based upon such unfair and unsatisfactory evidence, that the order should be reversed.

This is another county-seat case, growing out of the same election, and has the same objects and purposes in view. Each was commenced and prosecuted by the friends and supporters of Osage Mission, which point, by a multiplicity of suits, and some legerdemain, has succeeded in holding the county-seat at Osage Mission for nearly two years, against the declared wishes of the people. This action was not commenced until the Butler-McMillen Case was all heard and determined in the district court. That was an action, as the court will see by a view of the records, brought by Butler v. McMillen, for the express purpose of contesting the election held on the twenty-sixth of March, 1872; and the prayer of the petition was, among other things, that Osage Mission be declared the county-seat of said county; but the very object of said action was to ascertain *31 which *point was legally elected to be the county-seat,—Erie or Osage Mission. And the court, after sore trouble and mature deliberation, held and decided that Erie, and not Osage Mission, was the shiretown of said county. Now, in that case, McMillen (the defendant) was successful, and that case decided the very thing to be decided in this case. We make the point that, under the statute of 1871, but one contest can be had, no matter who the nominal parties to the record are; that the real parties in interest are the candidates that were voted for, to-wit, Erie and Osage Mission; unless, perchance, it may be said that the friends and supporters of each place are the real parties in interest, which, of course, does not alter the proposition, because each point is represented by the mere nominal party on the record, which, in this case happens to be, for plaintiff, A. B. Stoddart; and it might have been any other qualified citizen of said county, but it happened to be Stoddart, instead of its happening to be some other person whose qualifications were in some respects the same. Now, when Stoddart commenced this action he represented, and was the next friend of, every party in said county who favored Osage Mission for county-seat, and his action was equally binding upon others as well as himself. The nominal defendant is a mere accident. Had any other citizen held the same official position as this one, he, and not this nominal defendant, would have had the pleasure of having his name marked high on the escutcheon of fame, free of charge.

Our view of this case is that we have sufficiently raised the question of res judicata as to utterly preclude the plaintiff, or any other citizen, from maintaining this or any other second action. Can it be possible that the proper construction of this statute can be that when any citizen has commenced and carried on any action, under the county-seat act of 1871, against any county official, that so soon as he is done, any other one, or as many as may elect so to do, can commence and carry on another? If so, in one case a plaintiff may be successful, in another the defendant may be successful, and in the next the *32 plaintiff may again be successful; *and so on alternately, until the court records may be plastered all over with varying judgments and decrees,—one declaring one point the county-seat, and another, the other point, and so you may have many decrees of equal validity, declaring each point the county-seat of the same county. Under the statute, if such be its construction, a citizen of one point may apply to the court for a writ of mandamus against a county clerk, and a citizen of the other point against the same officer by injunction, and in both cases, should the plaintiffs be successful, the officer would be compelled to hold his office at both points, or be in constant contempt of the court, and in constant contempt of the court as to one of the points all the time. This is what this action, if maintained, leads to.

But, says plaintiff, if your theory of this case be true, you cannot raise this question at chambers; that it is trying the main case on its merits and upon affidavits, and this the law does not allow. Then, suppose for a moment that plaintiff is right in his view, and that the plea of res judicata cannot be interposed at chambers, nor at any other time when plaintiff is applying for an injunction, then the effect, or the practical effect, will be precisely the same. Now, for an illustration: Very frequently, and nearly always, what a point wants particularly when it is the point at which the county-seat is where the election is held, is some means by which it can still hold the county-seat, after the election is over, a long time, against the legally expressed will of the people. Well, this is just the case with the friends of Osage Mission. Now, you cannot raise the question, when a party is applying for an injunction, nor upon a motion to dissolve, but only upon and after a full and fair trial, which takes and means about eighteen months in Neosho county; and just as soon as one plaintiff is beaten, another opens up his battery, and another eighteen months is consumed in settling and determining a question which all know just how it will be decided. Yet we must wait until the slow process of the court is gone through with,—rather, had we not better say, the farce of a trial?

*33 The injunction in this case was rightfully denied. It was *sufficiently shown to the judge at chambers that a judicial battle had been fought between the real plaintiffs and defendants herein, and that a victory had been lost on the one side and gained on the other. In this action they renew the same battle, attempting to fight the same cause over with a change of officers as plaintiff and defendant. Now, we ask, who were the real parties in interest in this fight and suit? The answer can only be: Osage Mission on the one side and Erie on the other. Now, just what does appear to be the best mode of raising this question does not so readily appear; but we think the affidavit of Peter Walters, accompanied by the judgment and decree rendered in that case, does seem to fairly raise the question, and this decree is presumed to be a proper response to the issues in said cause. Besides this answer to plaintiff's application for injunction, we think the proof by affidavit beats them, and outweighs plaintiff's affidavits and proofs.

Again, the statute, in this case, provides that both parties may set up any and all votes alleged on either side to be fraudulent and spurious, or legal votes that may have been properly offered at the various polls in the county, and rejected. Now, take the case which is pleaded in bar of this action, and say defendant in that action, having set up all the votes he claimed that were fraudulent as against him, and all that he claimed were legally offered for him and rejected, would not these votes have been res judicata, and could he again use them in another action? If he used them in the first, these proper votes being rejected, and these fraudulent ones being received, would, as a rule, be the very votes that would change the result of the election. Now, in the first action, the votes above mentioned might be just what changed the result, and of course if they were not, and could not be, used in this case, the want of their use would again change the result of the suit in favor of the other place. This result must be reached, or the same votes could be adjudicated a thousand times just as well as to be used a second time. Once admit the principle that they can be used a second time, and no good reason can be given *34 why *they could not be used ad infinitum. The principle contended for by the plaintiff would never end a county-seat contest.

The main question to be determined in this court is, was plaintiff entitled to his injunction upon the papers and evidence, as set out in the record herein filed? We do not think anything can be shown by defendant upon plaintiff's application for injunction which will defeat plaintiff's right to an injunction. The law will not take a circuitous route when the same thing can be accomplished directly. Courts of equity have ample powers in such emergencies, and will look well to the great interests involved, and act in accordance with justice to all concerned. It would not be stating the case too strongly to say that the judge of the district court could take judicial notice of the former case, it being a public record of his own court, and notice to the world as such record.

VALENTINE, J. On March 12, 1872, an election was held in Neosho county for the relocation of the county-seat of that county. No place received a majority of all the votes cast, but the towns of Erie and Osage Mission were the two towns which received the greatest number of votes. On March 26th a second election was held for the relocation of said county-seat, at which election the towns of Erie and Osage Mission were voted for. The returns of the election were duly canvassed by the board of county commissioners, and it was determined by them that the town of Erie had received a majority of all the votes cast at said election, and that said town of Erie had thereby become the county-seat of said county. Thomas H. Butler, a friend of the town of Osage Mission, felt aggrieved at the decision of the board of county commissioners, and commenced an action in the district court of said county, under chapter 79 of the Laws of 1871, to contest said election. He commenced his action, under section 5 of said act, against George W. McMillen, *35 county clerk of said county, to perpetually enjoin said county clerk from moving his office from the town of Osage Mission to the town of Erie. The action was prosecuted and defended in good faith, and finally determined by the district court in favor of the defendant, and in favor of the town of Erie. The case was afterwards brought to this court, and is reported in 13 Kan. *385. The case was determined at the July term of the district court in 1873. Immediately after said case was determined the present case was commenced. It seems that the plaintiff in this action, (A. B. Stoddart,) who is also a friend of the town of Osage Mission, also felt aggrieved at the decision of the board of county commissioners in declaring the town of Erie to have received a majority of all the votes cast at said election, and in declaring said town of Erie to be the county-seat. He therefore also commenced an action under said section 5 of the act of 1871, for the purpose of contesting said election. He made R. J. Vanlaningham, register of deeds, the defendant, and prayed for a perpetual injunction to restrain said defendant from moving his said office from the town of Osage Mission to the town of Erie. He also asked for a temporary injunction to restrain said Vanlaningham from moving his said office until said action could be finally heard and determined. The court below required notice to be given to the defendant of the application for said temporary injunction. Notice was so given, and the application was heard by the judge of the district court at chambers, on affidavits and other evidence, on August 5 and 6, 1873. At the time of hearing, the defendant had not yet answered the petition of the plaintiff. The judge refused to grant said temporary injunction, and the plaintiff now brings the question here for review.

Did the judge of the court below err? We think not. On an application for a temporary injunction, when notice of the same has been required to be given to the defendant, and notice has been so given, the defendant may, on the hearing of the application, and *36 even before answer filed, introduce any legal evidence *that would tend to show that the injunction should not be granted. He is not confined to evidence that merely tends to disprove the allegations of the plaintiff's petition. Indeed, it has been held that a party applying for a temporary injunction has no right to withhold or omit facts important for the court to know in granting the injunction. Joyce, Inj. 1263-1266, 1306; High, Inj. §§ 990, 991. It seems everywhere to be held that the granting or refusing of a temporary or preliminary injunction rests largely in the sound judicial discretion of the court or judge to whom the application is made. Hill. Inj. 15, § 17. And it would seem, in England, that "in granting an injunction the court is bound to consider the amount of injury which may be thereby inflicted on strangers to the suit and third parties." 1 Joyce, Inj. 497. In the case of New York Printing & Dying Establishment v. Fitch, 1 Paige, 98, Chancellor WALWORTH uses the following language: "There are many cases in which the complainant may be entitled to a perpetual injunction on the hearing, when it would be manifestly improper to grant an injunction in limine. The final injunction is, in many cases, matter of strict right, and granted as a necessary consequence of the decree made in the cause. On the contrary, the preliminary injunction before answer is a matter resting altogether in the discretion of the court, and ought not to be granted unless the injury is pressing, and the delay dangerous." And injunctions are often allowed to prevent a multiplicity of suits. In this case it would seem that the plaintiff is in favor of a multiplicity of suits, and wants the court to assist him therein by allowing a temporary injunction. Now, after the main and substantial question in this case, the question whether Osage Mission or Erie is the county-seat of Neosho county, has been twice decided against the plaintiff,—once by the canvassing board and once by the district court,—after a full and fair trial, in an action litigated in good faith by both sides, we think it would be at least an abuse of judicial discretion for the court or judge to allow a temporary *injunction to restrain a county officer from moving his office to the place so declared to be the county-seat, merely for the purpose of keeping the office at the old county-seat while the plaintiff should again litigate the question as to which place is the county-seat. The minor issues in the case of Butler v. McMillen were in some respects different from the minor issues in the present case, but still the main issue was the same in both cases.

The order of the judge of the court below refusing to grant said temporary injunction is affirmed.

KANSAS PAC. RY. CO. v. GRANVILLE D. POINTER.<sup>1</sup>

July Term, 1874.

1. Negligence: Railroads: Management of Moving Train. Where a person has been run over by a railroad train and injured, in an action for damages therefor, a finding that the injury was caused by the gross negligence of the company will not be set aside when it appears that he was run over by a train consisting of a locomotive, tender, one baggage and two passenger cars, which was started backward over a public crossing, in a populous city, with the brake on the engine out of repair and useless, with no brakeman at the other brakes, with no flag-man or other person at the rear of the train, or at the crossing, to warn persons of their danger, and no one on the train except three persons, who were all on the locomotive, without the blowing of any whistle, though with the ringing of a bell, and along a track which from the locomotive could not be seen for a distance of from forty to fifty feet from the rear of the train.
2. ———: Ordinary Negligence. Where the term "negligence" is used without any qualifying word, it will be generally understood that "ordinary negligence" is meant.
3. ———: Contributory. Where the plaintiff is guilty of ordinary negligence, contributing directly to the injury, he cannot recover, except perhaps in cases of wanton and willful injury.
- *38 *4. ———. Contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff is matter of defense; and if the record shows negligence of the defendant, and is silent as to the conduct of the plaintiff, a judgment for the plaintiff will be upheld.
5. Special Findings: Practice. Where any one of the findings in a special verdict is not specific and certain, either party may require that it may be made so before the jury is discharged.

<sup>1</sup> If it appears that the deceased contributed by his own negligence to the injury which caused his death, the plaintiff cannot recover. Gibson v. Wyandotte, 20 Kan. 156. It is now well settled in this state and elsewhere that, if the ordinary negligence of the plaintiff directly or proximately contributed to his injury, he cannot recover unless the injury was intentionally and wantonly caused by the defendant. Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Adams, 33 Kan. 429, S. C. 6 Pac. Rep. 529, and cases there cited.

In the absence of evidence tending to show either that the plaintiff was negligent or not negligent, the court should direct the jury to find that he was not negligent. Central Branch U. P. R. Co. v. Hotham, 22 Kan. 50. The burden of proof to show contributory negligence is on the defendant. Moulton v. Aldrich, 28 Kan. 314. Same principle applied, Kansas City L. & S. R. Co. v. Phillibert, 25 Kan. 586; Central Branch U. P. R. Co. v. Walters, 24 Kan. 505. An instruction to the jury that "if there was negligence on the part of both parties, and they find that the negligence of the plaintiff was only slight compared with that of the defendant, their verdict must be for the plaintiff," is erroneous. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Morgan, 31 Kan. 77; S. C. 1 Pac. Rep. 298. See, also, Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Richardson, 25 Kan. 410.

As to negligence generally, see Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Rollins, 5 Kan. 167, and note; Moore v. Cass, 10 Kan. 288, and note; and the notes to Myers v. Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co., 1 N. E. Rep. 899; Boss v. Providence & W. R. Co., 1 Atl. Rep. 15; Ivens v. Cincinnati, W. & M. Ry. Co., 2 N. E. Rep. 136; Cincinnati, H. & I. R. Co. v. Butler, 2 N. E. Rep. 144; Copper v. Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co., 2 N. E. Rep. 752; Lawson v. Chicago, St. P. & M. O. Ry. Co., 24 N. W. Rep. 622; Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Peavey, 8 Pac. Rep. 791; Butcher v. Vaca Val. R. Co., 8 Pac. Rep. 179; Wolff v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 25 N. W. Rep. 68.

6. ———. Where a finding, either regarded by itself or in the light of other findings, is not specific and certain, and the jury is discharged without any objection to it, or any effort to have it made specific and certain, it will thereafter be construed against the party in whose favor it is found.
7. ———: Construction of: Negligence. In this case the jury found that the defendant was guilty of gross negligence, immediately causing the injury. They also found that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence contributing to the injury, without specifying what degree of negligence, or whether proximately or remotely contributory. Held, that it was apparent from the other findings, and the instructions of the court, that they intended only such slight negligence as was consistent with a right to recover compensation.
8. Negligence: Question for Jury. Where the facts are disputed, negligence is a question of fact for the jury; where the facts are undisputed, and but one deduction is to be drawn from them, it presents a question of law for the courts; but where the facts are undisputed, but are of such a nature that different minds will draw different conclusions from them as to the reasonableness and care of a party's conduct, it is a proper question for the determination of a jury.
9. Verdicts: Concurring: Supreme Court. Where three successive juries have, on a doubtful question of negligence, found for the plaintiff, this court should be clearly convinced of the existence of error before it orders the setting aside of the third verdict.

Error from Atchison district court.

This case was here once before, and is reported in 9 Kan. *620 et seq. On being remanded to the district court, another trial was had at the June term, 1873. The facts were set forth in a special verdict, which will be found in the opinion. The jury found for the plaintiff, Pointer, and assessed his damages at $5,000.

*39 **J. P. Usher and T. A. Hurd*, for plaintiff in error..

The jury, by their twelfth finding, found that Pointer's injury was caused by the want of ordinary care, and by the gross negligence of the defendant in the manner of running the train, and by the failure of the defendant to keep a lookout of any kind for persons who might be on the track,—thereby explaining in what respect there was a want of ordinary care; and in the fourteenth finding they further explain what was meant and intended by the language used in the twelfth finding; and they further, by the twentieth finding, find that the train was handled on that occasion in the usual manner in which said train was handled while backing up to be switched, and was manned as was usual in operating such train; and by the eighth finding, find that the bell upon the engine was rung until the collision with the plaintiff. Taking these findings together, they show on what facts the jury predicated the finding of negligence on the part of the railway company. We contend that these findings of fact do not show negligence on the part of said company. The jury has found the facts on which they predicated negligence on the part of defendant below, and such facts do not in law constitute negligence. Ernst v. Hudson River R. Co., 39 N. Y. 61; Beisiegel v. New York Cent. R.

Co., 40 N. Y. 9, 34; Harty v. Central R. Co., 42 N. Y. 468. The defendant below was not bound to keep a flag-man on its track to warn persons off, nor to keep a lookout from the rear end of the train for a like purpose, nor keep a man upon the train for like purpose. The persons in charge of the train were not bound to anticipate defendant in error upon the track, and were not bound to make any provisions for his safety; and, if they had seen him, they were not bound to use any care towards him until they had reason to suppose that he would not take care of himself. Had they seen him, they would have had the right to suppose that he was a man of good sight and hearing, and that he would take reasonable care to protect himself. The bell was rung in time for him to escape, and he was bound to have left the track or suffer the consequences. Finlayson v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 1 Dill. 579; Wilcox v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co., 39 N. Y. 358; Dascomb v. Buffalo & S. L. R. Co., 27 Barb.

*40 *22; Grippen v. New York Cent. R. Co., 40 N. Y. 34; Harty v. Central R. Co., 42 N. Y. 468; Herring v. Wilmington & R. Co., 10 Ired. 402; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Baches, 55 Ill. 379; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Miller, 25 Mich. 274. The question whether this ground was used by the public to walk across or go upon it, gave the public no rights there; and whether plaintiff in error knew the ground was so used, or permitted the same, was entirely immaterial.

By the thirteenth finding the jury find that Pointer was guilty of negligence which contributed to the injury he received. This finding is decisive of the case, and the judgment below must be reversed, and a final judgment for the plaintiff in error entered. Wilcox v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co., 39 N. Y. 358, 368; Havens v. Erie Ry. Co., 41 N. Y. 296; Gorton v. Erie Ry. Co., 45 N. Y. 660; Grippen v. New York Cent. R. Co., 40 N. Y. 34; Jewett v. Home Ins. Co., 29 Iowa, 562; Hunt v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 26 Iowa, 363; Donaldson v. Mississippi & M. R. Co., 18 Iowa, 280; McAunich v. Mississippi & M. R. Co., 20 Iowa, 338; Hoben v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., Id. 562; Sherman v. Western S. Co., 24 Iowa, 515; Haley v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 21 Iowa, 15. If there is any doubt whether the jury, by the thirteenth finding, intended to find that the negligence of the defendant in error contributed proximately to his injury, that doubt is removed by the ninth, seventeenth, eighteenth, nineteenth, and twentieth findings. The last-mentioned findings are fully sustained by the evidence.

Even if the thirteenth finding be omitted, the facts stated in the seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth findings defeat the action. The facts therein found show culpable negligence on the part of defendant in error. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Baches, 55 Ill. 379; Finlayson v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 1 Dill. 579; Ernst v. Hudson River R. Co., 39 N. Y. 61; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Miller, 25 Mich. 274. If there is negligence on the part of both parties which contributed in any degree to the accident, or if plaintiff below was guilty of negligence, he cannot, as a matter of law, recover, although defendant also may have been negligent, or may have neglected to perform some statutory requirement. Artz v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 34 Iowa, 153; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Miller, 25 Mich. 274; Finlayson v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 1 Dill. 579. The evidence shows that the plaintiff was walking laterally upon the railroad track owned by the defendant, and further shows that he did not look back to see whether cars were approaching; that he gave no attention to his own safety; and that, except for his own gross carelessness in going upon and walking along the track, without using all his faculties to discover approaching trains of cars, he would not have been injured. The rule of law upon this point is that it *41 is negligence for an intelligent person to be upon the track of a railroad constantly used, unless for the purpose of crossing the same; and if a person travel along a railroad track where cars are frequently passing, even for the purpose of crossing a public highway, he is guilty of such negligence as will prevent a recovery for any injury he may receive, unless from gross and wanton negligence on the part of the employes of the railroad company; and the fact that plaintiff was run over is not presumptive evidence of such negligence on the part of the employes. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Baches, 55 Ill. 379; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Miller, 25 Mich. 274; Bellefontaine Ry. Co. v. Hunter, 33 Ind. 335; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, 36 Md. 366; Haight v. New York Cent. R. Co., 7 Lans. 11; Maginnis v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 52 N. Y. 215.

The ground on which the plaintiff was injured, was not a public street. It is true, the council of the city, in 1863, passed an ordinance declaring certain lands to be a street, but no damages were ever assessed or paid as required by law, and nothing was done towards establishing a street beyond the mere passage of the ordinance. See twenty-first finding. We submit that this ordinance did not establish a street; and, if it did, the defendant in error had no right to go upon and walk laterally upon it. He avers in his petition that this land belonged to plaintiff in error. Ewing v. City of St. Louis, 5 Wall. 413; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Baches, 55 Ill. 379.

The third instruction is in these words: "If the defendant was running its train in the limits of a populous city, where it was reasonable to anticipate the presence of many persons on the track, then its duty was to keep a vigilant lookout to avoid injury to persons on the track, and any violation of that duty would be negligence on its part; and if the plaintiff in this case was injured by reason of such negligence, and through no want of reasonable care on his part, then the plaintiff is entitled to recover full compensatory damages for all injuries so sustained,"—was improper for any form of verdict, and the court erred in giving it. And the following instructions, asked by plaintiff in error, were proper, and the court erred in refusing to give them, to-wit:

"(4) The plaintiff has shown by his own testimony that he stepped onto the track of defendant a short distance in advance of *42 the train by which he was injured; that he proceeded down the track in the same direction in which the train moved, and that, after he stepped on the track, he did not look behind him until the train was close upon him; and that, if he had looked at any time after he stepped upon the track, he could have seen the train if it was approaching, and it is the duty of the jury to so find."

"(8) The defendant had the exclusive right to the use of its track at the point where the injury is testified to have occurred, and was not bound to anticipate the presence of the plaintiff or any other person on its track at that point, or that they would walk there in the way of its operation of its road."

"(11) If the servants of the defendant, upon the starting and backing of the train from the depot, rung the bell, and continued to ring the same, and if, as soon as they ascertained the plaintiff was in danger, they stopped the train as soon as it could be done with the usual and ordinary appliances, then these facts tend to prove due care on the part of the defendant."

"(17) If the plaintiff went on the track of the defendant, without the precaution of looking out for approaching trains, and if he neglected to use all his faculties to discover the danger he was in from approaching trains, it was gross and culpable negligence on his part."

The judgment upon the special verdict is contrary to law. The judgment is against the evidence. The further findings of fact asked by defendant below were warranted by the evidence, and the court erred in not directing the jury to make further findings.

Stillings & Fenlon, for defendant in error.

The findings in this case show—First, that defendant in error went upon the track of plaintiff in error on his way to the ferry-landing at a place usually frequented and used for such purposes by men, women, and children; that before going upon the track he looked, and saw that no train was in motion; second, that the train which caused the injury was started in motion after he was on the track, and the employes who moved the train did not see defendant in error, so that they must have started the train in motion without looking to see *43 whether the track was clear or not; third, that the train was moved backward without brakemen, or any persons at or near the rear end of the cars to look out for or warn any person of danger, or to check the train, if necessary, and at a place where there was much noise and confusion, and the blowing of the whistle of the Missouri Pacific engine at a distance of 100 feet away; fourth, that the gross negligence of plaintiff in error in the manner in which the train was so operated, was the immediate cause of the injury. It is claimed, however, by plaintiff in error that, although guilty of gross negligence, it is not liable, because the findings show Pointer guilty of negligence contributing to the injury. The acts of Pointer which the jury say are negligence contributory to the injury are set out by them: First, that Pointer, although he looked before stepping on the track to see that no train was coming, failed to turn round and look back for this train in the brief time he was going along and across the track; second, that Pointer could have gone further without getting on the track of the railroad, and then gone directly across the track. But the jury make the distinction as to whether the negligence on the part of Pointer was proximate or remote as clearly as could be expected of them in the preparation of a special verdict. They say that the negligence of the plaintiff "was gross," and was "the immediate cause of the injury;" and, while they do not in so many words define the negligence imputed by them to the defendant in error as remote, the qualifying words used by them in the one case, and omitted in the other, show clearly that they intended to so find.

Counsel for plaintiff in error do not, if we correctly understand them, claim but that the company would be liable on the findings but for the acts of negligence set out in the verdict claimed to be contributory negligence on the part of defendant in error, but claim that he is barred of recovery by the acts of negligence imputed to him. In this, we think, counsel are wrong. The rule, as laid down in Pendleton St. R. Co. v. Stallmann, 22 Ohio St. 20, would apply, and that the case, as shown by the findings, comes within the exceptions to the rule of contributed negligence barring recovery. The same *44 principle is sustained by this court; the court holding that, in order to defeat plaintiff's claim, his negligence must "proximately contribute to the injury." Sawyer v. Sauer, 10 Kan. *472. And see Bridge v. Grand Junction Ry. Co., 3 Mees. & W. 248; Lynch v. Nurdin, 41 E. C. L. 426; Robinson v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 65 Barb. 146; West Chester & P. R. Co. v. McElwee, 67 Pa. St. 311; Railway Co. v. Whitton's Adm'r, 13 Wall. 270; Laning v. New York Cent. R. Co., 49 N. Y. 521. That the backing of a train through a place frequented by the public, without any precaution being taken to guard against injury to men, women, or children, and that, too, at a place where the blowing of whistles and noise would likely prevent persons from observing it, is properly characterized by the jury as gross carelessness.

There is not a single finding of fact by the jury which there is not some evidence tending to establish. This being the case, by repeated decisions of this court, the court is not at liberty to set aside such findings, it being the sole province of the jury to determine whether a fact is established when there is any evidence tending to prove such fact. And as this court has already laid it down as law that an action wherein it is found that the proximate cause of the injury complained of was the negligence of the defendant can only be defeated when it is also found as matter of fact that the plaintiff "proximately" or immediately contributed to his own injury, and as there is a finding based on evidence that the "immediate," the "proximate," cause of the injury here was the negligence of plaintiff in error, and no finding that Pointer "proximately" contributed, it seems plain to us that this court is bound by its own rulings to sustain the judgment herein.

This is the second time this case has come to this court by appeal on behalf of the railroad company, and we submit that the jury having twice found for defendant in error is entitled to some consideration in this court.

BREWER, J. This was an action brought by Pointer in the district court of Leavenworth county, for personal injury by being knocked down and run over by the cars of plaintiff in error, near the *45 railroad depot in the city of Leavenworth, *on the fourth of February, 1870. The venue was charged to Atchison county, and the cause was tried before a court and a jury in June, 1873, and the jury returned the following special verdict:

"We, the jury, find, for a special verdict in the above-entitled action, the following:

"First. That on or before the fourth of February, 1870, the plaintiff was passing across and along the railroad track of the defendant, in that part of the city of Leavenworth traversed by the road of the defendant, and while so passing at or near the junction of Water street with Chestnut street, which streets are nearly at right angles with each other, the plaintiff was knocked down and run over by the cars of the defendant; that two passenger cars, one baggage car, and a locomotive tender passed over the body of the plaintiff, and he was pulled out from between the wheels of the engine and tender in a bruised, wounded, and otherwise injured condition of body, and in an unconscious state of mind.

"Second. That, by said cars knocking him down and running over him, the plaintiff had his shoulder dislocated, and had two of his ribs broken; that, in consequence of the injuries then received by the plaintiff, he suffered great pain and agony for a long time, and was confined to his bed for a period of about three months, and remained feeble and weak for a period of about six months, and during all of said last-mentioned time was under the care and direction of a physician; that the plaintiff is a man between fifty and sixty years of age, and in consequence of said injuries his health and strength are permanently impaired.

"Third. That it was necessary for him to procure said medical attendance, and the cost of the same was five hundred dollars.

"Fourth. That the road of the defendant, at the place the plaintiff was struck and injured, was at that time commonly used by persons for passing over and across the same from the city of Leavenworth to the ferry-landing, the same being a public ferry across the Missouri river at that point, and the only means of travel at that point between the west and east banks of the Missouri river; and the same had been so used before the location of the defendant's road at that place, and continued to be so used, with the knowledge of and without objection by the defendant, up to and including said date, and *46 that there was no way of reaching the ferry except by crossing the road of the defendant at that, or some point near that place.

"Fifth. That the streets of the city had never been graded or improved at that or any other place leading to the ferry-landing, so as to show on the surface of the ground where they were.

"Sixth. That the injuries occurred to the plaintiff at a place at which persons were in the habit of passing and repassing continually, with the knowledge and without objection on the part of the defendant.

"Seventh. That the place where the plaintiff was injured was on ground which had been used by the public as a thoroughfare from the city of Leavenworth to the landing of the public ferry across the Missouri river ever since the year 1855 up to and inclusive of the day of the injury, and which ground formed part of a tract of territory which, by ordinance of the city of Leavenworth approved the twenty-first of October, 1868, was created into a street of said city, designated as Water street

"Eighth. That the train so moved was being backed southward with an engine, upon which the brake was out of repair, so that such brake could not be worked, and was wholly useless to aid in stopping the train; that there were no brakemen at any of the other brakes on the train, to use them in controlling the train, and no flag-man or other person or thing on the train to warn persons of danger, or to warn the engineer; nor was there any flag-man at any point on the track between the depot from which the train moved to the place where the plaintiff was injured; nor was there any whistle blown on that train, but a bell was rung by them.

"Ninth. That the plaintiff, at the time of the injury, was with his back to the approaching train, at a point where there was much noise other than that made by the train, and was unconscious of the approach of the train; that, when approaching the road near the same, plaintiff looked up the track towards the depot, and no train was then moving.

"Tenth. That if there had been a brakeman or flag-man on the rear end of the train, or at any point on or near the track and near the moving train, he could easily have seen the danger the plaintiff was in, in time to have warned the engineer and caused the train to stop before the injury, or could have apprised the plaintiff of the impending danger in time for him to escape.

*47 "Eleventh. That the train was moving backward, and there was no person on the rear end of the train to warn persons of danger, or to notify the engineer to check the train.

"Twelfth. That the injury to the plaintiff was caused immediately by the defendant's failing to use ordinary care, and by its gross negligence in the manner of the running of the train at that time and place, and by the failure of the defendant to keep a lookout of any kind for persons who might be on the track.

"Thirteenth. That the plaintiff was guilty of negligence contributing to the injury.

"Fourteenth. That the injury to the plaintiff was caused by a failure on the part of the defendant, through its agents and servants, to use ordinary care in moving the locomotive and train at that time and place; that the place where the plaintiff was injured was within the corporate limits of the city of Leavenworth, which was a city of over twenty thousand inhabitants at that time, and a place where persons—men, women, and children—had been and were in the habit of passing and crossing with the full knowledge of the defendant, and without any protest or objection on its part.

"Fifteenth. That the only employees of the defendant on the train, at the time the plaintiff was injured, were three men,—an engineer, a baggage-master, and a yard-master,—and these three employees were on the engine, the most remote point on the train from the rear end thereof, and from which place they could not see the track for forty or fifty feet from the rear end of the train.

"Sixteenth. That on or before the fourth of February, 1870, the Kansas Pacific Railway Company was the owner of and was operating its railroad from the city of Leavenworth to Lawrence.

"Seventeenth. That the ground occupied by the aforesaid railway company, running south from the depot in Leavenworth, was formerly uneven, and only passable for foot passengers; that the railroad company graded said ground, making it level, for the purpose of laying their track, and that in so doing, in conjunction with the Missouri Pacific or Missouri River Railroad, so graded said ground about the width of two hundred feet from, and running parallel with, the Missouri river at the point whereat or about the said injury occurred; and that there was a space of level ground between the Pacific tracks and the Kansas Pacific Railway tracks, of fifty feet, upon which *48 foot passengers could walk at *the said point; and that on the west side of the Kansas Pacific track, and running parallel thereto, was a road that was passable for wagons and teams. Said road was about thirty or forty feet wide, and bounded on the west by a precipitous bluff about fifty feet high. Said road ran south about one thousand feet from the depot, and was used at and previous to the time of the plaintiff's injury as a thoroughfare by which the public passed to the ferry across the Missouri river, a point nearly opposite the landing of the public ferry crossing the Missouri river between Kansas and Missouri, at which point the travel crossed the track of the Kansas Pacific and Missouri Pacific Railways to reach the aforesaid ferry.

"Eighteenth. That the plaintiff could have reached the ferry by keeping west of defendant's 'tracks' to a point directly opposite the ferry-landing, and thence east across said railway, not more than ten feet wide, to said ferry.

"Nineteenth. That the plaintiff was passing upon the track with his head down, and persons near by, apprehending that he was in danger, called to him with a loud voice warning him of his danger,—these persons standing, one upon the cars of the Missouri-Pacific Railway Company, about fifty feet away, and the other in the space between the tracks of the Missouri Pacific and the Kansas Pacific Railways; that the whistle of the locomotive of the Missouri Pacific Railway was blown, which was about one hundred feet from the plaintiff; that his attention was not attracted by the signals of warning, nor did he look up, but kept in the same position, with head bent forward until he was struck in the back by the 'bumper' or 'drawhead' of the rear car upon the end next to him, when, from the force of the blow he fell forward, when the train—two passenger cars, one baggage car, and the engine and tender—passed over him.

"Twentieth. That the defendant's train was handled on the day of the injury in the usual manner in which said train was handled while backing up to be switched and left on the side track. The train was in charge of the yard-master, and neither he nor any of the persons on the train knew the plaintiff was upon the track, and in the way of the train, until after his injury.

"Twenty-first. That on the twenty-first of October, 1863, the council of the city of Leavenworth passed an ordinance laying out a street called 'Water Street,' and there is no evidence that anything more was done in the premises by the authority aforesaid.

*49 **"We the jury, find for the plaintiff, and assess his damages at five thousand dollars."*

Before the jury was discharged, the defendant requested in writing that the court direct the jury to make further findings of fact, which was refused. The motion for a new trial was duly made by the defendant, and overruled, and defendant's motion for judgment was also overruled. The court rendered a judgment in favor of Pointer, upon such special verdict, for the sum of five thousand dollars, and costs of suit, and defendant brings its petition in error in this court.

Upon this case two principal questions arise: First, is such negligence shown on the part of the company as, independent of the conduct of Pointer, will render it liable for the damages sustained? and, second, does there appear such contributory negligence on the part of Pointer as will defeat his recovery?

With the first question we have little trouble. The jury found specifically (twelfth finding) that the injury was caused by the gross negligence of the company, and if we turn to the other findings in which the circumstances of the injury are narrated, or to the testimony in the case, the whole of which is before us, we find ample warrant for this finding. A train consisting of two passenger and one baggage car, a tender, and locomotive, is started backward over a public crossing, in a populous city, with the brake on the engine out of repair and useless, with no brakeman at any of the other brakes on the train; with but three persons on the train, and all of them in the locomotive; with no flag-man on the rear end of the train, or at the crossing, to give warning to persons on the track, or to the engineer, without the blowing of a whistle, (though with the ringing of a bell,) and along a track which from the locomotive could not be seen for a distance of forty or fifty feet from the rear of the train. Add to this that there was at the time much noise other than that made by the train, and we think a jury might properly say there was gross negligence.

The other question is embarrassing and difficult. By the thirteenth finding the jury say "that the plaintiff was guilty of *negligence contributing to the injury." Did they mean thereby such negligence as will defeat a recovery? Do the facts, as shown by the other findings, or the evidence, disclose such negligence? As a general rule, whenever the word "negligence" is used without any qualifying term, we understand that ordinary negligence is meant; and where the triple distinctions of slight, ordinary, and gross negligence are recognized, as in this state, ordinary negligence on the part of the plaintiff will, except perhaps in the case of wanton and willful injury, defeat a recovery. It is settled in this state that where the negligence of the plaintiff is but slight, or only remotely contributing to the injury, it will not defeat a recovery. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Rollins, 5 Kan. *167; Sawyer v. Sauer, 10 Kan. *466. It seems to us also correct to hold that the onus probandi, as to the negligence of the plaintiff, is on the defendant; that if the record shows negligence on the part of the defendant, and is silent as to the conduct of the plaintiff, it makes out a case for recovery. We are aware of contrary decisions, and that in some states it is held that the burden is on the plaintiff to show affirmatively that he exercised due care, and was without fault. But if it is shown that a party has done wrong, and caused injury thereby, is not a prima facie case for compensation made? Logically, the wrong-doer should always compensate, and the wrong and the injury always entitle to relief. When the wrong of both parties contributes to the injury, the law declines to apportion the damages, and so leaves the injured party without any compensation. This is not strictly justice. The wrong-doer causing injury ought not to be released from making any compensation, simply because the injured party is also a wrong-doer, and helped to produce the injury. But many considerations, especially the difficulty of correctly apportioning the damages, and determining to what extent the wrong of the respective parties was instrumental in causing the injury, uphold the rule so universally recognized that where the wrong, the negligence, of both parties contributes to the injury, the law *51 will not afford any relief. But if the wrong-doer ought always to compensate for the injury he has wrought, and is relieved from the obligation to compensate only by the fact that the wrong of the injured party helped to cause the injury, it is incumbent on him to show such wrong. It is matter of defense, to avoid the consequences of his own wrong. In the case of the Union Pac. R. Co. v. Hand, 7 Kan. *388, the question was incidentally noticed, and the intimation was in favor of the views herein expressed. See, also, Shear. & R. Neg. §§ 43, 44, and cases cited in notes, and the late case of Railroad Co. v. Gladmon, 15 Wall. 401, where the supreme court of the United States lay down the rules as given above. It seems to us to follow from this that, where the special verdict shows an injury caused by the gross negligence of the defendant, a recovery must be sustained, unless it is also apparent that there was such contributory negligence as to relieve the defendant of responsibility; and that, where it is uncertain whether such negligence is apparent, the doubt must be resolved against the defendant.

In this case negligence and contributory negligence were not matters collateral and subordinate to the main issue, but were the vital and principal questions. To them the attention of counsel was mainly directed. The degree of negligence essential to defeat a recovery had been already settled by this court, and was doubtless known to counsel. The instructions are full of references to the different degrees of negligence. The jury specified in their verdict the degree of negligence of which they found the defendant guilty, and declare that it was the immediate cause of the injury. If any of the findings were not sufficiently definite and certain, either party could have called the attention of the court to it before the discharge of the jury, and had it made so. Arthur v. Wallace, 8 Kan. *267. And if the party whose interest it is to have it made definite and certain fails to do so, the omission will be taken against him in the construction of the finding. At the time this verdict was returned, the company objected that it was partial, incomplete, and inconsistent, *52 and specified a number of points in which it desired corrections, but said nothing as to this thirteenth finding. It appeared to be content with it. Turning now to the verdict, and we find that after the separate findings of fact, and as a part of the verdict, the jury return as follows: "We, the jury, find for the plaintiff, and assess his damages at $5,000." It appears from this that the jury did not mean by the thirteenth finding to attribute to the plaintiff such a degree of negligence as would defeat his recovery. They intended only such slight negligence, or negligence so remotely contributory to the injury, as was consistent with his right to compensation. It may be said that this was in effect a general verdict, and that this the jury were not at liberty to return where a special verdict had been ordered. This may all be true; but it does not affect the question we are now considering, viz., the intent of the jury. They failed to specify the degree of negligence of the plaintiff. What degree did they intend? and upon this question of intent this quasi general verdict strongly bears.

Nor can it be argued that this general finding was returned in ignorance of the law, and that the jury must have supposed that the mere negligence of the defendant gave a right to recovery independent of the conduct of the plaintiff. By the first instruction, given at the instance of the plaintiff, they were told substantially that the plaintiff could not recover if the injury resulted from his own negligence, but that slight negligence on his part would not defeat a recovery. To a similar effect is the third instruction, given at the like instance. These instructions, and the general finding, point clearly to the intention of the jury in the thirteenth finding, and show that they contemplated only that slight negligence which is consistent with the right to compensation.

Again, it seems that the last instruction, given at the instance of the defendant, throws some light upon this question. That instruction is as follows: "The fact that persons were upon the track or yard of the defendant before was no license to the plaintiff to be there, *53 and was no justification for the plaintiff being there; *and he was guilty of negligence for being on the track, if the jury find that he was on the track."

As, without dispute, the plaintiff was on the track when struck by the train, of course the jury could not find otherwise than that he was guilty of negligence. It is unnecessary to inquire whether this be good law or not, for surely it is a proposition of which the railroad company has no cause of complaint. It is enough now that it serves to indicate upon what the thirteenth finding was based. As it was an open question whether the place of the accident was a public crossing, it can hardly be that the court intended to say to the jury that, though this was a public crossing, the presence of the plaintiff on the track was such ordinary contributory negligence as, notwithstanding the gross negligence of the railroad company, would defeat a recovery. It seems to us, therefore, that the jury intended by this thirteenth finding only such slight negligence as does not bar the right to compensation.

But the solution of this question by no means removes the difficulties in deciding the case. It is earnestly insisted by counsel that the facts in reference to the conduct of the plaintiff, (defendant in error,) as they appear from the other findings, as well as from the testimony, show that culpable negligence on his part which will relieve the company from responsibility. It seems to us matter of great doubt, as we read the conduct of the plaintiff as narrated either in the findings or the testimony, whether this claim of counsel is not correct, and whether plaintiff was not so negligent as not to be entitled to compensation; and, perhaps, this doubt is our best justification for upholding the verdict. This question of negligence is said to be a mixed question of law and fact. When the facts are disputed, it makes a question for the jury; when the facts are undisputed, and but one deduction is to be drawn from them, there is simply a question of law for the court; but where the facts, though undisputed, are such that, when taken singly or in combination, different minds will come to different conclusions as to the reasonableness and care of the party's conduct, the question is one which may properly be left to the determination of the jury. Railroad Co. v. Stout, 17 Wall. 657; Detroit & W. R. Co. v. Van Steinburg, 17 Mich. 99. In this case three separate juries have found for the plaintiff, and that, notwithstanding any imputations that could be made on his conduct, he was entitled to compensation. While we are not disposed, even if it were possible, to avoid any responsibility that properly belongs to us, or leave with a jury the burden of determining questions which we ought to decide, and while we should never permit the perpetration of a glaring wrong upon a party, no matter how many successive juries should attempt it, yet the unanimous judgment of thirty-six intelligent, candid men as to the reasonableness and care of a party's conduct at the time of an injury ought to have no little weight with us.

We have outlined, in considering the first question, the conduct of the company. A similar outline is proper as to that of the plaintiff. It appears that there is a space south of the old depot in Leavenworth about 1,000 feet in length, and 200 feet in width, shut in between the Missouri river on the east, and a steep bluff on the west. At the lower end of this space was, at the time of this injury, and had been for years, a grist-mill built against the bluff, and also, at times, the landing place of the ferry-boat. The boat changed the landing-place from time to time to accommodate itself to the different changes of the water, so that only part of the time did it land at or near this space. Over this space the Missouri Pacific Railroad and this defendant had constructed four or five tracks, which were used in the making-up of the trains; the tracks of the Missouri Pacific road being next the river, and those of the defendant near the bluff. At the north-west corner of this space two streets came together, and prior to any occupation by the railroad companies the city had passed an ordinance for the opening of a street from the junction of these streets southward over this ground. But nothing more had been done towards securing the appropriation of the ground for street purposes.

*54 Both before and subsequent to the occupation by the railroad companies, and at the time of this injury, there was a traveled way from the junction of the streets across this space, and over the tracks of the companies at the ferry-landing, and the traveled way, the plaintiff was going to the ferry at the time he was run over. Between the tracks there was ample space and level ground for one to walk in safety, and west of this defendant's track, and close to the bluff, was a carriage-way, which ran along the whole length of the space, and crossed the track at right angles at the mill. The plaintiff could have walked along this carriage-way, or between the tracks, and been out of danger, except at the very moment of crossing. Instead of doing this, he got onto the track at about the junction of the two streets, and walked southward on it towards the ferry. At the time he got onto the track he looked, and no train was in motion. As he passed down the track the defendant's train started out from the depot, and the engineer on the Missouri Pacific train, seeing plaintiff's danger, whistled to alarm him, and the yard-master of the Missouri Pacific Company shouted and tried to attract his attention, but in vain.

From this outline it can but be seen that the plaintiff was guilty of some negligence; that he did not act with the highest prudence. Indeed, as before remarked, honest minds might well differ as to whether his negligence was not so great as to disentitle him to relief. In comparing, however, the conduct of the two parties, it will be generally conceded that the negligence of the company was of a higher degree and a grosser character than that of the plaintiff. This case must be distinguished from those where a party approaches and crosses a track without looking to see whether any train is coming; for here the plaintiff looked, and not only did he see no train coming, but in fact there was none. The train started after he got on. Nor must it be confounded with those cases in which the injury occurs on ground in the exclusive occupation of the railroad company. It was on ground of which the public and the company were in joint occupation; on ground which, without objection by the company, the public was occupying and using as a street, over which the plaintiff was then passing on his usual way to his home, on the east side of the river. For a case which, while its facts are not altogether similar, has many elements in it to make it a most appropriate citation in this, see Butler v. Milwaukee & St. P. Ry. Co., 28 Wis. 489. See, also, Railway Co. v. Whitton, 13 Wall. 270. It seems to us, after a full and careful examination of this case, that the judgment must be affirmed.

Other objections are made by the learned counsel for plaintiff in error, but they are of minor importance. The record is voluminous, and many exceptions were taken. But this case has been once before to this court, and a judgment in favor of the plaintiff reversed, (Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Pointer, 9 Kan. *620;) and only such errors as are clearly prejudicial to the substantial rights of the plaintiff in error should be regarded.

The judgment will be affirmed.

MOTION FOR REHEARING.

The foregoing opinion was filed December 22, 1874. On the second of January, 1875, the railway company filed a motion for reargument and review. Said motion was heard at the January Term, 1875, of this court, and was argued orally by J. P. Usher and T. A. Hurd on the part of the railway company.

J. P. Usher and T. A. Hurd, in support of the motion.

It seems to us that this court has mistaken and misapprehended the facts in this case, as shown by the record. The decision affirming the judgment upon the ground that the "general finding" of the jury gave character to, limited and controlled the special findings of *57 facts has operated a complete surprise upon plaintiff in error; the ruling in this respect being contrary to and a departure from the well-settled rules of law. The record shows that plaintiff in error demanded a special verdict. It was error to receive a general verdict over the objection of the plaintiff in error. The record shows that plaintiff in error moved the court to strike out the general finding, and that the said court overruled the motion. It was error, and this court has overlooked the record in that particular.

Twelve distinct objections to the verdict by plaintiff in error are set out in the record. These were made before the jury was discharged, and the court was requested to require the jury to make the proper findings, which request was overruled and exceptions taken. This court evidently overlooked the record in this particular, to the prejudice of plaintiff in error, for the thing was done which this court decides ought to have been done, and holds the plaintiff in error prejudiced because it was not done.

Again, this court erroneously assumed and held that there was a street-crossing where this accident happened. The verdict is contradictory on this subject. The seventh and twenty-first findings are in conflict. All the evidence tending to prove a right in the public to pass there was objected to, which objections have not been passed upon by this court, but it is taken for granted and decided that Pointer was injured at a public crossing, which is not true.

The decision of this court in this cause upon the question of contributory negligence is so great a departure from the established rules of law as to deprive corporate and other unpopular suitors of all protection by the courts. With profound respect for the court, we are compelled to say that we believe a great mistake has been made, and injustice done. Upon the trial of the cause in the court below, and at its very commencement, a special verdict was demanded. This court has often decided that the right to such verdict could not be denied, and in the case of National Bank v. Peck, 8 Kan. *661, the office of a special verdict is remarkably well stated. The ver-

*58 dict in this case contains a special and a general verdict, upon which general verdict a stress has been laid. Indeed, it may be said to be the turning-point in the case, and, in our opinion, the decision of the court changes the plain meaning of the thirteenth finding. Now, we think all will agree that the clause of general verdict should have been struck out upon the motion of plaintiff in error. Generally and specifically the district court was besought to make this verdict conform to and be a special verdict. On the record all this appears. The court was specially requested to instruct the jury to amend the last finding in their verdict so as to change the same from the form of a "general finding," and to read, "That if plaintiff is entitled to judgment upon the foregoing facts, we find for plaintiff, and assess his damages at $5,000." That application the district court overruled, and the defendant excepted. And here we earnestly ask, what authority or right existed in the trial court to receive anything else from the jury than a lawful special verdict? The last finding was not a finding of any fact, and it ought not to have any weight in a special verdict. In the case of People v. Williamsburgh Turnpike Co., 47 N. Y. 586, the jury found several special findings upon which the court directed a general verdict, and the court of appeals decided that the findings were defective, and said: "The defects cannot be cured by intendment. Where the verdict is special the jury cannot be presumed to have found more than is specified in their verdict." And see Fraschieris v. Henriques, 6 Abb. Pr. (N. S.) 263; Foster v. Jackson, Hob. 58. It is one of the maxims of the law, old as the law itself, which we hope is not yet obliterated in Kansas, that "where the court cannot take judicial notice of the fact, it is the same as if the fact had not existed." Under this maxim, in Broom, Leg. Max. marg. p. 164, the author says: "So on writ of error for error in law, the court will not look out of the record; and, on a special verdict, they will neither assume a fact not stated therein, nor draw inferences of facts necessary for the determination of the case from other statements contained therein." The decision in this *59 *Pointer case is directly in conflict with this maxim. It is as certainly so as it is possible for the human mind to comprehend. Certainly, this court does not mean to put itself in conflict with all authority. In a former case in this court, that of McGonigle v. Gordon, 11 Kan. *167, a general finding was wholly ignored by this court; and we could have hardly expected a resort to an irregular general verdict in this case to sustain a judgment upon an intendment imagined to be found in such general verdict, which was erroneously allowed to have a place in the special verdict. The quotation from 47 N. Y. shows that in the judgment of the court of appeals that could not be done.

We insist that if such general verdict is to make any figure in this case now, we were entitled to a new trial, because it was allowed to be returned in the special verdict. We exclaim, What kind of justice is it that allows a jury to return a general verdict against the law, and our sturdy opposition from first to last, and that same verdict invoked to sustain a judgment! We cannot believe the court fully comprehended, and we fain believe it must have overlooked, that we strove to purge from the verdict this improper finding. We cannot avoid asking, Was this general finding justified by the law? Did the defendant company object and protest against it? Were its objections disregarded? Did the trial court err in doing so? And would this court, upon the verdict, if shorn of that illegal general verdict, have pronounced the judgment it has? In all sincerity and fairness, must not all these inquiries be answered in favor of the railroad company? We have shown that the general verdict could not be resorted to to abate from the force and meaning of the other parts of the verdict, but we ought not to be put to that argument, because in all fairness and justice that clause of general finding should have been struck from the record; and if the plaintiff, Pointer, claimed that the company was guilty of great negligence, and he of but slight, it was his duty to ascertain from the jury whether they so intended to find, and that in direct words, leaving nothing to inference. There is *60 no am*biguity whatever in the thirteenth finding. The jury found that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence contributing to the injury, a finding of unqualified "negligence." There is no occasion to resort to other parts of the verdict to learn what these words mean; and it does seem remarkable to us that we could be admonished that if we did not understand this to be a finding of slight negligence on the part of Pointer, we should have made further inquiry of the jury what they meant. The only difference in the two findings, twelfth and thirteenth, one for the plaintiff and the other for the defendant, is in the use of the word "gross" launched against the company. This word is said by Redfield to be a vituperative epithet, (2 Redf. Rys. 201, 202;) and if we go to the very marrow of the case,—the accident itself,—we have only to borrow the words of the exchequer court in Ireland to show that there was no culpability on the part of the defendant below, even within the present decision of this court. We quote from section 23, p. 202, Redf. Rys.: "The plaintiff cannot recover unless the injury is caused by the negligence of the defendant, nor even then if he has so far contributed to the accident, by want of ordinary care, that but for that the accident would not have happened." It is admitted by everybody that Pointer was negligent in going onto the track, and walking along it. He had no right there. If he had not been on the track, he would not have been hurt. If he had used ordinary care in listening or watching for the train, he would not have been hurt. See Finlayson's Case, 1 Dill. 579. Why is negligence imputed to the company for moving its train where there was noise, and no imputation upon Pointer for going upon the track at such time? Why is complaint made of the company for not having a watchman upon the rear end of the train when its bell was rung, a whistle was blown, and men standing close at hand shouted to Pointer to get off the track? Why is the company complained of for operating its train on that day in the manner it did, when the train had been thus operated ever since the road had been built?

*61 *We will not conceal from the court the surprise which this decision has occasioned. We are constrained to say that the most appalling consequences may be expected to flow from it. In cases where negligence is the issue, and the defendant an unpopular suitor, this decision cuts to the bone. The trial court under it will be bound to instruct the jury that if they believe from the evidence that the injury to plaintiff was caused by the gross negligence of the defendant, though the plaintiff was guilty of negligence contributing to the injury, the jury are to find for the plaintiff. So everybody must and will understand the decision. We do not believe the court intends to enunciate any such principle of law. But we think the law respecting special verdicts is that the jury should find facts only, leaving the court to apply the law; that mixed questions of law and fact cannot be submitted to the jury; that the question of negligence being a mixed question of law and fact, the trial court had no right to submit that question to the jury in this case. If the jury make findings upon questions of law, or upon mixed questions of law and fact, we insist that it is the duty of the trial court to strike them out, and of this court to disregard them. We understand the twelfth, thirteenth, and last findings to be questions of this character, and should not have been submitted to the jury, and should have been stricken from the verdict. Our first instruction asked was that the jury be directed to find facts only. The first innovation upon our theory of a special verdict of which we have knowledge was upon the trial of this cause before appealed to this court. On that trial and on the last we insisted that the jury should be directed to find facts only. We insist that the twelfth, thirteenth, and last findings have no right to be in this verdict. If the jury can find these mixed questions, then the judge has one duty only to perform, and that to determine from the facts found whether the jury found the law properly on these mixed questions.

If the three findings last mentioned be expunged, there can be no question but that the defendant below is entitled to *a judgment upon the findings. The nineteenth finding alone is decisive of the case, as we believe. There is no question but that Pointer was walking easterly upon the track, and after he went upon it he never looked in either direction, nor took the least precaution for his own safety. He was in a dangerous place, and knew it, and was bound to do something to protect himself from injury. Having failed to do this, ought he to recover? See a case tried in the United States circuit court, November term, 1873, of Alcorn v. Pacific R. R., before Judge DILLON.

When this cause was first in this court we were notified that if Pointer was on a street, public either in law or in fact, when the acci-dant occurred, he would not be a trespasser upon the right of the railway company, so as to relieve the company from reasonable and ordinary care to avoid injuring him. This court now starts out in its opinion by asserting that the train was started backwards "over a public crossing." We are bound to say there is no warrant for this statement, and we have a right to the judgment of the court whether the evidence (which necessarily had to be of record in order to establish that this was a public crossing) did establish such fact. We objected to every particle of it from first to last. The only evidence offered on that point was the city ordinance. It is not pretended that that ordinance gave the public any right to enter upon the premises. After the plaintiff rested his case without any testimony of assessment or payment of damages, the defendant moved to strike the copy of the ordinance from the evidence, and again, by third instruction, that the jury should disregard the ordinance. The court erred in all its rulings and decisions respecting the ordinance. It left the jury to give some effect to the ordinance, and made the conflict in the findings, there being no evidence that there was any such street in law. Was there a street in fact? The evidence that was offered by the plaintiff to establish that point did not prove that the public had ever passed where this man was injured until after it was graded by the railroad company. It was in fact impassable, and whoever

*63 *passed in that direction before the railroad was built, passed along the river bank at a distance of about 148 feet east of where Pointer was injured. We refer to the testimony of W. O. Gould, and assure the court that if a reargument is permitted, we can make good our assertion that there was no street public, either in law or in fact, where the man was injured; that the district court erred in its admission and rejection of evidence respecting the same, and in its charge to the jury; that the whole case touching the street and alleged public way was a flagrant assumption which the jury had no right to find, and which the court below, according to every principle of law, was bound to have set aside. The railroad company proved by several witnesses, among whom were the yard-masters of the railroad companies in charge and direction of the tracks, that they warned and endeavored to keep the public off from them. There was not one particle of evidence to the contrary. The injury occurred in the vicinity of the depot, where the public necessarily had to come to transact its business with the company, and though this was the fact, yet strangers and intruders who had no business there were ordered off, and we endeavored to have the jury find the fact that it was so, and especially requested the court to have them find that fact, and excepted to this decision, and are not a little astonished to find, in the opinion of this court, that this exception was of minor importance, more especially when the court plants the case upon the grounds that Pointer was at a public crossing. We endeavored to have the jury find the exact place where the injury occurred. The testimony showed that it was sixty-five feet south of Chestnut street, and at no supposed street crossing at all. Almost all our questions propounded upon the coming-in of the jury had reference to this supposed street in one way or another. We cannot be charged with having omitted anything in respect to the alleged street, by which it should be conceded that there was a street public there, either in law or in fact.

It is not to be denied that half the battle, by the former decision of this court, depended *upon the question whether Pointer was in point of fact a trespasser at the time and place where he was injured. The court in its opinion now in question has taken it for granted that he was not. It supposes that the injury occurred upon grounds that would be covered by Chestnut street, if the same was protracted to the river, and upon its crossing at Water street, which the decision supposes to have there been lawfully laid out. In short, that he was injured upon a street crossing, where the parties had equal rights to be. The action of the court, in taking it for granted that the accident occurred at a public street crossing, is most disastrous to the plaintiff in error, and in all becoming deference we do pray the court to grant our prayer to be heard upon this question.

BREWER, J. On a motion like this I am not ordinarily inclined to write an opinion. Nor do I now intend to go over the ground traversed in the opinion already written. I merely seek to guard against certain conclusions which counsel erroneously draw from that opinion. And first: The court has not receded from the proposition laid down in the case of Leavenworth, L. & G. R. Co. v. Rice, 10 Kan. *426, that a party is entitled to a special verdict, (though upon the law as it now stands, quære, see Laws 1874, c. 91, p. 140.) Nor has it questioned the doctrine that special matter lawfully found prevails over a general verdict. Counsel contend that the last finding, which is in the form of a general verdict, was unlawfully returned by the jury, and received by the court; that it ought to have been stricken out, or amended, on the motion which was made; and that with that out, the conclusion of this court would have been different. I am inclined to think (and as Judge VALENTINE contemplates writing out his views, I am here expressing my own opinion without consultation with the other justices) that the motion should have been sustained, though the statement prepared by counsel and submitted to the jury as the form of a special verdict is very different from that contemplated by the statute, *(First Nat. Bank v. Peck, 8 Kan. *860,) and more resembles a finding upon particular questions of fact, which is proper only in conjunction with a general verdict. But even if the finding had been stricken out or amended, as suggested, its influence would have been the same upon the mind of the court. It was used by us simply as throwing light on the intention of the jury in the thirteenth finding, and in no degree for the purpose of overriding that intention. The intention of a jury is to be sought in a special verdict, as the intention of a party executing any other instrument. What do they mean by this collection of words, which they have returned as a special verdict? is always the first question. And anything which throws light upon that meaning is proper matter of consideration. Thus and thus only was this last finding used. It was an expression from the jury. Whether ruled out or in by the court, it was still the same expression from the jury. If without any such finding the record disclosed the fact that the foreman of the jury, in the presence and with the apparent assent of his fellows, and upon the return of the verdict, had stated to the court, "we mean by the thirteenth finding slight negligence," could it be doubted that such circumstance would and ought to have great weight with us in determining the intention of the jury? It was not the province of this court to first examine the evidence as it appeared in the record, and form our conclusions as to the negligence of the plaintiff, and then seek to reconcile the finding with those conclusions. That would be making us the triers of the question, rather than the jury. I have no hesitation in saying that if I had conceived that to have been the proper method of examination, I for one should have come to a different conclusion upon the whole case. Rather was it our duty, as I conceive, to ascertain in the first place what the jury intended, and then whether that could be upheld by the testimony. Following this line of inquiry, we sought first to ascertain what the jury intended by the thirteenth finding. Two findings stand side by side, in one of which the jury characterize the conduct of the railroad company as negligent, describe the degree of negligence, (for, under the rulings in this state the adjective "gross" is not a mere vituperative epithet, but a term of classification,) and assert that it was the immediate cause of the injury; in the other of which they characterize the conduct of the plaintiff as negligent, but do not indicate the degree, nor whether it proximately or remotely contributed to the injury. This difference between the two findings naturally indicated that the jury did not consider the conduct of the parties as equally negligent, or as equally contributing to the injury. The court before whom the case was tried construed this finding against the company, and after a patient examination of the whole record we came to the same conclusion. We suggested in the opinion filed some and only some of the more prominent considerations which influenced our judgment. We might have noticed many others. We did not attempt to conceal the embarrassments and doubts we had. And counsel may be assured that questions of such doubt do not pass from us until after a most thorough and patient examination of the record.

The other question, as to whether the verdict, as we construed it, could be upheld, was of no less difficulty. We did not in the opinion, and do not now, indorse the doctrine of "comparative negligence," nor does it seem to us correct that a party guilty of ordinary negligence can recover simply because the other party was guilty of greater negligence. The rule as we understand it was laid down in Sawyer v. Sauer, 10 Kan. *466. In reference to the cases in which it is proper to submit to a jury the question of negligence I can do no better than quote from the language of Mr. Justice HUNT, in Railroad Co. v. Stout, 17 Wall. 663. After stating cases on either side in which it is proper to declare as a matter of law that it is or is not negligence, he says: "But these are extreme cases. The range between them is almost infinite in variety and extent. It is in relation to the intermediate cases that the opposite rule prevails. Upon the facts proven in such cases, it is a matter of judgment and discretion, of sound inference, what is the deduction from the undisputed facts."

*67 *Certain facts we may suppose to be clearly established, from which one sensible, impartial man would infer that proper care had not been used, and that negligence existed; another man equally sensible and equally impartial would infer that proper care had been used, and that there was no negligence. It is this class of cases, and those akin to it, that the law commits to the decision of a jury. Twelve men of the average of the community, comprising men of education and men of little education, men of learning and men whose learning consists only in what they have themselves seen and heard, the merchant, the mechanic, the farmer, the laborer,—these sit together, consult, apply their separate experience of the affairs of life to the facts proven, and draw a unanimous conclusion. This average judgment, thus given, it is the great effort of the law to obtain. It is assumed that twelve men know more of the common affairs of life than does one man; that they can draw wiser and safer conclusions from admitted facts thus occurring than can a single judge." This it seems to me states the true rule, in language most apt and clear. I think the motion for a rehearing should be overruled.

A. G. MAGILL v. CARRIE S. MARTIN.

July Term, 1874.

1. Tax Deed: Statutory Form: Modification. While the ordinary rule is that where the statute prescribes the form of a tax deed, a compliance with that form is sufficient, yet where the conditions of the sale are such that to follow the form is to recite an untruth and show an illegal sale, the form must be modified to suit the facts.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> A tax deed need not be in the exact form prescribed by statute, but the form should be so varied that the deed will in every case state the exact truth. McCaustin v. McGuire, post, *234. See, also, Morrill v. Douglass, post, *293.

2. Tax Sales: Purchase by County. A county may not enter into competition with individuals as a voluntary bidder at a tax sale; it can only become the involuntary purchaser of what cannot be otherwise sold. [Following Norton v. Friend, 13 Kan. *532.]<sup>1</sup>

*68 *3. Tax Deed: Form of. The statutory form of a tax deed is for voluntary purchasers, and where such a deed is based upon a sale to the county, it must be modified so as to show the conditions upon which a county can lawfully become a purchaser.

Error from Bourbon district court.

Magill brought his action to foreclose a mortgage given by Edwin A. Wade and wife on lot 2, in block 193, city of Fort Scott, to secure the payment of notes given by Wade alone, amounting to $400. Martin, being in possession of said property claiming title thereto, was joined as a co-defendant. The Wades made default. Martin answered, setting up title in fee in herself under a tax deed issued subsequently to the execution of said mortgage. Trial at the June term, 1873, of the district court. The Wade mortgage was executed April 13, 1871, but was not recorded until April 27, 1873. The defendant, Martin, called the register of deeds, and offered in evidence the official record of a tax deed, (the original not being in the possession or under the control of Martin,) which record is as follows:

"Know all men by these presents that, whereas, the following described real estate, viz., lot 8, in block 126, and lot 2 and lot 11, in block 193, all in the city of Fort Scott, situated in the county of Bourbon, state of Kansas, were subject to taxation for the year 1867; and whereas, the taxes assessed upon said real property for the year aforesaid remained due and unpaid at the date of the sale hereinafter named; and whereas, the treasurer of said county did on the eighth day of May, 1868, by virtue of the authority in him vested by *69 law, at the sale begun and publicly held on the *first Tuesday of May, 1868, expose to public sale at the county seat of said county, in substantial conformity with all the requisitions of the statute in such case made and provided, the real property above described, for the payment of the taxes, interest, and costs then due and remaining unpaid on said property; and whereas, at the time and place aforesaid, said Bourbon county having offered to pay the sum of $23.05, being the whole amount of taxes, interest, and costs then due and remaining unpaid on said property for the said lot 8, in block 126, and lots 2 and 11, in block 193, all in the city of Fort Scott, which was the least quantity bid for, and payment of said sum

<sup>1</sup> A tax deed which recites a sale to the county as a competitive bidder is void upon its face. Babbitt v. Johnson, 15 Kan. *252. Same rule applied, Larkin v. Wilson, 28 Kan. 518. Taxation generally, see Leavenworth Co. v. Lang, 8 Kan. 196, and note; as to necessity of assessment, see note to Worthington v. Whitman, 25 N. W. Rep. 125; misdescription in tax proceedings, see note to Carne v. Peacock, 2 N. W. Rep. 168; exemption from, Chicago v. Baptist T. Union, 2 N. E. Rep. 257, and note; *Washburn College v. having been by it made to said treasurer, the said property was struck off to it at that price; and whereas, the said Bourbon county did on the twenty-eighth day of June, 1871, duly assign the certificate of the sale of the property as aforesaid, and all its right, title, and interest to said property to V. McNally, of Washington, D. C., for the sum of $41.52; and whereas, three years have elapsed since the date of said sale, and the said property has not been redeemed therefrom as provided by law: Now, therefore, I, C. Fitch, county clerk aforesaid, for and in consideration of the said sum of $41.52 taxes, costs, and interest due on said lands for the years aforesaid, to the treasurer paid as aforesaid, and by virtue of the statute in such case made and provided, have granted, bargained, and sold, and by these presents do grant, bargain, and sell unto the said V. McNally, his heirs and assigns, the real property last herein described, to have and to hold unto him, the said V. McNally, his heirs and assigns forever, subject, however, to all the right of redemption provided by law.

"C. FITCH, County Clerk. [Seal.]

"Witness: T. F. ROBLEY."

This deed was duly acknowledged and certified, and was duly recorded July 7, 1871. To the receiving and reading of said record in evidence plaintiff, Magill, objected, the objections being, as shown by the bill of exceptions, as follows: "(1) That said deed on its face appears to have been executed under the seal of the county clerk, and not under the seal of Bourbon county, but purports to be under the private seal of the clerk; *70 (2) that said deed is void upon its face, in that it states the levy of taxes upon, assessment of, sale of, and attempted conveyance of, three lots in gross for taxes levied upon them jointly, and does not show that the lots were assessed and sold separately, as required by law; (3) that said deed does not show that said lot could not have been sold to some other person than Bourbon county, for the taxes and charges; (4) that said deed does not show what taxes and charges 'lot 2, in block 193,' was sold for, or that it had any taxes or charges upon it; (5) that the answer of Carrie S. Martin does not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense to the plaintiff's action; (6) that the said deed, as shown by the record, is not prima facie evidence of the regularity of all proceedings, nor that said lot was subject to taxation, or that anything had been done making it lawful to sell it for the taxes of 1867."

These objections were overruled, and said tax deed was read in evidence. Defendant, Martin, then called the county clerk, who produced three separate tax-sale certificates, filed in his office June 28, 1871. Said certificates, except as to description of property and amount of taxes, were alike. One was for "lot 8, in block 126," amount of taxes, etc., $4.75. Another was for "lot 11, in block 193," amount of taxes, etc., $4.75. The third was as follows:

TREASURER'S OFFICE, BOURBON CO., KAN.,

"FORT SCOTT, June 26, 1871.

"This is to certify that Bourbon county did, on the eighth day of May, 1868, purchase from me, as county treasurer, lot 2, block 193, in the city of Fort Scott, Bourbon county, Kansas, for the sum of $13.55, being the taxes, penalty, and charges on the above-described real property for the year 1867, the same having been duly advertised and sold according to law. The said Bourbon county, or assignee, will be entitled to a deed for said described real property, on and after the eighth day of May, 1871, if the same be not previously redeemed according to law. Witness my hand the day and year first above written.

C. A. MORRIS, County Treasurer."

On the back of which certificate was the following:

"71 "For and in consideration of the sum of $24.24, I hereby assign the within certificate to V. McNally.

"Dated this twenty-eighth of June, 1871.

"C. FITCH, County Clerk."

Plaintiff objected to the introduction of said tax-sale certificates and indorsements thereon, because "(1) said certificates and each of them are irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial; (2) said certificates and each of them on their face show that they were not issued according to law, in that they are not issued to V. McNally, the person who paid the money into the county treasury, and they do not set out on the face the amount paid into the treasury." These objections were overruled, and the certificates were read in evidence. Defendant then gave in evidence a deed of conveyance from McNally to herself of said "lot 2, in block 193," dated June 28, 1871, and duly recorded. The plaintiff, to impeach said tax deed, called the county clerk, who produced certain records, among them the assessment roll for the city of Fort Scott for 1867, (which showed that the three lots described in the tax deed were assessed and valued separately,—one of said lots being assessed to "G. R. Sweeney," as owner, and described and valued thus: "Lot 2, B. 193, $300,") to which assessment roll was annexed a paper in the form of the affidavit required by section 26, c. 118, Laws 1866, which was signed by "J. A. T., Deputy Assessor," but was not sworn to. Another record was a printed copy of the treasurer's advertisement of the "Delinquent Tax List of Bourbon County for 1867," stating that the lots and lands therein described, if not sooner redeemed, would be sold on the first Tuesday of May, 1868, etc. Said list contained these descriptions: "1 1 b 126, 4.75;" "8 b 126, 4.74;" "1 1 b 193, t 6.95;" "1 2 b 193, t 13.55;" "lot 3 b 193, t 6.95;" "11 b 193, t 4.75." Another of said records was a printed copy of the treasurer's advertisement of "List of lands for which tax title deeds will be given on and after May 5, 1871," on tax sale of 1868. In said list was the following:

Name.	Lot.	Block.	Amount.
Ft. Scott Town Co.....	8	128	$ 8 46
J. R. Sweeney.....	2	198	23 86
P. F. Bartle.....	11	198	8 46

*72 *The plaintiff also gave in evidence the record of a warranty deed from Wade and wife to defendant, Martin, dated June 24, 1871. The district court found that Wade was indebted to plaintiff on his notes in the sum of $400 and interest; that the mortgage was given by Wade and wife on said lot 2, block 193, to secure said notes, April 13, 1871; that said lot was conveyed by tax deed, duly executed and acknowledged, to McNally; that said lot was subject to taxation for the year 1867, and was duly and separately assessed for that year; that the taxes were not paid, and said lot was duly and separately sold in 1868 for said unpaid taxes, and struck off to Bourbon county; that said lot was not redeemed from such sale; and that said McNally paid to the treasurer the proper amount therefor, and the treasurer gave to McNally a separate certificate of said sale, which was duly assigned to said McNally, and that said lot was duly conveyed by McNally to defendant, Martin. And, as conclusions of law, the court found that plaintiff was entitled to a personal judgment against Wade for $491; that said mortgage was a valid lien on said lot 2, when executed; that said tax deed to McNally was and is valid, and the title conveyed thereby was and is paramount to the lien created by said mortgage; that said paramount title having passed to defendant, Martin, she owns said lot freed from any lien thereon by reason of said mortgage. Judgment accordingly.

McComas & McKeighan, for plaintiff in error.

The court should have sustained the objections of plaintiff to the tax deed. The answer of the defendant is no defense to the plaintiff's action. The tax deed is void upon its face, and is made part of the answer. Three lots in different blocks are described as having been sold en masse for the joint taxes charged to them. Such a deed is void. Walker v. Moore, 2 Dill. 256; Journey v. Dickerson, 21 Iowa, 320; Boies v. Vincent, 24 Iowa, 392; Gen. St. p. 1047, § 85.

The deed was not in conformity to law. The language of the *73 *deed is, "my official seal," instead of the seal of the county.

The county clerk has no official seal. Section 25, c. 25, Gen. St. 259. No seal was affixed to this deed, but merely the word "seal." A tax deed must follow the statute, or it will be void. Martineau v.

May, 18 Wis. 59; Morton v. Rutherford, Id. 321; Cutler v. Hurlbut, 29 Wis. 152.

It will be contended that section 115, p. 1057, Gen. St., authorizes the deed in question. This section merely authorizes an inclusion of different parcels of land in the same deed; but each parcel must have its separate history; must show that it was sold for its own taxes, which could alone authorize a deed at all.

The court should have sustained the plaintiff's objection to the tax certificates. The certificates were not issued as the law directs; they were not issued to McNally, nor did they state the amount paid into the treasury by the party purchasing. Tax Law, c. 107, § 91; Gen. St. 1048. They could not help the deed, and therefore they were immaterial. Each parcel of land must have been described by the assessor. The county clerk must have determined the sums to be levied upon each parcel, and so carried it out in the tax-roll, and each parcel must have been separately sold for its own taxes. Laws 1866, c. 118, p. 263, § 22, p. 278, § 76; Gen. St. 1047, §§ 84-86; Journey v. Dickerson, 21 Iowa, 320; Boies v. Vincent, 24 Iowa, 392; Hayden v. Foster, 13 Pick. 493. To help the tax deed in this respect, these certificates were introduced. They contain recitals that there was a certain amount of taxes due on each lot, but do not contradict the recitals of the deed that the lots were all sold together for the aggregate taxes chargeable against them. By the statute the deed must contain a history of the main facts. It must be good by itself. The certificates could not make an invalid deed valid; they may have shown that McNally was entitled to a good deed, but could not show that he had received one. The tax certificates did not extinguish the mortgage; they showed, if anything, a mere lien on the property.

There was no valid assessment of this property for the taxes
 *74 of 1867, nor any return of the assessment roll, nor any *verification as required by sections 26 and 54 of the tax law of 1866. There was a pretended assessment signed by one J. A. T., who describes himself as "deputy assessor;" but it is not sworn to, nor any evidence introduced that he did swear to it, nor any return on it. The oath written is subscribed, but not taken. The testimony shows that one E. J. was county assessor for the years 1866 and 1867. The office of deputy assessor was not elective; and it does not appear that the board of county commissioners had appointed a deputy. Comp. Laws, p. 432, §§ 121-123. How can it be contended that J. A. T. had any authority to make an assessment, when he was not appointed, and he had never qualified? The assessment book was evidence for plaintiff to show irregularities, but was not evidence for defendant to show an assessment without showing the appointment and qualifications of J. A. T. as deputy assessor. Austin v. Carpenter, 2 G. Greene, 133. It is a general principle affecting all tax proceedings that everything must be done which the law says shall be done. All facts necessary to confer jurisdiction must appear on the record.

Blackw. Tax Titles, 34, 39, 43, 44, 50, 55, 65, 68, 112. A tax sale on a void assessment passes no title. Sibley v. Smith, 2 Mich. 486; Whitney v. Thomas, 23 N. Y. 281; Lessee v. Stockwell, 9 Ohio, 94. There is no presumption that the oath was taken. Skinner v. Brown, 17 Ohio St. 33. The failure to take the oath was a substantial error. The land-owner has a right to a fair, impartial, and conscientious assessment, and the law compels the assessor to make an oath that he had so assessed, and a record to be kept of it. There was no such protection in this case, if an assessment could be made by a pretended deputy who had never been appointed, sworn, or given bond, and who did not take the oath prescribed by law. McReynolds v. Longenberger, 57 Pa. St. 13.

There are substantial irregularities in the proceedings of the treasurer. In delinquent list for 1867 the lots and blocks are not described as on the tax-roll, as required by section 66, c. 118, Laws 1866, (section 81 of the tax law of 1868, Gen. St. p. 1046.) In the tax-roll the words "lots" and "blocks" are used; in the treasurer's *75 notice the letters "l" and "b" only are used, which have no meaning unless authorized by statute. Section 93 of the tax law of 1868 authorizes initials "to designate townships, ranges, and sections, and the numbers of lots and blocks." This language authorizes the numerical description of lots and blocks by initials, but not otherwise. The tax law (section 110) requires that the notice of the issuing of tax deeds should state the name of the person to whom the property was assessed. The name given was "J. R. Sweeney." It was assessed to "G. R. Sweeney." The notice did not state the amount necessary to redeem. The numerals used were not sufficient without the use of the dollar-mark. Woods v. Freeman, 1 Wall. 398; Hurlbutt v. Butenop, 27 Cal. 50; Braly v. Seaman, 30 Cal. 610; People v. San Francisco Sav. Union, 31 Cal. 132. The law says what the notice shall contain; the court cannot dispense with it on the ground that the owner must take notice of what his taxes are when his property was sold. The notice is for the benefit of all parties, and especially for subsequent purchasers, who are to be apprised by the notice of the time when the deed is to be made, and within which they can redeem and save their property.

It was contended in the court below that, inasmuch as section 113 of the tax law (Gen. St. p. 1057) provides that "no irregularities in the assessment or omission from the same, nor mere irregularities of any kind, shall invalidate the tax deed," that plaintiff's objections are not good. If the legislature meant that no irregularities should affect a tax deed, then this section is unconstitutional. The legislature of Missouri in 1864 passed a law making a tax deed "conclusive evidence that each and every thing required to be done had been complied with." The supreme court of that state decided this unconstitutional, because it attempted to take away property "without due process of law." Abbott v. Lindenbower, 42 Mo. 162. Section 112 of the tax law provides that the deed therein set forth shall be prima facie evidence of the regularity of the tax proceedings. This merely changed the rule of evidence, which it was competent for the legislature *76 to do; but if section 113 makes the deed good *no matter what the irregularities are, then it is void, because it makes the tax deed conclusive.

The plaintiff introduced a certain warranty deed from Wade and wife to defendant, Martin, dated the twenty-fourth of June, 1872. The deed from McNally was a quitclaim deed, and was dated one day later, the twenty-fifth of June. The purchase from Wade was the real purchase. Mrs. Martin acquired title subject to the tax deed and the plaintiff's mortgage. She has bought in the tax title claim for the benefit of the estate acquired from Wade, and has her action on the warranty deed against Wade for the amount paid, if the tax deed was good, or if the proceedings before made the taxes for 1867 a valid lien. The plaintiff's mortgage still remains.

W. C. Webb, for defendant in error.

The objection to the tax deed that it wanted a proper seal is not warranted by the record. The original deed was not produced; the record book from the register's office could not show the seal used, but only that a seal had been affixed; and as the county clerk has no seal of his own, but is the lawful custodian of the county seal, (section 43 of 25, Gen. St.,) with which he authenticates his official acts, (sections 43, 60,) the presumption is that he used the seal of "his office;" and his using the words "my official seal," (which were in the old form, vide Comp. Laws 1862, p. 879,) cannot override such presumption.

The objection to the validity of the assessment of the land is still more unsubstantial. It makes no difference whether J. A. T. was elected, or appointed, legally, or not; whether he gave an official bond, or not; whether he authenticated his assessment by affidavit, or in any other way, or not. The assessment roll or assessment book for the proper year was in the proper office, and was in due form. It was there as a public record, and was so held and regarded by its custodian, who produced it in court as a "record" belonging to his office; said custodian being the officer appointed by law to hold and pre-*77 serve the assessment books. Section 25, *Tax Law 1866; section 36, Tax Law 1868; chapter 123, Laws 1869; chapter 120, Laws 1870; section 43, c. 25, Gen. St. No other assessment book for that year was produced, nor was it suggested that this was not made as and for an assessment of the taxable property therein described for such year. Plaintiff produced and gave this assessment book in evidence. It was a "public record," and as such was competent as evidence, without regard to the man who made it, or his qualifications as an officer de jure. The record proved too much for plaintiff; it showed the lots described in the tax deed were in fact assessed, valued, and described separately.

The objection to the treasurer's lists, that the "description" is imperfect by reason of the use of the letters "l" and "b," instead of the words "lot" and "block," is not good. The advertisements show that the property advertised was situate in the city of Fort Scott. No one could fail to understand that "l" must stand for "lot," and "b" for "block," and nothing else; as "t" clearly stands for "tax." Tax Law 1868, § 93; Blackw. Tax Titles, (1st Ed.) p. 238; (2d Ed.) p. 203; Hunt v. Smith, 9 Kan. *138, *153. As the particular property intended to be designated was in fact designated with reasonable certainty, the description was sufficient. 2 Mo. 124; 18 Vt. 293; Atkins v. Hinman, 2 Gilman, 444; Blakeley v. Bestor, 13 Ill. 714. The objection as to the "name of the owner," that in the assessment book it was "G. R. Sweeney," and in the advertisement that it was "J. R. Sweeney," is frivolous.

Nor is there anything in the point that Martin obtained a deed from Wade before she obtained title from McNally. The testimony was that both deeds were in fact executed on the same day, and that the purchase from Wade was made for the purpose of obtaining possession. But aside from the object or purpose of the purchase all Martin acquired by her deed from Wade was the equity of redemption. Such purchase was subject to the mortgage lien held by Magill, and this mortgage Martin was under no legal nor moral obligation to pay. She could pay it and save the land if she chose. She *78 could omit to pay it at the peril of having her equity of redemption extinguished by the foreclosure of the mortgage. But her purchase and deed from Wade did not prevent her purchasing a paramount title which had grown up under tax proceedings, (she being under no legal nor moral obligation to pay the taxes for which the land was sold;) nor did it affect or change the character of such tax title when said tax title was purchased by her. If in law such tax title was paramount, and extinguished the mortgage lien and the equity of redemption while held by McNally, it was equally good when acquired by Martin.

The principal question is, is the tax deed to McNally, under which Martin claims, valid? The only substantial objection urged in plaintiff's brief against such deed is that "three lots, in different blocks, are described (in the deed) as having been sold en masse for the joint taxes charged to them." The plaintiff denies the power of the court to go behind the tax deed and inquire into the actual fact as to the assessment and sale of said three lots, whether joint or separate, but contends that the tax deed "must be good by itself." Suppose this to be the correct rule, is this tax deed void on its face? The deed recites that the three lots (giving a full and separate description of each) were subject to taxation for the year 1867; that taxes on said lots for said year remained unpaid; that the county treasurer, on the eighth of May, 1868, at a sale begun and publicly held on the first Tuesday of May, 1868, exposed said lots to public sale, and sold them, and that all this was done "in substantial compliance with all the req-

visions of the statute in such case made and provided;" and said deed further recites that the purchaser paid on such sale "$23.05, being the whole amount then due and unpaid on said property," (and again describes said three lots, giving a full and separate description of each.) Does this show a single sale, embracing the three lots? The deed says that "all the requisitions of the law" were "substantially complied with." The treasurer must sell as he had advertised. Tax Law, § 84. He must advertise, "describing such lands and town

 *79 lots as the same are described on the tax-roll." Section 81. "The assessor shall make "a correct and pertinent description of each parcel of real property," and insert the same in the assessment-roll, and attach a separate valuation to each parcel. Sections 32, 36. The county clerk shall determine the sums to be levied "upon each tract or lot of real property," and set the same down in a "separate column." Section 73. All these acts and proceedings are necessary to make the sale valid. The presumptions are that public officers perform their official duty. The law never presumes the contrary. Section 112 of the tax law provides that the tax deed "shall be prima facie evidence of the regularity of all proceedings from the valuation of the land by the assessor, inclusive, up to the execution of the deed." We have, then, first, the presumption of the law; second, the prima facie evidence shown by the execution and acknowledgment of the deed; and, third, the recital in the deed, that the three lots were separately assessed, described, valued, advertised, and sold substantially as the law required. Section 116 of the tax law expressly authorizes the county clerk, when required by the purchaser, to include in one and the same tax deed all the lots purchased by the same person at any one tax sale; and surely the omission of the county clerk to state in the deed the separate sums for which the several lots were respectively sold, and the setting forth of the aggregate amount of such several sums, stating that such aggregate is the "whole amount due and unpaid on said property" (describing the three lots separately) at the time of such sale, will not be construed or tortured by this court into a statement showing that said three lots had been sold together as one tract (or, in the language of counsel for plaintiff, had been "sold en masse") for the joint taxes charged to the three. To so hold is to determine that such omissions are equivalent to the statement of affirmative facts showing positive violations of the requirements of the tax law, rebutting not merely the presumption of the law that public officers perform their official duty, but the presumption to be drawn from the execution of the deed itself, and contradicting the plain and positive recital in the deed *80 that the sale "was "in substantial compliance with the law."

It seems to us that this deed is not void on its face, but valid. But suppose the true construction of the deed is as plaintiff claims, that it shows a sale of the three lots as one tract, and for one tax, can the court go behind the deed, and look at the assessment book, the treasurer's notice of sale, and the treasurer's certificate of sale, to see what the facts were in each case? If the deed is void on its face, perhaps it could not be upheld or validated by the records showing the proceedings anterior to the deed to be valid. But the objection urged by plaintiff, if it be well taken, does not show the tax deed to be void but only voidable; and being voidable only, the supposed defect in the proceedings may be shown by the records not to exist in fact. It was competent, therefore, for defendant Martin to give in evidence the treasurer's certificates of sale; and as these certificates showed the separate and distinct sale of each lot, and the amount of taxes, etc., due and unpaid on each lot at the date of sale, they removed the objection made to the deed, and showed the deed to be valid. The tax certificates were properly issued showing that the lots had been struck off to the county, (section 91, Tax Law 1868,) and they were duly assigned to McNally to whom the tax deed was issued.

BREWER, J. The only question in this case is as to the validity of a tax deed, and one of the objections to it is the same as that which was held fatal in the case of Norton v. Friend, decided at the present term of this court, (13 Kan. *532.) It recites a sale to the county, not as a result of a failure to sell to an individual, but as the result of competitive biddings, in which the county entered as a voluntary bidder. The language of the deed is as follows: "And whereas, at the time and place aforesaid, Bourbon county having offered to pay the sum of $23.05, being the whole amount of taxes, interests, and costs then due and remaining unpaid on said property, for the aforesaid lot, * * * which was the least quantity bid for, and *81 payment of said *sum having been by it made to said treasurer, the said property was struck off to it at that price." The county is not a voluntary bidder at a tax sale. It enters into no competition with individuals. It pays no money to the treasurer. It simply becomes the involuntary purchaser of that which no individual will buy. The distinction between a purchase by an individual, and one by the county, and the reasons therefor, are clearly pointed out by Mr. Justice SAFFORD in the opinion in the case of Guittard Tp. v. Marshall Co., 4 Kan. *388. Hence a deed, which recites a purchase by the county under the same conditions as a purchase by an individual, recites an unauthorized and illegal purchase. A deed showing an illegal sale must be void. But it may be urged that this ruling conflicts with the decision in Hobson v. Dutton, 9 Kan. *477, where it is said that "the rule is clear that where the statute contains a form of any instrument, a compliance with that form is sufficient." This deed follows the form of the statute, and according to that rule must be held sufficient. The language of that opinion is general, and so far as the facts of that case are concerned states the law correctly. Yet we think here is found an exception. When the conditions of the sale are such that to follow the form is to recite an untruth and show an illegal sale, the form must be modified to suit the facts. To make a statement of an illegal and void sale evidence of a legal and valid sale is a contradiction not to be imputed to the legislative intent. The statute says the deed shall be in substantial compliance with the form. It thus contemplates minor modifications, and those modifications must be such as to make the deed recite the truth and comply with the conditions of valid action.

The judgment will be reversed, and the case remanded with instructions to proceed in accordance with the views herein expressed.

*89 *LEAVENWORTH, L. & G. R. Co. v. A. J. CLEMMANS, Sheriff, etc., and another.

July Term, 1874.

1. Taxation: Railroad Property Deemed Personalty: Road Taxes.

In 1872 the county commissioners of Johnson county levied a road tax upon the taxable property of that county. Afterwards the county clerk determined the amount to be charged to the different persons, companies, and corporations having property in that county, and placed the amount to be charged against the L., L. & G. R. Co. upon the tax-roll of that county for that year. The railroad company did not pay the amount. In February, 1873, the county treasurer issued his warrant to the sheriff of said county for the collection of said tax, and the sheriff was about to proceed to collect the same when the railroad company commenced this action to enjoin the collection thereof, claiming that the tax could not be collected at that time, nor in that manner. Held, that under the tax laws in force in 1872 and in 1873 all railroad property used in operating the road, including the real estate, was treated as personal property; and that, as all road taxes on personal property for the year 1872 should have been collected at the time and in the manner that the road tax against the L., L. & G. R. Co. was attempted to be collected in this case, that the road tax against the L., L. & G. R. Co. was properly collectible at the time and in the manner it was attempted to be collected, and therefore that the railroad company cannot maintain said action.

2. Temporary Injunction: Effect of. In an action brought by the county commissioners of Johnson county against the county treasurer, the state treasurer, and certain railroad companies to whom county bonds had been issued, a temporary injunction was granted, restraining said county treasurer and state treasurer from paying any interest on said bonds. While said suit was still pending, and while said temporary injunction was still in force, the proper taxing officers of said county levied, and were proceeding to collect from the L., L. & G. R. Co. and others, a certain tax with which to pay interest on said county bonds. The L., L. & G. R. Co. then commenced this action to enjoin the collection of said tax, claiming that the same was illegal and void because of said temporary injunction. Held, that the granting of said temporary injunction determined no person's rights; that the tax could properly be collected while it was still in force; and therefore that the railroad company cannot maintain said action.<sup>1</sup>

*83 *Error from Johnson district court.

The case is stated in the opinion.

S. O. Thacher, for plaintiff in error.

There can be no levy of road taxes until the first Monday in September of each year. The county clerk, on or before the first day of April of the following year, furnishes to the township trustee a list of "all taxable property," as well as "the amount of road tax chargeable to each tract of land in their respective townships." By section 24 of the road law (chapter 89, Gen. St.) it would appear that the persons owing highway taxes have until the first day of August following to work out the tax, at the rate of two dollars per day, as provided in section 21 of said road law. It is apparent that the legislature allowed the taxes to be worked out at this high rate per diem as a favor to the tax-payer; but this privilege was entirely denied to plaintiff in error, and taxes for highway purposes were at once put into the tax-roll against it, never certified to the township trustees, but an enforcement sought of the same at least one year sooner than allowed by statute. No execution could issue against it for these taxes before 1874, if even then. The statute nowhere authorizes these taxes, if delinquent, to be put on the tax-roll of any year, and collected by execution or tax warrant issued by the county treasurer. Section 24 of the road law seems to have no reference to taxes on personal property.

But, in any view of the case, the plaintiff in error could not be deprived of the opportunity of working out its road taxes, as any other tax-payer. Neither could such taxes enter into a tax warrant *84 issued by the treasurer in February, 1873, for *the road taxes first levied in September, 1872. Neither had the county clerk the power to enter the road taxes so levied at once on the assessment roll of the county, and in the first instance payment of them be demanded by the county treasurer. No reason is shown or suggested why the same rule should not apply to the plaintiff in error in these matters as to any other tax-payer.

Another question arises as to its liability to pay interest on bonds whose validity was contested, and in suit in the name of the county commissioners, as plaintiffs, and the said Bruner, as county treasurer, and Hayes, as state treasurer, as defendants. The very tax Clemmans and Bruner were endeavoring to collect of this plaintiff in error was prohibited by injunction from being paid out by Bruner. On what principle these officers seek to collect a fund from a party where such fund is declared to be improperly raised, is not apparent. In other words, while, by the strong power of a summary tax warrant, the treasurer is collecting from the plaintiff in error this interest on county bonds, he is lying under an injunction forbidding him from paying out this same fund. What right has he, or the county board, to collect this money from the plaintiff in error as long as there are pending suits enjoining its payment? This money, when paid into the treasury, is put there for a certain use. Meier v. McCrillus, 4 Kan. *250. The record discloses that the companies claiming this interest, the board of county commissioners, and the county treasurer, were all in court, adjudicating the right of the companies to demand interest on these bonds. Until it was settled that they had this right, the county treasurer had no power, while under the restraint of an injunction, to enforce the collection of such an enjoined revenue.

If the suits had been commenced by the county board before their levy, they would have had no power to make such a levy; but being commenced after, the whole levy for that object was necessarily affected thereby, the board acting for all the tax-payers of the county, and in that matter standing as the representative of the tax-payers; and it was the right of each person to refuse to pay this enjoined tax. This court has recently held that equity will interfere in behalf of the county board to prevent county treasurers from paying interest on illegal county bonds. Gulf R. Co. v. County of Miami, 12 Kan. *230. The principle of this decision must be that in this manner the county represents all the tax-payers, else the case would be inconsistent with Meier v. McCrillus, supra. If the suits should terminate adverse to the county, then this tax remains an enforceable lien against the persons and property on which it is levied; for it is part of the revenue law that each tax is carried out separately on the tax-roll, and the treasurer, in such a case, could easily give a receipt for the unenjoined taxes. When the county board enjoined the payment of this tax it was as though each taxpayer had enjoined his individual part thereof. The bonds were issued, as the record shows, without authority of law, and hence a tax to meet the interest on them was simply void. This invalid nature of the bonds had been shown in the suits mentioned in the petition, so far that the payment of any interest on them was restrained. But, surely, the county cannot in one breath say that the interest claimed is for void bonds, and hence the county ought not to pay, and in the next assert the interest to be due and collectible from the tax-payers. If the interest is illegal, then it is so, not for one purpose only, but for all. If there is no interest due or owing on the bonds, then there should be none enforced from the tax-payers. The county cannot be permitted to collect funds for an illegal object, and then cover the same into its general funds. The right to tax and collect revenue is confided to the counties only in specified cases, and the power to use this function is not to be enlarged by any construction whatever. The statutory power will be confined to a fair construction of the law creating it. Under our statutes no power is given to a county to collect funds for the payment of interest on bonds unauthorized by law. These propositions are fundamental. They stand upon authority and reason.

*86 The county asserting the illegality of these bonds, and *instituting suit to set them aside, and having injunction to restrain its officers from paying out any funds on the interest due on the bonds, is precluded from turning around and alleging the validity of the bonds, and the legality of the tax sought to be collected in payment of the interest on them.

Frank R. Ogg, for defendant in error.

The questions presented by plaintiff's petition have been passed upon and adjudicated by this court in the case of Gulf R. Co. v. Treasurer of Bourbon Co., 7 Kan. *210, and affirmed by the court in the case of the same Railroad Co. v. Blake, 9 Kan. *489. These cases are decisive of this. In this case there are no strong equitable grounds existing which would authorize the interference of a court of equity, and the court did not err in sustaining defendant's demurrer to plaintiff's petition. Burnes v. Atchison, 2 Kan. *454; Roseberry v. Huff, 27 Ind. 12.

VALENTINE, J. This was an action to enjoin the collection of two certain taxes. The defendant demurred to the plaintiff's petition on the ground that the petition did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The court below sustained the demurrer. If either of said taxes should have been enjoined, then the demurrer should have been overruled, for in that case the petition would have stated facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. One of the taxes was a road tax of $162.62. The other was a tax of $598.55 to pay interest on county bonds issued to railroad companies. The first it is admitted is legal, but it is claimed that the collection of the same at the time, and in the manner, it was attempted to be collected is illegal. The second of said taxes it is claimed is illegal and void. Both of said taxes were levied in 1872, for that year, and placed upon the tax-roll of that year. In February, 1873, the defendant Bru-

*87 ner, as treasurer of Johnson county, issued his tax warrant *for their collection, and the defendant Clemmans, as sheriff of said county, was about to collect the same, when this suit was commenced to restrain both of said defendants from collecting said taxes.

Was the attempted collection of said road tax illegal?

Section 72 of the tax law reads as follows: "The county commissioners shall meet on the first Monday in September in each year, and shall estimate and determine the amount of money to be raised by tax for county purposes; also all other taxes which they may be required by law to levy." Gen. St. 1044.

Sections 21 to 24 of the road law (Gen. St. 905) read as follows:

"Sec. 21. The board of county commissioners of each county may, at the time prescribed by law for levying county taxes, levy a road tax of not more than three mills on the dollar on all taxable property in their respective counties, except the real estate in incorporated cities of over two thousand inhabitants; and said tax may be paid in labor, under the direction of the overseer of the district in which the property is situated, by any able-bodied man, at the rate of two dollars per day.

"Sec. 22, [as it originally was.] It shall be the duty of the county clerk, immediately after such tax has been levied, to furnish to each township trustee a list of the taxable real estate, and persons charged with taxes on personal property, within their respective townships, and the amount of road tax chargeable to each tract or person; said list to be furnished on or before the first day of October in each year."

"Sec. 22, [as amended.] It shall be the duty of the county clerk, after such tax has been levied, to furnish to each township trustee of the county a list of all the taxable property, and the amount of all road tax chargeable to each tract of land within their respective townships; said list to be furnished on or before the first day of April in each year." Laws 1872, p. 355, § 6.

"Sec. 23. The trustees of the several townships, after receiving the list mentioned in the preceding section, shall proceed to make out lists of all the taxable real estate within the various road-districts, and of persons charged with taxes on personal property, with the amount of road tax chargeable to each tract of land, and deliver the same to the overseer of such district on or before the fifteenth day of October in each year.

"Sec. 24. All road taxes remaining unpaid on the first day of August shall be returned to the township trustee. The township trustee shall, before the fifteenth day of August, return all such delinquent road taxes to the county clerk, who shall charge the same against the respective tracts of land on the county tax-roll of the current year."

The road tax we are now considering was levied, as provided by law, on the first Monday in September, 1872. It is claimed that under said section 22 of the road law, as amended, the list of the taxable property, and the amount of tax thereon, should have been furnished to the various township trustees on or before the first day of April, 1873; that under section 23 of the road law the township trustees should have furnished like lists to the various road overseers on or before October 15, 1873; that under section 24 of the road law the unpaid road taxes should be returned by the road overseers to the township trustees, and by the township trustees to the county clerks, and that all this should be done some time between the first and the fifteenth day of August, 1874; and that the county clerk should afterwards enter such delinquent road taxes on the tax-roll for the year

1874. And it is claimed that under these sections no road tax levied in 1872 could be put on any tax-roll of the county earlier than in 1874. The plaintiff claims that under said sections it had the right to pay said road tax in labor, at the rate of two dollars per day for any able-bodied man, and that it had the right to do this at any time from October 15, 1873, till August 1, 1874. This claim seems very plausible, but, when examined closely, we hardly think it will be found to be sound. It may be that the company would have a right to pay the tax in labor; but, if so, we are inclined to think it would have to do so before the treasurer should issue his warrant for its collection, and that the treasurer might issue his warrant therefor at any time after January 10, 1873. We shall now proceed to give our views upon this subject.

In 1872 and in 1873 all property, real and personal, belonging to a *railroad company, and used in operating their road, was assessed as personal property. Laws 1871, p. 331, § 4. And the taxes levied upon such assessment were collected in the same manner as taxes levied upon personal property. Railroad property, although it may have been real estate, was not sold by the county treasurer on the first Tuesday of May, or at any other time, to pay the delinquent taxes, as other real estate was. Gen. St. 1046, §§ 80, 81. On the contrary, the county treasurer, on or before the tenth of January, issued his warrant to the sheriff to collect the same, and they were collected in the same manner as other delinquent taxes upon personal property. Laws 1871, p. 334, § 11; Laws 1869, p. 339; Gen. St. 1059, § 123. Railroad property was in fact, under the tax laws, governed by the same rules, and treated in the same manner, as personal property, although the larger portion of the same may have been real estate. As we have before seen, it was the duty of the county commissioners to levy the road tax, as well as almost all the other taxes. Gen. St. 1044, § 72; Id. 905, § 31. And, except when otherwise provided, all the taxes levied by the county commissioners, under said section 72 of the tax law, were, by the county clerk, immediately placed upon the tax-roll of the county for immediate collection by the county treasurer. We have already given section 72 of the tax law, and we now call attention to section 73 of said law. It reads as follows:

"Sec. 73. The county clerk, immediately after the first Monday in September, shall proceed to determine the sums to be levied upon each tract or lot of real property, and upon the amount of personal property, in the name of each person, company, or corporation, which shall be assessed equally on all real and personal property subject to the same tax, and set down each tax in a separate column. He shall complete the same, and attach his certificate thereto, and deliver it to the county treasurer on or before the first day of November, and shall charge the treasurer with the amount of the respective taxes assessed on the tax-roll." Gen. St. 1044.

In 1872 and in 1873 there was no provision in any of the statutes authorizing the county clerk to do anything with the *90 *road tax levied by the county commissioners upon personal property, except to immediately place it upon the tax-roll of the county for immediate collection by the county treasurer as other taxes upon personal property are collected. There was no provision authorizing the county clerk to furnish the various township trustees of his county with the amount of road tax levied upon personal property, nor was there any provision authorizing him to furnish said trustees with the names of persons charged with road tax levied upon personal property. He simply furnished said trustees with "the amount of road tax chargeable to each tract of land within their respective townships." See section 22 of the road law, as amended; Laws 1872, p. 355, § 6. We have quoted said section 22 as it originally stood, and as amended, and have italicised those portions of each which differ from those of the other, or which are not found in the other. The differences, therefore, between the original section and the amended section will be obvious, and these differences will show clearly the intention of the legislature. Therefore, as all railroad property must, under said tax laws, be treated as personal property; and as the county clerk was not, under said laws, authorized to furnish to the various township trustees the various amounts of taxes levied upon personal property, or with the names of persons charged with road taxes levied upon personal property; and as said clerk was not authorized to do anything else with said road taxes except to place them upon the county tax-roll for immediate collection,—it would seem to follow, under said section 73, and other sections of the tax laws, that the county clerk must put all the road taxes levied upon railroad property, as well as those levied upon personal property in general, upon the county tax-roll, to be collected the same as other taxes levied upon personal property.

2. Was the tax levied to pay interest on county bonds issued to railroad companies invalid? It will be presumed that said tax was valid, unless the contrary has been shown by the plaintiff in its petition.

Have they shown the contrary? They allege that the county *91 treasurer and state treasurer have been enjoined, at the *suit of county commissioners, from paying any interest on said bonds. The grounds upon which the county commissioners obtained said injunction are as follows: The commissioners "set up, as a fact, that said bonds, and all of them, are void, and issued without authority of law, and that said interest so levied on said assessment roll of said county is wrongfully levied, and is of right not the property or moneys of said companies to which said bonds were issued." The plaintiff in the present suit does not say that said bonds are void; it merely says that the county commissioners say so in their suit. And the plaintiff in the present suit does not say that the county commissioners' suit has ever been terminated. We should judge from the allegation in the plaintiff's petition that the injunction granted to the county commissioners, to restrain the county treasurer and state treasurer from paying any interest on said bonds, was merely a temporary injunction,—an injunction pendente lite, to stop the money in the hands of the county and state treasurers until it could be determined to whom the money belonged. Such an injunction determines no person's rights. Such an injunction will not prevent the county treasurer and the sheriff from collecting taxes to pay interest on said bonds. But even if said county commissioners' suit has been terminated, and said injunction were a perpetual injunction, still it might not prevent the treasurer and sheriff from collecting said taxes. The county treasurer, state treasurer, and the railroad companies to whom said bonds were issued, were parties defendant in the said commissioners' suit. Now, suppose the railroad companies had parted with all the interest they had in said bonds before said suit was commenced, are the real owners of the bonds, who were not parties to the suit, to suffer because these merely nominal parties—the county treasurer, state treasurer, and railroad companies—may have allowed (possibly with their consent) judgment for a perpetual injunction to be rendered against them? There is no allegation in the plaintiff's petition that the railroad companies owned said *92 bonds when said suits were commenced. There is no *allegation in fact that the county commissioners alleged that said railroad companies owned said bonds when their suit was commenced. Possibly the county treasurer, the state treasurer, and the railroad companies were all very willing that injunctions should be granted restraining the officers from paying said interest; for, possibly, the interests of all of them were on that side. They may all have been large tax-payers in Johnson county without having any interest in the bonds. We decide this case, however, upon the belief that said injunction was only a temporary injunction.

DANIEL C. YOUNG and others v. F. LEDRICK and others.

July Term, 1874.

1. Execution: Proceedings in Aid of: Powers and Jurisdiction of Probate Judge. The provisions of the Civil Code entitled "Proceedings in Aid of Execution" are constitutional and valid so far as the question is concerned of conferring power on the probate judge to act thereunder.<sup>1</sup>

2. Probate Judge: Judicial Powers. A probate judge may receive judicial powers other than those granted by the constitution to the probate court.<sup>1</sup>
3. Courts: District Courts and District Judges. While it may be that no provision can be made for more than one judge of a district court, and while it may be that no legislation can be upheld which excludes such single judge from a supervisory control of all the proceedings of that court, yet, within these limits, it is competent for the legislature to provide that other persons may exercise some judicial functions in cases pending therein.

Error from Morris district court.

Young and two others as partners obtained as judgment against *93 Ledrick & Simcock, the defendants in error, at the *April term, 1872, of the district court of Morris county, and afterwards instituted proceedings in aid of execution before the probate judge of Morris county, under sections 482-504 of the Civil Code. After full examination said probate judge made an order appointing F. P. Nichols receiver, (who thereupon duly qualified,) and directing F. Ledrick and G. W. Munkers to deliver to such receiver certain notes and accounts found in their hands and found to be the property of Ledrick & Simcock. Thereafter Ledrick & Simcock filed their petition in error, with a transcript of the proceedings had before the probate judge, in the district court for said Morris county, asking a reversal of the order of the probate judge, and, also, at the same time, filed an undertaking to stay further proceedings on such order. Afterwards, and at the October term, 1873, of said district court, the order of the probate judge was reversed by said district court upon the ground that so much of the act of the legislature as attempted or purported to confer upon the probate judge authority or jurisdiction to entertain proceedings in aid of execution was unconstitutional and void.

R. M. Ruggles and Sharp & McDonald, for plaintiffs in error.

The only question presented in this case, as we think, and certainly the only question argued in the district court, is, Are the provisions of that part of article 20 of the Code entitled "Proceedings in aid of Execution" constitutional and valid in so far as they attempt or purport to confer upon the probate judge of a county power, authority, or jurisdiction to issue the process, entertain such proceedings, make the orders, and punish their disobedience? When courts are called upon to declare a solemn act of the legislature unconstitutional, and therefore void, the unconstitutionality of such act must clearly appear, (County of Leavenworth v. Miller, 7 Kan. *498, *499;) or, as this court in an early case has expressed it, "that no statute should be declared unconstitutional unless its infringement of the superior law is clear *beyond substantial doubt." Kansas v. Robinson, 1 Kan. *27. We think that not only can it not be made "to clearly appear" that the provisions in question violate the

It was claimed in the court below that the jurisdiction of the probate court, as created by the constitution, was confined to probate matters, and such others as are therein mentioned. The following is the provision of the constitution: "There shall be a probate court in each county, which shall be a court of record, and have such probate jurisdiction, and care of estates of deceased persons, minors, and persons of unsound minds, as may be prescribed by law, and shall have jurisdiction in cases of habeas corpus. * * *" Const. Kan. art. 3, § 8. No negative or prohibitory words are here used; and as we understand the rule as adopted by this court, it will not, in the absence of prohibitory words, construe the enumeration of some things in regard to which jurisdiction is to be exercised as a limitation of the power of the legislature to confer jurisdiction in other matters. In re Johnson, 12 Kan. *102; Henderson v. Kennedy, 9 Kan. *166; Judd v. Driver, 1 Kan. *455; Anthony v. Halderman, 7 Kan. *65; Norton v. Graham, Id. *166. In the last case the report of the case does not show that this point was decided, but the court will remember it was so orally decided at the hearing, it being alleged in the answer therein that the defendant held the office of county treasurer of Coffey county by virtue of having received the greatest number of legal votes therefor, as well as by virtue of the judgment of a court for a trial of contested elections, and the defendant tendered evidence in support of said first allegation, which being objected to by the plaintiff on the ground that the legislature having conferred the jurisdiction upon the court constituted for the trial of contest elections, it must be presumed that such jurisdiction was exclusive; whereupon this court overruled the objection and permitted the evidence, saying in *95 substance that the legislature "had not in the election law, (chapter 36, Gen. St. 424, § 87,) in terms, declared the jurisdiction exclusive, and that this court would not so hold; and further remarking that even if the legislature had so declared it would be doubtful whether the provision would be a valid one, in view of the provision of the constitution giving to this court original jurisdiction in quo warranto.

There is another provision of the constitution which we think clearly gives to the legislature the power to enact the sections, the validity of which is herein drawn in question. That provision is as follows: "The judicial power of the state shall be vested in a supreme court, district courts, probate courts, justices of the peace, and such other courts, inferior to the supreme court, as may be provided by law." Art. 3, § 1. Here is express constitutional authority to the legislature to create whatsoever courts may be deemed necessary or proper, provided only that they shall be inferior to the supreme court. "Whenever the legislature confers upon any board or officer powers which are unquestionably judicial in their nature, and when they also invest such board or officer with all the instruments and paraphernalia of a court, they undoubtedly create a court, although they may not in terms say so." "And it is not necessary that the legislature, in order to create a court, or to confer judicial power, should first in terms create a court." Prell v. McDonald, 7 Kan. *447; Malone v. Murphy, 2 Kan. *250; State v. Young, 3 Kan. *445. That the power conferred upon the probate judge by the sections of the Code under consideration is judicial in its nature, seems to us to be beyond all question. He is to hear the evidence, and then weigh it, and then determine its effect. He hears, and then decides,—adjudges. The legislature has in many cases passed acts conferring powers upon probate judges, or probate courts. In re Johnson, 12 Kan. *104. And in every case in which the power of the legislature to confer on probate courts, or probate judges, powers other than those enumerated in the constitution, has been questioned, and has been before this court, such *96 power has been by the court upheld. Of course, we do not for a moment claim that the mere passing of an act, or a series of acts, upon a given question, makes such act or acts constitutional and valid, but that the law-making power has done so is an argument of persuasive weight in determining its validity, and affords some presumptions in favor of its not being an infringement of the fundamental law. County of Leavenworth v. Miller, 7 Kan. *498; Malone v. Murphy, 2 Kan. *261; State v. Sheldon, Id. *322; State v. Young, 3 Kan. *445; Steele v. Martin, 6 Kan. *436; Anthony v. Halderman, 7 Kan. *64; Norton v. Graham, Id. *166; Prell v. McDonald, Id. *446; Kirkpatrick v. State, 5 Kan. *676.

As to nature and character of "proceedings in aid of execution," see case of Hayner v. James, 17 N. Y. 316.

McClure & Humphrey, for defendants in error.

The constitution defines what powers and jurisdiction may be conferred by law on the probate court, and the probate judge. Section 8 of article 3 of that instrument prescribes the subject-matters over which the probate court shall have and exercise jurisdiction. This section, enumerating the subjects over which the court shall have jurisdiction, limits it to the matters named, and no other or different powers are authorized to be conferred on the probate court. Kent v. Mahaffy, 2 Ohio St. 498. These powers in these supplementary proceedings are not given to the court, but to the probate judge, and judge of the district court. Civil Code, §§ 482-504. Can the probate judge take this grant of power? Section 16 of the judicial article provides that "the several justices and judges of the courts of record in this state shall have such jurisdiction at chambers as may be provided by law." The only grant authorized by this section is of power to transact business at chambers. We think it may be stated as a general rule, that when, by the constitution, provision is made whereby the legislature may confer on the judges of certain courts jurisdiction at chambers, the jurisdiction thus authorized to be conferred extends only to such matters as properly pertain to, though of a less important character than, the general business of the court. It would indeed be anomalous if it were permitted to grant to the judge of a court a class of *powers and character of jurisdiction such as the court when in session could not take. Unless the constitution should specifically define the functions which a judge might exercise at chambers, and but a general grant of chamber powers is given, the grant must be understood as restricting the powers to such business at chambers as arises in causes or proceedings pending in the proper court of the officer whose chamber powers are invoked. Hence, jurisdiction at chambers extends only to the making of such rules and orders, during the vacation, which it is proper then to make, in matters connected with actions or suits pending in the court of which the judge making such rules and orders is the judge. Pittsburg, Ft. W. & C. Ry. Co. v. Hurd, 17 Ohio St. 144.

Proceedings in aid of execution are not proceedings in or connected with an action, but proceedings after judgment, and are held to be in no sense identical with ordinary chambers business, but are of a special and higher nature,—a substitute for an action in chancery. Cushman v. Johnson, 13 How. Pr. 495. If it had been intended by the framers of the constitution to authorize a grant of such powers to the judge of the probate court as are comprehended in these proceedings supplemental to execution, such authority would undoubtedly have been expressly given. These powers are not conferred on the probate court, and it would not have been competent for the legislature to so have conferred them. In addition to the specific jurisdiction vested in the probate court, the legislature may give the probate judge jurisdiction at chambers. Proceedings in aid of execution are no part of, nor comprehended under, what is properly understood and defined as chamber business, or jurisdiction. Hence, there is no warrant or authority either in section 8 or section 16 of the judicial article to confer this class of powers on the probate judge.

It is contended by plaintiffs in error that the first section of article 3 of the constitution contains a sufficient warrant for a grant of power to the probate judge to entertain proceedings in aid of execution. This section simply declares in what courts the judicial power of the state shall be vested, viz., in the supreme court, district *98 courts, probate courts, justices of the peace, and such other courts, inferior to the supreme court, as may be provided by law. The legislature by this section is authorized to establish other courts, inferior to the supreme court, besides those especially provided for in the constitution, and apportion to such newly-created courts such jurisdiction as may be convenient and proper. The only power granted to the legislature in this section is a power to create additional courts. There is no power here, either granted or to be inferred, to clothe any court created by the constitution with any specific powers or jurisdiction,—much less is there any grant of power to confer on any judge of such a court specific powers and jurisdiction. Hence, the powers in question being of a special character, intrusted to the judge and not to the court, the granting of which not involving the establishment of a new court, there is no warrant in this section to justify the exercise of these powers by the probate judge.

The plaintiffs in error, citing section 8 of article 3 of the constitution, say: "No negative or prohibitory words are here used, and this court will not, in the absence of prohibitory words, construe the enumeration of some things in regard to which jurisdiction is to be exercised as a limitation of the power of the legislature to confer jurisdiction in other matters." We fail to perceive that the court has decided as above stated. In the cases cited to support this statement, we understand the court to say substantially that the rule as above set forth, which substantially embodies this maxim, expressio unius, exclusio alterius, does not apply. In these cases the court simply affirms that in the absence of a constitutional inhibition the legislature may confer on two distinct courts concurrent jurisdiction, which is almost equivalent to saying that two similar things may co-exist.

It seems to be contended by plaintiffs, that in seeking to invest the probate judge with the powers in question, the legislature has in fact, though not in terms, created by such act a court. The right of the legislature to create additional courts is not questioned. But *99 in granting these powers to the *probate judge, the legislature has not created another court; it has not authorized any act to be done, in these supplementary proceedings, by any court. The powers are given solely to the judge, to be exercised by the probate and district judges respectively, in their capacity of, and by virtue of, their official character as probate and district judge. No court can entertain these proceedings, or make the orders necessary to make them effectual. The authority is personal, and vested in the judge before whom the proceeding is commenced; and further, the authority being statutory, the provisions of the statute must be strictly observed. Biting v. Vanderburgh, 17 How. Pr. 80; Weber v. Hobbie, 13 How. Pr. 382. It seems to be claimed that the acts creating the criminal court of Leavenworth county, and the courts for the trial of contested elections, and designating the probate judge as the judge of those courts, are analogous to the case at bar. We think a clear distinction exists. In the one case the probate judge is designated as the person or officer to exercise the functions of another court, and while performing the duties thus devolving on him he acts as the judge of that court, and not as judge of the probate court. In other words, while the probate judge was exercising the functions of the criminal court of Leavenworth county, or the contested election court, it was not the probate court that was in session, but the respective courts named. When, however, the probate judge is called on to act in these execution proceedings he acts as probate judge, or as judge of the probate court.

BREWER, J. The only question in this case is, Are the provisions of the statute entitled, "Proceedings in Aid of Execution," and found on pages 724 to 728 of the General Statutes of the state of Kansas, constitutional and valid in so far as they attempt or purport to confer upon the probate judge power, authority or jurisdiction to issue the process, entertain such proceedings, make the orders and

*100 punish their disobedience, as is provided for in the sections *of the statutes found on the pages above mentioned? Can a probate judge be invested with judicial functions as to cases pending in the district court? This really separates itself into two questions: Can a probate judge receive other judicial powers than those granted by the constitution to the probate court? and can judicial functions, as to cases pending in the district court, be granted to any person other than the duly-elected judge thereof? The first question is no longer an open one in this court, but has been already answered in the affirmative. In re Johnson, 12 Kan. *102, and cases cited in opinion. The second question must also be answered in the affirmative. The jurisdiction of the district court is not defined by the constitution. It is left to the legislature to prescribe its limits, and the manner of its exercise. While it may be that, under section 5 of article 3 of the constitution, it is impossible for the legislature to provide for more than one judge of a district court, and while it may be that no legislation could be upheld which excluded such single judge from a supervisory control of all the proceedings of that court, yet, within this limit, we think it competent for the legislature to provide that other persons may exercise some judicial functions in cases pending therein. Thus, the legislature has authorized the trial of certain cases before referees. No question has been, none can well be, made, as to the validity of such legislation. Yet here is an officer other than the judge who is exercising judicial functions in cases in that court. So, also, at common law the sheriff exercised judicial functions. The sheriff's jury, to assess damages, was an every-day occurrence. And in proceedings before such jury the sheriff acted as a quasi judge. In our own proceedings under the occupying-claimant act may be found something of the same nature. To require of the judge the performance of all these duties, because judicial in their nature, would so burden him as to work a great hinderance to the dispatch of business, and the trial of cases. Now, these proceedings in aid of execution are of this same subordinate nature. It has

*101 been claimed that they were a substitute for *and equivalent to the old creditors' bill. While in many respects they resemble, yet they are far from being exactly similar. See opinion of DANIO, J., in the case of Hayner v. James, 17 N. Y. 316. They are based upon a judgment already obtained. They are proceedings to aid in its collection,—proceedings resulting from the inability of the sheriff to accomplish such collection by means of ordinary execution. They are simply means to reach all the property of the debtor, and apply the same to payment of a debt whose existence has been already judicially determined. It needs but a little reflection to perceive that, no matter how wide may be the scope of these proceedings, they are of a subordinate nature. Judicial functions in such matters may, it seems to us, be granted by the legislature to officers other than the regularly elected judge, subject, of course, to his supervisory control. This determines the case, and the judgment of the district court must be reversed, and the case remanded for further proceedings.

RICHARD W. BUDD and others v. CHARLES F. KRAMER.

July Term, 1874.

1. Errors: Immaterial. Only errors which affect substantial rights can be considered in this court. [State v. O'Laughlin, 29 Kan. 24.]
2. Pleadings: Omission to Attach Copy of Note. When a petition on a promissory note sets out the note in full, and makes it a part thereof, an omission to attach a copy is not such an error as will authorize a reversal of the judgment.<sup>1</sup>
3. Pleading: Setting out Instruments: Effect. Where a pleading alleges that a party executed an instrument, and sets out the instrument in full, it is equivalent to alleging that he made all the covenants and promises contained in such instrument, and assumed all the liabilities created thereby.<sup>2</sup>
4. Court: Name or Style of. The "name of the court" is fully given in a petition entitled "State of Kansas, Leavenworth County, District Court, 1st Judicial District."

*102 *Error from Leavenworth district court.

The case is stated in the opinion.

Green & Foster, for plaintiffs in error.

Howsley & Singleton, for defendant in error.

BREWER, J. Charles F. Kramer brought an action in the district court of Leavenworth county on a note, and to foreclose a mortgage given to secure the payment of the same. He made Richard W. Budd, Nancy E. Budd, David W. Eaves, Elisha Diefendorf, and James B. Wilson, defendants. The caption and style or name of the court were set forth thus: "State of Kansas, County of Leavenworth, Dis- strict Court 1st Judicial District, ss." The following is a copy of said petition:

<sup>1</sup> Where an instrument in writing for the payment of money is sued on, and a copy of such instrument is attached to the petition and made a part thereof, such copy should be considered as a part of the petition when construing the allegations thereof. State v. School-district, 8 Pac. Rep. 208.

[Caption and Title.] "The plaintiff says on the twenty-eighth of February, 1873, defendants Richard W. Budd and Nancy E. Budd executed and delivered to him their promissory note, a copy of which, and the indorsements thereon, is hereto attached, marked 'A,' and made part hereof. All the interest due thereon to the twenty-eighth of August, 1873, has been paid. There is now due on said promissory note $440, and interest thereon from the said twenty-eighth of August to the present time, at the rate of twelve per cent. per annum, which the defendants refuse to pay, though often requested. At the time said defendants Richard W. Budd and Nancy E. Budd executed and delivered the aforesaid promissory note, and to secure the payment of the sum of money therein mentioned, according to the tenor of said note, they executed to plaintiff their mortgage deed, which was by him delivered to and received for record, on the twenty-eighth of February, 1873, at 2 o'clock p. m., by M. C. Mast, register of deeds of the county of Leavenworth aforesaid, and by said register of deeds duly recorded in liber 37 of Mortgages, at pages 489, 490, and *103 491, a copy *of which mortgage deed, with the indorsements of said register of deeds made thereon, is hereto attached, marked 'B,' and made part hereof. The mortgage deed has become absolute. The defendants Eaves, Diefendorf, and Wilson each claim to own an interest in the real property described in said mortgage deed, the exact nature of which is unknown to the plaintiff, further than that the same is inferior to the rights of the plaintiff. Wherefore the plaintiff asks judgment against defendants Richard W. Budd and Nancy E. Budd for $440, and interest thereon at the rate of twelve per cent. from the twenty-eighth of August, 1873, until paid, and for the sum of $50 attorney fees, as stipulated in said deed, and that the mortgage be foreclosed, and the land therein described sold, as provided by law, and that defendants Eaves, Diefendorf, and Wilson be required to set up and make known their interest in the real property aforesaid, and the same be adjudged inferior to the claim of the plaintiff, and for such other and further relief as the plaintiff may be entitled to.

"HOWSLEY & SINGLETON, Attys. for Plaintiff."

Then follow copies of the note and mortgage as stated above. To this petition the plaintiffs in error, Budd and Budd, demurred, on the ground that the petition did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer was overruled, and the court rendered judgment and decree of foreclosure and sale; to all of which plaintiffs in error excepted. We see no error in this ruling, at least none that under section 140 of the Code will avail the plaintiffs in error. That section declares that "the court, in every stage of action, must disregard any error or defect in the pleadings and proceedings which does not affect the substantial rights of the adverse party, and no judgment shall be reversed or affected by reason of such error or defect." Section 118 of the Code requires, in an action on a note, that a copy be "attached to and filed with the pleading;" while section 123 authorizes a party in such an action "to give a copy of the instrument, with all credits and the indorsements thereon, and to state that there is due to him on such instrument a specified sum which he claims, with interest." Upon this counsel contends—First, "that section 123 is not complied with by merely attaching a copy of *104 the instrument to the pleading, as required by *section 118, and that the copy required by section 123 must be incorporated in, and thus made a part of the pleading, which is not done;" and, second, "that the petition, after referring to the copy of the note attached to and filed with it, wholly fails to state, in accordance with section 123, that there is due to the plaintiff on the note, from the adverse party, a specified sum, which he claims, with interest." We do not understand the petition as do counsel. We think section 123 was complied with. The note was not simply attached to the pleading, as an exhibit; it was made part of and incorporated into it. It was as much a part of the petition as though it had been copied into the body of the instrument. The place in which it is put is nothing. The pleader in very words makes it a part of his petition. It may be technically correct to hold that if it be a part of the petition it is not "attached to and filed with" it, and that therefore section 118 has not been complied with; but certainly no "substantial rights" of the plaintiff in error are affected thereby. The petition does not, in the language of the statute, allege that there is so much due the plaintiff from the defendants. But it does allege that there is due on the note so much, and the note shows that the defendants are the makers, and owe whatever is due thereon, and that the plaintiff is the payee, and entitled to receive whatever is due. This is abundant. The mortgage also is, as the note, made a part of the petition; and when it is alleged that the defendants executed a certain instrument, which is set out in full, it is equivalent to alleging that they made all the covenants and promises contained in such instrument, and assumed all the liabilities created thereby. The mortgage being to secure the note, when the latter became due the former could be foreclosed. The name of the court, it is claimed, is not properly given. We think it amply sufficient.

The judgment will be affirmed.

*106 *STATE OF KANSAS v. CARY FOLWELL and another.

July Term, 1874.

1. Evidence: Criminal Case: Admissibility: Effect of. Testimony is admissible that tends directly to prove the defendants guilty of the crime charged, although it may also tend to prove a distinct felony, and thus prejudice the accused.<sup>1</sup>
2. ———: Opinions of Witnesses. It is a general rule that witnesses (not experts) are not allowed to give their opinions to a jury, but there are many exceptions; and where, as in this case, the witness knew and had examined the wagon of the defendant, observed the peculiarities of its running gear, and had followed certain wagon tracks, had measured them, and had noted many minute circumstances tending strongly to show that the tracks were made by defendant's wagon, it was not error for the court to refuse to rule out a statement of the witness, a part of which was that in the opinion of the witness defendant's wagon made the tracks.<sup>2</sup>
3. ———: Declarations of Defendant: Insufficient Record. Where the record does not show that the bill of exceptions contains all the evidence, this court cannot say, in the absence of any showing, that there was not evidence produced to the court that declarations made by the accused while in custody were voluntarily made.<sup>3</sup>

Appeal from Bourbon district court.

Information, charging defendants with grand larceny in having stolen a "black horse, the property of J. P. McN., of the value of seventy-five dollars." Plea, not guilty. Trial at the December term, 1873; C. O. F., judge pro tem., presiding. Verdict, guilty, and defendant Folwell was sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison for three years, and defendant White for seven years. Defendants appeal.

A. H. Wilkinson and W. J. Bawden, for appellants.

The court permitted evidence to be submitted to the jury, over the objection and exception of appellants, tending to show the commission of previous larcenies by them, damaging to the character of the appellants; they not having offered their character in evidence, and the presumption of law being that their character was good. In criminal charges the prisoner's character cannot be put in issue by *106 the *state unless he opens the door by giving testimony to it.

<sup>2</sup> In an action to recover damages resulting from an assault and battery, the plaintiff, although not an expert, is permitted to testify concerning her bodily health before and after the assault. Townsend v. Nutt, 19 Kan. 282. See, also, State v. Stackhouse, 24 Kan. 445.

<sup>3</sup> Declarations as evidence, see Smith v. Smith, 5 Kan. 25, and note; confessions, see note to McClain v. Com., 1 Atl. Rep. 48; dying declarations, see State v. Medlicott, 9 Kan. 176; Railing v. Com., 1 Atl. Rep. 319, and note.

It is not a conclusion of law that from his silence the jury are to believe he is a man of bad character. State v. O'Neal, 7 Ired. 251; People v. Bodine, 1 Denio, 282; People v. White, 24 Wend. 520; Baker v. State, 4 Ark. 56. Upon a trial of an indictment or information for larceny, evidence of the commission of a separate and distinct larceny from that charged is inadmissible. Barton v. State, 18 Ohio, 221; Walker v. Com., 1 Leigh, 574; Albriecht v. State, 6 Wis. 74; State v. Danbert, 42 Mo. 242; Com. v. Wilson, 2 Cush. 590; Kinchelov v. State, 5 Humph. 9.

The evidence offered by the state must be confined to the issue. An inspection of the record of this case shows that this plain and unquestioned rule was repeatedly violated by the prosecution during the trial of this cause. The court permitted evidence to be given by the prosecution to the jury of matters entirely foreign to the issues joined, and highly prejudicial to the rights of the plaintiffs in error, over their objections and exceptions. As sustaining this view, see State v. Wisdom, 8 Port. 511; Brock v. State, 26 Ala. 104; Cole v. Com., 5 Grat. 696; Farrer v. State, 2 Ohio St. 54; State v. Renton, 15 N. H. 169; Ogletree v. State, 28 Ala. 693; State v. Gordon, 8 Iowa, 410; Lewis v. State, 4 Kan. *296; Whart. Crim. Law, § 647; Smith v. State, 10 Ind. 106.

There was no evidence of the corpus delicti. The absence of such evidence was fatal to the state. We submit that a close inspection of the record, which contains the entire evidence in the case, fails to show any evidence whatever of the commission of the felony charged in the information herein by any person. For aught that appears by the evidence introduced by the state, the appellants are in the anomalous position of having been convicted of a crime which never was committed. The evidence presents no showing whatever of the possession by the appellants, or either of them, at any time, of the property alleged to have been feloniously taken. 1 Bish. Crim. Proc. §§ 500, 501, and note 2; People v. Badgley, 16 Wend. 53; People v. Porter, 2 Park. Crim. R. 14; People v. Hennessey, 15 Wend. 153; Burrill, Cr. Ev. 678; Bergen v. People, 17 Ill. 426; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 247; State v. Schryver, 42 N. Y. 1.

The court erred in permitting the interrogatories of the juror *107 Allen to the witness Randall. No inherent right exists *in a juror to question witnesses, and nothing is waived on the part of defendants in a criminal cause. Our position is that the court had no discretionary power to allow the innovation of permitting a juror to ask the interrogatories in question, nor any others. They referred to matters tending to prove the commission of other and previous larcenies than the alleged offense for which appellants were being tried, and were for that reason incompetent and illegal. The rights of a defendant charged with crime should always be guarded most jealously by courts. No privilege or protection accorded to a defendant can be infringed upon, neither can they be waived by him; and when the supreme court, in view of this principle, has held it to be fatal error, after conviction, for the judge, before rendering sentence, to omit asking the defendant "if he has any legal cause to show why the sentence of the law should not be passed upon him," holding this to be one of the inalienable rights of a defendant charged with crime, we claim that by a parity of reasoning the error set forth in this paragraph must still more forcibly commend itself to the reviewing court. The answering of the questions operated gravely to the prejudice of appellants, and had a direct effect to prevent that "fair and impartial trial" which was the right of the appellants, guaranteed them by the constitution of the state, and of which they could not be deprived.

Another error, to which we specially call attention, is the repeated admission by the court below, over the objections and exceptions of appellants, of the opinions of witnesses. The principle that witnesses cannot testify as to their opinions, except when testifying as experts, is too well known and universally admitted to require argument; and a scrutiny of the evidence will clearly establish the fact that this well-recognized principle of law was repeatedly ignored on the trial of this cause in the court below.

Declarations of the accused made while in custody are presumed to be involuntary, and, as such, are not admissible, unless it first be clearly shown that they were voluntary. The court below *108 erred in admitting the declarations of appellants to be given in evidence; said declarations being made while they were in custody, and it not being shown that they were voluntary.

KINGMAN, C. J. The appellants were charged with grand larceny, committed in Bourbon county on the eighteenth of September, 1873, and tried and convicted of the offense. They claim that certain errors occurred on the trial. The first is that there was no proof of the corpus delicti, and therefore a new trial should have been granted. There can be no doubt as to the law; but a careful scrutiny of the record has satisfied us that the proof on this point is satisfactory. The owner of the horse placed him in the stable of a neighbor with whom he was staying that night, and near the door deposited his saddle and blanket. In the morning the horse was gone, and the owner has never seen him since. If it be said that the horse might have escaped, the answer is that the saddle and blanket were also gone; and almost every fact that was in evidence tended to prove that the horse was stolen. It was in evidence that the accused, on the day and night after the horse was taken, went northward with the team and wagon of Folwell, one of the accused; that there were three horse tracks northward twenty miles, while Folwell drove but two; that a couple of men with a span of horses and a wagon, with a led horse, were seen stopping 150 yards from the road the accused traveled; that the team, wagon, and horses corresponded with that of the accused, and so did the led horse with the horse alleged to be stolen. A similar team, wagon, harness, with a led horse of the same color and size of the one missing, passed through Osage the afternoon of the nineteenth of September; and many other minute facts, all tended to show that the missing horse was stolen. Taken altogether, the testimony is so convincing that we do not see any ground on which the claim of the appellants on this point can rest.

*109 The other errors alleged are the admission of improper *evidence. The first is the admission of evidence tending to prove another larceny. The facts are substantially as follows: The state was trying to prove the whereabouts of the accused on the nineteenth of September, to connect them with the loss of the missing horse. The evidence had tended to show that they had gone north as far at least as Prescott, twenty miles, and that on the way up the tracks showed three horses, and on the return two horses. Every fact that in any way tended to show that the wagon of the accused made those tracks, and that the defendants were with the wagon, was important and relevant. The witness had already testified that he had examined the wagon of defendants, and described it, pointing out peculiarities of its running, and had measured the track near where he lived, and that the "double-trees on defendant's wagon, as he saw it on September 20th, were the property of witness." He was then allowed to testify that he left this property in the road five and one-half miles north of Fort Scott, on the Barnesville road, and next saw it the next day on defendant's wagon at Fort Scott. It is true, that this evidence tended to prove a distinct felony, and it will readily be seen that it was likely to injure the defendants; but the testimony was essential to show the guilt of defendants on the charge then being tried, and it would be a singular rule of law that a person accused of a grave crime could compel the exclusion of important and relevant testimony merely by committing two felonies at the same time, or so nearly and intimately connected that the one could not be proven without also proving the other. The testimony was competent, not for the purpose of proving another felony, but as tending to show the guilt of the accused in this case. The authorities are not conflicting on this point. Whart. Crim. Law, § 649.

This testimony, relevant and proper in itself, was elicited by two questions propounded by a juror; and this asking questions by a juror is alleged as error by the counsel for appellants, who have apparently overlooked the fact that it was done by their own consent, as shown by the record.

*110 It is insisted that witnesses were allowed to give their opinions without having shown themselves competent; and two instances are pointed out. In the testimony of Randall, it was on cross-examination by defendants that the testimony was brought out, and no exception taken in any way thereto. In Avery's testimony the witness stated that in his opinion the defendant Folwell's wagon made the track that was followed. This testimony the defendants moved to have struck out, which the court refused to do. It is very evident that the testimony could have had little or no weight with the jury. Still it may possibly have had enough to make it necessary to examine the question raised. It is true, as a general rule, that witnesses are not allowed to give their opinions to a jury, but there are exceptions. In many cases they are the best evidence of which the nature of the case will admit,—cases where nothing more exact than an opinion can be obtained. Duration, distance, dimension, velocity, etc., are often to be proved only by the opinion of witnesses, depending, as they do, on many minute circumstances which cannot fully be detailed by witnesses. See note in case of Poole v. Richardson, 3 Mass. 330. Questions of science, skill, or judgment are also of this description. And where, as in this case, the witness knew the wagon of Folwell, the peculiarity of its construction, and that one wheel was dished,—the whole wagon making a much narrower track than common, and the dished wheel making, besides, a very irregular track,—and where he also testifies that he has followed the track for miles, noticing its peculiarities, and measuring its width, we do not think it was error to permit his opinion to go to the jury, who, having a knowledge of its groundwork, can judge of its value. The question was not one of science, nor was the witness an expert. After giving the facts he gives only the conclusion he deduced from them; and, as it was the same that the jury must have drawn from the same facts, we cannot say there was error therein. 1 Whart. Crim. Law, § 45.

*111 Another alleged error is that the court admitted the declarations of appellants to be given in evidence; said declarations being made while they were in custody, and it not being first shown that they were voluntary. It is not necessary to examine the law on this question, for the facts are not such as to demand it. The record does not state that all the evidence is in the bill of exceptions; and as the testimony to show that the declarations were voluntarily made is for the judge only, to enable him to determine whether the declaration was a voluntary one, we cannot say that such testimony was not given.

It is alleged that the evidence was not confined to the issue, and that the rule requiring it to be so limited was repeatedly violated; but no specific instance is pointed out, and we think none exists.

Upon a careful consideration of the whole case, we perceive no error that would justify us in reversing the judgment.

(All the justices concurring.)

STATE OF KANSAS v. SYLVESTER O. Y. GURNEE.

July Term, 1874.

1. Accessories: None in Misdemeanors. In misdemeanors there are no accessories, but all persons concerned therein, if guilty at all, are principals.
2. Evidence: Declarations, when Res Gestæ. Declarations made by a person in possession of land, as to the extent of his possession, are admissible as part of the res gestæ.<sup>1</sup>
3. ———: Copy of Paper: Secondary Evidence, in Criminal Trials. Where a paper is made out in duplicate, and it is shown that one of the originals is lost, and the other is in the rightful possession of a person on trial for an offense, there is sufficient foundation laid for the introduction of a copy of the paper, as there is no power in the court to compel the accused to produce the paper as evidence against himself.<sup>2</sup>
4. ———: Competency. It is not error to refuse to admit testimony<sup>*112</sup> tending to show that a witness had notice of a contract *when no such contract is shown to have had an existence, and where, as in this case, the witness to whom the knowledge is sought to be brought home is not the party to be affected by the testimony.
5. ———. Competent evidence tending to prove any material fact in a case is admissible, although it may not be conclusive or competent to prove another fact in issue.

fuse an instruction as to the insufficiency of the award, which instruction contains no limitations of the rule arising from the acceptance of the award.

Appeal from Johnson district court.

Gurnee was charged on the oath of George H. Newton, before a justice of the peace, with maliciously and unlawfully entering upon the land or "claim" on the Black-Bob reservation, alleged to be owned by said Newton, on the sixteenth of June, 1874, and then and there cutting down and carrying away about fifteen acres of wheat growing on said "claim." Gurnee was convicted before the justice, and appealed therefrom to the district court. Trial was had in district court at the August term, 1874. The record discloses the following facts: In 1868 one C. J. Cleveland settled on a quarter section of land on Black-Bob reservation. He had a log-cabin and some ground under fence and in cultivation. In 1870, at his request, his son-in-law, defendant Gurnee, came out to take the "claim," and Cleveland gave it up and put Gurnee in possession. Gurnee fenced it, *113 and *built a house on the north eighty acres, and moved the Cleveland log-cabin near his new house, and used it for a stable. Cleveland made his home then with Gurnee. In May, 1871, Cleveland became dissatisfied, and went to Newton's, (complaining witness.) In same month Cleveland and Gurnee agreed in writing to arbitrate matters between them. The following is the submission signed by them, to-wit:

"OXFORD, JOHNSON Co., May 13, 1871.

"We, the undersigned, mutually agree to abide by and conform to the decision of the men we have chosen, and to whom we refer the matter of difference existing between us in reference to the claim known as the N. E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of sec. 4, T. 14, range 25, in Johnson county, Kansas, on what is known as the 'Black-Bob Reserve.' We further agree that this instrument, and one exactly corresponding, or either of them, (one of which we shall each possess,) shall be evidence in court, and that the decision [of the arbitrators] shall be attached to each."

The "decision" of the arbitrators chosen by said parties, was in writing, signed by the arbitrators, and "attached" to said submission. So much thereof as is material is as follows: "(1) Said Gurnee is to purchase said quarter section, to-wit, the N. E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of sec. 4, in T. 14, R. 25, in Oxford township, in Johnson county, state of Kansas, of the government. He is then to give a warranty deed to the south half of said quarter to said Cleveland. \* \* \* (5) Said Gurnee is to pay said Cleveland \$25, in lawful money, within five months. Said Cleveland is to have immediate possession of said 80 acres as it now is."

Cleveland went away to Missouri, and returned to Gurnee's in the spring of 1872. Gurnee continuously exercised acts of ownership over the whole quarter section, which was inclosed in common with five other quarter sections,—no division fences. Gurnee claimed that in February, 1872, he and Cleveland had made a verbal contract to annul and set aside the award, and Cleveland was to take, in lieu of the eighty acres designated in the award, twenty acres out of said south eighty; that he (Gurnee) was to break twelve or fifteen acres of said twenty acres, and to erect a box-house on that twenty *114 acres, and that he (Gurnee) was to have the residue of the quarter section, and that Cleveland, at his death, was to deed all his interest in said twenty acres to Gurnee, and that Cleveland made such deed in May, 1874, and before the wheat was cut. The state disputed this claim of defendant, and evidence was offered tending to show that Cleveland at all times claimed the whole of said south eighty, and witnesses (over defendant's exceptions) testified to declarations made by Cleveland regarding his possession, and prior to March, 1873. In March, 1873, Cleveland sued Gurnee on an account. A. G. Newton went Cleveland's security for costs; and, to indemnify himself, took a quitclaim deed from Cleveland to said south eighty, which deed was left with one Kellogg as an escrow. In April, 1873, Cleveland (being still in possession of said south eighty) and said A. G. Newton leased to George H. Newton, the prosecuting witness, all the ground he could break, to raise crops on, on said south eighty acres, for two years. Said George H. Newton broke fifteen or sixteen acres, and sowed wheat thereon. Gurnee notified and warned Newton that he still owned that "claim," telling him if he broke ground there he should have no pay for it, and if he sowed he should not reap or harvest there. Gurnee also, in May, 1873, commenced an action of forcible entry and detainer against Cleveland, to recover a portion of said south eighty, and was defeated. When the wheat was about mature, Gurnee procured the necessary men and teams and cut the wheat, and hauled and stacked it near his residence on the north half of the quarter section. Kellogg delivered the deed to A. G. Newton on the ninth of April, 1874. Cleveland died in June, 1874. Of thirty-two instructions asked by defendant, the following were refused.

"(4) If the jury believe from the evidence that the land on which the wheat was cut was not the land of the prosecuting witness, Geo. H. Newton, the jury must find for defendant."

*115 "(6) If the jury believe from the evidence that the land on which the wheat was sown, together with the residue of the quarter section, was inclosed, in common with several other tracts of land, at the time the prosecuting witness entered upon it, and broke the ground, and sowed the wheat, and that then, and on the eighteenth of March, 1873, the defendant was residing on said quarter section of land, and claiming to be the owner thereof, and continually exercised acts of ownership over said quarter section, (less the twenty acres claimed to have been ceded by defendant to one Cleveland,) by cutting grass thereon, hauling hay from the land, clearing the land, selling the grass from a portion of the quarter section, and cultivating other parts of the quarter section, and erecting and maintaining fences inclosing the whole quarter section, you are instructed that in contemplation of law the defendant was in actual possession of said quarter section of land; and the prosecuting witness, and those under whom he claims, were bound to take notice of the defendant's rights in and to said land, whether such rights were legal or equitable."

"(14) The defendant is not estopped in this cause from showing that said C. J. Cleveland conveyed nothing by his quitclaim deed to A. G. Newton, and that said Newton took nothing thereby."

"(18) If the jury believe from the evidence that Samuel Bright was one of the arbitrators, and that said Bright did not sign the award, then said award is invalid, and the defendant is not bound by anything therein contained.

"(19) An arbitrator cannot delegate his power to another person to sign the award for him in the absence of such arbitrator.

"(20) If the jury find from the evidence that Samuel Bright was an arbitrator between C. J. Cleveland and defendant Gurnee, and that the signature of said Bright was placed to the award by Sherman Kellogg, one of the arbitrators, in the absence of the other arbitrators, then said award is invalid, and the defendant is not bound thereby, although you may further find that Bright authorized Kellogg to sign his name to the award.

"(21) You are instructed that the rightful owner of land may enter on the possession of an intruder or wrong-doer, in the absence of such wrong-doer, if no breach of the peace is committed in so doing."

"(28) If the jury find from the evidence that said Cleveland delivered over the said 'claim' or quarter section of *land to his son-in-law, defendant Gurnee, and intended the same as a gift to said Gurnee, and that said Gurnee accepted said gift, and took possession thereof, and made lasting and valuable improvements thereon, and if they further find that said Cleveland, on the twenty-first of May, 1874, with a view of carrying out his original desire that said Gurnee should have said 'claim' or quarter section of land, executed and delivered to said Gurnee a deed of said land, then you are instructed that said deed, in contemplation of law, relates back to the date of the original gift or intention, and the execution of the deed in such case is no part of the contract; it is only the evidence of it."

"(32) If you find from the evidence that George H. Newton, or those under whom he claims, has no title to the land in dispute, and that defendant was a possessor of said land before said Geo. H. Newton, then you are instructed that said George H. Newton and A. G. Newton are estopped from attacking the validity of Gurnee's deed."

The jury returned a verdict of guilty, and defendant was sentenced to pay a fine of fifty dollars, and the costs of the prosecution.

Devenney & Green, for appellant.

There is not a scintilla of proof that the appellant, Gurnee, cut the wheat, or assisted the cutting thereof; or that he was even seen on or near the wheat ground during the cutting or hauling away. None of the witnesses swear that Gurnee was there, and one of state witnesses swears Gurnee was not there. He having no hand in the cutting or carrying away of the grain, or any part of it, then surely his conviction and sentence were in violation of the evidence and law, and his motion for a new trial ought to have been sustained. In all crimes under the degree of felony, there are no accessories either before or after the fact. 2 Bl. Comm. 34; 1 Hale, P. C. 613.

The district court permitted the prosecuting witness to detail *117 statements of his lessor's grantor, (Cleveland,) made *prior to the delivery of the deed to A. G. Newton, and before the lease to himself, as to the extent of Cleveland's interest in the land upon which the wheat grew. This was error, and affected the substantial rights of Gurnee. Wilson v. Patrick, 34 Iowa, 362; Morrill v. Titcomb, 8 Allen, 100. We insist that statements of Cleveland made in his own favor were inadmissible to strengthen the claim of Cleveland, or that of his grantee, or of his lessee. Backus v. Clark, 1 Kan. *309; Stark v. Cummings, 5 Kan. *85; State v. Montgomery, 8 Kan. *351; Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Pointer, 9 Kan. *621; McPeake v. Hutchinson, 5 Serg. & R. 295; Watson v. Bissell, 27 Mo. 220; Taylor v. Lusk, 9 Iowa, 445; Gibney v. Marchay, 34 N. Y. 301; Hollister v. Young, 42 Vt. 403; Swindell v. Warden, 7 Jones, 575.

The court admitted in evidence a copy of a written submission and award between Cleveland and Gurnee. In this there was error. There was no sufficient foundation laid for its admission. There had been no search for the original, and no effort to obtain either of the originals; they having been signed in duplicate. Perkins v. Ermel, 2 Kan. *325; Shaw v. Mason, 10 Kan. *188. The signatures to the original—either the submission or award—had not been proven to be genuine. This was essential in order for it to be admissible. The copy offered only showed that Samuel Bright's name was on the paper copied, and not that the original was genuine. The genuineness of the original being first established, its contents might be proved by a duly-verified copy. But if there was no true original, the copy was worthless. Corse v. Sanford, 14 Iowa, 236; Wilcoxson v. Burton, 27 Cal. 238; Chipman v. Emeric, 5 Cal. 239. If the submission and award were offered to prove title, then they were not admissible for such purpose. Stigers v. Stigers, 5 Kan. *652.

The court erred in not permitting the accused to prove that the prosecuting witness and his father, at the time they acquired their supposed interest in the "claim" or land, had notice of the fact that the submission and award of May 13, 1871, had been done away with by a verbal contract between Gurnee and Cleveland in February or March, 1872, and that the "claim" belonged to Gurnee. No matter how Newton knew it, whether by common report in the neighborhood or otherwise, the evidence was competent. Benoist v. Darby, 12 Mo. 196, 206; Trelawney v. Colman, 2 Starkie, 191; Williams v. London Assur. Co., 1 Maule & S. 325; Brander v. Ferriday, 16 La. 296.

*118 The court also erred in admitting in evidence the papers *and docket entry of the justice of the peace in the case of Gurnee v. Cleveland and Eicelman. It seems that Gurnee brought suit of unlawful detainer against Cleveland and Eicelman to recover possession of certain portions of the quarter section fenced and occupied by Gurnee in May, 1873. After Gurnee, in that action, put in his evidence and rested, the defendants filed a demurrer to the evidence, and the justice sustained it, and "dismissed the action at the costs of plaintiff." The papers and docket entry were admitted and read to the jury over the objections of Gurnee. It was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial because the action was not between the same parties. Benz v. Hines, 3 Kan. *390. The suit was in May, 1873, which was after Cleveland had conveyed to A. G. Newton, and had leased to George H. Newton, the prosecuting witness, (March 18, 1873,) and after the arbitration and award had been set aside and annulled (in February, 1872) by Cleveland and Gurnee, whereby Gurnee became possessed of the whole quarter section. These proceedings were no evidence that Gurnee had no possessory rights there at the time George H. Newton entered forcibly, and sowed grain, in July or August, 1873, even if the proceedings were admissible for any other reason. The right of possession in August, 1873, is a very different thing from right of possession in February or March of same year. Jackson v. Randall, 11 Johns. 405; Fitzpatrick v. Gebhart, 7 Kan. *44; Allen v. Corben, 10 Kan. *73.

The court erred in giving for the state the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, tenth, eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, fifteenth, sixteenth, nineteenth, twentieth instructions.

The court erred in refusing the defendant, Gurnee, the fourth, sixth, eleventh, fourteenth instructions, and in refusing the eighteenth, nineteenth, twentieth instructions. Those instructions are predicated upon a theory of the defense logically deducible from at least a portion of the testimony. The award not having been signed by Samuel Bright, it is a void award. Daniels v. Ripley, 10 Mich. 237; Green v. Miller, 6 Johns. 40; McInroy v. Benedict, 11 Johns. 402; Jeffersonville R. Co. v. Mounts, 7 Ind. 669. The arbitration between Cleveland and Gurnee is a common-law arbitration;

*119 and, when there is *no express power to a majority to make an award, they must all join.

The court erred in refusing the twenty-first instruction asked by defendant, (Woodward v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 23 Wis. 405; Dean v. Comstock, 32 Ill. 179; Hooser v. Hays, 10 B. Mon. 72; Culver v. Smart, 1 Ind. 65; 1 Hil. Torts, 490, note a;) and in refusing to give the twenty-eighth instruction asked by defendant, (Hughes v. Lindsey, 31 Iowa, 332; Jackson v. Bull, 1 Johns. Cas. 81;) also, in refusing the thirty-second instruction asked by defendant, (Brown v. Pinkham, 18 Pick. 172.)

We submit that it was necessary for the state to prove in this case that Newton was the owner of the land,—the owner in fee. People v. Carpenger, 5 Parker, Crim. R. 230; 1 Hil. Torts, c. 18, §§ 12, 18; Parmlee v. Leonard, 9 Iowa, 132; Parker v. Parker, 17 Pick. 236; Doyle v. Teas, 4 Scam. 236; Edwards v. Hill, 11 Ill. 23; Jarrot v. Vaughn, 2 Gilman, 132; St. Mary's College v. Crowl, 10 Kan. *447; Doherty v. Thayer, 31 Cal. 140. The person owning the fee must be named in the information or complaint, and proved as laid. State v. McConkey, 20 Iowa, 574; Read v. State, 1 Ind. 511; Coffin v. State, 7 Ind. 157.

KINGMAN, C. J. This was a prosecution for maliciously cutting down and carrying away a lot of growing wheat. It was originally tried before a justice of the peace, where a conviction was had. On appeal to the district court it was again tried, with the same result. From that court the appellant brings the case to this court, alleging many errors, which will be noticed in their order.

1. It is said that there is no proof that appellant assisted in cutting the wheat, or in carrying it away, or that he was on the wheat field at all, and therefore the verdict is not sustained by the evidence. It is true that no witness testifies that appellant was on the ground; but it is in evidence that the twenty-two men and three teams that did the work were employed by appellant for that purpose, and that the wheat was hauled to his farm and stacked there. Many other facts are detailed in the evidence, going to show that, if any offense was committed, it was done by the procurement of the appellant solely. If the offense were felony, these facts would have *120 rendered him liable as accessory before the fact, if not *as principal; but in a misdemeanor, where there are no accessories, but "all persons concerned therein, if guilty at all, are principals," he may on such evidence be found guilty as principal if the necessary facts are established. 4 Bl. Comm. 34; Crim. Code, § 115; Gen. St. 839.

2. Two witnesses were allowed to state what one C. J. Cleveland said while in possession of the land as to the extent of his possession. Whatever diversity of opinion existed at one time on this question, it seems now well settled that declarations of this character by one in possession are admissible as part of the res gestæ. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 109. The authorities on this point are collated in note 81, p. 153, 1 Phil. Ev. (Cow. & H. notes.)

3. A copy of a submission and award was admitted in evidence. It is claimed that this copy was improperly admitted, because there had been no sufficient foundation laid by using proper means to obtain the original, and because the signatures to the original had not been proven genuine. This evidence was important. The submission was between the appellant and Cleveland. The award showed that the possession of the south half of a certain quarter section of land was rightfully in Cleveland, and it was on this half that the wheat was grown. The man that broke the ground, and sowed the wheat, held under Cleveland. Before offering the copy in evidence the state had shown that when the award was made it was in writing; that the submission and award had been made out in duplicate, and one given to each of the parties; that the copy was a true copy of the original given to Gurnee; that the witness did not know where the originals were; that Cleveland was dead, and had told witness that he had lost his copy, and the copy offered in evidence was taken at the instance of Cleveland. The county attorney also testified that he did not have the originals, nor had he any means of obtaining them. We think this was sufficient foundation for the introduction of the copy. One of the originals was lost, its owner dead. The other was in the *121 possession of appellant, and there was no power in the state *to compel its production as evidence against himself. The second objection rests in a misapprehension of the facts. The witness who presented the copy testified that he was one of the arbitrators, that the award was made in writing, and that the paper offered was a true copy of the award so made. We think that was sufficient. The controversy as to whether one Bright signed the award or not arose afterwards. The state made a sufficient prima facie showing of its genuineness to authorize its admission.

4. The fourth error is the refusal of the court to allow a witness, A. G. Newton, to testify as to whether, at the time he took a deed for the land, he had notice of the fact that the submission and award had been set aside, and a new contract had been entered into by which Cleveland was to have a life lease for only twenty acres of the south half quarter section, with a dwelling-house on it, and that Gurnee was to have the rest of the quarter section. At the time this question was asked, no attempt had been made to prove that such a contract had ever been made, nor was any suggestion made that such proof would be offered. Under such circumstances the court was justified in refusing to permit an answer. This evidence was inadmissible on another ground. George H. Newton claimed to own the wheat as the lessee of Cleveland. To prove that his father, A. G. Newton, had notice of Gurnee's claim was inadmissible in this suit. It is true that A. G. Newton had told his son that when his title was perfected he would deed him the land; but this gave George H. Newton no rights, and in no way threw any light on the questions at issue.

5. It is insisted that the court erred in admitting in evidence the papers and docket entries of a justice of the peace in a case for an unlawful detainer, wherein the appellant was plaintiff, and Cleveland and another were defendants. This evidence tended directly to show that a certain time (which was subsequent to the time when it is claimed the award was set aside and a new contract made) Cleveland, by Gurnee's admission, was in possession of the south *122 half of the quarter *section, and that Cleveland claimed that that possession was lawful. The evidence being admissible for one purpose, and nothing appearing that it was used for any other purpose, it is useless to discuss the other questions raised by appellants.

6. The court, at the instance of the counsel for the state, gave certain instructions, numbered from one to twenty. Eighteen of these we are told are wrong, but no error is pointed out or suggested. It was the duty of counsel to point out errors, if any existed; and the failure to do so may be relied on as sufficient assurance that there are none. They seem correct. Some of them enunciate principles as old as the common law. Under the circumstances we do not feel called upon to pass upon them.

7. The counsel for appellant asked thirty-two instructions. Twenty-two of them were given. We have examined those refused, and think they were properly refused, and will indicate the reasons briefly.

The fourth instruction was to the effect that, if the land on which the wheat was cut was not the land of Newton, (the man who sowed the wheat,) the verdict must be for the defendant. The counsel for appellant insist that the person owning the fee must be named in the information, and the fact proved as laid. This point is made in the motion for arrest of judgment, but may as well be considered here as elsewhere. The information charges the land to belong to George H. Newton, and the testimony abundantly shows that he held under a lease from Cleveland, and that appellant also claims under Cleveland by a verbal contract made with him. The offense charged is one plainly under section 107 of the crimes and punishment act, (page 338, Gen. St.) It is also an offense under section 1 of chapter 113, p. 1095. Under the first of these sections we do not think it necessary that it should be proven that the party injured is the owner of the land in fee. It would be as much an offense for the landlord, who owns the fee, to enter upon his tenant's possession, and sever therefrom and carry away the growing crops, as it would be for a stranger. The *123 language of the section does not require such a construction.

It is the injury to the "property of another" that is the offense, not injury to the land alone. In this case the fee was not in Newton. The appellant says that the fee was in the United States, and that is probably true. If so, no one had any but possessory rights, except the government. This possessory right was shown to be in Newton, under Cleveland. Unless the language requires it, we should be reluctant to hold that such possessory rights could be invaded by the strong hand, and no remedy but an action of trespass against persons who in most cases are not responsible. The decision in the case of State v. McConkey, 20 Iowa, 575, seems to be in opposition to this view; but the reasoning of that case is right, and not in conflict with this opinion. As to ownership, the court charged that, to authorize a conviction, the state must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the grain cut was standing on land not belonging to defendant; that defendant had no right or interest in the grain so alleged to have been cut and carried away; a peaceable possession of the land on the part of the prosecuting witness at the time of plowing the land, and sowing the grain; a lawful right to that possession as against defendant, and a possession of the land on the part of the prosecuting witness at the time the wheat was cut.

The sixth instruction professed to state what was evidence of possession, and in the main correctly, but failed to include those qualifying facts necessary to make it applicable to the evidences, and was therefore properly refused.

The eleventh instruction was refused. It is an absurdity. It is as follows: "(11) That if either of two theories should be adopted by the jury from all the evidence, one of such theories consistent with the innocence of the defendant, and the other consistent with his guilt, then I charge you that you may adopt the theory which is consistent with the innocence of the defendant." If the jury adopted a theory consistent with the innocence of defendant, they were bound to acquit; and this instruction authorized them, if from the evidence they adopted a theory of the guilt of defendant, they might acquit.

*124 The *fourteenth instruction could have been no guide to the jury. It was a guide for the court, and one which the record shows the court was governed by.

8. The eighteenth, nineteenth, and twentieth instructions were in reference to the arbitration, and, as abstract propositions of law, are probably correct. If testimony for defendant was believed, and one of the arbitrators did not sign it, we think it was not a binding award. But the award was accepted by both parties, and acted on by both. It did not show title, except as against Gurnee, even if genuine. But, valid or void, the proof shows that both parties acted on it, and thus it became in either event evidence of the extent of the possession of the parties. As asked, the instructions would have misled the jury, because they did not contain any allusion to the effect arising from the acceptance of the award by the parties, and an arrangement of the possession of the land in accordance therewith.

The twenty-first instruction is not applicable to the case. The defendant had not shown himself the rightful owner of the land; and for the court to have assumed the fact, as asked in the instruction, would have been a grave error. It is not intended to say that the instruction is or is not correct law.

We think the twenty-eighth is correct law; but if, between the making of the verbal contract and the execution of the deed in pursuance thereof, Newton acquired his rights, then Newton would not be affected by a verbal contract of that kind, of which he had no knowledge, and the instruction needed this modification to make it applicable to the case. As it was asked, it ought to have been refused.

The thirty-second instruction is not law, and was properly refused. The judgment is affirmed.

All the justices concurring.)

5 *D. W. Houston and others v. M. W. DELAHAY.

July Term, 1874.

Leading: Joinder of Causes: Demurrer. A. entered into a written contract to do certain work. A., B., and C. entered into an undertaking conditioned for the faithful performance by A. of such contract. A. defaulted in the contract. A petition was filed alleging, in separate counts, the making of the contract, and different breaches thereof, and showing damages exceeding the amount of the undertaking. It also alleged, in another count, which referred to and made all the other counts part of it, the execution of the undertaking, and closed with a prayer for judgment for the amount of the undertaking. A demurrer was filed by B. and C. on account of improper joinder of causes of action, which was overruled. Held, no error, or, at least, none of which B. and C. could avail themselves in this court.<sup>1</sup>

Error from Leavenworth district court.

Action, brought by Delahay, as plaintiff, against J. P. Taggart, D. Houston, and J. I. Larimer. Houston and Larimer demurred to the petition. The district court, at the May term, 1874, overruled the demurrer, and from this decision H. and L. appeal, and bring the case here on error.

F. P. Fitzwilliam, for plaintiffs in error.

Two causes of action have been improperly joined in the petition. Section 39 of the Code provides that "persons severally liable upon the same obligation or instrument, including the parties to bills of exchange and promissory notes, and indorsers and guarantors, may, or any of them, be included in the same action, at the option of the plaintiff." The obligation of Taggart is primary and absolute, and that of the other defendants secondary and conditional. The covenant of the principal, and the covenant of the guarantor, are not the same obligation or instrument." Neither of the "instruments" set up in the petition is a bill or promissory note. They are both specialties. Nor are they one and the "same instrument or obligation." They are different instruments, and each expresses an obligation different from the other. At common law the holder of a promissory note or bill of exchange could not unite in the same action the maker and indorser, or guarantor, drawer, and acceptor; nor when a covenant was entered into by two or more severally, and not jointly, a joint action against them could not be maintained. Birkley v. Presgrave, 1 East, 226. So, also, at common law, when the contract was joint and several, the plaintiff must sue each separately, or all together. 1 Chit. Pl. 30; Stratfield v. Hallidy, 3 Term R. 782. No case can be found which holds that at common law a joint action could be maintained against the principal and guarantor when the obligation was created by different instruments. Hence it has been held that section 39 of our Code does not authorize the joinder of a person liable as a mere guarantor with the principal, though the guaranty was executed on the same day, and on the same piece of paper. De Ridder v. Schermerhorn, 10 Barb. 638; Le Roy v. Shaw, 2 Duer, 626; Wallis v. Carpenter, 13 Allen, 19; Griffin v. Grundy Co., 10 Iowa, 226; Moore v. Platte Co., 8 Mo. 467; Tibbits v. Percy, 24 Barb. 39; Phalen v. Dingee, 4 E. D. Smith, 379. And it is now well settled that a joint action against a principal debtor and his guarantor, by a separate and independent instrument, will not lie. Allen v. Fosgate, 11 How. Pr. 218; Warth v. Radde, 28 How. Pr. 230; Brewster v. Silence, 8 N. Y. 207, 215; Miller v. Bank, 34 Miss. 412; Sanders v. Clason, 13 Minn. 379, (Gil. 352.)

Section 83 of the Code provides for uniting several causes of action in the same petition, where they all arise out of one of the following classes: "First, the same transaction or transactions, connected with the same subject of action; but the causes of action so united must all belong to one of these classes, and must affect all the parties to the action. According to the New York decisions, the courts have been disposed to restrict rather than extend the operations of the first clause of the section. Thus, it was held that "the transaction or transactions connected with the same subject of action" had reference to such causes of action as are consistent with each other, not such as are contradictory; and it was accordingly held that the plaintiff could not join in his complaint a claim to recover the possession of real estate, and damages for withholding the same, with a *127 claim for damages for obstructing *and injuring the plaintiff in the use of his property. Smith v. Hallock, 8 How. Pr. 73; Hulce v. Thompson, 9 How. Pr. 113; Weed v. Clark, 4 Sandf. 31; Tibbits v. Percy, 24 Barb. 39; Phalen v. Dingee, 4 E. D. Smith, 379; Miller v. Gaston, 2 Hill, 188; Curtiss v. Seymour, 1 Wend. 105. In Le Roy v. Shaw, 2 Duer, 626, it was held that the action was improperly brought against the original debtor and his guarantor, and the rule under the Code was considered to be that "persons severally liable cannot be prosecuted together, unless they are severally liable as parties to a written contract or obligation on which the names of both appear as contracting parties."

The causes of action arising on the contract between Delahay and Taggart cannot be united in the petition with the cause of action on undertaking, because each cause does not affect all the parties to action; that is, they must all exist in the same right, in favor of plaintiff and against all the defendants. Lexington, etc., R. Co. v. Goodman, 15 How. Pr. 85; Lexington, etc., R. Co. v. Goodman, Barb. 469; Leavitt v. Steenbergen, 3 Barb. 157. Different rights of action, therefore, existing in favor of the plaintiff, but not existing against all the defendants, cannot be joined, though belonging to one of the several classes enumerated in the eighty-third section of Code. Bump v. Van Orsdale, 11 Barb. 638; Le Roy v. Shaw, Duer, 626; Tompkins v. White, 8 How. Pr. 520; Pugsley v. Aiken, Barb. 114.

The plaintiff has a right of action on either written contract; but if separate actions were commenced, could they be consolidated into one action?

The only error claimed to be in this record is that the petition improperly joins two causes of action—First, against Taggart, for breach of his contract; and, second, against Taggart, Houston, and Larimer, for breach of their undertaking. To sustain this view, plaintiff in error claims the undertaking is merely a guaranty, and not a general guaranty for compliance with contract; and that the undertaking of Houston and Larimer was separate from that of Taggart, while in fact the obligation or undertaking was jointly executed by Houston, Larimer, and Taggart, and refers to Taggart's contract with Delahay, and made both the contract and specification part of the undertaking, thereby stipulating in the broadest terms possible that said Taggart should in all respects comply with said contract and specifications. Said undertaking is joint and several in its terms, and this suit is such an one as could, at common law, be brought and maintained as an action on the undertaking alone.

The Civil Code, §§ 83, 39, clearly brings this case between the classes of cases contemplated by that law, since it is in regard to the same transaction, and affects all the parties to the action. Sturges v. Burdett, 8 Ohio St. 216; Nash, Pl. c. 97. The cases which seem to be relied on by plaintiff in error, as sustaining his position as to the nature of the petition as a pleading, it seems to me, have no application to the case at bar, (2 Duer, 626;) for the court sustained a demurrer to the petition because it did not appear that the promise to pay the debt of another was in writing, as required by the statute of 1848; also because the liability of the two parties defendant was joint, while in this case all the defendants signed the same undertaking, and declare themselves jointly and severally liable thereon.

It is not necessary that several causes of action should affect all the parties equally. It is sufficient if they affect all, though in unequal degrees. In re Marsac, 15 How. Pr. 383. In this case Larimer and Houston are sureties for Taggart on a joint undertaking, and therefore all are affected, and suit properly instituted.

BREWER, J. It appears from the petition filed in this case that one J. P. Taggart contracted in writing with defendant in error to erect and complete certain buildings within a stipulated time; that said Taggart and plaintiffs in error entered into a written undertaking with defendant in error, obligating that said Taggart should fully perform all the terms and conditions of said contract. The condition of such undertaking was as follows: "The condition of this *129 undertaking is such that whereas, *said J. P. Taggart has entered into a written contract with said Mark W. Delahay, dated the twelfth of May, 1873, but actually executed on the day of the date of this undertaking, for the erection of three dwelling-houses in the said city of Leavenworth: Now, therefore, if the said J. P. Taggart shall fully perform all the terms and conditions of said contract to be by him performed, and according to the plans and specifications attached to said contract, then this undertaking shall become null and void; otherwise the same shall be and remain in full force and effect," etc.

The petition sets out both the contract and the undertaking, alleging that Taggart failed to comply with his contract, and asks a judgment against all the signers of the undertaking for damages sustained by this failure. To this petition Houston and Larimer separately demurred—First, upon the ground that there is an improper joinder of causes of action, one being a cause of action to recover damages for breach of contract, and another being upon a written undertaking to answer for the default of Taggart; second, that the petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against Houston and Larimer. The demurrers were overruled, and this ruling presents the only question in the case.

The proposition of counsel is that the "obligation of Taggart is primary and absolute, and that of the other defendants secondary and conditional;" that they are created by separate instruments,—that of Taggart by the contract, and that of the others by the undertaking; and that these separate causes of action do not affect all the parties. We are disposed to think this is not the correct view to be taken of this case. The pleader, it is true, in setting out the contract and the breach of it, sets out a cause of action against Taggart, and against Taggart alone,—a cause of action not limited in amount by the penalty of the undertaking, but extending to the full damages resulting from such breach. But this statement, it seems to us, is preliminary, and for the purpose of showing a default in the condition of the undertaking. All signed the undertaking, and all there-

*130 fore assumed the *obligations created by it. The condition of the undertaking is the performance by Taggart of his contract. Without default in this, no one is liable on the undertaking. With it, all are. This default was alleged in the petition, and it matters not that in alleging it a cause of action is shown against Taggart for breach of his separate contract. Indeed, it could not be other-

...e, for if Taggart defaulted in his contract, he was liable to an action for damages caused thereby. If he did not default, there was no liability on the undertaking. No liability could be shown on the undertaking without showing the default of Taggart, and the default of Taggart could not be shown without showing a cause of action against him. All that is claimed in the prayer of the petition is the amount due on the undertaking, while the damages alleged to have been sustained by the different breaches of the contract greatly exceed that amount. It is true that the pleader, in commencing the several statements of the different breaches, and of the execution of the undertaking, says: "and for a further cause of action," etc.; but we must have regard to the substance of the petition than to the mere form of statement. Suppose the demurrer had been sustained, under section 92 of the Code the court would have been compelled to permit the plaintiff to have filed a petition with one count, and showing a cause of action on the undertaking. To accomplish this, the only change necessary would have been to omit these preliminary words which introduce, it were, the several statements of the breaches, and of the execution of the undertaking. That this was not done cannot have wrought any injury to the substantial rights of the plaintiffs in error; so that, though the court might have, strictly speaking, erred in its construction of the pleading, the judgment would have to be affirmed.

The judgment will be affirmed.

*JANUARY TERM, 1875.

JAMES I. HOLMES v. HENRY M. RILEY.

January Term, 1875.

1. Bills and Notes: Proof of Execution: Burden of Proof. Where, in an action on a promissory note, the answer contains a sworn denial of its execution, it is error for the court to permit the note to be received in evidence, and read to the jury, without any proof of its execution; and it is error, also, to instruct the jury that the burden of proof is on the defendant to show that he did not execute it.<sup>1</sup>
2. Deposition: Competency of Evidence. Where the question in issue is as to the execution of a note, it is not error to admit the deposition of a witness who, without having the note before him, testifies, not to the genuineness of the signature, but to circumstances tending to show that defendant did at the date of the note execute such note.

Error from Atchison district court.

Action by Riley against Holmes upon a certain promissory note. The petition set forth a copy of said note. Holmes filed his answer thereto, verified by affidavit, denying the execution of said note, and denying that Riley was the owner thereof, or that he ever purchased the same before maturity, or paid any value therefor. Reply, general denial. Trial at the November term, 1873. Riley offered in evidence said note, to the introduction of which Holmes objected, which objection was overruled, and said note was received and read to the jury. Holmes introduced evidence tending to show that he never executed said note. Riley then offered in evidence the deposition of one Lowrey, which was admitted over the objection and exception of Holmes. The court instructed the jury that the burden of *132 *proof was on the defendant. Verdict and judgment for plaintiff.

Everest & Greenawalt, for plaintiff in error, contended that, under the issues joined, the note did not prove itself, and that it was incumbent upon Riley, plaintiff below, to prove the allegations of his petition as to the execution of said note before the same could be introduced in evidence; and cited Glazier v. Streamer, 57 Ill. 91, and Boston Relief & S. Co. v. Burnett, 1 Allen, 410. Section 108 of the Civil Code has not changed the rule of the common law in any case where a party desiring to put the execution of a written instrument in issue verifies his denial by affidavit. In this case the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff. The court erred in admitting in evidence the deposition of Lowrey, (Palmer v. Manning, 4 Denio, 131; Shaver v. Ehle, 16 Johns. 201; Glazier v. Streamer, 57 Ill. 91; Consaul v. Lidell, 7 Mo. 128,) and in instructing the jury that the burden of proof was on the defendant.

Henry C. Solomon, for defendant in error, submitted that, admitting there was error in admitting the note in the first instance without proof of execution, still the weight of evidence supported the verdict. The testimony of Lowrey proved that the note was executed by Holmes. For defendant below to first state, under oath, that he never signed the note,—that the signature to said note was not made by him,—and then to attempt to show that if he did sign it there was no consideration, and that plaintiff was not a bona fide holder of the note, is an unreasonable defense. Plaintiff in error must either stand upon one defense or the other—that the note was not executed by him; or that there was no consideration, and that the plaintiff below was not the owner. If he stood upon the first, he waived the last-named defenses; if upon the last, he admitted the execution. Under these circumstances there was no error in the instructions.

BREWER, J. This was an action on a promissory note. The answer denied, under oath, the execution of the note. *Upon the trial the court permitted the plaintiff to read the note in evidence without any proof of its execution, and charged the jury that the onus probandi was on the defendant to show that he did not execute it. This was clearly wrong. The plaintiff alleged the execution of the note. By the sworn denial, that execution was put in issue, and on that issue the plaintiff had the affirmative.

We see no error in the admission of the deposition of H. H. Lowrey. The objections of counsel go rather to the effect and weight of the testimony than to its competency. The witness testifies, not to the genuineness of the signature to the paper offered in evidence, but to circumstances tending to show that the defendant did, in fact, at the time of the date of the note, execute such a note. This we think was perfectly competent.

The judgment, however, for the errors noticed, must be reversed, and case remanded for a new trial.

STATE OF KANSAS v. W. D. JENNERSON.

January Term, 1875.

Errors: Must be Specified. Where it is alleged that the trial court erred in its rulings, it is the duty of the party complaining to indicate wherein the error consists, as well as the particular ruling of which he complains.

Appeal from Saline district court.

A criminal complaint was filed before a justice of the peace against defendant, the body of which was as follows: "Dorotha Evarts, being duly sworn, according to law, deposes and says that on or about the twenty-seventh day of August, 1873, in the county of Saline aforesaid, one W. D. Jennerson willfully, maliciously, and unlawfully attempted to sever and remove from the freehold of affiant a cross-piece and hook which were then thereto attached, and which said cross-piece and hook were then a part of the fixtures to a well, and the property of this affiant, contrary to the statute in such cases made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the state of Kansas." The defendant was tried and convicted before the justice, and appealed to the district court, where another trial was had at the March term, 1874. Verdict of guilty, and sentence that defendant pay a "fine of five dollars, and costs of prosecution, and stand committed until said fine and costs are paid." Defendant appeals.

J. G. Mohler, for appellant.

E. W. Hodgkinson, for the State.

BREWER, J. Appellant was convicted on a charge of attempting to maliciously sever and remove certain property from a freehold, and from such conviction appeals to this court. The only error alleged is thus stated in the brief of counsel for appellant: "The court below erred in overruling the motion in arrest of judgment. The complaint does not state facts constituting a public offense. Whart. Amer. Crim. Law, § 2012." What specific objection there exists to this complaint, and wherein it fails to disclose a public offense, we are not advised. The counsel refer to a section in Wharton's Criminal Law, but, on turning to that section, we find that it treats of more than one subject. It treats of the manner of "describing the property," and the "value." Now, whether counsel intends to claim that the complaint is defective in not stating the value of the property attempted to be severed, or in not sufficiently describing the property, or the freehold, we are not informed; and we shall not attempt to consider the various questions which may suggest themselves to our minds, in the expectation by so doing of reaching the specific objection counsel intended to present.

The judgment will be affirmed.

*STATE OF KANSAS v. CHARLES B. KELLERMAN.

January Term, 1875.

Instructions: Specific: Falsus in Uno, Falsus in Omnibus. Where an instruction is asked that if a particular witness, naming him, has willfully testified falsely, etc., the jury should disregard his entire testimony, it is not error for the court to refuse such instruction, and substitute one that if any witness has willfully testified falsely, etc.<sup>1</sup>

Larceny: Elements of Crime. Where the court properly instructs the jury that in order to convict they must be satisfied, from the evidence, "that the defendant stole, took, and carried away" the property alleged to have been stolen, it is not error to refuse a specific instruction that "taking is a material part of larceny, and must be established by competent evidence."

Criminal Law: Testimony of an Accomplice. Where the principal witness for the state is an accomplice, it is not error to refuse an instruction that such accomplice "stands before the jury in the character of an impeached witness, and as such his testimony requires confirmation," when the jury have been instructed that "in determining the weight and credit to be given such testimony the jury should use great caution, and unless the testimony of the witness is corroborated by other evidence in some material point in issue, the defendant should be acquitted, as it would be unsafe to convict upon the sole and uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice."<sup>2</sup>

Evidence: Competent: Corroborative. Where the larceny charged was the larceny of a horse, and the owner testified that the horse was taken out of his pasture during the night-time; and the accomplice testified that an arrangement was made between the defendant and himself for stealing and selling a horse, and, in pursuance thereof, on the night that this horse was taken out of the pasture it was brought by defendant to witness, and by him taken to a neighboring town, and sold; and produced a writing admitted by defendant to have been written and signed by himself, certifying that the witness was "duly authorized to sell" this horse, described in the writing as "my horse;" held, that this writing was sufficient corroboratory testimony to sustain a verdict of guilty.

New Trial: Newly-Discovered Evidence. Where a motion for a new trial is made on the ground of newly-discovered evidence, it is, as a general rule, essential that the affidavits of the newly-discovered witnesses should be produced, or their absence accounted for; and it is also, as a general rule, true that the unsupported affidavit of the defendant or his counsel will not be sufficient.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup>See Shellabarger v. Nafus, 15 Kan. 547, deciding that it is the province of the jury to determine the credibility of witnesses, and the weight of their testimony; and where any witness has testified willfully, corruptly, and falsely to any material fact, it is the province of the jury to determine how much, or whether the whole, of his testimony should be disregarded. No inflexible rule should be imposed between the witness and the jury, commanding the jury to take all, or exclude all, of his testimony. Same principle applied, State v. Potter, 16 Kan. 80, Wheeler v. McMillan, 18 Kan. 183. The credibility of a witness, knowingly testifying falsely as to one or more material facts, is entirely for the jury, Schueck v. Edgar, 24 Minn. 339.

The case is stated in the opinion.

W. A. Johnson and W. L. McConnell, for appellant.

A. M. F. Randolph, Atty. Gen., for the State.

BREWER, J. Appellant was convicted in the district court of Coffey county of the crime of grand larceny, and from this conviction brings his appeal to this court. The errors alleged are in reference to the instructions, and in overruling a motion for a new trial.

With reference to the first we have little difficulty. The rulings of the court were unquestionably correct. For instance, the appellant asked the court to instruct the jury that if one witness, naming him, testified willfully falsely, etc., they must disregard his entire testimony. Instead of this the court charged that if any witness testified willfully falsely, etc. The latter is the proper way. To single out a witness, and by name give such an instruction in reference to him, suggests a suspicion, if it does not imply a belief, on the part of the court of the witness' perjury.

Again, the court was asked to charge that "taking is a material part of larceny, and must be established by competent evidence." Instead of this the court charged that the jury must be satisfied that "defendant stole, took, and carried away," etc.; "and that if A. should feloniously take into his possession the property of B., and immediately deliver the same to C., this would be a sufficient tak-

*137 ing and carrying away to constitute the crime of larceny *in A. There was nothing to emphasize the question of "taking."

The larceny charged was of a horse. It was turned by the owner into a pasture at night. Before morning, in pursuance of a previous arrangement, it was handed by the defendant to his accomplice, and by the latter taken immediately to Olathe, and sold. We see no error in this charge of the court.

The main witness for the state was an alleged accomplice. Upon this counsel for defendant asked these two instructions:

"The testimony of Allen Roberts is that of an accomplice, and must be corroborated by evidence tending to convict the defendant of the offense charged, or the jury must acquit the defendant.

"Allen Roberts stands before the jury and court in the character of an impeached witness. As such, his testimony requires confirmation."

These instructions were refused, and instead thereof the following was given:

"The jury are charged that the admission of accomplices [to testify] as witnesses for the state is permitted and justified by the necessities of the case, it often being impossible to bring the principal offender to justice without their testimony. But in determining the weight and credit to be given such testimony, the jury should use great caution; and unless the testimony of the witness Allen Roberts is corroborated by other evidence in some material point in issue, the defendant should be acquitted, as it would be unsafe to convict upon the sole and uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice."

Under this instruction it is claimed by counsel that the witness might be corroborated as to the fact of the larceny, but in nothing tending to connect the defendant with it, and that, under such circumstances, it would be improper to convict. We do not think the jury were misled. The testimony of the witness Roberts did not go at all to the circumstances of the taking. He was not present at the time. The horse was brought to him by the defendant after it had been stolen. His testimony related to the disposition of the horse thereafter, and the connection of the defendant with the transaction. Corroborating testimony is that which supports the testimony already given, not that which proves an entirely different part of the case. So Allen Roberts, to have been corroborated, must have been sustained as to some of the facts as to which he testified. These are the principal questions made upon the instructions, and in them we see no error.

A motion for a new trial was overruled. Upon this, two questions are presented: (1) The verdict was not sustained by the evidence; and (2) there was newly-discovered evidence. We think the verdict was sustained. The owner of the horse testified to placing his horse in the pasture at night, and its disappearance before morning, and to finding it in a few days at Olathe. Roberts testified to an arrangement between Kellerman and himself for stealing a horse; that Kellerman, in pursuance thereof, on the night said horse was stolen, brought it to him, and he rode it to Olathe, and sold it; that he sold it for $60, of which he received $10, and was to receive the balance when he "sent up a title;" that he went back, and obtained from Kellerman his "title." This title was produced, and read as follows:

"I, C. B. Kellerman, a resident of Coffey county, Kansas, duly authorized Allen Roberts to sell my bay horse, which left here July 23, 1874, which he says he sold in Olathe, Saturday, July 25, 1874.

"C. B. KELLERMAN."

When testifying in his own behalf, Kellerman admitted the writing and signing of this paper. This, we think, was very strong corroboration of Roberts' testimony. True, he attempted to explain the writing, but the explanation was far from satisfactory.

We think also that the showing of newly-discovered evidence was insufficient. The only testimony offered was the affidavit of one of the counsel for the defendant that two of the witnesses on the former trial would testify to additional facts of which neither the defendant nor his counsel were aware before the retirement of the jury:

*139 Neither the affidavit of the defendant nor that of either witness is presented, nor any excuse shown for not producing them. It is laid down in 3 Grah. & W. New Trials, 1065, as essential that "the affidavits of the newly-discovered witnesses should be produced, or their absence accounted for." And again, on page 1067, that "the information must come directly from the newly-discovered witnesses, so that it may appear just what they know, and what they are ready to testify." To like effect are the authorities cited on the same and succeeding pages. See, also, Manix v. Malony, 7 Iowa, 81; Keough v. McNitt, 6 Minn. 513, (Gil. 357.) While this rule may not be of absolute and universal application, and while cases may arise in which the showing of newly-discovered evidence is so full and satisfactory that a new trial ought to be granted, even without the production of the affidavits of the new witnesses, or any explanation of their absence, yet, for all ordinary cases, the rule is a good one, well supported by authority, and ought to be enforced. If a defendant could, by his own affidavit of newly-discovered testimony, secure a new trial, it would soon be found that verdicts of guilty rested on very slippery foundations. In this case it appears from the record that these witnesses were residents of the county; that they were present at the trial; and it does not appear that they had since absented themselves; nor is any intimation or excuse given why their affidavits were not produced. This, we think, fully justified the court in overruling the motion for a new trial; nor is the testimony itself of such conclusive a character that we should feel warranted in holding that the court erred in refusing a new trial on account of it. The owner of the horse has testified that he saw, at or about the place where his horse had evidently been taken out of the pasture, "the track of a very fine boot;" that a neighbor of his measured it, and produced before the court and jury the measure. Now, the affidavit states that such witness would testify that he had measured the tracks made by the accomplice and witness Allen Roberts since the commencement of the trial, and that such tracks were identical in form, appearance, and *length with the tracks seen by himself and others "at the place above indicated; and also that another witness would testify that Roberts had on, during the trial, the same boots that he was wearing a day or two before the larceny." There is, however, on the other hand, nothing to show that there was anything peculiar about these tracks, except that they were the "tracks of a very fine boot,"—nothing to show that the boots of the defendant would not have made exactly the same track. And, indeed, when the measure of this track was produced on the trial, it seems hardly probable that counsel, so acute and skillful as the able gentlemen who conducted the defense, should not have compared it with the track made by the defendant, and, if there was any difference between them, have called the attention of the jury to such difference.

On the whole case, we think that the judgment must be affirmed.

WILLIAM HAUG v. H. W. GILLETT.

January Term, 1875.

Dram-Shop Act: License to Sell Liquor: Sales by Agents. A liquor dealer must have a license from the city or county in which his store is kept. With such license he may send out agents and take orders in any part of the state for goods to be selected and forwarded from the stock kept in such store, and is not required to obtain a license from the authorities of each city or county in which contracts are made therefor by such agents.<sup>1</sup>

Statutory Construction. A penal statute should be strictly construed.]

Error from Shawnee district court.

The case is stated in the opinion.

Hanback & Johnson, for plaintiff in error.

Stillings & Fenlon, for defendant in error.

41 *BREWER, J. This action was originally brought by defendant in error before a justice of the peace, to secure a money judgment against the plaintiff in error on an accepted draft and a promissory note. The plaintiff in error answered by admitting that he accepted the draft and made the note, but claimed that they were made without consideration, being for intoxicating liquors sold on credit; that the contracts under which the liquors were sold were made in the city of Topeka; and that the defendant in error (Gillett) had no license at that time from the city of Topeka to sell intoxicating liquors. Upon this issue the case went to trial, and the justice rendered judgment against Haug for the full amount of the note and draft. Haug then appealed to the district court of Shawnee county, and the case came on for trial at its June term, 1873, and was submitted to the court on the evidence and admissions of the parties made in open court, a jury having been waived by the respective parties; on consideration whereof the court found for the plaintiff, (Gillett,) and rendered judgment for him against the defendant, (Haug,) for the sum of $292, to which Haug excepted, and was given thirty days to make a case for the supreme court, which time was afterwards extended by the court to October 11, 1873.

It appeared from the testimony that the defendant, Gillett, was a wholesale liquor dealer in the city of Leavenworth, and had a license from the mayor and council of that city to sell liquor in any quantity, except by the dram, but had none from the city of Topeka; that the orders for the liquors were given by Haug in his saloon, in the city of Topeka, to Gillett, or some agent of his; that the orders were taken at Gillett's store, in Leavenworth, the goods therefor selected from his stock, and shipped by rail to Haug, at Topeka, the latter paying the freight. Was there error in the ruling of the district court, and were the note and draft void, as given in consummation of a contract prohibited by statute?

The statute claimed to have been violated is section 3 of the *142 *dram-shop act, which forbids the sale of liquors by "any person without taking out and having a license as grocer, dram-shop keeper, or tavern-keeper," etc.; and it is insisted that this sale was made in Topeka, where, it is conceded, Gillett had no license, and "that, under the laws of Kansas, any one having a license to sell intoxicating liquors can only sell them within the limits of the city or township granting him the license." The proposition involved in this case is substantially that a wholesale liquor dealer, having a stock of goods, and conducting business in a city from whose authorities he has received a license, cannot send out agents, and take orders for those goods, elsewhere than in such city, without first obtaining a license from the authorities of each city or county in which those orders are taken. The proposition is a broad one, and the language of the statute should be clear before such an intention is imputed to the legislature. The legislature may suppress the liquor traffic altogether, or it may impose such restrictions as it deems wise. It may restrict the sale to the county, the city, or even the building, and forbid the making of any contract therefor outside thereof; and it is the duty of this court simply to determine what restrictions it has imposed. Its enactments are, however, to be construed in the light of the general usages of society and business. The business of a wholesale dealer is carried on extensively, generally by agents,—traveling-men, as they are called,—who visit the different towns, and solicit orders. To recognize and license such a business, and at the same time to cut off one of the ordinary methods of carrying it on, while it is within the power of the legislature, should also be within the clear meaning of the enactments.

Again, the statute is penal, and as such is to be strictly construed. Only those things are forbidden which are plainly within its terms. Counsel claim that a party licensed may sell only within the limits of the county or city granting the license. But where was the sale completed? The contract therefor was made in Topeka, but did any title pass before the goods were selected and separated from *143 the whole stock? Clearly *not, and therefore the sale was not completed till then. The goods were selected and separated at Leavenworth, and there delivered to the carrier, to be by him forwarded to the purchaser. At Leavenworth, then, the sale was completed, and there Gillett had a license. Bancher v. Warren, 33 N. H. 183; Boothby v. Plaisted, 51 N. H. 436. Nor can this be deemed a "shift or device to evade the provisions of the act." Gillett had one license, and that at the place where his store was kept. By the first section of the act, before a license can be granted, a petition must be presented by the citizens of the township or city "in which such dram-shop, tavern, or grocery is to be kept." This locates the place where the license must be had. Gillett kept no store in Topeka, had no stock of goods there, made no delivery of goods, and passed no title there. Clearly, therefore, there was no violation of the dram-shop act in this transaction, and the judgment of the district court must be affirmed.

ANDREW AKIN v. LEWIS F. DAVIS and others.

January Term, 1875.

1. Injunction: Preliminary: When not Error to Refuse. Where, on an application for a preliminary injunction, the petition alleges that the plaintiff is and has been, for a series of years, the owner of a mill-dam; that, in a proper court, a decree had been entered in a suit brought by one of the defendants whose land was flowed by said dam; that to such suit plaintiff was not made a party, and had no notice, actual or constructive, thereof; that execution has been issued, and is in the hands of the other defendant, as sheriff of the county, who is about to enforce it; and where it appears from affidavits filed, and other testimony, that the person in possession, and having the actual charge and management of the mill and dam, were defendants, and served with process in the suit in which the decree was entered; that the same was fully litigated; that, as a matter of fact, the dam did flow said defendant's land, and was a nuisance to him; that he was able to respond in damages for any injuries caused by the removal of the dam; and where it does not appear that any right to build said dam and flood lands had been obtained by consent or legal proceedings: held, that an order of the district judge refusing a preliminary injunction will not be reversed.

2. —. An injunction in limine is not a matter of strict right. It may sometimes be properly refused upon the same facts which would entitle the party of right to a perpetual injunction on final hearing.<sup>1</sup>

Error from Wilson district court.

The case is stated in the opinion.

R. M. Ruggles, for plaintiff in error.

J. B. F. Cates, for defendants in error.

BAEWER, J. This was an application for a temporary injunction, at the commencement of an action for an injunction, under section 239 of the Civil Code, to restrain defendants in error, pending the litigation, from tearing down and destroying a mill-dam across the Verdigris river, in Wilson county. The application was made upon the petition in the cause, duly verified, to the judge of the district court at chambers. The defendants were notified, and appeared, and resisted the motion for the temporary injunction upon affidavits which are set out in the record. The judge denied the motion for an injunction, to which plaintiff excepted, and brings the cause to this court on error, as provided in section 542 of the Code. The petition sets forth, in substance, that on the first of February, 1871, plaintiff in error was, and ever since has been, the sole owner of the mill-dam in the petition described; and that on the thirty-first of January, 1872, the defendant in error, Lewis F. Davis, recovered a judgment in the district court of Wilson county against H. C.

\*145 Akin, C. M. Akin, and C. M. Akin, as \*administrator of the estate of C. G. Akin, deceased, in an action then pending wherein said Davis was plaintiff, and plaintiff in error, together with said H. C. Akin, C. M. Akin, and C. M. Akin, as administrator of the estate of C. G. Akin, deceased, were defendants, for the sum of five cents and costs; and that it was further decreed by said district court that said H. C. Akin, C. M. Akin, and C. M. Akin, as administrator of the estate of C. G. Akin, deceased, should, on or before the first day of March, 1872, remove so much of said mill-dam as might be necessary to prevent the water from flowing back in the channel of said Verdigris river by reason of said dam, upon the riffles situated on the N. E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of the N. E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 16, township 28 south, of range 16, in said county of Wilson; and, in default of compliance with said decree by said last-named defendants, within said time, then that the sheriff of said county should execute the said order by removing so much of said dam as might be necessary to satisfy said decree. The petition further states that plaintiff in error never had any notice whatever, either actual or constructive, of said action; nor did plaintiff in error ever appear in said action; nor is he (the plaintiff in error) a party to said judgment. The petition further states that, at the instance and request of said Davis, (defendant in error,) a writ of execution has been issued by the clerk of said district court to defendant in error B. W. Ladd, sheriff of said Wilson county, upon said judgment; and that the said B. W. Ladd is now threatening and intending, at the instance and request of said Davis, to carry into effect said execution, and remove so much of said dam as may be necessary to comply with the requirements of said judgment; which, if he is allowed so to do, will be to the great and irreparable injury of the plaintiff; and in so doing the said B. W. Ladd will be acting without leave or license of plaintiff in error. A certified copy of the former proceedings and judgment is attached to the verified petition, and made a part of the same. At the argument of said motion for an injunction plaintiff in error asked leave of the said judge at chambers to amend his verified petition by inserting, in the proper place, the following: "That said mill-dam is worth ten thousand dollars, and would be totally ruined and rendered worthless if said defendants were suffered to execute the said order of said court, which they are threatening to do,"—which said judge refused to allow, and plaintiff in error excepted.

The defendants showing cause why said preliminary injunction should not be granted, set forth in their affidavits, in substance, that at the time of the commencement of said original action referred to, and during the entire pendency of the same, and until after the final judgment, said plaintiff in error was not in charge of said mill-dam in said original petition described, nor had he the actual charge or control of the same, but was residing in another county, with his family, in the business of register of the land-office; that at the commencement, and during the entire pendency, of said action, C. M. Akin, and C. G. Akin in his life-time, carried on said mill, and had the charge and management of the same; that the dam in question was adjudged a nuisance in said former action, and ordered to be abated; that said dam, at the commencement of said former action, was kept and maintained as a nuisance by said defendants, and is now kept by plaintiff in error so as to flood the water back in the channel of the Verdigris, and thereby to flood the land of said Davis, lying on both sides of said river, above said dam, so as to raise the water five and one-half feet in excess of the natural flow; and that said Davis had a good ford on said river on his premises, which has been ruined; that said defendant Davis, and said sheriff of Wilson county, intend only to remove so much of said mill-dam as will prevent the waters from flooding back on said Davis' premises; and that said mill and dam are not worth over ten thousand dollars; and that said Davis is worth much more than that sum, beyond exemptions and liabilities, and is able, ready, and willing to respond in damages on any judgment said plaintiff in error may obtain against him by reason of any injury to said mill-dam; and that said Davis has given the said sheriff a bond of indemnity, etc.

*147 *We shall not attempt to decide at the present time whether the proceedings to abate the nuisance caused by the erection of the dam was so far a proceeding in rem as to conclude the owner, although not a party to the suit, for we think that upon other and more obvious grounds the ruling of the district judge must be affirmed. No right to maintain a dam is disclosed in the petition. It does not show that proceedings were ever had under the mill-dam act, or that consent was ever obtained of the parties whose lands were flooded. The plaintiff bases his right to restrain the defendants upon the fact that the dam exists, that he owns it, and that he has never been ordered to remove it. It does appear, from the whole case, that, in a proceeding between the owner of the lands flooded and the actual possessors and managers of the mill and dam, the dam was declared a nuisance, and the parties in charge ordered to abate it; that, as a matter of fact, it is a nuisance to one of the defendants; and that said defendant is able to respond to all damages which may be caused by the removal of the dam. Under these circumstances, we cannot say that the judge, in the exercise of a sound discretion, erred in refusing an injunction.

Some full and clear showing might well be insisted on of a right to maintain the dam, even though it were conceded that the prior judgment was not conclusive. An injunction in limine is not a matter of strict right. It may sometimes be properly refused upon the same facts which would entitle the party of right to an injunction on final hearing. *Stoddart v. Vanlaningham, ante, *18.* It may be a hardship to have the dam removed, but if a party builds a dam without obtaining, by consent, or legal proceedings, the right to flow lands above the dam, he has only his own imprudence to blame for the result.

The order denying the temporary injunction will be affirmed.

*JOHN B. YOUNG v. PETER CLIPPINGER.

January Term, 1875.

1. Conveyance: Quitclaim Deed. A deed which recites that the grantors "have bargained, sold, and quitclaimed, and by these presents do bargain, sell, and quitclaim, all our right, title, interest, estate, claim, and demand, both in law and in equity, as well in possession as in expectation, with all and singular the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging; and we do also promise to defend the property against all claims, if any should come up, against said property,"—is only a quitclaim deed, and purports to convey only the existing interest and estate of the grantors.<sup>1</sup>
2. ———: Covenant. The general covenant following the granting clause does not operate to enlarge the estate granted, but is itself limited to such estate.
3. Pleading: Petition: Action on Covenants. A petition which alleges the execution of such a deed, that the grantors did not have a fee-simple title, that a third party did have such title, and subsequently to the deed brought an action and recovered possession of the land, evicting the grantee, does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

<sup>1</sup> An ordinary deed of quitclaim conveys no greater rights than the grantor actually has at the time of its execution; and a person who relies upon a mere quitclaim of the interest which a party may have in property does so at his peril and must look to it that there is an interest to convey. Martin v. Brown, 4 Minn. 282. (Gil. 201.) Hope v. Stone, 10 Minn. 141. (Gil. 114.) Everest v. Ferris, 16 Minn. 26. (Gil. 14.) Gesner v. Burdell, 18 Minn. 497. (Gil. 444.) Marshall v. Robert, 18 Minn. 405. (Gil. 365.) Johnson v. Robinson, 20 Minn. 189. (Gil. 169.)

One of two tenants in common conveyed his interest to the other by deed, which never was recorded. Subsequently they both joined in a mortgage of the land, and thereafter the one who had previously conveyed his interest gave a quitclaim deed which was recorded, of all his "right, title, and interest" to a third person, who had actual knowledge of the previous conveyance. Held, that the grantee in the last named deed acquired no rights thereunder. Gesner v. Burdell, 18 Minn. 497. (Gil. 444.) A grantee in a quitclaim deed is bound to inquire and ascertain at his peril as to outstanding equities; but if he convey with covenants of warranty his grantee need not, but will be presumed a bona fide purchaser without notice. Winkler v. Miller, 6 N. W. Rep. 698.

Error from Nemaha district court.

N. Price and S. Conwell, for plaintiff in error, contended that Clippinger's promise and agreement "to defend the property against all claims, if any should come up against said property," is an express covenant in relation to the property, and runs with the land as such, and a covenant for the future protection of the title, and cite 2 Blackstone, Cooley, Bl. 303, note 10; 1 Bouv. Law Dict. 402, 403; 2 Amer. Law Reg. 267, 744; Rawle, Cov. 318, 506; 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 133; Belts v. Kellogg, 15 Ill. 137; Barter v. Ryerss, 13 Barb. 281.

Joseph Sharpe, for defendant, contended that the petition 149 *did not state facts constituting a cause of action; that the deed of Clippinger was a mere quitclaim, conveying only a present interest, and that the supposed covenant was limited by the grant,—and referred to In re Strong, 20 Pick. 488; Wade v. Howard, 11 Pick. 296; Blanchard v. Brooks, 12 Pick 47; Hurd v. Cushing, 7 Pick. 169; Wight v. Shaw, 5 Cush. 56; Inhab. of Princeton v. Adams, 10 Cush. 132; Sweet v. Brown, 12 Metc. 175; Kimball v. Temple, 25 Cal. 452; Lessee v. Loomis, 11 Ohio St. 475; 3 Washb. Real Prop. 104, § 40.

BREWER, J. On the seventh of July, 1868, Peter Clippinger and wife executed a deed to Aaron W. Manchester of a tract of land. The material portion of the deed is as follows: Said grantors "have bargained, sold and quitclaimed, and by these presents do bargain, sell and quitclaim, unto the said Aaron W. Manchester, his heirs and assigns forever, all our right, title, interest, estate, claim and demand, both in law and in equity, as well in possession as in expectation, * * * with all and singular the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging, and we also do promise to defend the property against all claims, if any should come up against said property." On the twenty-fourth of May, 1870, Manchester and wife executed a warranty deed of said premises to plaintiff. Plaintiff, in January, 1874, filed his petition, setting out the execution of these deeds, and alleging that at the time of defendant's conveyance he was not seized in fee simple of said lands, and had not defended the same against the lawful claims of all persons, but that one Eli Finley was the owner, and that said Finley, in August, 1872, commenced an action against said plaintiff to recover the possession, and did in said action recover the possession, and that under said judgment plaintiff was, in September, 1873, evicted from said premises. A demurrer to said petition was sustained, and of this ruling plaintiff in error complains.

The deed from defendant is plainly a quitclaim. It does not 150 purport to grant a fee-simple title. It uses the technical *term "quitclaim," and to make assurance doubly sure, it limits the grant to the "right, title, interest, estate, claim and demand" of the grantors. Such a deed conveys nothing but the interest of the grantors, and after-acquired title does not inure to the benefit of the grantees. Simpson v. Greeley, 8 Kan. *586. Nor in this case do we think the covenant enlarges the grant. The reciprocal effects of covenants upon the grant, and of the grant upon the covenants, has been much discussed, and the conclusions are not all harmonious. It is said in 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 636, that "the true rule would seem to be, that the instrument should be taken as a whole, and effect given to its meaning as derived from each and every part of it." Under this rule it is more reasonable to hold that the general terms of the covenant are limited to the restricted estate granted, than the reverse. The estate conveyed is specifically, doubly limited. It is restricted to the interest and estate of the grantors, for the phrase, "or in expectation," refers to interests existing but not vested, and does not include interests and titles wholly disconnected from the grantors. It can hardly be supposed that the grantors used such words of limitation without intending to restrict the extent of the grant, while the general terms of the covenant may properly be held as applicable only to the estate granted. In other words, the grantors convey a limited estate, and covenant to defend that estate. The authorities support this view. In Blanchard v. Brooks, 12 Pick. 47, SHAW, C. J., says: "The grant in the deed is of all his right, title and interest in the land, and not of land itself, or any particular estate in the land. The warranty is of the premises, that is, of the estate granted, which was all his right, title and interest. It was equivalent to a warranty of the estate he then held or was seized of, and must be confined to estate vested." In Comstock v. Smith, 18 Pick. 116, WILDE, J., uses this language: "The tenant in convenanting to warrant and defend the granted or released premises must be understood to refer to the estate or *151 title sold or released, and not to the land, *because he certainly did not intend to warrant any estate or title not intended to be conveyed." In Sweet v. Brown, 12 Metc. 175, it was decided that, where "A. conveyed to B. by deed all his right, title, and interest in and to certain real estate, described by metes and bounds, corners and distances, with the usual covenants of seizin and warranty, the covenants were limited to the estate and interest of A. in the granted premises, and were not general covenants extending to the whole parcel described in the deed." See, also, Allen v. Holton, 20 Pick. 458; Wight v. Shaw, 5 Cush. 56; Miller v. Ewing, 6 Cush. 34; Gee v. Moore, 14 Cal. 472; Kimball v. Semple, 25 Cal. 452; Rawle, Cov. 525-527, and notes. It follows from these considerations that the court did not err in sustaining the demurrer, and the judgment will be affirmed.

GEORGE LONSBERRY v. J. W. RAKESTRAW.

January Term, 1875.

1. Case Made: When to be Filed. It is not essential to the validity of a case made that it be filed with the clerk immediately after it has been settled and signed by the judge. It is enough if it be so filed within a reasonable time. In a district composed of several counties two months and a half is not an unreasonable delay in so filing a case made. Quære, would an unreasonable delay in filing affect the validity of a case made?
2. Indian Lands: Treaty Rights, how Determined. Where the determination of any question involving discretion is committed to any officer or tribunal within the limits of the jurisdiction conferred, his or their decision is conclusive thereof, and can be attacked collaterally only for fraud.
3. —. So, when it was provided by treaty that the Osage "half-breeds, not to exceed twenty-five in number, who have improvements on the north half of the lands sold to the United States, shall have a patent, said half-breeds to be designated by the chiefs and head-men of the tribe," held, that the designation by such chiefs and head-men was conclusive as to the right of the party designated to receive a patent, and that, in a suit brought by the grantee of such patentee to recover possession of the land, no inquiry could be made into the question whether such patentee was a half-breed of the Osage tribe, or whether he had any improvements on the north half of the land sold to the United States. [Rathbone v. Sterling, 25 Kan. 447.]
4. —. Where it was also provided by treaty that such designated half-breeds should receive patents for eighty acres each, "to include, as far as practicable, their improvements, all of said lands to be selected by the parties, subject to the approval of the secretary of the interior," held, that a selection of an eighty-acre tract by one of the designated half-breeds, and the approval of that selection by the secretary of the interior, gave to such half-breed a vested interest in the land, and was conclusive against all persons claiming title acquired subsequently to the selection, and that the holder of subsequently acquired title could not show, as a defense to an action brought by the grantee of such half-breed, that such half-breed never had any improvements on the land.
5. —. Where the land selected was incorrectly reported to the secretary of the interior, the mistake could be corrected, even though the patent had already issued and the correct selection submitted to his approval; but where the party making the selection is aware of the mistake, makes no objection thereto, or effort to have it corrected, and assents to its submission to the secretary for approval, held, that such action was virtually a selection of the tract reported to the secretary.

 Ejectment, brought by Lonsberry, to recover possession of lot No. 8, and the S. E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of the N. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 4, in township 29 south, of range 20 east, containing 80.42 acres, in Neosho county, which plaintiff claimed to own in fee-simple. Rakestraw answered, claiming title to said lands in virtue of certain rights acquired under a settlement thereon made by him in January, 1866, and a purchase made under the joint resolution passed by congress April 10, 1869. The land in controversy is part of the Osage lands conveyed to the United States by the treaty of September 29, 1865, (January 21, 1867.)

Lownsberry claimed as grantee of one William Tinker, a member of the Osage *tribe of Indians. Rakestraw not only claimed title in himself, as above stated, but he contended that the land patented to Tinker was not the land which had been selected for him, and that for this reason the patent was void, and plaintiff's title therefore failed. Trial at the December term, 1872. Verdict and judgment for defendant.

C. F. Hutchings, for plaintiff in error.

Stillwell & Baylies, for defendant in error.

BREWER, J. As a preliminary question, counsel for defendant in error insist that there was such a defect in the proceedings to make a case as is fatal to its validity, and that, therefore, there is nothing before us for examination. The case was signed May 1, 1873, but was not filed with the papers in the case until July 18, 1873. This it is claimed is fatal. The law in force at the time, as claimed by counsel, reads thus: "The case and amendments shall be submitted to the judge, who shall settle and sign the same, and cause it to be attested by the clerk, and the seal of the court to be thereto attached. It shall then be filed with the papers in the case." Laws 1871, p. 274, § 1. We are inclined to think the law applicable to this case must be found in section 1 of chapter 85, Laws 1870, p. 168; but it is, so far as this question is concerned, wholly immaterial which statute governs; the only difference being that in the latter the word "thereupon" is used, instead of "then." We do not consider the objection well taken. The law does not make an immediate filing a condition of validity. The case of Brown v. Rhodes, 1 Kan. *339, is cited as authority, but the reasoning of the court in that case shows that it is inapplicable. The question there arose as to the validity of a bill of exceptions filed two years and three months after the adjournment of the trial term. The court held that "the records of a *154 term of *court are made during the term, and under the direction of the court;" that a bill of exceptions must be filed to become a part of the record, and that, therefore, it must be filed during the term, to become a part of the record of that term.<sup>1</sup> But with a case made the rule is different. Express authority is given to extend the time for making it beyond the term, and there is no statutory

<sup>1</sup>See, also, State v. Bohan, 19 Kan. 48; State v. Schoenewald, 26 Kan. 289; Scott v. McKinstry, 27 Kan. 168. An objection to the decision of a judge at chambers should be reduced to writing, and presented to the judge for his allowance at the conclusion of the hearing when the decision is made, unless application is made for additional time, which may be given, but never to exceed ten days. If no time mit within which it must be completed. The judge may fix the time within which the case must be made, that within which it must be served, that within which amendments thereto must be suggested, and the notice that must be given of the time of its presentation for settlement. When so presented, it is his duty to settle, sign, and certify to it, and then it shall be filed with the clerk. But "then" does not mean the same day, for the judge may be several days' journey away from the clerk's office. It does not mean at the same term, for the term may long since have adjourned. The most that can be claimed is that it means that the case must be filed within a reasonable time. We do not decide that even that is essential to its validity. It may be claimed with much force that the time of filing is an immaterial matter; that the signature of the judge is the essential thing; and that even an unreasonable delay in filing will not affect its validity. It will be time enough, however, to decide that question when it is fairly before us. It is enough for this case to hold that it is sufficient if the case be filed within a reasonable time after it has been settled and signed, and that two months and a half is not, in a district composed of several counties, prima facie an unreasonable delay. We are compelled, therefore, to examine into the questions presented in the record.

The material facts are as follows: On the twenty-ninth of September, 1865, the Osage Indians made a treaty with the United States, which was ratified and proclaimed January 21, 1867, (14 U. S. St. 67,) by which they conveyed certain lands to the government, "to be surveyed and sold under the direction of the secretary of the interior on the most advantageous terms for cash; * * * but no pre-emption or homestead settlement shall be recognized; and, after reimbursing the United States the cost of said survey and sale, * * * the remaining proceeds of sales shall be placed in the treasury of the United States to the credit of the civilization fund," etc. See first article of treaty. By the fourteenth article it is provided that "the half-breeds of the Osage tribe of Indians, not to exceed twenty-five in number, who have improvements on the north half of the land sold to the United States, shall have a patent issued to them in fee-simple, for eighty acres each, to include, as far as practicable, their improvements; said half-breeds to be designated by the chiefs and head-men of the tribe, * * * and all of said lands to be selected by the parties, subject to the approval of the secretary of the interior." On the tenth of April, 1869, congress passed the following joint resolution:

"Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America in congress assembled, that any bona fide settler asked or given at the conclusion of the hearing before such judge, the parties are concluded, and are not thereafter entitled to present for allowance, and have settled and signed, a bill of exceptions. State v. Burrows, 38 Kan. 14, S. C. Pac. Rep. 449.

residing on any portion of the lands sold to the United States by virtue of the first and second articles of the treaty concluded between the United States and the Great and Little Osage tribe of Indians September 29, 1865, and proclaimed January 21, 1867, who is a citizen of the United States, or shall have declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, shall be, and hereby is, entitled to purchase the same in quantity not exceeding 160 acres, at the price of $1.25 per acre, within two years from the passage of this act under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the secretary of the interior: provided, however, that both the odd and even numbered sections of said lands shall be subject to settlement and sale as above provided: and provided, further, that the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections in each township of said lands shall be reserved for state school purposes in accordance with the provisions of the act of admission of the state of Kansas: provided, however, that nothing in this act shall be construed in any manner affecting any legal rights heretofore vested in any other party or parties."

In September, 1867, the twenty-five half-breeds were "designated by the chiefs and head-men," and the "lands selected by the parties," as provided in said fourteenth article. William *Tinker was designated as one of these half-breeds, made his selection, and thereafter a patent for the land in controversy was issued to him, of date June 10, 1870, which recites that it was issued under the fourteenth article, and shows the approval, on the fifteenth of June, 1869, by the secretary of the interior, of the selection. On September 30, 1870, Tinker and wife deeded to Lownsberry, and this was his chain of title. In January, 1866, Rakestraw moved upon the land, made improvements upon it, and afterwards, having all the personal qualifications requisite, obtained a duplicate receipt for it under the joint resolution of 1869, though this receipt was thereafter canceled by the officers of the land-office, as issued by mistake. It appears probable from the testimony that prior to Rakestraw's occupation, and prior to the treaty, there had been some improvements on the land, though whether owned by Tinker or not is doubtful, but that all had been removed or destroyed prior to those dates. It was claimed that the land selected by Tinker was not the land embraced in the patent, and that through some mistake or design a change had been made intermediate the selection and the patent.

Upon these facts the court charged the jury as follows: "Should you therefore find from the evidence that on the twenty-ninth day of September, 1865, (that being the date of said treaty,) the said William Tinker had no improvement, as hereinbefore defined, on the land in controversy, and that long prior to the issuing of said patent to William Tinker for the land in controversy the defendant Rakestraw had a lawful and bona fide settlement upon said land, as defendant has in his answer averred, the issuing of the patent to Tinker in itself would not operate to divest defendant of any rights he may have acquired before the issuing of said patent by virtue of settlement and improvements."

The court also refused this instruction: "If the jury find from the evidence that the chiefs and head-men of the tribe, before the tenth day of April, 1869, designated William Tinker as one of the half-breeds of the Osage tribe of Indians who should have a patent for eighty acres of land under the provisions of the fourteenth article of the *treaty of September 29, 1865, and that the said Tinker selected the land in controversy before the tenth of April, 1869, and his selection was afterwards approved by the secretary of the interior, then the said Tinker had on the tenth of April, 1869, a vested right in the land in controversy, and the defendant could obtain no title to the same, as against Tinker or his grantees, by purchase under the joint resolution of congress approved April 10, 1869." The same rulings appear elsewhere in instructions given and refused.

In their brief, counsel say: "The fact that said Tinker was designated as one of the twenty-five of the Osage tribe of Indians entitled to patents is not questioned by defendant in error, as the case now stands; but the two vital points we rely on in opposition to his right to rightfully receive a patent for the land in controversy are (1) that he never had any improvements on said land; and (2) that he never selected said land as his head-right."

In these rulings we think the learned court erred. Prior to April 10, 1869, Rakestraw's possession and occupancy gave him no rights in the land. He was simply a naked trespasser, whose possession, no matter how long continued, could never ripen into a title. Wood v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co., 11 Kan. *323. It is therefore, so far as respects the acquiring by other parties of any title from the United States under the provisions of the treaty, as though the land were wholly unoccupied and vacant. While it is true that only such half-breed Osages as had improvements on the north half of the lands were to be entitled to patents, yet the treaty provided a tribunal for determining who should thus receive patents, and the determination of that tribunal is conclusive. Testimony is no more admissible to show that William Tinker was not an Osage half-breed, or that he had no improvements on the north half of the land, than it would be, after the final determination of this case, to show that the facts upon which the judgment was based did not exist. U. S. v. Arredondo, 6 Pet. 729. Counsel in their brief do not seem to contest this proposition, or at least do not rest their case upon any denial of it; nor did the court instruct the jury in direct opposition thereto, though *158 it refused *an instruction asserting it, and did charge the jury that Tinker must have possessed the qualifications named to be entitled to a patent. Such ruling would be very apt to convey a wrong impression to the jury. The treaty not only provided for designating the individuals, but for the selection of their lands, giving to the individuals named the privilege of making this selection, subject only to the approval of the secretary of the interior; and while it contemplated that such selections should include their improvements, yet it did not make this absolutely imperative. It says, "as far as practicable." It thus contemplated the possibility of selections outside of improvements. Perhaps the selection of one half-breed would cover the improvements of another, as well as his own. Perhaps other selections authorized by the treaty might conflict. Perhaps there might be conflicting titles to the same improvements. Whatever may have been the reason, the fact is apparent that the treaty contemplated the possibility that some selections might not cover the party's improvements. Hence the mere fact that the selection did not include the party's improvements would not necessarily defeat the selection.

Again, it provided for a selection subject to the approval of the secretary of the interior. Such approval was conclusive as against any rights which did not exist at the time of the selection. The approval related back to the selection, and confirmed it. The title thus acquired was good as against any one who did not then have a better claim. The only parties who at the time had any interest or rights in this land were the Osage Indians, the government, and Tinker. No one else could question the validity of the selection. So that whether Tinker had any improvements on the land at the time he made his selection or not, is a matter into which Rakestraw, holding by a subsequently acquired title, cannot be permitted to inquire. This ruling compels a reversal of the judgment, and the remanding of the case for a new trial. It will also have the effect of excluding on such subsequent trial much of the evidence offered on this trial.

\*159 \*The question of an error between the selection and the patent, we have not as yet considered, but perhaps should notice before closing. It is claimed that the land actually selected was the E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of N. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 9, instead of the land in controversy. It is true that if Tinker selected one piece of land, and by mistake another was reported to the secretary of the interior for approval, the error could be corrected, even though the matter had gone so far as the issue of the patent, and the actual selection might still be submitted to the secretary for his approval; but it is equally true that, if Tinker, before the tenth of April, 1869, became aware of the fact that a mistake had been made in the tract of land reported as his selection, made no effort to correct the mistake, and assented to its being thus presented to the secretary for approval, it was virtually a selection by him of the tract reported, and the approval of the secretary confirmed the title in him as of date prior to any rights which Rakestraw could acquire by his occupancy. We do not care to pursue this inquiry further, for we cannot anticipate the testimony which may be offered on the next trial.

The judgment will be reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial.

John W. Deford, for plaintiff in error.

W. L. Parkinson, defendant in error, for himself.

KINGMAN, C. J. This was an action to recover for professional services rendered by C. B. Mason for plaintiff in error, in a certain case, which had passed by assignment to the defendant in error. The answer was a general denial. The issues were tried by a jury, and resulted in a verdict for plaintiff. The reversal of the judgment entered upon this verdict is sought upon two grounds only.

The first is the admission in evidence of the deposition of Wilson

Shannon, Esq. It is as follows: "My age is 70, and my residence is in the city of Lawrence, state of Kansas, and my profession is that of an attorney and counselor at law. I was engaged as one of the attorneys in the case of James Wind et al. v. The Ottawa University et al., in the district court in and for the county *of Franklin, (case No. 804,) on the part of the plaintiff. C. B. Mason, A. W. Benson, H. P. Welsh, J. W. Deford, and S. O. Thacher appeared as attorneys for the Ottawa University. I am acquainted with the services rendered by C. B. Mason in said case, and taking into consideration the amount in controversy, and the legal questions involved, and the general importance of the case, and the labor performed, I should consider $1,000 a fair and reasonable fee for the services of the said Mason. And further this deponent saith not."

The grounds on which this deposition was objected to are thus stated by plaintiff in error: "It was incompetent and immaterial, because—First, said Shannon does not state that he was acquainted with the value of lawyers' professional services in Franklin county, at the time the services referred to in said deposition were rendered; second, because, although the witness Shannon states that he is 'acquainted with the services rendered by C. B. Mason, in said case,' he does not specify what those services were,—it being controverted by the defendant's answer that said Mason rendered any services therein; third, because said Shannon states that he 'should consider $1,000 a fair and reasonable fee for the services of the said Mason,' 'taking into consideration the amount in controversy, and the legal questions involved, and the general importance of the case, and the labor performed,' whereas the witness should only have taken into consideration the actual labor and services performed, and should have given his opinion thereupon as to the reasonable value of such labor and services at the time and place at which they were done and performed."

We think the objections are not well taken. It will be observed that the objections were to the deposition as a whole. Now, whether any services were rendered by Mason was one of the issues in the case, and, in so far as the deposition speaks of rendering the services in the case for which the action was brought, the same was clearly admissible, and is not touched by the objections offered thereto, even if they are sound. Where a part of a deposition is clearly competent and admissible, and the objection is made to it as an entirety, is the court bound to separate the objectionable from the unobjection-

*162 able part, unaided by the suggestion of counsel as to the *part that he desires stricken out? If so, then a grave duty is imposed upon the court; for, upon the presentation of a deposition, the party against whom it is to be read has but to object, and the court must read all of it, to strike out but a single paragraph. We need not decide this question here. We hardly think it needs deciding. The deposition was properly read, because the witness testifies dictly to facts in his knowledge. He was in the case in which Mason's services were rendered, knew what those services were, and then testified what they were worth. We do not understand that he testified as an expert. His long practice as an attorney and counselor at law may be inferred from his age; and from such long practice of his profession he would be qualified to state the value of services rendered under his own eye, and necessarily subjected to his careful scrutiny from his position as opposing counsel. If there are any doubts about his conclusion, they will vanish when it is known that the record is silent as to what other evidence was received; and, for anything the record shows, there may have been abundant evidence given of the great experience and high standing in his profession of the venerable witness. It is claimed that the premises on which the witness based his estimate of the value of the services rendered are erroneous; that he had no right to consider "the amount in controversy, and the legal questions involved, and the general importance of the case," in making his judgment of the value of the services. But we think these were all proper and important elements in determining the value of the services. We know that an attorney is bound to fidelity to his client as much when the amount is one dollar as when it is a million. His obligation is not changed. But it is in the knowledge of every professional man that when great interests are confided to his care he is expected to use the utmost diligence in the preparation of the case. He is not expected to nor does he limit his services by the rule of ordinary care and skill that governs him in an ordinary case. So, in Duncan v. Yancy's Ex'rs, 1 McCord, 149, the court held that the great value of the property in contest, and the doubtful nature of the right to be tried, were proper and important elements in determining the value of the services.

The other error alleged is the striking out from the deposition of J. O. Thacher, Esq., this paragraph: "I settled for my services in that case with the Ottawa University, receiving $100 in full satisfaction thereof. This was all I asked; and, while I think it was a moderate fee, it was a reasonable one." He had already stated that he had been engaged in the case with Mason and others from the beginning of the case to its termination, but he does not say that he knew what services were rendered by Mason, but thinks no steps were taken in the main cause without consulting him, though some hearings were had at chambers when he was not present. The paragraph was rightly struck out. The value of Mason's services were in issue, not those of the witness. The excluded testimony did not show the opinion of the witness as to the value of Mason's services in the case. We might infer, perhaps that what was a fair value for one attorney's services in a case would be some criterion of the value of another attorney's in the same case; but that would depend much on the nature of the services rendered by each. If they were of equal ability and standing, one might be entitled to much the larger fee because of the labor and care in preparing the case, in the search for and procuring evidence, and in manifold ways, well known to the profession; so that what would be a reasonable fee for one would be wholly inadequate for the other. The paragraph stricken out would have likely misled the jury, on this account. It is proper to say that no part of the evidence is preserved in the record, save the two depositions referred to.

The judgment must be affirmed.

Error from Franklin district court.

The action below was by H. P. Welsh and A. W. Benson, as partners, to recover for services rendered by them for plaintiff in error. The plaintiffs had judgment, at the March term, 1874, of the district court, for $1,000 and costs.

Welsh & Benson, defendants in error, for themselves.

KINGMAN, C. J. The only error alleged in this case is the same as the first considered in the case of Ottawa University v. Parkinson, just decided; and for the reasons therein given the judgment in this case is affirmed.

Error from Leavenworth district court.

The case is stated in the opinion.

165 *F. P. Fitzwilliam, for plaintiff in error.

Charles W. Helm, for defendant in error.

KINGMAN, C. J. This action was upon an account for $319.92 for cattle sold and delivered by Newby to Kermeyer. The answer was a general denial, and payment, but on the trial it was admitted that the plaintiff, Newby, sold and delivered the cattle at the price stated in the petition. The case was tried by the court, who found generally for the plaintiff; thereby finding, in addition to the admitted facts, that payment had not been made. There were no special findings of fact, and no question of law raised for this court, except that the evidence does not sustain the judgment. The conditions upon which this court will reverse a judgment of the court below on this ground have been too often decided to need statement here. It is only necessary to examine the record to see if there was evidence tending to support the judgment of the court on the want of payment for the cattle. The testimony is in substance as follows: Kermeyer testifies positively that he paid for the cattle in money, and strengthens his testimony by that of witnesses who heard conversations between himself and Newby, in which Newby admitted payment either in money or check. On the other hand, Newby testifies that he had taken for the cattle a check on the German Savings Bank of Leavenworth, which he had lost, and introduces some other testimony tending to strengthen his own, and throw doubts on the testimony of the defendant as to the payment in money. In this testimony the plaintiff used these expressions: Having testified to the sale and delivery of cattle to defendant at different times, he said: "He [defendant] paid me sometimes with checks on the German Savings Bank of Leavenworth, and 166 sometimes in cash. * * * He paid me the amount I claim in a check on the German Savings Bank, and did not pay me cash for this lot of cattle. * * * I received the check in payment of the lot of cattle, and must have lost it."

Other debtors, without an agreement to receive it in payment or satisfaction. Edberry v. Soper, 17 Kan. 369. See, also, McCoy v. Hazlett, post, *430. Where a debtor hands to his creditor the check of a third party, payable to bearer, and undorsed, and such check is not received as payment of the debt, and on presentation is not paid, by reason of the suspension of the bank, and is promptly returned to the debtor, and by him to the drawer, who promises to pay the amount thereof to such debtor; and where, at the time of drawing the check, the drawer has no funds in the bank to meet it, and at the time of the suspension of the bank is still indebted to it in a large amount: held, that the debt was not discharged, and that the creditor could recover the same of his debtor, notwithstanding the fact that, while living within fifteen miles of the bank, he had retained the check twenty-six days before presentation, during twenty-five of which the bank was open, and also that the president of the bank testified that the check would have been paid if presented before suspension. Mordis v. Kennedy, 23 Kan. 408. Acceptance of drafts as payment, see Shaffer v. McKanna, 24 Kan. 22. A check is not prima facie evidence of payment. A check drawn in favor of the debtor's agent is not prima facie evidence of payment, even if the creditor assents that the check shall be so drawn. Mullins v. Brown, 22 Kan. 812; S. C. 4 Pac. Rep. 805.

On this evidence the plaintiff in error (defendant below) insists that he ought to have had judgment, as in law it makes no difference whether payment was made in cash or by check. It is unquestionably true in law, however it may be in fact, that, if payment be made, it matters not whether it be by check or money. The real question is, was payment made? The court must have found these facts, or it could not have given judgment: First, that the cattle were sold and delivered by plaintiff to defendant at the price alleged; second, that there was no payment therefor. To reach this last conclusion it is certain that the court must have found that a check was given for the price of the cattle, and that the check was not payment for the cattle. Under all the evidence in the case, this court is not able to say that any of the facts found as above are erroneous, and the only question for this court is whether the taking of the check is a payment in law. There is no doubt that if, by agreement, it is taken as a payment, then the law makes it a payment, as much as if paid in cash; but there is no evidence of any such agreement, save the inference that may be drawn from the terms used by the plaintiff, quoted above, and the court must have held these expressions as but the loose use of words by the witness, who would hardly have admitted payment of a claim that he was seeking to establish. Take his whole testimony together, and we cannot say the court erred in that conclusion. Then the law question which we have to consider is simply whether taking a check is a payment.

On this subject, Parsons, in his work on Bills and Notes, (page 85,) says: "It is undoubtedly payment as soon as it is cashed; but, generally at least, not until then." In a subsequent chapter (page 150 et seq.) the authorities on the presumptions of law as to payment by accepting negotiable paper for a debt are referred to, and from *167 them it will be seen that as a general rule, in this country* and in England, that the acceptance of such paper does not extinguish the original debt. The exceptions are carefully pointed out, and the facts and principles stated on which the exceptions are founded, but none of them are broad enough to include this case. One of the exceptions would be where a party had taken negotiable paper, and by his own laches a loss is incurred, then, upon proof of such loss by the debtor, the negotiable paper becomes, by the negligence of the holder, a satisfaction of the debt without a special agreement; but the burden of proving this loss is upon the debtor. In Massachusetts, Maine, and Vermont, it seems to have been long established that the taking of a note is the extinguishment of the debt. In Wisconsin (Mehlberg v. Fisher, 24 Wis. 607) it seems that the receiving of a check is prima facie evidence of the payment of the debt, and is absolute payment if the holder of the check, through his own negligence, fails to take proper steps to obtain payment. In all the other states, so far as examined, the rule of the common law prevails, that the giving of one simple executory contract for another does not extinguish the latter. In this case, therefore, we but follow the rule of the common law, and the current of authorities, in holding that the simple making of the check was not a payment of the debt, nor an extinguishment of the contract for which it was given. The authorities to support this conclusion are referred to in note a, p. 153, Para. Notes & Ills. The judgment must therefore be affirmed.

VALENTINE, J., concurs.

BREWER, J. I concur in the decision, but rest my judgment on wholly different grounds.

68 *ALEXANDER McLAUGHLIN v. DEWITT C. DAVIS.

January Term, 1875.

Response: Petition for Wrongfully Suing Out Attachment. In a petition to recover damages for the wrongful issue of an attachment it is unnecessary to aver a want of probable cause for the suing out of the attachment, or a determination of the action in which the attachment was issued.<sup>1</sup>

Error from Labette district court.

The case is stated in the opinion.

Ayres & Fox, for plaintiff in error, contended that the action below was for maliciously suing out an attachment, and that the petition should have averred want of probable cause for the suing out of the order, and the determination of the attachment suit; and they cited Crake, Attachm. 587; Besson v. Southard, 10 N. Y. 236; McKown v. Hunter, 30 N. Y. 625; Marbourg v. Smith, 11 Kan. *554.

F. A. Bettis, for defendant in error, contended that the action was for the mere wrongful suing out of the order of attachment; and that, if there was no actual cause, then probable cause is no defense to an action for actual damages. In cases cited by plaintiff in error, the order of attachment could be obtained upon allegation under oath of the belief of the affiant in the existence of the alleged cause of attachment. Hence probable cause would authorize such belief, and would have been a defense. But under the statutes of Kansas an allegation of a cause of attachment made upon belief is not sufficient. The positive existence of the cause or grounds upon which the writ may issue must be sworn to, and probable cause is no defense.

<sup>1</sup>An action to recover damages for the wrongful issue of an attachment is not prematurely commenced when commenced after the dissolution of the attachment, and before the final determination of the action in which the attachment was issued. Kerr v. Rees, 37 Kan. 469. Where a motion is duly made to dissolve an attachment, on the two grounds alone that the allegations in the affidavit therefor are false, and that the case is not one in which an attachment may issue, and the judge, upon proper notice and the hearing of the affidavits, dissolves the attachment, held, in an action upon the attachment bond, that this decision is conclusive (unless reversed by proceedings in error) that the attachment was wrongfully obtained. Hoge v. Norton, 22 Kan. 374. An action may be maintained against a corporation to recover damages for wrongfully, maliciously, and without just or probable cause obtaining and levying an order of attachment upon personal property. Western News Co. v. Wilmarth, 33 Kan. 510, 8 C. 6 Pac. Rep. 796. This case, on motion for rehearing, challenging the authority of McLaughlin v. Davis, 8 Pac. Rep. 104; motion overruled, as the question was not made when case first presented.

*169 *Brewer, J. Davis commenced an action against McLaughlin, and caused an attachment to be issued and levied on his goods. On motion, this attachment was dissolved, and thereupon McLaughlin commenced this action to recover damages for its wrongful issue and levy. A demurrer to this petition was overruled, and of this plaintiff in error complains. The petition is not on the attachment undertaking, but alleges the issue and levy of the attachment, its dissolution, that the statements in the affidavit were absolutely false, and that McLaughlin "wrongfully, willfully, maliciously, and with intent to injure," sued out the attachment. It is insisted that "the petition should have averred want of probable cause for the suing out of the order, and the determination of the attachment suit." Neither of these is necessary. A party is entitled to an attachment only when certain facts exist, not when there is probable cause to believe that they exist. Civil Code, § 190. If they do not exist, the attachment is wrongfully issued, and the party causing it to issue is liable for all the damages actually sustained. Nor is it necessary, in such case, to set out or sue on the undertaking. If the surety in the undertaking is liable, a fortiori the principal is; and that, not by reason of the undertaking, but of the act for which it was given. Nor need the determination of the attachment suit be averred. The attachment is but ancillary to the action in which it was issued. It stands or falls without affecting the progress or termination of that suit. A party may have a just cause of action, but no right to an attachment; nor can he justify a wrongful attachment by a valid action. Hence the claim for damages for a wrongful attachment does not depend upon and need not wait for the termination of the action. In this petition, it is true, there are allegations appropriate to an action for malicious attachment, and unnecessary in one for a mere wrongful attachment. But all these may be ignored as surplusage. There is not enough to make out the former action, but *170 *ample for the latter. Of course, being simply an action for a wrongful attachment, only actual damages can be recovered, and the court will on the trial exclude from the jury all those other considerations which may properly be submitted in cases of malicious and willful wrong. The order will be affirmed.

STATE OF KANSAS v. JOHN SULLIVAN.

January Term, 1875.

Supreme Court: Review of Trial upon Agreed Statement of Facts.

In criminal as well as civil cases, where the facts are agreed, this court can determine what conclusions are to be drawn therefrom as readily and fully as the trial court.

Trespass: Opening Fence. Where a party is charged, under section 2 of chapter 113, Gen. St., with having voluntarily and unlawfully thrown down a fence other than that "leading into his own inclosure;" and where it is agreed that defendant and the prosecuting witness occupied, with inclosed fields, separate portions of the same tract, the right to purchase which from the government they were contesting; that defendant had built a house within the limits of his field, which he had been for months occupying as his home; that his west fence was along a county road, through which fence he was accustomed to pass to and from his house at a place where there was a "slip-rail gap," or a "loose rail;" and that the prosecuting witness had, a few days before the alleged offense, built around the inclosure of defendant an outer fence, which, along the county road, was but eighteen inches or two feet from defendant's fence: Held, that the defendant had committed no offense, under the statute, in removing that portion of this outer fence in front of the "slip-gap" in his own fence, so as to permit his passage to and from the county road.<sup>1</sup>

Appeal from Montgomery district court.

Sullivan was tried before a justice of the peace, and convicted for alleged violation of section 2 of chapter 113, Gen. St., "An act to prevent certain trespasses." He appealed to the district court, where another trial was had at the September term, 1874; M. S., judge pro tem., presiding. The facts were agreed to, and by the parties, and filed. The defendant was again convicted. Turner & Ralstin and R. J. Hill, for appellant.
A. B. Clark, Co. Atty., for the State.

Brewer, J. This case was tried by a judge pro tem., and without jury, upon an agreed statement of facts. The charge was that defendant voluntarily and unlawfully threw down a fence other than that "that led into his own inclosure," and was brought under section 2 of the "act to prevent certain trespasses," Gen. St. 1096. Defendant was found guilty, and sentenced to pay a fine of five dollars, from which sentence he has appealed to this court. As this case was tried upon an agreed statement of facts, and without the introduction of witnesses, it is presented to us very much as it was to the trial court. Those considerations, so often adverted to, which uphold the decision of the lower tribunal in doubtful cases, have no application here. We can act upon it in almost the same manner as though it were an original case in this court. Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Burdick, 7 Kan. *308. Do the facts as agreed upon show a violation of the statute by the defendant? It seems to us clearly not. The facts are substantially these: For months prior to the alleged misdemeanor, defendant and one Kennedy were occupying the same tract of land, and contesting the right to purchase it from the government. A trial in the local land-office had resulted in favor of Kennedy, but an appeal therefrom was still pending before the commissioner of the general land-office. Kennedy had a field fenced on the south side of the tract. On the north, defendant had built a house, and was occupying it. This house was about forty yards from a county road, which ran along the west line of the tract. Around *172 this house defendant had built a fence, the west line of which was on the county road, through which, at a place where was a "slip-rail gap," or "loose rail," he passed to and from his house. About a week or ten days before the commission of the alleged offense Kennedy built a fence so as to entirely inclose defendant's house and field, the west fence of which along the county road was only eighteen inches to two feet from defendant's fence. In building this fence he put a post opposite the center of the "slip-gap" above referred to, which he nailed some rails or slats. Defendant knocked off the slats and pulled up the post, and passed in and out with his team and wagon. Kennedy replaced the post and slats, and defendant a second time removed them, and this removal was the offense charged. In this there was no criminal offense. It did not come within the statute. The fence thrown down was between his house and the public road, placed across the very way he had been accustomed to pass to and out from his home. It was not, therefore, in the language of the statute, one "other than those that lead into his own inclosure." If this conviction be right, any man may have his homestead fenced in by an outer fence, and be thus debarred ingress and egress. Such is not the law. The contest between Kennedy and defendant cannot thus be carried on through the aid of the criminal law. With equal propriety might defendant surround Kennedy's field with an outer fence, and then ask to have him punished criminally if he broke down to get into his field.

The judgment will be reversed, and the case remanded, with instructions to discharge the defendant.

173 •STATE OF KANSAS v. THOMAS J. HOWARD.

January Term, 1875.

1. Self-Defense: Instructions. Where, in an action in which the charge is shooting with intent to kill, the question is one of self-defense, it is error to instruct the jury that if, as a matter of fact, the defendant was in no imminent danger, they must convict.

2. Self-Defense: Rule. The rule is that, if the defendant had reasonable grounds to apprehend that he was in imminent danger, he is justified in defending himself.<sup>1</sup> Appeal from Doniphan district court.

The case is stated in the opinion.

W. D. Webb and B. A. Seaver, for appellant.

We ask the attention of the court to the fifth instruction for the state. We do not think that the law is that a man cannot be justified in shooting another unless there is reasonable ground to believe there is a design to do great bodily harm, and that such design must be so apparent as to induce a belief of it in the mind of a jury, sitting in perfect quiet and security, surrounded by the officers of the law, at a far-distant time from the danger, and that such belief must unite with the fact that the danger was absolutely imminent. The instruction says, "and if the jury finds that the defendant was in no such imminent danger, they will convict." We claim the rule to be that, if he was in apparent danger, he had the right to shoot, and that all that the state can claim is that the jury may say whether there was apparent imminent danger. The fact itself of imminent danger is not the question. I may draw a revolver on a man, and threaten to shoot him, and, while holding it on him, he may shoot me. Now, if the fact of imminent danger is the question, if my revolver is not loaded, my enemy who shoots me under such circumstances becomes a murderer; while, if it is a question of "apparent imminent danger, he would be, as he should be, acquitted.

D. M. Johnston, for the State.

BREWER, J. Defendant was convicted in the district court of Doniphan county under an information charging an assault with intent to kill. There was no dispute but that Howard shot the prosecuting witness, but the claim was that such shooting was in self-defense. Upon this question, at the instance of the state, the court gave the following instruction: "The shooting by the prisoner at Collier would be justified, under our laws, only in case it was committed by the prisoner when there was reasonable ground to apprehend a design to do him great bodily harm, and that there was imminent danger of such design being accomplished; and the jury are the judges, and it is for the jury to say whether there were any reasonable grounds for such apprehension, and whether there was, at the moment that the shot was fired, imminent danger that some great bodily harm would have been done to prisoner; and, if the jury find that the defendant was in no such imminent danger, they will convict."

In the latter portion of this instruction the court erred. The jury are in substance told that the question is as to the actual existence, and not as to the reasonable apprehension, of danger; that the reasonable apprehension refers to the design to injure, and not to the imminence of the danger. Under such an instruction, no matter how threatening the conduct of the party shot, no matter though it be so great as to create in any mind an irresistible conviction of imminent peril, yet, unless the imminent peril actually exists, the shooting is not in self-defense. Thus, if a party approaches with a drawn pistol, and threatens to kill on the spot, it is not self-defense to kill such an assailant unless his pistol be in fact loaded, and he thus actually able to carry out his threat. In other words, if the pistol of the assailant is loaded, it is self-defense; if not, it is murder. The law is not thus harsh. All that it exacts is that there shall be a reasonable *175 apprehension of *imminent danger, and of the reasonableness of this apprehension the jury are to be the judges. A party assailed is justified in acting upon the facts as they appear to him, and is not judged by the facts as they are. It is not to be wondered at that this error occurred; for such, at first view, seems to be the meaning of the statute,—the apparent import of the language used. But this language is not new in our statute. It will be found in the statutes of other states, and had received a settled construction elsewhere before it was introduced here. 2 Whart. Crim. Law, §§ 1026, 1027, and notes; Shorter v. People, 2 N. Y. 197. Indeed, when the court gave the instruction asked by defendant,—and its attention was probably not drawn to the statute,—it stated the law correctly, and in accordance with the well-settled current of late authority. Yet, as we cannot say which instruction influenced the jury, and as it may be that the verdict rested on the erroneous one, we are compelled to reverse the judgment, and remand the case for a new trial. Error from Doniphan district court.

Probasco brought suit to recover on two notes, of $550 each, executed by Wm. M. Ayres to him, and to foreclose a mortgage given by Ayres and wife to secure said notes. Frank Sutter, as the *178 holder of a second mortgage, *was joined as a co-defendant.

Afterwards the court ordered W. L. Challiss made a defendant.
 Each defendant answered separately. Ayres and wife each pleaded that $100 of the notes was usury, and denied the execution of the mortgage, but specially admitted that they executed a "blank mortgage" for the purpose of procuring a loan of money from said Challiss for $1,000. The blanks in this mortgage were afterwards, in the presence of Ayres, but in his wife's absence and without her knowledge or consent, filled with Probasco's name, and the sum of $1,100, and it then was delivered to Challiss as agent instead of as principal. Mrs.
 Ayres made her husband's answer a part of hers, and he the same with her answer, and both asked for affirmative relief, that said supposed mortgage be adjudged and decreed to be null and void, and that the record thereof be canceled. The mortgage does not, nor does either answer, show or aver in whom was the title to the mortgaged property. The district court at the September term, 1873, gave judgment in favor of Probasco for the recovery of the $1,100 and interest, and for the foreclosure of the said mortgage, and also found in favor of Sutter for the amount claimed by him, and decreed a foreclosure of the mortgage held by him as a second lien on the premises, ad-judging the same to be subsequent to the lien of Probasco's mortgage.
 From such judgments and decrees Ayres and wife and Sutter appeal, and bring the case here on error.

Everest & Greenwood, A. Perry, and B. O'Driscoll, for plaintiffs in error.

The court erred in submitting to the jury the following questions, and receiving their answers thereto, to-wit: Question No. 10. "Did defendants Wm. M. Ayres and Melissa T. Ayres obtain and apply to their use and benefit the proceeds of such loan? (the loan from Probasco.)" Answer. "Yes." Q. No. 17. "Did Mrs. Ayres, after learning the facts of such loan, consent to the using the proceeds thereof for the benefit of herself and husband?" A. "Yes."

*179 *Question No. 10 was improper and prejudicial to the rights of Mrs. Ayres. If the question was submitted for the purpose of sustaining the execution of the mortgage on the ground of any equitable estoppel as against her, it should have been submitted as to her alone. There was no evidence upon which question No. 17 could have been submitted, as there is no proof that Mrs. Ayres ever knew the facts in reference to this transaction, or that any part of the money passed into her hands, or that she ever used the same.

The jury found specifically that the name and place of residence of Probasco were inserted in said mortgage on the sixth of December, 1871, at the office of W. W. Guthrie, in the city of Atchison; and the court erred in refusing to submit to the jury for their answer the following questions of fact, prepared and presented by defendants below, to-wit: Question No. 32. "Was the defendant Melissa T. Ayres present at the time the name of Richard Probasco was written in or inserted in said mortgage, and did she have any knowledge thereof, or consent thereto?" Q. No. 34. "Was the defendant Melissa T. Ayres the owner in her own right of the mortgaged premises mentioned and set forth in plaintiff's petition, at the time the said mortgage is claimed to have been signed, executed, and acknowledged by said Melissa?" Q. No. 38. "What is the value of said notes of Loyd McNamee transferred by defendant Wm. M. Ayres to plaintiff, or to defendant Challiss his agent?" Q. No. 39. "Did defendant W. L. Challiss, in making the loan of money to defendant William M. Ayres, in accepting and receiving the notes and mortgage set forth in plaintiff's petition, and in taking and receiving the notes of said McNamee, and in the receiving the said deed from defendant Wm. M. Ayres, and in the whole transaction between the plaintiff and defendant Wm. M. Ayres, act as the agent and attorney of said plaintiff?" Q. No. 41. "What was the consideration paid for which the said two notes were executed which are sued upon in this action?" Q. No. 42. "Did the defendant Melissa T. Ayres ever execute or deliver to the plaintiff the mortgage mentioned and set forth in the plaintiff's petition?" **Q. No. 43.* "Was said mortgage ever in any manner by said Melissa delivered to the plaintiff?" These propositions or questions were proper, and specific answers thereto were necessary to enable the jury or the court to correctly determine the rights of Mrs. Ayres.

The court erred in refusing instruction No. 1 asked for by the defendants. The statutes in force at the time the alleged contract was made provided that any person contracting, by promissory note, etc., to receive a greater rate of interest than twelve per centum per annum, "shall forfeit all interest, and shall recover no more than the principal." Gen. St. c. 51, §§ 2, 4. The notes in question bear date December 1, 1871, and were signed December 6. The district court erroneously held that the contract in the case at bar was governed as to the usury question by chapter 134, Laws 1872, p. 285; that is, the court held that the law in force at the time of the commencement of the action should govern, and not the one at the time the contract was made.

It was also error to refuse the following instruction, asked by defendants: "If the jury find from the evidence that, at the time the defendant Melissa T. Ayres signed said mortgage mentioned and set forth in plaintiff's petition, said mortgage was in blank, and contained no name or person as mortgagee, and thereafter, and without the written authority, direction, or consent of the said Melissa, the defendant Challiss, or any other person, in the absence of the said Melissa, and without her knowledge, inserted the name of the plaintiff as mortgagee therein after the same had been signed and acknowledged by her, that the said mortgage is invalid and void as against the said Melissa T. Ayres."

Under the statutes of this state an agent could not insert the name of the mortgagee in the instrument, much less fill up the entire blank in the absence of Mrs. Ayres, unless he had authority in writing so to do. Statute of Frauds, Gen. St. c. 43, p. 505; Upton v. Archer, 41 Cal. 85; Story, Ag. § 49; Jackson v. Titus, 2 Johns. 430; Basford v. Pearson, 9 Allen, 387; Simms v. Hervey, 19 Iowa, 273; Smith v. New York Cent. R. Co., 24 N. Y. 230; Ingram v. Little, 14 Ga. 173; Doniphan v. Gill, 1 B. Mon. 199; Williams v. Crutcher, 5 How. (Miss.) 71; 4 Kent, 462; Arrington v. Burton, 19 Ala. 114;

Chase v. Palmer, 29 Ill. 306; Viser v. Rice, 33 Tex. 139; *181 Rhode v. Lonthain, *8 Blackf. 413; Dodge v. Hopkins, 14 Wis. 631; Preston v. Hull, 12 Amer. Law Reg. (N. S.) 699, and note 711; Preston v. Hull, 23 Grat. 600. But if we concede, for the purpose of the argument, that parol authority alone was sufficient, then, certainly, the court erred in refusing the following instruction asked by defendants below, to-wit: "If the jury find from the evidence that at the time defendant Melissa T. Ayres signed and acknowledged the said mortgage the same was in blank as to the name of mortgagee, or the amount or consideration thereof, and after the same had passed out of the possession or control of said Melissa, and in her absence, and without her consent or authority, the name of the plaintiff was inserted therein as the mortgagee, or the amount or consideration thereof was inserted therein, and delivered to the plaintiff or his agent in the absence of the said Melissa, then said mortgage is invalid and void as against her." This instruction is undoubted law, and to refuse it was obvious error. The mortgaged premises were the homestead of the parties. Hence it was also error to refuse the instruction asked for "that if the instrument, after it passed out of Mrs. Ayres' possession and control, and in her absence, and without her consent and authority, was filled up, then it constituted no lien on the premises."

This error affected the material rights of the defendants in the court below. The mortgage was not the act or deed of Mrs. Ayres, and hence there was no "joint consent" to the alienation. Morris v. Ward, 5 Kan. *239; Dollman v. Harris, Id. *597.

W. W. Guthrie, for defendant in error.

Can a mortgage, when executed in blank and placed in the hands of an agent on which to negotiate a loan, and thereon he fills it up within the line of his authority, and delivers it a perfect instrument in a bona fide transaction, be sustained? We assert the affirmative. A mortgage does not convey a title, but only creates a lien. Chicks v. Willetts, 2 Kan. *391; Kurtz v. Spowable, 6 Kan. *397; Brenner v. Bigelow, 8 Kan. *502; Lenox v. Reed, 12 Kan. *223. A mortgage is not an alienation in this state, but is commercial paper as *182 the auxiliary of the note. Watterson v. Kirkwood, 8 Kan.

*465. Hence the authorities regarding alienations are inapplicable in this case.

Instruments take effect upon delivery, and in the condition when delivered. Knaggs v. Mastin, 9 Kan. *550; Simms v. Hervey, 19 Iowa, 296; Basford v. Pearson, 9 Allen, 387; Upton v. Archer, 41 Cal. 87. In these cases it was held that parol authority was not sufficient within the statute of frauds in the absence of the grantor. Why not in his absence, when performed in strict accordance with his intention? But in this case Wm. M. Ayres was present, and no issue in the case warranted any finding that Melissa T. Ayres was the owner of the mortgaged premises, and all such evidence was received against our objection. In Chauncey v. Arnold, 24 N. Y. 383, and Drury v. Foster, 2 Wall. 33, parol authority is sustained. In Simms v. Hervey, 19 Iowa, 297, such authority is not denied; and even in case of deed, in Fletcher v. Mansur, 5 Ind. 269, it is held that the proof may be made aliunde. The case of Preston v. Hull, p. 699, vol. 12, Amer. Law Reg. is against us, but it fails from the volume of its own weight. A decision of a Virginia court at this day, made by three judges against three judges, will hardly be held to overturn the respectable authorities cited in the editor's note to that case, or to impair the reasoning of his conclusions. But in Devin v. Heimer, 29 Iowa, 299, the doctrine contended for by plaintiff in error is completely refuted, and the exception stated in Simms v. Hervey, supra, held applicable in a case where the grantee's name in a deed was filled in after the delivery to the grantee, and the deed held valid and complete. But the doctrine as applicable to a mortgage is directly affirmed in Van Etta v. Evenson, 28 Wis. 33. And all the authorities agree that where a party is competent to ratify, and does ratify, that the deed is valid, and such ratification may be proved by parol.

But if a conveyance of title by Mrs. Ayres was claimed, the law of estoppel would apply and defeat her defense, even in case of a homestead. Knaggs v. Mastin, supra; Conover v. Porter, 14 Ohio St. 454; Curtis v. Leavitt, 15 N. Y. 47. But here this very property was under *mortgage, and about to be sacrificed at sale on foreclosure, and the money raised on this loan was used to pay off such prior mortgage. Now, Ayres and his wife claim the right (or more properly the second mortgagee Sutter does) to say that Probasco has no lien, because when this mortgage was sent out on its mission for their relief, it was not known from whom the relief was to come, and that, although the relief was afforded by Probasco, just as desired, was accepted and used by the Ayres, and the Symns mortgage thereby extinguished, that he shall lose his money in order that Ayres and wife may mortgage the place to Sutter.

On the question of usury. The notes were given in December, 1871, and payable in one and two years. The amount of principal specified in the notes was $1,100, and the rate of interest, 12 per cent. In December, 1871, the law of 1868 (Gen. St. c. 58) was in force. On June 20, 1872, sections 2, 3, 4 were repealed without any saving clause, and a new rule of recovery established. Laws 1872, p. 284. It was claimed that only $1,000 was in fact loaned, and that the extra $100 was for compensation to Challiss for his services in raising the money. If so, there was no usury: Beckwith v. Windsor Manuf'g Co., 14 Conn. 594; Beadle v. Munson, 30 Conn. 178; Thurston v. Corwell, 38 N. Y. 281. The repeal in June, 1872, was constitutional, and the law of 1872 governed, as held by the district court. Cooley, Const. Lim. 374; Bank v. Allen, 28 Conn. 101; Andrews v. Russell, 7 Blackf. 474; Walpole v. Elliott, 18 Ind. 258; Curtis v. Leavitt, 15 N. Y. 151.

VALENTINE, J. This was an action on two promissory notes and a mortgage. The notes were executed by William M. Ayres alone. The mortgage was executed (as it appears upon its face) by both Ayres and his wife, Melissa T. Ayres, and both the notes and the mortgage were executed to Richard Probasco. Probasco was the plaintiff in the court below, and Ayres and wife, Frank Sutter, and W. L. Challiss were the defendants. The defendant Ayres and wife set up as defenses to the action that the notes were usurious, \*184 and the mortgage was void. The \*transactions connected with the execution and delivery of said notes and mortgage were, so far as they are necessary to be stated, substantially as follows: Mrs. Ayres owned, and she and her husband occupied as a part of their homestead, the W.  $\frac{1}{2}$  of the S. E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 18, in township 4, of range 21 E., in Doniphan county, less ten acres out of the southwest corner of said land. Said land was mortgaged to one A. B. Symns, who was foreclosing his mortgage in the district court of Doniphan county, and the land was about to be sold to satisfy said Symns' mortgage. B. O'Driscoll was the attorney for Ayres and wife in said foreclosure suit. In order to save their land from being sacrificed, Ayres and wife concluded to try to borrow the money and pay off the mortgage. O'Driscoll acted as their agent in attempting to procure and negotiate the loan. He had an interview with W. L. Challiss, of Atchison, about the matter, and from what transpired they all expected to borrow the money of Challiss. They expected to borrow \$1,000, and to pay interest thereon at the rate of fifteen per cent. per annum. O'Driscoll furnished an ordinary printed blank mortgage, and Ayres and wife signed and acknowledged the same before E. W. Stratton, a justice of the peace of Doniphan county. O'Driscoll and Ayres then took said blank mortgage to Atchison, and went to the office of said W. L. Challiss. Challiss, however, was not loaning money for himself, but was loaning money for Richard Probasco, of Maryland. He required a greater rate of interest than fifteen per cent. per annum. O'Driscoll and Ayres finally agreed to the terms proposed by Challiss, and Ayres executed his two promissory notes which read as follows:

"$550.00.

ATCHISON, KAN., Dec. 1, 1871.

"One year after date I promise to pay to Richard Probasco, or bearer, five hundred and fifty dollars, value received, payable at Exchange Bank, with interest at 12 per cent. per annum from date until paid, and payable semi-annually.

"WILLIAM M. AYRES."

The other note is precisely the same as the above, except that it is made payable in "two years after date," instead of in one.

*185 The two notes together amounted to $1,100. O'Driscoll and Challiss then filled up the said blank mortgage so as to make it correspond with said notes, and so as to make it a security for the payment of said notes, O'Driscoll doing the principal part of the writing. They filled up the blank for the description of the land with the same land that had prior to that time been mortgaged to Symns; and they made Probasco the mortgagee. The notes and the mortgage were then delivered to Challiss, as the agent of Probasco, and in consideration therefor Challiss paid Ayres $1,000, and only $1,000. Ayres, being present all the time, agreed to all that was done, and ratified and confirmed the same. He therefore has no right to raise any question of mere irregularity in the execution of said mortgage. But the question of the execution of said mortgage is one of power, and not a question of mere irregularity, as we shall presently see. After Ayres received said money from Challiss he paid off the mortgage to Symns therewith. The notes and the mortgage to Probasco are the instruments upon which the present suit is brought.

Ayres and wife now claim that said mortgage is void, and that said notes are tainted with usury, and these are the main questions in the case. It is true that a vast number of other questions are raised, but they are mainly technical and frivolous. For instance, the first question raised (both in this court and in the court below) is upon the ground that the court below allowed the plaintiff to ask O'Driscoll a leading question. Five such questions are raised in this court, and seven such questions were raised in the court below. Indeed, the defendants even objected to the plaintiff asking the defendant

Ayres a leading question, although it was asked in a legitimate cross-examination of said Ayres. We have already stated something of the connection which O'Driscoll had with the transactions out of which this cause of action arose. O'Driscoll was also the attorney for Ayres and wife in this case in the court below. He was called as a witness for the plaintiff below. He did not show himself to be a "fast witness" for the plaintiff, but on the contrary plainly showed himself to *186 be obviously the *reverse. Yet notwithstanding all this, seven different questions that were put to him by the plaintiff were objected to by the defendants on the ground that they were "leading." Some of them were leading; but still there was scarcely the remotest possibility that the witness could be led, either from inclination on his part or from inadvertence, into testifying too favorably for the plaintiff. His evidence abundantly shows this. The court therefore did not err in permitting leading questions to be put to him. Indeed, it possibly would have been an abuse of judicial discretion if the court had refused to permit such questions to be asked.

We will now pass from the many immaterial and unsubstantial questions raised by the defendants below to the more material ones. The whole of the transactions out of which this cause of action arose, were carried on and consummated on the part of Probasco through his agent Challiss. Therefore, whatever came to the knowledge of Challiss, pending the negotiations for said loan, must be presumed to have come to the knowledge of Probasco. Notice to the agent is notice to the principal, in such a case, (Greer v. Higgins, 8 Kan. *519; 1 Pars. Cont. 74.) and delivery of the notes and mortgage to Challiss, was delivery to Probasco. Challiss was really standing in the place of Probasco in every particular.

Were said notes usurious? Certainly they were. Only $1,000 was loaned, although the notes were given for $1,100. And while under our statutes the highest rate of interest allowed to be contracted for is only twelve per cent. per annum on the amount of the debt or loan, yet in this case interest at the rate of twelve per cent. per annum was contracted for on an amount greater than the amount loaned. Twelve per cent. interest on $1,100 is more than twelve per cent. interest on $1,000. Twelve per cent. interest on $1,100 is equal to thirteen and two-tenths per cent. interest on $1,000. In 1871, when these notes were executed, all interest was forfeited if the parties *187 contracted for more than the highest *rate of interest allowed by law. Gen. St. 526, c. 51, § 4. And the laws in force when these notes were executed is the law that now governs, although a subsequent law (Laws 1872, p. 284) has been passed by the legislature. Jenness v. Cutler, 12 Kan. *500, *510-*512.

Is said mortgage void? We are reluctantly compelled to answer this question in the affirmative. Mrs. Ayres never executed said mortgage. She signed and acknowledged a paper, but this paper in legal effect was nothing. It was just such a blank mortgage as may be purchased at almost any printing office for a few cents. At the time she signed and acknowledged the same she had never heard of Richard Probasco. She did not expect the mortgage to be so filled up as to make him the mortgagee. Nor did she expect to have it filled up so as to make it a security for the payment of any sum greater than $1,000. She expected to have the mortgage filled up so as to make W. L. Challiss the mortgagee, and so as to secure the payment of just $1,000. This it may be said she authorized to have done. But even this authority was given by her only by parol. She never authorized in writing any portion of said mortgage to be filled up. It was therefore not her mortgage, even when filled up. An estate in land is usually transferred by deed. An interest in land less than an estate may probably be transferred by a simple contract in writing. But no interest in land, if it is to continue for more than one year, whether it be an estate or less than an estate, can be transferred except in writing or by operation of law. Statute of Frauds, (Gen. St. p. 505, c. 43, § 5.) And if the transfer is to be made through an agent, the agent must be authorized in writing. Id. It is true, an owner of real estate may by parol authorize an agent to make a simple contract concerning such real estate which will bind the owner personally, (Rottman v. Wasson, 5 Kan. *552;) but in such a case no interest in the land is transferred from the owner to the agent, or from the agent to the person with whom the agent contracts.

*188 No interest in the land passes *from the owner to any one, and the person with whom the agent contracts gets no interest in the land. If the contract is broken by the owner, the remedy of the other party is an action against the owner personally, either for the specific performance of the contract, or for damages. There is a vast difference between authorizing an agent to transfer an interest in land, and authorizing him to make a contract which will have the effect to compel the owner of the land personally to transfer at some future time such interest. The agent cannot be authorized to do the first by parol, (see said section 5 of the Statute of Frauds,) but he may be authorized to do the second by parol. Rottman v. Wasson, supra. Now, a mortgage of real estate, although it may not be technically an estate in land, yet it certainly is an interest in land. It is in form a conveyance, and is in fact a lien that may be paramount to any subsequent conveyance, lien, or incumbrance. It is an incipient and conditional alienation of the estate that may eventually overturn and destroy the homestead interest of the mortgagor, and may wholly absorb and swallow up every other right or interest which he may have in the mortgaged premises. It is indefinite in its duration. It is co-existent and co-extensive with the debt which it is made to secure; and nothing but the extinguishment of the debt will destroy it. In the present case one of the notes which the mortgage was made to secure was to run two years before it became due. Therefore, as a mortgage of real estate creates an interest in the land of indefinite duration, even if Mrs. Ayres had authorized O'Driscoll or her husband by parol to fill up said blank mortgage, as it afterwards was filled up, the authority would have been void. Upon this proposition the authorities in the different states are conflicting; or at least, the law upon this subject is different in the different states, as shown by the decisions thereof. But the great preponderance of authority, both in this country and in England, lays down the doctrine as we have stated it. See the following authorities: Burns v. Lynde, 6 Allen, 305; Preston v. Hull, 28 Grat. 600; People v. Organ, 27 Ill. 27; *189 *Ingram v. *Little*, 14 Ga. 173; Upton v. Archer, 41 Cal. 85; McMurtry v. Frank, 4 T. B. Mon. 39; Cummins v. Cassily, 5 B. Mon. 75; Williams v. Crutcher, 5 How. (Miss.) 71; Mosby v. State, 4 Sneed, 324; Graham v. Holt, 8 Ired. 300; Byers v. McClanahan, 6 Gill & J. 250; Blood v. Goodrich, 9 Wend. 68; 12 Wend. 525; Worrall v. Munn, 5 N. Y. 229, 239; Cross v. State Bank, 5 Ark. 25; Ayres v. Harness, 1 Ohio, 368; Perminter v. McDaniel, 1 Hill, (S. C.) 267.

Is Mrs. Ayres estopped from denying that said mortgage is her mortgage? We think not. This case is obviously dissimilar from the case of Knaggs v. Mastin, 9 Kan. *532, *548, et seq. It may be just as immoral for Ayres and wife to claim that their mortgage is void, as it was for Knaggs and wife to claim that their deed was void; but still there are distinctions between the two cases which render them very dissimilar from each other. The instrument in this case was not filled up as Mrs. Ayres had directed that it should be filled up, while the instrument in the other case was filled up just as Mrs. Knaggs had directed. And the mortgagee in this case, through his agent Challiss, was perfectly cognizant of all the facts connected with the execution of the mortgage at the time the mortgage was delivered to him, and at the time he parted with his money, while the grantee in the other case was wholly ignorant of all the irregularities in the execution of said deed at the time the deed was delivered to him, and at the time he parted with his money, and for a long time afterwards. Both Mrs. Ayres and Mrs. Knaggs enjoyed the benefit of the money, or a portion thereof, procured by means of their respective instruments, and in this respect only (so far as any foundation for equitable estoppel is concerned) are the two cases similar. But merely enjoying the benefit of money, procured irregularly and wrongfully, is not of itself a sufficient ground upon which to found an equitable estoppel, so as thereby to make what would otherwise be a void deed or *190 mortgage a valid instrument. A party invoking the aid of *estoppel must himself show that he has been vigilant and careful in the protection of his own rights and interests. Where a person negligently or knowingly puts it within the power of some other person to swindle and defraud him, and he is thereby swindled and defrauded, he is generally allowed to suffer the consequences of his own negligence and folly. Neither the courts nor the law can undertake to protect men of sound mind from all the consequences of their own negligence and follies. The rule of estoppel in pais will be found stated in the case of Clark v. Coolidge, 8 Kan. *189, *196. Mr. Probasco ought to have said, through his agent Challiss, when O'Driscoll and Ayres desired to borrow said money from him, and offered to deliver said mortgage to him, "I know that mortgage is void, as a mortgage of Mrs. Ayres; I will therefore not receive it. You must furnish me a better mortgage if you want the money."

If said mortgage had been on the property of Ayres, and on any other property than the homestead of Ayres and wife, it would have been valid as to Ayres, although void as to his wife. But this mortgage was on the property of Mrs. Ayres, and on property occupied as the homestead of herself and husband. Is the mortgage therefor valid as to Ayres (the husband,) or is it absolutely void? We think it is absolutely void. Const. Kan. art. 15 § 9; Morris v. Ward, 5 Kan. *239; Dollman v. Harris, Id. *597. A mortgage is a contingent alienation of the mortgaged premises. It is a lien thereon that may finally engulf and swallow up the whole estate. And such alienation can only be effected, and the lien created, by the joint consent of the husband and wife. Const. art. 15, § 9, and cases above cited. Now, as Mrs. Ayres did not give her consent to said mortgage, it is void as to her; and being void as to her, it must also necessarily be void as to her husband, there being no joint consent of the husband and wife. This virtually leaves Probasco without any security on his notes, so far as the case is now presented to us. It is true that Challiss received from Ayres as collateral security two *191 other *notes, given by Lloyd McNamee to Ayres on the purchase by McNamee of another portion of the Ayres homestead, which notes were merely delivered to Challiss without indorsement. McCrum v. Corby, 11 Kan. *465, *470. And as Ayres and wife had never made a deed to McNamee for the premises, Ayres made a deed to Challiss therefor, in order to enable Challiss to make a deed to McNamee for the premises, and then to collect the McNamee notes. But as this deed was executed by Ayres alone, and for a portion of his homestead, it was also void. And as Ayres and wife now refuse to make a good deed to either Challiss or to McNamee, or to any one else on said sale to McNamee, said collateral security may not be worth very much. As McNamee was not made a party to this suit, and as there has not been any sufficient showing as to whether Ayres and wife could be compelled to make a good deed for said premises to McNamee, we cannot tell whether Challiss and Probasco may have said premises sold to satisfy the McNamee notes and the proceeds thereof applied in payment or part payment of the notes given by Ayres to Probasco. Stevens v. Chadwick, 10 Kan. *406. The only judgment that could be rendered in this case in favor of Probasco, as the case is now presented to us, would be a personal judgment against William M. Ayres for the amount of the first note, without interest. Perhaps however, upon a second trial, with the pleadings amended, and other evidence introduced, and other findings made, other and additional relief may be granted to the plaintiff Probasco.

The judgment of the court below will be reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

KINGMAN, C. J., concurring.

BREWER, J. I concur in all the propositions of the syllabus except No. 5, and also in the reversal of the judgment; but it seems to me, that the principles of the case of Swift v. Kraemer, 13 Cal. 526, are applicable here, and should control the future disposition of this case.

THE CASE ON REHEARING.

The foregoing opinion was filed January 19, 1875. A motion *192 *was made by defendant in error, Probasco, for a rehearing.

Said motion was heard and submitted at said term. Said motion was argued orally by W. W. Guthrie, on the part of Probasco, defendant in error.

The following opinion was filed June 29, 1875:

VALENTINE, J. The defendant in error moves the court for a rehearing in this case. And in his brief and oral argument urges many reasons why he thinks a rehearing should be granted. Among his reasons are these, that the court has mistaken the facts of the case; the court has mistaken the law; the decision was by a divided court; the principal question in the case had been settled otherwise, in the case of Knaggs v. Mastin, 9 Kan. *532; Mrs. Ayres by her subsequent acts has ratified the mortgage sued on, and is now estopped from claiming that it is not her mortgage, or that it is void, etc. We shall consider the principal reasons he offers for a rehearing, as we pass along. That Mrs. Ayres executed nothing but an ordinary "blank mortgage," there is not the slightest room for controversy. All the evidence upon the subject, and the findings of the jury, incontrovertibly show it. On December 5, 1871, O'Driscoll procured an ordinary blank mortgage and handed it to E. W. Stratton, the justice of the peace before whom the acknowledgment was taken. Said justice then took this blank mortgage to the farm of Ayres and wife, and then and there took their signatures and acknowledgment, and then returned the blank, with merely said signatures, and the acknowledgment filled up, to O'Driscoll, at his office in Doniphan, Doniphan county. Mrs. Ayres never saw the instrument afterwards. On the next day, December 6th, Ayres and O'Driscoll went to Atchison, Atchison county, when and where the transactions out of which this action arose were finally consummated. They took with them said blank mortgage. The facts so far are incontrovertible.

*193 *We shall now quote from the evidence what some of the principal witnesses say with regard to the transactions at Atchison. W. L. Challiss among other things testifies as follows: "When I first saw the mortgage, the name 'Richard Probasco' was not in it. W. W. Guthrie was present. He was acting as my attorney. '$1,100' was not in it. O'Driscoll wrote this. The name of Richard Probasco was written in it afterwards. Mrs. Ayres was not present. Don't know that Mrs. Ayres knew that $1,100 was written in it. All was filled up over the acknowledgment except 'Richard Probasco of the state of Maryland,' 'eleven hundred dollars,' and 'eleven hundred dollars, payable in one and two years with interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum, semi-annually payable.' I think the word 'his' in the eighth line is in Mr. Guthrie's handwriting. Also the word 'two' in the twenty-first line of the mortgage. Also the letter 'y' in the twenty-third line; and the letter 'y' and the word 'his' in the twenty-fourth line, are in Mr. Guthrie's handwriting, and perhaps some other letters and words. The words, 'of the county of Atchison, and state of Kansas,' were not stricken out of it when I first saw it. They were stricken out afterwards, I think, by myself. Mrs. Ayres was not present. I had no authority from her to change this mortgage. * * * Richard Probasco lives in Maryland. I was acting as his agent. Guthrie wrote the words, 'Richard Probasco of the state of Maryland,' in the office on the sixth of December, 1871, after negotiations for the loan were effected, and papers filled up and executed. 'Richard Probasco of the state of Maryland,' was written in by Guthrie, and the words 'of the county of Atchison, and state of Kansas,' were erased by me. I first saw O'Driscoll and Ayres on the sixth of December about this matter, after dinner about 2 o'clock, when the matter was all arranged. The money was paid in my office in Atchison. After negotiations had been concluded, I took the mortgage to Guthrie to be examined. He inserted the words, 'Richard Probasco of the state of Maryland,' and made some other slight alterations. I returned the mortgage back to O'Driscoll, and he delivered it back to me after the money was paid, along with the notes."

O'Driscoll testifies: "The mortgage was not after it was filled up ever sent back to Mrs. Ayres. When I delivered it to Challiss *194 *it was *certainly in blank except the acknowledgment, and perhaps the date and the signatures.*" [This has reference probably to the first delivery of the mortgage to Challiss. What follows has reference to the last and final delivery:] "The name of Richard Probasco was not in it when I delivered it to Challiss. The amount was put in after I made the formal delivery. It was not passed back to me after the name of Probasco was inserted in it. It never came back to me. Challiss took the mortgage with the full knowledge that the grantee's name was not in it. I never directed Guthrie to write the name in the mortgage, nor was it done in my presence. * * * I never had the mortgage in my hand after the '$1,100' was inserted. I am not sure the '$1,100' was put in after Challiss went to dinner, but I am sure Probasco's name was not in it while Challiss was gone to dinner. Challiss asked to take the mortgage and have it examined by his attorney. After dinner he produced the mortgage, and laid it on the table with the quitclaim deed. When the notes were drawn up and the papers signed, I delivered the mortgage not filled up as now."

William M. Ayres testifies: "It [the mortgage] has never been in my hands nor under my control since it was taken from my house by Stratton. This mortgage was never under my control after acknowledgment by Stratton. Don't know who filled up the mortgage. Don't think I ever saw it after acknowledgment."

From the circumstances of the case we would think that Ayres must have at least seen the outside of the mortgage after the acknowledgment was taken; that he must have been informed as to what it contained after it was filled up, and that he must have assented to it. The evidence however is conclusive that Mrs. Ayres never saw the mortgage after her acknowledgment was taken at her house by Stratton, the justice. Mr. Guthrie did not testify in the case. There is no pretense that Mrs. Ayres ever in writing authorized any person to fill up said blank mortgage. There is no pretense that she ever in any way authorized any person except O'Driscoll to fill it up. The evidence is positive that she did not authorize her husband to do so. And the only authority that O'Driscoll got is shown merely by inference and implication.

*195 *Mrs. Ayres testifies: "I never gave O'Driscoll any authority to fill up this mortgage over my name; never had any talk with him or Challiss."

The evidence, however, would seem to show that Mrs. Ayres understood that said blank mortgage was to be so filled up as to make it a mortgage to William L. Challiss on her property to secure a loan from Challiss for $1,000, with interest at the rate of 15 per cent. per annum; that O'Driscoll was to negotiate and secure the loan, and that she signed and acknowledged said blank mortgage with that understanding. This was probably sufficient for the jury to find, as they did, that O'Driscoll had authority from her to fill up said blank mortgage as she understood it was to be filled up. But the jury also found that O'Driscoll did not negotiate the loan. This finding, however, is as we think against the evidence. But whatever authority Mrs. Ayres may have given, she never either in writing or by parol or otherwise gave any authority to O'Driscoll or to any one else to fill up said blank mortgage as it was finally filled up by O'Driscoll, Challiss, and Guthrie. These persons filled up the blanks so as to make the instrument a mortgage to a different person from what Mrs. Ayres intended it should be, to make it secure a greater amount of money than she intended, and so as to make the money actually received draw a greater rate of interest than she intended. (The interest on $1,000 for one and two years at 12 per cent. per annum with $100 added as a bonus is more than the interest on $1,000 at 15 per cent. per annum.) And it was even dated back five days before she signed and acknowledged the same, for what reason is not fully disclosed. The notes which the mortgage purports to secure were not in existence when this instrument was signed and acknowledged. Nor were they in existence until December 6th. Yet they, as well as the mortgage, were dated back to December 1st. But the persons who filled the blanks in said mortgage not only filled the blanks, but they also erased portions of what *196 the instrument actually contained when it was signed and acknowledged. For this they had no authority from Mrs. Ayres. They actually altered a portion of the instrument without any authority whatever from Mrs. Ayres. The evidence of Challiss above quoted shows this. The delivery of the mortgage was also unauthorized. Mrs. Ayres never consented that Probasco should be her mortgagee. She never consented that the mortgage should be delivered to him. And therefore, as the delivery to him was unauthorized by her, the delivery was wholly void as to her. There is no evidence showing that Mrs. Ayres ever knew, until she was so informed by the commencement of this suit, that said instrument was in fact filled up in a different manner from what she expected it would be filled up when she signed and acknowledged the same, or that it was in fact delivered to a different person as mortgagee from the one she expected it to be delivered to when she signed and acknowledged it. There is no evidence showing that she ever had the possession or control of any of the money procured by virtue of said mortgage, but on the contrary the reverse is shown. There is no evidence showing that her husband took home even the smallest portion of said money, or that he even had it to take home when he left Atchison, or that she ever saw any portion of the same; but on the contrary, the evidence tends to show that he expended nearly all of it in Atchison before he left, and that she never saw any portion of the same. A large portion of said money was however probably expended in paying off a judgment which was probably a lien on the land covered by said mortgage, and to that extent Mrs. Ayres received the benefit of said money. But this benefit she received involuntarily. The benefit was conferred upon her before she knew that the loan was finally consummated, or that the money was procured. The money was paid to discharge said judgment before her husband left Atchison.

Under these circumstances it can hardly be said that Mrs. Ayres ratified said mortgage after it was finally filled up, or that she is now *197 estopped from denying that the same is her mort*gage. She could hardly ratify a thing that she did not know existed, and can hardly be estopped by acts which she never performed, and upon which the other party never acted. As we have before stated, there is no evidence showing that Mrs. Ayres ever beforehand authorized said mortgage to be filled up, as it was in fact filled up, or ever afterwards knew that the same was so filled up, or ever knew that it was delivered to Probasco as the mortgagee, or ever performed an act which could be construed into a ratification of the instrument; and Probasco through his agent had full knowledge that the mortgage was executed merely in blank, and in the manner in which it was executed. As to estoppel, see Big. Estop. 480; 5 U. S. Dig. (1st Series) 446 et seq., and cases there cited.

There is such an obvious distinction between this case and the case of Knaggs v. Mastin, 9 Kan. *532, that we do not think it is necessary for us to point out the distinctions further than we have already done in the original opinion in this case. See opinion in the Knaggs Case, 9 Kan. *548. But even if there were no distinction between the two cases, still, as the mortgage in this case was executed December 6, 1871, and the case of Knaggs v. Mastin was not decided till June 4, 1872, we hardly suppose that Probasco or his agent was very badly misled by that decision when said mortgage was executed. We have no doubt, however, of the correctness of that decision.

It is claimed that Mrs. Ayres cannot show title in herself to the mortgaged premises. The mortgage purports to be a joint mortgage on the part of Ayres and his wife. It does not purport to show that the title to the premises is in one any more than in the other; and the pleadings do not show in whom the title is. They merely show that the land is in the possession of both and their family, and is occupied and claimed by both as their homestead. Now, a rule in such a case that would exclude Mrs. Ayres from showing title *198 in herself would also exclude *Ayres from showing title in himself, and therefore virtually exclude both from showing title.

But it in fact makes no difference in whom the title is, so that it is in one or the other, or in both. A mortgage of the homestead, without the joint consent of the husband and wife is void, without regard to whether one, or the other, or both, holds the title. Const. art. 15, § 9; Morris v. Ward, 5 Kan. *239; Dollman v. Harris, 5 Kan. *597.

We suppose that, from the pleadings and mortgage, the title would be presumed to be in both jointly, but the evidence showed that it was in Mrs. Ayres.

The judgment of the court below was reversed in this court by a unanimous court. Whether the court would agree upon all the questions that may eventually be raised in the case is not now known. For myself, however, I would say that I am inclined to think that whenever a person advances money with the consent of the owner of a homestead to extinguish some lien upon the homestead, with the understanding of the parties that the person so advancing the money shall acquire a lien upon the homestead, such person will in equity acquire such lien to the extent of the money so advanced and so used to extinguish such first-mentioned lien, notwithstanding the instrument intended by the parties to create the lien, in favor of the party advancing the money, or to be evidence of such lien, may be void. The prior liens on the Ayres homestead that were extinguished with the money obtained from Probasco are so indefinitely shown by the record and proceedings in this case that we cannot now render any judgment with regard to them. They are in fact so indefinitely and obscurely shown that it would hardly be proper for us to even intimate any opinion concerning them. What we have said in this, and in the original opinion, with regard to them is founded merely upon inferences drawn from vague portions of the record; and while the facts, as we have stated them, are probably not more favorable to Probasco than the facts really are, yet we have stated them more favorably to him than the record would really warrant. From what we *199 have already stated it *follows that a rehearing in this case cannot be granted; and the judgment as heretofore rendered in this court must remain as it is.

A final judgment cannot be ordered to be rendered upon the findings of the jury as they now stand, because neither party is entirely satisfied with the findings. Some of the findings are without evidence, and some of them are against the evidence; and many exceptions were taken during the trial. The ends of justice could probably be better subserved by a new trial upon the merits, with an opportunity of getting all the facts more properly before the court. We have examined all the authorities cited by counsel for Probasco, and not one of them is in conflict with the decision as rendered in this case. It is possible that some of them are in conflict with the fifth proposition stated in the syllabus. But even if that proposition is not good law, still this case must be decided just as it has been decided. It was not really necessary in this case that we should have decided said fifth proposition of the syllabus, and hence what is said therein, and the corresponding portion of the original opinion, may be treated merely as dictum. But as the great weight of authority both in England and in this country, and our own statutes, (Gen. St. 505, § 5,) are in favor of that proposition, it will not be very safe for any one to act as though it was not the law. The strongest decision in favor of Probasco cited by counsel is the case of Van Etta v. Evenson, 28 Wis. 33. The Wisconsin court, however, seems to have had but very few of the numerous authorities upon the question before them, although they seem to suppose they had all of them; and they labored under the erroneous belief that the weight of authority was with their decision. And from the briefs of counsel, and the opinion of the court, in that case, it would seem that they have no such statute in Wisconsin upon the subject as we have in this state, as no such statute was referred to by either court or counsel. We suppose, however, that they have the statute, and that they merely overlooked it.<sup>1</sup> But whether that decision is right or wrong, it does not decide this case.

Motion overruled.

NOTE OF HON. W. C. WEBB, State Reporter.

Upon the filing of the foregoing opinion denying a rehearing, and the remanding the case to the Doniphan district court, Probasco, at the March term, 1875, of said district court, dismissed his action to foreclose said mortgage, so far as he could. The defendants (Ayres and wife) insisted that the action should be retained as to the affirmative relief claimed by them in their answers, (to-wit, that said pretended mortgage should be adjudged to be void, and be surrendered up to be canceled, and that the record thereof be satisfied.) The action thereupon proceeded to trial, and judgment upon the issue joined by the defendants' answers and plaintiff's reply, and the district court rendered judgment in favor of Ayres and wife, setting aside and canceling the mortgage of Probasco.

Upon dismissing his action in the Doniphan district court, as above stated, Probasco commenced an action in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Kansas to foreclose his said mortgage. Ayres and wife answered, setting up two defenses—First, that the mortgage was void, as to which they stated the facts regarding the execution and delivery of said mortgage in blank; and for a second defense the defendants pleaded the judgment of the Doniphan district court, decreeing said mortgage to be null and void, in bar of the action, and set out a transcript of the record in the case of Probasco v. Ayres and others in said Doniphan district court. At the November term, 1875, of the United States circuit court, Judge DILLON, circuit judge, decided that the judgment of the Doniphan district court, even if erroneous, could not be reviewed by him, and that as the final judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction it was a bar to the action brought by Probasco in the circuit court to foreclose said mortgage.

The following is the section of the Kansas Statute of Frauds, referred to by the court:

"Sec. 5. No leases, estates, or interests, of, in, or out of lands, exceeding one year in duration, shall at any time hereafter be assigned or granted, unless it be by deed or note in writing, signed by the party so assigning or granting the same, or their agents thereunto lawfully authorized by writing, or by act and operation of law." Gen. St. 1868, p. 505.

The following is the corresponding section of the Wisconsin Statute of Frauds, to-wit:

"Sec. 6. No estate or interest in lands, other than leases for a term not exceeding one year, nor any trust or power over or concerning lands, or in any manner relating thereto, shall hereafter be created, granted, assigned, surrendered, or declared, unless by act or operation of law, or by deed or conveyance in writing, subscribed by the party creating, granting, assigning, surrendering, or declaring the same, or by his lawful agent thereunto authorized by writing." Rev. St. Wis. 1858, p. 613; 2 Tayl. St. p. 1254.

Under this section the supreme court of Wisconsin held in Smith v. Clarke, 7 Wis. 551, 584, that an assignment of a school-land certificate in blank, was void. In Vliet v. Camp, 13 Wis. 198, it was held that a warrant of attorney to confess judgment upon a note, which described the note as to makers, date, amount, and rate of interest, and name of

January Term, 1875.

1. Amendments: Amending Petition: Changing the Action. Where a plaintiff files his petition setting up that he is in possession of certain real estate, that he holds the equitable title thereto, that the defendant holds the legal title thereto, but that he holds it in trust for the plaintiff, and asks to have the defendant compelled to convey the legal title to himself, the court does not err by allowing him to amend his petition so as to make it an ordinary petition in an action to quiet title to the same land and against the same defendant.<sup>1</sup>
2. Trust: Legal Title Acquired by Fraud. Where the defendant, by false and fraudulent representations, obtained a deed of conveyance from the plaintiff, but never paid anything for the property conveyed, and the plaintiff afterwards placed the defendant in as good a condition as he was before the conveyance, and in the same condition, it is not error for the court to hold, when asked to do so by the plaintiff, that the defendant holds the legal title to the property conveyed in trust for the plaintiff, and to render judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the title to said property.<sup>2</sup>

attorney, but which warrant, when executed, was in blank as to the payees named in the note, but was properly filled by the attorney named before confessing the judgment, was valid, and the judgment rightly confessed. The case as reported shows that the note itself, containing the names of the payees, was written on the same sheet of paper as the warrant of attorney. The point was not raised, that the authority of the attorney to fill the blank was not in writing. It was claimed on the one side that filling the blank was a material alteration of a written instrument, and on the other that it was an immaterial alteration. In Van Etta v. Evenson, 28 Wis. 33, (cited in the text by counsel for defendant in error, and referred to in the opinion,) the facts are these: One Hegg had negotiated with an agent for a loan of money for himself, but did not know the name of the principal. He made his note which was signed by himself and by his stepfather, Evenson, complete in all respects except as to the name of the payee, which was left blank. A mortgage to secure said note was made by Evenson and wife, complete in all respects except as to the name of the mortgagee, which was left blank. The mortgage was delivered to Hegg to be used by him as security for the money to be obtained on said note. He took the note and mortgage to the agent, where he learned the principal's name, (Van Etta,) which he then and there inserted as payee and mortgagee. Evenson afterwards claimed that the mortgage was void. The court said, (28 Wis. 37:) "The only question of law in the case is as to the authority of Hegg thus to fill the blanks," and that while it did not appear that Evenson "directly or expressly authorized Hegg to insert the name of the plaintiff or of any particular person," yet "his authority to do so, if it existed, is to be implied from the facts and circumstances of the execution and delivery of the papers," from which such "intention" of Evenson "is clearly manifested;" and following the case of Vliet v. Camp, supra, the court held that "the subsequent insertion of the name of the payee and mortgagee by Hegg was a valid execution of an implied authority that the same should be so inserted by him." In the case in this court (Ayres v. Probasco) the "mortgage" was in blank as to the land itself, the amount loaned, the rate of interest, date of the note, and day of payment, as well as to the name of the mortgagee, when signed by Ayres and wife.

Error from Jefferson district court.

Action by defendant in error to establish a trust, and compel plaintiff in error to reconvey. The land in controversy was a fractional quarter section in Jefferson county. By amendment of the petition the action was converted into an action to quiet title. It appeared from evidence that in 1861 the defendant in error was the owner in fee of the land in question, and he then and ever since has occupied the same with his family as a homestead; that he conveyed said land to plaintiff in error, his son, by deed, in February, 1863. Trial at the May term, 1870. The decree is as follows:

"This cause having been duly heard, and the findings of the court having been filed, whereby the court finds for the plaintiff and against the defendant, now, therefore, on motion of the plaintiff, it is adjudged and decreed that the said Jesse Newell is the owner and in possession of the land and premises described in the pleadings herein, to-wit, [describing the land;] and it is further adjudged and decreed that all claims of the defendant, Abraham Newell, to said land and premises be henceforth held for naught, and that the said defendant be forever enjoined, restrained, and forbidden from making any sale, conveyance, or incumbrance of said land and premises, or any part thereof, except such as is directed by this judgment; and that said defendant, within thirty days from this date, make, execute, acknowledge, and deliver to the said plaintiff, Jesse Newell, a deed conveying any and all interest of said Abraham Newell in said land and premises, with the appurtenances thereof, to the said Jesse Newell; and in case the said defendant fails to make said conveyance, as required by this judgment, then this judgment or decree shall stand and operate, both at law and in equity, as such conveyance, and shall have the same operation and effect as if said conveyance had been executed conformably to this judgment. It is further considered and adjudged that the plaintiff recover of and from the defendant his costs in this action, to be taxed."

J. B. Johnson and J. Safford, for plaintiff in error.

John W. Day, Clough & Wheat, and Ross Burns, for defendant in error, contended that there was no error in permitting the filing of the amended petition, and cited section 140 of the Civil Code; Smith v. Palmer, 6 Cush. 519; Swan v. Nesmith, 7 Pick. 220; Merrill v. Russell, 12 N. H. 74; Carbaga v. Seeger, 17 Pa. St. 518; 3 Estee, Pl. 293, 298. They also contended that as the property was conveyed to plaintiff in error in trust, to hold as agent, and to sell to pay debts, etc., those debts having been paid, he should now reconvey,—citing Morris v. Nixon's Ex'rs, 1 How. 126; Baldwin v. Peet, 22 Tex. 708; Hidden v. Jordan, 21 Cal. 93; Sheriff v. Neal, 6 Watts, 540; and parol evidence is admissible to show that said conveyance was in trust for payment of the debts, etc. Jackson v. Lodge, 36 Cal. 28; Conway's Ex'rs v. Alexander, 7 Cranch, 238; Nicoll v. Huntington's Trustees, 1 Johns. Ch. 167; Hayworth v. Worthington, 5 Blackf. 361;

Babcock v. Wyman, 19 How. 299; Hill, Trustees, (3d Am. Ed.) 165, (original Ed. 107, 108.) If it is contended that Jesse Newell conveyed the premises in controversy to Abraham Newell with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud his creditors, the answer is that as *204 the property conveyed was the homestead of said Jesse, *and not subject to levy and sale under execution, it was no fraud upon creditors to thus convey said property. Section 9, art. 15, Const.; Cusic v. Douglas, 3 Kan. *123; Benz v. Hines, Id. *390; Dreutzer v. Bell, 11 Wis. 114; Glezen v. Rood, 4 Metc. 490; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 367; Leslie v. Joyner, 2 Head, 514.

VALENTINE, J. Jesse Newell was plaintiff in the court below and Abraham Newell was defendant. The principal object of the action was to obtain a judicial determination that the plaintiff had a better right to a certain piece of real estate than the defendant, and to obtain a decree in favor of the plaintiff for the title thereto. The plaintiff filed his petition setting up that he was in the possession of said real estate, that he held the equitable title thereto, that the defendant held the legal title thereto, but that he held it in trust for the plaintiff, and asked to have the defendant compelled to convey the legal title to himself. The defendant answered, and the plaintiff replied. The plaintiff then, with leave of the court, amended his petition so that the action was really converted into an action to quiet the title to said premises in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant. The defendant excepted to the ruling of the court allowing said amended petition to be filed, and now assigns the same for error. We perceive no error, however, in such ruling.

The defendant afterwards answered to said amended petition, and the plaintiff replied. The parties then proceeded to trial before the court without a jury. The court made special findings of fact and of law. The most of the findings of fact are unquestionably sustained by the evidence. All of them are sustained by some evidence. And not one of them so lacks evidence to sustain it that we can set it aside or grant a new trial therefor. It seems from the record that Jesse Newell, the plaintiff, is the father of Abraham Newell, the defendant; that in 1861 the plaintiff was in debt; that he was about to enter the military service of the United States; and that he *205 desired before doing *so to make some provision for the payment of his debts. He finally conveyed some or all of his property, real and personal, to his son Abraham, with the parol understanding and agreement that Abraham would sell a sufficient amount thereof to pay said debts, and would then reconvey the balance thereof to his father. Some of said property was sold, and with the proceeds thereof, and with money obtained by the plaintiff, all of said debts were paid. The property in controversy was a portion of the property conveyed by the plaintiff to the defendant. The property in controversy was at the time it was so conveyed, and has been ever since, in the possession of the plaintiff, and occupied by himself and family, as a homestead. No part of the same was sold to pay said debts, and the legal title thereto still remains in the defendant. And although the defendant should now reconvey the title to said property to his father, in accordance with their parol agreement and understanding, yet he refuses to do so, and claims the property as his own. The court below, among other things, found as follows:

"(9) That the defendant, Abraham Newell, fraudulently and designedly induced plaintiff, by false and fraudulent representations that he would faithfully act as agent of said plaintiff, to execute to him the said conveyance of the land in controversy, with the fraudulent intent not to reconvey said land to said plaintiff, as was then and there agreed upon between them as aforesaid.

"(10) That the defendant, Abraham Newell, at the time of the execution of the conveyance aforesaid by plaintiff to him, said defendant, received said conveyance and excepted said agency with the fraudulent intent and design of retaining said land as his own, and with the fraudulent intent not to reconvey said land to said plaintiff, as was then and there agreed between them as aforesaid."

Now, as the defendant obtained said conveyance from the plaintiff by false and fraudulent representations, we suppose we should hold the same void as between the parties when asked to do so by the innocent party; for fraud vitiates everything it touches. Or at least we should hold that the party who obtained the conveyance *206 fraudulently holds the legal *title to the property in trust for the other party, and should surrender the same whenever called upon to do so by such other party. The defendant holds nothing but the bare naked legal title. He never had possession of the property. He never paid anything for it. The debts of the plaintiff have all been paid. And the defendant has been amply paid for all his services for the plaintiff. It is true the defendant gave his promissory notes for the property at the time the conveyance was made. But it was understood and agreed between the parties that the notes should never be paid, and they never have been paid, but, on the contrary, they have been surrendered to the court below for the benefit of the defendant. The notes were probably given by the defendant as a partial covering for the fraud he was then intending and attempting to perpetrate. The defendant has lost nothing, and has been placed in as good a condition as he was before the conveyance was made, and in the same condition. We therefore think that the judgment of the court below declaring that the title of the plaintiff was paramount to that of the defendant, and decreeing title to the plaintiff, should be affirmed.

This case differs from the case of Morrall v. Waterson, 7 Kan. *199, in at least two respects. In this case the deed was obtained fraudulently; in that it was not. And in this case the deed was executed for the purpose of enabling the grantee to sell the property, and thereby to pay certain debts; in that case no such purpose was disclosed. It is possible that the judgment of the court below might be sustained, even if said deed had not been procured by fraud; but we do not now wish to so decide. The consideration of any deed may be inquired into, not for the purpose of invalidating the deed, but for the purpose of ascertaining rights founded upon the particular consideration, and upon other and extrinsic circumstances. Thus, the real consideration along with other circumstances may be inquired into, and may render a deed absolute upon its face a mortgage. Moore v. Wade, 8 Kan. *381, *387. Or such consideration and other *207 circumstances connected with a deed absolute upon its face, given to a surety, may give a co-surety, or the creditor, an equitable lien on the property conveyed, and render said surety a trustee for his co-surety and creditor. Seibert v. Thompson, 8 Kan. *65; Seibert v. True, Id. *52. Or such consideration and other circumstances connected with a deed given to one person may create a resulting trust in favor of another person not mentioned in the deed. Franklin v. Colley, 10 Kan. *260. And such consideration and other circumstances may be shown by parol evidence.

Judgment affirmed.

G. S. ANDERSON and others v. RELEAF KENT.<sup>1</sup>

January Term, 1875.

1. Homestead: Evidence: Declarations of Party in Possession. Where the question is as to the existence of a homestead interest, declarations made in disparagement thereof, by the party alleged to have possessed it, and made during the time of the alleged possession, are competent evidence in favor of one claiming adversely.
2. ———: Abandonment before Sale. Where A. claimed title by virtue of a deed from B. of certain premises which had theretofore been the homestead of B. and his family, and of which the legal title was in B.; and where it appears that B.'s family consisted only of himself and wife, and that more than a month prior to the deed B.'s wife had left the place and abandoned him with the intention of never returning to either; that, three weeks before, B. had sold the furniture in the house to the grantee in the deed; and that, on the day of its execution, B. had surrendered possession and left the city: held, that in a contest between the grantee in the deed and subsequent judgment creditors of B., this court will not reverse a finding to the effect that the homestead interest of B. and his wife had so far ceased prior to the execution of the deed as to make it a valid conveyance.

3. Ejectment: Another Trial: Waiver of Right to. Where, after a judgment in an action of ejectment, the defeated party filed his motion for a new trial under section 806 of the Code, which was properly over-

Error from Miami district court.

The case is stated in the opinion.

W. R. Wagstaff and J. A. Hoag, for plaintiffs in error.

Defendant in error claims title by deed bearing date June 18, 1872, and signed by Renfro alone. Renfro was a married man, and at that date the lot in controversy was his homestead. Hence said deed of June 18th is null and void, and conveys no title, and consequently cannot be the foundation for an action of ejectment. Const. art. 15, § 9; Morris v. Ward, 5 Kan. *239; Dollman v. Harris, Id. *597; Anderson v. Anderson, 9 Kan. *112; Poole v. Gerrard, 6 Cal. 71. The sheriff's deed conveyed to Anderson & Potts all the interest that Renfro and wife had in the premises on the twenty-sixth of June, at which time the homestead right had ceased by reason of the abandonment of both Renfro and wife. It is on this ground of voluntary abandonment that Anderson & Potts claim to have acquired a lien on the premises. This lien was acquired eight days after the execution of the pretended deed to Mrs. Kent, and eight days after the premises were abandoned by Renfro. The deed to Mrs. Kent is void because at the date of its execution and delivery Renfro was in the actual possession of the premises, and on the same day he declared to *209 his creditors that he held said premises as a *homestead. If

Renfro had not declared the premises to be his homestead, occupancy is presumptive evidence of the appropriation of a place as a homestead, and is notice to all. Cook v. McChristian, 4 Cal. 23; Taylor v. Hargous, Id. 268.

The court erred in admitting in evidence the letter signed "Bettie," which was objected to by plaintiffs in error. The letter contains communications made by husband and wife to each other during the marriage, and the objection that it was incompetent went to that point. Civil Code, § 323. There was no proof that said letter was in the handwriting of Betsey J. Renfro, nor that the direction upon the envelope was in her handwriting; and we submit that the evidence, until such proof be made, is incompetent. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 577; 2 Wait, Law & Pr. 365, 366.

Simpson & Brayman, for defendant in error.

Mrs. Renfro is not here asserting the conveyance to defendant in error to be void, and it is respectfully submitted that she is the only person that can raise that question. The constitution and homestead exemption laws confer a personal privilege, which the householder may waive or not, at his option. Chamberlain v. Lyell, 3 Mich. 448. The statutory provision, that no conveyance of a homestead shall be valid unless the wife joins therein, means only that a conveyance made by the husband alone shall not affect the joint right to enjoy the land as a homestead. Gee v. Moore, 14 Cal. 472. Therefore a conveyance by the husband alone, passes the title subject only to that right. After an abandonment by a removal, without an intent to return, the husband can convey the former homestead without his wife joining. Guio v. Guio, 14 Cal. 506. The husband, without the cooperation of the wife, may convey the entire property in which the right of the homestead exists, subject to that right, and the purchaser, under such conveyance of the husband alone, will hold the estate subject to the homestead right, wherever properly demanded by the party entitled thereto. Atkinson v. Atkinson, 37 N. H. 434; Davis v. Andrews, 30 Vt. 678. The limitation in the homestead law, that the husband cannot convey the homestead without the wife's joining, does not avoid the conveyance by the husband alone, so as to give a lien to a subsequent attaching creditor, whose rights are not affected by the law. Howe v. Adams, 28 Vt. 541.

BREWER, J. Defendant in error recovered a judgment in ejectment against plaintiffs in error. It was admitted on the trial below that the title to the property in dispute had been, prior to the conveyances offered in evidence, in one Erastus Renfro. Mrs. Kent offered in evidence a deed from said Erastus Renfro, dated June 18, 1872, and this was her title. Plaintiffs in error offered certain judicial proceedings against Erastus Renfro and wife, commencing with an attachment levied on said premises on June 26, 1872, and ending in a sheriff's deed; and this was their title. There was a general finding for plaintiff, Mrs. Kent. It is claimed that the deed to Mrs. Kent was void because it was an attempted conveyance of a homestead in which the wife did not join. Was it a homestead at the time of the conveyance? Renfro's family consisted of himself and wife, and together they had occupied the premises as their homestead until sometime in May, 1872, when the wife left, and, as appears from a long letter of hers to her mother, with the intention of not returning. The furniture remained in the house, though sold some three weeks prior thereto to Mrs. Kent, and Renfro continued to occupy it until the day or the day before the execution of the deed. On the seventeenth of June he was in Johnson county, at the home of Mrs. Kent, and together they returned to Paola, reaching the house on the morning of the 18th. On that day, in the morning, he executed the deed, and left town on the evening train. On this same morning he was asked by one of the defendants to give them a mortgage on the place to secure their debt, but he declined, saying it was his homestead, and that he thought they ought not to ask him to mortgage his homestead. It is entirely clear that when Mrs. Renfro left in May she abandoned all interest in the homestead. She not only declares in her letter her separation from her husband, but also adds: "I have not taken anything with me, not even all my clothes. If I can make a living for myself he can certainly get along with the property," etc. And it may also be reasonably inferred from the circumstances that the abandonment by him of the homestead and the execution of the deed were contemporaneous. We do not mean to decide that he had or had not a homestead interest after the abandonment by his wife, but if he had, it ceased with the execution of the deed and his surrender of the property. It does not appear whether the key and the possession were surrendered before or after the execution of the deed. Probably, under the circumstances of this case, it is immaterial which. There was clearly enough testimony to support a finding of the abandonment of the homestead before the execution of the deed. Neither Renfro nor his wife are contesting the validity of this conveyance; and if they are satisfied with it, a subsequent judgment creditor must make a clear case before he can ask a court to set it aside.

A second alleged error is in the admission of the letter from Mrs. Renfro to her mother, Mrs. Kent. The objections made to it were that it was "incompetent and irrelevant." The letter is quite lengthy, was written after she left her husband, and before the execution of the deed, and gives the reasons of her separation from her husband, and her intentions as to the future. It is, so far as this case is concerned, a declaration by one said to have a homestead interest in disparagement of that interest, which, by well-settled rules, is always competent. If there were objections to any particular statements in the letter they should have been pointed out, and are not covered by a general objection to the whole of the letter, some portions of which were unquestionably competent and relevant.

It is said that the court erred in not giving a second trial.

*212 *No demand was made for a second trial under section 599 of the Code, only a motion for a new trial under section 306. This disposes of the matter. It may also be noticed that this was really the second trial. The record shows that at a prior term a trial was had, a jury impaneled, the plaintiff's testimony offered, a demurrer to the evidence sustained, and the jury discharged from the further consideration of the case. It fails to show the entry of a formal judgment, but it does show that plaintiff appeared and moved for another and a new trial, which motion was sustained, and the case continued to the next term.

The judgment will be affirmed.

ATCHISON, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. E. M. CUTHBERT.

January Term, 1875.

1. Railroads: Bond to Protect Laborers. The railroad company is the proper obligee in the bond provided for in chapter 136, Laws 1872, to protect laborers, mechanics, and others, in the construction of railroads.<sup>1</sup>
2. ———: Conditions of Bond. A bond given in pursuance of said chapter, which contains all the conditions provided therein, is not vitiated by an additional stipulation to save the company harmless from all trouble, damage, costs, suits, judgments, etc.

Error from Harvey district court.

The case is stated in the opinion.

- *213 **Ross Burns* and J. G. Waters, for plaintiff in error.
J. J. Barker and J. W. Ady, for defendant in error.

BREWER, J. This action was brought by defendant in error as material-man and laborer, to recover of the plaintiff in error the sum <sup>1</sup> Said chapter applies, not merely when a railroad company is engaged in the construction of its first and main track, but also whenever it is enlarging its road by the addition of side tracks. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Brown, post, *557. One who is in the employ of a contractor with a railroad company simply as time-keeper and superintendent, is not a "laborer," in the sense in which that term is used in said chapter. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Baker, post, *568. The liability of the obligors on a bond given by a contractor with a railroad company for the construction of its road, under section 85, c. 84, Comp. Laws 1879, p. 785, does not extend to an account for provisions furnished to the laborers employed by a subcontractor upon the order of such subcontractor. Such an account is not for provisions supplied to the contractor, within the terms of the statute. Wells v. Mehl, 25 Kan. 205. Where a railroad company contracts with another railroad company for the construction of its road, although no bond is taken by the former company from the corporation with which the contract is made, yet the liability of the first company does not extend to an account for provisions or goods furnished to a subcontractor. *St. Louis, W. & W. Proof that a railroad company paid a bridge-builder for work done on one of its bridges, upon estimates made by the company's agents as the work progressed, is sufficient proof from which a finding may be made that such bridge-builder was a "contractor" within the meaning of said law. *Atchison, T. & S. of $147.50, due and unpaid from the contractor; the defendant in error alleging in his petition as cause of action that the plaintiff in error did not take and have recorded within the office of the register of deeds in any of said counties wherein the work was done any bond from the contractors conditioned for the payment of all just debts due to laborers and others. It was heard in the court below on the following agreed statement of facts, signed and filed by the attorneys for both parties:

"For the purpose of this action in all its stages, and in all courts to which it may be carried, we agree that the following may be considered as the facts: First. The bond, a copy of which is herewith filed, marked 'B,' was taken by the defendant, and was filed by the defendant in the county of Ellsworth, Kansas, at the time as appears by the certificate of the register of deeds of said county on the back thereof; and said bond was a good and sufficient bond for the purposes in said bond named, and covers all the work of the said contractors, Oxelson and Riney, named in said bond, done for the defendant by said Oxelson and Riney, or their employes. Second. The amount for which the plaintiff sues is due and unpaid from said contractors, Oxelson and Riney, as set out in plaintiff's petition; that is, the work done by said plaintiff, and the amount due therefor, has not been paid by said Oxelson and Riney, or by any one else. Third. The work was done by the said plaintiff in the months of June, July, August, and September, 1872, in the counties of Harvey, Reno, Rice, Pawnee, and Ford, and amounts to the sum of $147.50."

"J. F. DYER, Register."

*215 *The case upon the above-agreed statement of facts was tried by the court without the intervention of a jury, and judgment rendered [at April term, 1874] for the defendant in error for the sum of $147.50.

The liability of the plaintiff in error is sought to be enforced under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to protect laborers, mechanics, and others, in construction of railroads," approved March 1, 1872, and found on page 286 of the Laws of 1872. This law requires a railroad company to take from the person with whom a contract is made a good and sufficient bond, conditioned that such person shall pay all the laborers, mechanics, and material-men, and persons who supply such contractor with provisions or goods of any kind, all just debts due to such persons, or to any person to whom any part of such work is given, incurred in carrying on such work; and if any such railroad shall fail to take such bond, such railroad company shall be liable to the persons herein mentioned to the full extent of such debts so contracted by the contractor. The law further gives all such persons a right of action on the bond for the full awards of debts against such contractor. There is also a provision that this bond shall be filed in the office of the register of deeds of the county where the work of the contractor shall be. So far as respects this last provision, while it is alleged that the railroad company did not have the bond recorded in the counties in which the work was done, there is a total failure of evidence to sustain the allegation. It was suggested by counsel on the argument that these counties were not then organized. It is unnecessary, however, to inquire what effect such a state of facts might have upon the obligation of the company under the statute, for no such excuse is suggested in the evidence. The record presents merely a case of failure of proof. Now, in this case, a purely statutory liability is sought to be enforced. Independent of the statute, there is no law or reason for making the railroad company responsible for the debts of Oxelson and Riney. Hence a party claiming under this statute must show all facts necessary to bring his *216 case within its terms. If he alleges that the company failed to file its bond in the proper county, and thereby became liable to him, he must show the failure, or the fact will be found against him.

As it is conceded that the bond was good and sufficient, the only question really in the case is whether the bond complies with the requirements of the statute. It is objected that the bond runs to the company, and not to the laborers, mechanics, etc., or to the state; that it is simply a bond of indemnity, and not a bond under the statute. It seems to us that the company is the proper obligee. None is specifically named in the statute, but it says the company shall take a bond. This, in the absence of any express designation to the contrary, sufficiently indicates that it should run to the company. Again, in the second section, it is expressly provided that the laborers, mechanics, etc., for whose benefit the bond is required, shall have a right of action on the bond. There would be no need of this section if it was the intention that the bond run to them. Though not named as obligees, they may sue as "persons expressly authorized by statute," and entitled to the benefits of the security.

It is conceded that the bond contains all the conditions of the statute, but it also contains the additional stipulation that the contractors "shall well and truly save, keep, and bear harmless the said railroad company of and from all trouble, damage, costs, suits, judgments, and executions arising, or to arise, by reason of the incurring of such debts, and in the premises;" and it is claimed that this addition vitiates the bond. We do not think so. There is nothing in this inconsistent or in conflict with the other conditions,—nothing limiting, restricting, or in anywise modifying or affecting, the obligations assumed by those conditions, so far, at least, as those dealing with the contractors are concerned. Such an addition does not avoid the instrument. The law does not say that the bond shall contain only such conditions. It must contain those, and it may contain any others, provided they do not in any manner affect adversely the interests of those parties *217 who are sought to be protected. We think, therefore, that the bond is valid under the statute, and it being conceded to be good and sufficient, it follows that the court erred in holding the company liable. As the facts are agreed, we must not only reverse the judgment, but also remand the case, with instructions to enter judgment in favor of the railroad company, defendant below. It is understood that the cases of the same plaintiff in error against William Ward, and same against James H. Anderson, involve only the same questions, and are to be decided in the same manner.

STATE OF KANSAS ex rel. v. MALCOLM CONN.

January Term, 1875.

County Treasurer: Failure to Qualify: Vacancy in Office: Election for Unexpired Term. John R. Horner was the duly elected, qualified, and acting county treasurer of Morris county, from July, 1872, to July, 1874. In November, 1873, he was duly re-elected to said office, his second term to commence in July, 1874. But he never legally qualified for this second term of office, and never entered upon the duties thereof. He continued, however, to hold the office until August 7, 1874, when the county commissioners of said county declared the office vacant, and appointed Malcolm Conn to fill the vacancy. Conn qualified, and took possession of the office, and has been in possession thereof ever since. On October 6, 1874, the county commissioners of said county again declared the office vacant, so far as Horner was concerned, and again appointed Malcolm Conn to fill the vacancy. But Conn never qualified under this second appointment. At the November election, in 1874, L. P. Rude was duly elected to said office, provided, however, that any election should have been held at that time for that office. Rude afterwards duly qualified, and now claims the office. Conn, however, claims that he has the paramount right to said office as against Rude, or any one else. Held, in an action in the nature of quo warranto, brought in the name of the state by the county attorney of Morris county against Conn, that Conn is not entitled to said office.

*218 *Original proceeding in quo warranto.

The case is stated in the opinion and syllabus.

Duncan McDonald and Ruggles & Sterry, for the State.

M. B. Nichols, J. T. Bradley, and John Martin, for defendant.

VALENTINE, J. This is an original proceeding in the nature of quo warranto, to determine by what authority Malcolm Conn attempts to hold the office of county treasurer of Morris county. It appears from the pleadings and evidence that John R. Horner was the duly-elected, qualified, and acting county treasurer of said county from July, 1872, to July, 1874. In November, 1873, he was duly re-elected to said office, his second term to commence in July, 1874; but he never legally qualified for his second term of office, and, as we find from the evidence, he never entered upon the duties of his second term of office. He continued, however, to hold the office until Aug

7, 1874, when the county commissioners of said county declared the office vacant, and appointed Malcolm Conn to fill the vacancy. Malcolm Conn qualified by giving bond and taking the oath of office, and immediately took possession of the office, and has been in possession thereof up to the commencement of this action. On October 6, 1874, the county commissioners of said county again declared the office of county treasurer vacant, so far as Horner was concerned, and again appointed Malcolm Conn county treasurer. But Conn never qualified under this second appointment. At the November election, in 1874, L. P. Rude was duly elected county
 *219 treasurer of said county, provided, however, *that any election should have been held at that time for that office. Rude afterwards duly qualified, and now claims the office. Conn, however, claims that he has the paramount right to said office as against Rude, or any one else. Is he legally entitled to the office? This is the only question in this case. There is no theory upon which it can logically be maintained that Conn legally holds said office. If Horner is still legally entitled to hold the office, then of course Conn is not. If both the appointments of Conn were void, then of course Conn is not now entitled to hold the office. But even if both of said appointments were valid, still Conn would not be entitled to hold the office. If the first appointment were valid, then it necessarily follows that there must have been a vacancy in the office when Conn was appointed, for a valid appointment can be made by the county commissioners only to fill a vacancy. Gen. St. 269, § 64; Graham v. Cowgill, 13 Kan.

No authority is anywhere given to the county commissioners to appoint a county treasurer where the office is already legally filled. Hence, if the first appointment was valid, the second appointment was void, the office being at the time of the second appointment already legally filled. And if the first appointment was valid,—being an appointment to fill a vacancy,—the appointee, Conn, would hold his office under the appointment only until the next general election, and until his successor (elected at such election) should qualify. Gen. St. 269, § 64; Id. 418, 419, §§ 57-59; Bond v. White, 8 Kan.
 *333; Hagerty v. Arnold, 13 Kan. *367. Hence, as L. P. Rude was duly elected as Conn's successor at the general election held in November, 1874, and as Rude afterwards duly qualified, Conn is no longer entitled to hold the office, but Rude is. But suppose the first appointment of Conn was void, and that the second appointment was valid, still Conn would not be entitled to hold the office, for he never qualified under the second appointment. He forfeited his right to hold the office under that appointment. Gen. St. 293, 294, *220 §§ 173, 179; State v. Matheny, *7 Kan. *327. He allowed vastly more than twenty days to elapse after he received notice of his second appointment, and after his term commenced, without qualifying, and never qualified under said appointment.

Our theory of the case is as follows: John R. Horner was legally the county treasurer of Morris county from the time he first took possession of the office until the first Tuesday of July, 1874, and for twenty days thereafter. Gen. St. 268, § 61; Const. art. 9, § 3; Gen. St. 293, 294; §§ 173, 179. Whether he could have continued to hold his office for a longer time than that, under his first election and qualification, we do not now choose to decide; and whether Conn was ever legally the county treasurer of said county we shall express no opinion. But upon these two questions, see Const. art. 9, § 3; Borton v. Buck, 8 Kan. *302, *312, et seq.; Graham v. Cowgill, 13 Kan. *114; Bond v. White, 8 Kan. *333. But we think it is certain that Horner forfeited his office for the second term by not qualifying within the time prescribed by law. Gen. St. c. 25, pp. 268, 293, 294, §§ 61, 173, 179; State v. Matheny, 7 Kan. *327. He should have qualified by giving bond and taking the oath of office some time after his election in November, 1873, and between that time and twenty days after the first Tuesday of July, 1874. But he did not do it, and hence his second term of office was forfeited, and the office became vacant. We shall assume, but without so deciding, that the first appointment of Conn was legal and valid. But whether it was so or not, Horner had forfeited that term. He had wholly abandoned the office. He made no claim to hold over under his former term, or under any other term, and the office was filled by a person holding it under an appointment only. Under such circumstances, we think the election of Rude was legal, and that he is entitled to the office. But whoever may be entitled to the office, Conn is not.

Judgment will be rendered in favor of the state, and against *221 *the defendant, removing the defendant from said office of county treasurer.

JOHN MORRIS v. R. P. GERMAN.

January Term, 1875.

Mortgages: Foreclosure: Attorney's Fees: Proof Required. On the foreclosure of a mortgage containing a stipulation to pay reasonable attorney's fees in case of foreclosure, it is error for the court without the hearing of any evidence, upon simply its own knowledge, to tax the amount of such fees.

Error from Shawnee district court.

The case is stated in the opinion.

W. P. Douthitt and C. M. Foster, for plaintiff in error, contended that what was a reasonable attorney's fee for foreclosure was, under the pleadings, an issue of fact, to be tried by jury. If the court had the power to tax an attorney's fee, it should have had evidence. It cannot take judicial notice of the value of professional services. Bowser v. Palmer, 33 Ind. 124; Wyant v. Pottorff, 87 Ind. 512.

G. C. Clemens, for defendant in error, cited Tholen v. Duffy, 7 Kan. *405, and section 399 of the Civil Code as amended by the act of 1870, p. 175. The court (which does not include the jury) is to tax the attorney's fees just as it taxes costs. "Tax" means "adjustment;" fixing the amount. No testimony is required. To hear testimony as to the amount to be allowed would take away the power given to the court, and leave it to witnesses to fix the amount.

BREWER, J. This was an action in the district court to foreclose two mortgages. The mortgages contained a stipulation to pay "reasonable attorney's fees" in case of foreclosure. There being a dispute as to the amount due on the notes, the case was tried by a jury. No testimony was offered concerning attorney's fees, and the verdict found simply the amount due on the notes. The motion for a new trial having been overruled, the court rendered judgment for the amount of the verdict, and a decree for the foreclosure and sale of the mortgaged premises. It also, upon the application of the plaintiff, and without hearing any testimony, taxed an attorney's fee of one hundred dollars, and included it in the judgment. To this at the time the defendants excepted. We think the court erred, and that what was a "reasonable attorney's fee" was a question of fact to be settled upon evidence. A party recovers attorney's fees upon the foreclosure of a mortgage, not by virtue of any statutory authority, but by virtue of the contract. In the absence of any stipulation therefor, none can be recovered. They are in no sense costs. Swartzel v. Rogers, 3 Kan. *380; Stover v. Johnnyeake, 9 Kan. *867. If the amount is fixed by the mortgage, there is nothing to litigate except as to the validity of the mortgage. If it is designated as a certain per cent., there is nothing but a mere calculation. But if the stipulation is to pay "reasonable attorney's fees," or what amounts to the same thing, "attorney's fees," then a matter is presented which can be settled only upon evidence. The statute does not determine what are "reasonable attorney's fees," and it is not a matter of which the court can take judicial notice.

We are referred to Laws of 1870, p. 175, § 18, in which it is provided that "the court shall tax the costs, attorney fees, and expenses which may accrue in the action, and apportion the same among the parties according to their respective interests," etc. We do not understand this as giving the court the power, of its own discretion, and without testimony, to assess the amount of the attorney's fees, any more than the amount of the costs. It authorizes the court to tax costs, whose amounts are specified in the statute, attorney's fees, whose amounts are fixed by the contract of the parties, or otherwise settled, upon the basis of their stipulations, and adjust and apportion them between the parties, and upon the respective interests. We do not decide that the court is not the proper tribunal to hear the evidence and from that assess the attorney's fees. Indeed, it seems to us that, at least as to all mortgages executed since the passage of the act of 1870, above noticed, (the mortgages in this action were executed before that act,) it is the proper tribunal. All we decide is that such assessment, by whatever tribunal pronounced, must be based upon proper evidence. We are referred also to the decision in Tholen v. Duffy, 7 Kan, *405, in which a contract to pay ten per cent. was sustained, and quotations are made to us from the language of that opinion. We did not decide in that case that courts can take judicial cognizance of the proper amounts of attorney's fees, or assess them without evidence. We upheld the contract because the amount did not appear so excessive as to be unconscionable for a court of equity to enforce. The principle of that case would apply here, if, the amount having been determined upon evidence, it was insisted that such amount was so grossly excessive as ought not to be upheld. The question is one which in the very nature of things may require evidence. The proper fee depends upon several circumstances,—the amount in controversy; the difficulty of the questions; the amount of time and labor employed. Now, all of these things do not necessarily come before the court, or within its knowledge; and to ask a court to determine reasonable compensation therefor without being fully advised therein would be manifestly improper. Bowser v. Palmer, 33 Ind. 124; Wyant v. Pottorff, 37 Ind. 512.

*224 It will be unnecessary, however, to *send this case back for a new trial. It will be sufficient to remand the case, with instructions to modify the judgment by striking out the allowance for attorney's fees, and it is so ordered. The costs of this court will be divided.

URIAH DORMAN v. ALEXANDER CROZIER and others.

January Term, 1875.

1. Mechanic's Lien: Affidavit by Agent Should be Positive. An affidavit made by an agent of another, certifying a statement of a claim filed with the clerk of the district court under section 3 of the mechanic's lien law of 1871, for the purpose of procuring a mechanic's lien on certain real estate, should be sworn to positively. An affidavit for such a purpose, made by such an agent, stating that "the facts, as above set forth, are true and correct according to the best of his [the agent's] knowledge and belief," without showing that he had any knowledge upon the subject, is not sufficient.<sup>1</sup>
2. —: Amendment of Affidavit: When to be Made. When an affidavit made in such case is defective, it can be amended only by attaching a sufficient affidavit to the statement, within the time allowed by law for filing the statement with the clerk.
3. Mortgages: Attorney's Fees: Not Recoverable. It is error to tax attorney's fees in a foreclosure suit, unless the mortgagor has stipulated to pay them.

Error from Miami district court.

Crozier & Co. brought their action to foreclose a mortgage executed by William Toms and wife, and Gustavus E. Weylandt and wife, which mortgage was recorded in November, 1869. Uriah Dorman, Joseph Haefner, Charles Quest, V. C. Jarboe, Frank Playter, and others were joined as co-defendants, as having some interest in or lien upon the mortgaged premises. On the trial, at the May term, 1872, the district court found the priority of liens, and gave judgment against Toms and wife, and Weylandt and wife, as follows: First, in favor of Crozier & Co. for $4,154 debt, and $200 attorney's fee; second, in favor of Haefner, for $2,710 debt, and $75 attorney's fee; third, in favor of Quest, for $542 debt, and $25 attorney's fee; fourth, in favor of Jarboe, for $2,163.50 debt, and $75 attorney's fee; fifth, in favor of Playter, for $746.44 debt, and $75 attorney's fee; sixth, in favor of Dorman, for $2,119.98 debt. No attorney's fee was provided or stipulated for in the mortgages to Crozier & Co. and Jarboe. Dorman's claim was a mechanic's lien, for lumber and material furnished to Toms, for which a statement was filed in the office of the clerk of the district court, July, 14, 1871. The mortgages to Haefner and Quest were recorded July 19, 1871; that to Jarboe was recorded August 19, 1871; and that to Playter was recorded October 25, 1871. Dorman's claim, when offered in evidence, was objected to by mortgagors and the other defendants, as not being verified as required by the statute. The verification was as follows:

"State of Kansas, Miami County—ss.: W. J. Bound, of lawful age, and the agent of Uriah Dorman, a non-resident of the county of

Miami, being by me first duly sworn, deposeth and says that he is the agent of Uriah Dorman, and the facts, as above set forth, are true and correct according to the best of his knowledge and belief.

"WM. J. BOUND.

"Subscribed in my presence, and sworn to before me, this fourteenth of July, 1871.

[Seal.] "G. W. WARREN, County Clerk."

The court sustained the objection. Dorman then asked leave to amend the affidavit; and, leave being granted, the following affidavit was attached to said statement:

"State of Kansas, Miami County—ss.: W. J. Bound, of lawful age, being duly sworn, deposes and says that the statements and allegations set forth in the above statement of Uriah Dorman, claiming a lien on certain property belonging to Toms & Weylandt, are true as therein stated and set forth.

WM. J. BOUND.

"Sworn to before me, and subscribed in my presence, this thirteenth of May, 1872.

[Seal.] "JOHN L. BEESON, Clerk Dist. Court."

*226 *Dorman's "statement" or claim for a mechanic's lien was then admitted in evidence, but the court postponed his lien, holding it subsequent to those of the other defendants, as above stated. From such decision and judgment, and from the allowance of attorney's fees as were not stipulated for, Dorman brings the case here on error.

B. F. Simpson, for plaintiff in error.

The lien of Dorman would date from the commencement of the delivery of the lumber and materials, and was prior to that of any of the defendants in error, and it was error in the court to postpone it to the liens of defendants in error because of the amendment; thus holding that the statement of lien would only operate as such from the date of the filing of the amended affidavit, instead of holding that the amendment related back to the making of the original affidavit. If this construction is the true one, it entirely destroyed the lien, because under the statutes the statement was not filed in time. The only object of the statement, so far as the other lienholders are concerned, is to give them notice; and this was accomplished as well under the original as the amended affidavit. Where an amendment is made only as to form, and does not change or affect the character of the demand, it relates back to the filing of the original paper. Buel v. St. Louis Transp. Co., 45 Mo. 562; Hallett v. Chicago & N. Ry. Co., 22 Iowa, 259.

The court erred in taxing attorney's fees on the mortgages of A. Crozier & Co. and Jarboe; there being no provision in said mortgages authorizing it; and this error is apparent on the face of the record.

Martin, Burns & Case, for defendants in error.

On the fourteenth of July, 1871, the paper purporting to be a mechanic's lien in favor of Dorman was filed in the office of the register of deeds of Miami county. The court very properly decided that this paper did not establish a prior lien in favor of Dorman as against the other parties having bona fide liens. The statement was not verified as required by law, so as to affect bona fide lienholders. The amended or substituted affidavit did not cure the defect, if it could be allowed at all. The amended affidavit is in the present tense. Robinson v. Burton, 5 Kan. *293-*304. The statement, to be valid, must be verified when filed; and, to be valid, it must have been filed, under the Laws of 1871, within two months from the furnishing of the lumber and materials. Dorman's statement was not properly verified until nearly a year after the time fixed by law. It was void as a lien, and could not be cured.

VALENTINE, J. An affidavit made by an agent of another verifying a statement of a claim filed with the clerk of the district court under section 3 of the mechanic's lien law of 1871, (Laws 1871, p. 254,) for the purpose of procuring a mechanic's lien on certain real estate, should be sworn to positively. See Atchison v. Bartholow, 4 Kan. *124; Ex parte Bank of Monroe, 7 Hill, 177. An affidavit for such a purpose, made by such an agent, stating that "the facts as above set forth are true and correct, according to the best of his [the agent's] knowledge and belief," without showing that he had any knowledge upon the subject, is not sufficient. Where an affidavit made in such case is defective, it can be amended only by attaching a sufficient affidavit to the statement within the time allowed by law for filing the statement with the clerk. Code, § 139.

It is error to tax attorney's fees in a foreclosure suit unless the mortgagor has stipulated to them. Coburn v. Weed, 12 Kan. *182; Foote v. Sprague, 13 Kan. *155.

This case will be remanded to the court below, with the order that the judgment of the court below be modified by striking out the amounts allowed as attorney's fees to A. Crozier & Co., and to V. C. Jarboe. In other respects the judgment of the court below will be affirmed.

(All the justices concurring.)

E. H. SANFORD v. H. D. SHEPARD.

January Term, 1875.

1. Evidence: Competency: Value of Land. It is not error for the court to exclude the testimony of a witness, as to the value of land, where it is not shown that such witness has any knowledge of what the value of the land was at the time material to the issue in the case; and even where such a witness is acquainted with the land, and with the neighborhood in which the land is situated, but when it is not shown that better evidence could not be procured, it is not error to exclude such testimony.
2. Pleadings: In Justices' Courts: Statute of Limitations: Practice. It is not necessary, in a justice's court, that the statute of limitations should be specially pleaded, or that the question should be raised by demurrer; but the question may be raised by objecting to evidence introduced on the trial for the purpose of proving a claim barred by the statute; and, where a case is appealed from a justice's court to the district court, it should be tried in the district court, so far, at least, as the statute of limitations is concerned, in the same manner as it would be tried if tried in the justice's court.<sup>1</sup>
3. Instruction: Construction of Contract. Where the court below instructed the jury that the word "soon," used in a contract, implied "within a reasonable time," held not error requiring a reversal of the judgment.
4. Conveyance: Agreement to "Quitclaim:" Title Immaterial. Shepard and Sanford agreed to exchange lands which they respectively held under tax titles, and Sanford conveyed his title to Shepard, and Shepard, in consideration therefor, paid Sanford $400, and agreed that he would "soon" transfer his title to Sanford by a quitclaim deed; but before Shepard transferred his title to Sanford it was ascertained that Shepard's title was not worth much, and Sanford then desired to recover the value of the land, (less said $400,) the title to which he had transferred to *229 Shepard. Held, that it was not necessary that *Shepard should have had a good or perfect title to the land which he agreed to convey to Sanford in order to prevent Sanford from recovering for the value of the land Sanford conveyed to Shepard. Sanford was merely entitled to his "quitclaim" deed from Shepard for the land to which Shepard held a tax title.

Shepard sued Sanford in a justice's court on an account for goods sold and delivered, claiming a balance of $194.95. The record does not contain the pleadings before the justice, nor show what defense or defenses were there interposed by Sanford. The case was taken to the district court by appeal, where, by consent of parties and leave <sup>1</sup>In a justice's court, the existence of a corporation may be put in issue by the defendant without a denial under oath, and even without a written denial of any kind. Stanley v. Farmers' Bank, 17 Kan. 592. On appeal to the district court, the case is heard and determined only as a case within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace. Wagstaff v. Challiss, 31 Kan. 212; S. C. 1 Pac. Rep. 631; Robbins v. Sackett, 23 Kan. 304. Counter-claim in justice's court. Wagstaff v. Challiss, 29 Kan. 506. See Thomas v. Reynolds, Id. 810.

of court, new pleadings were filed. Shepard filed a petition, counting on a book-account for goods, wares, and merchandise sold and delivered, and claimed said balance of $194.95, and interest. Sanford answered, setting up several defenses: First, that plaintiff was indebted to him in the sum of $2,000 "as a balance due defendant, after a payment of $400, on account of the value of 162½ acres of land in Lyon county, [describing the land,] with interest thereon from August 12, 1869, being the day of the delivery of the deed of said premises by defendant to plaintiff." A second defense was a claim for an alleged indebtedness "in the sum of $500 for and on account of hewn and sawed timber, and other timber taken from the lands of defendant by plaintiff, in Lyon county, in 1867, 1868, and 1869." A third defense was a claim for $100 for services as an attorney at law rendered by Sanford for Shepard, in November, 1869. A fourth defense was for a check for $40 delivered by defendant to plaintiff, in October, 1869. These defenses were pleaded as set-offs, and defendant claimed judgment for the balance due him. Shepard replied—First, a general denial; second, that the demands of Sanford exceeded the amount over which a justice's court has jurisdiction; third, that defendant's first defense was founded upon an agreement between plaintiff and defendant to exchange lands held by the parties, respectively, under tax titles; that such exchange on the part *230 of plaintiff was to be by quitclaim deed; *that no time was fixed for the execution of such deed; that defendant had never demanded a deed, and plaintiff was ready and willing to convey by quitclaim, as he had agreed. Trial at the April term, 1873. The bill of exceptions contains a memorandum signed by Shepard, and dated August 12, 1869, acknowledging the receipt of a deed from Sanford, in which Shepard says, "and I agree to make a deed (quitclaim) of S. W. ¼ sec. 24, T. 14, R. 12, Wabaunsee county, soon." Verdict and judgment in favor of Shepard for $90.75. Sanford brings the case here on error.

E. H. Sanford, plaintiff in error, for himself.

Ellis Lewis, for defendant in error.

VALENTINE, J. The plaintiff in error claims in his brief that the judgment of the court below should be reversed for "(1) error of law at the trial;" and "(2) refusal to grant the motion for new trial." He then elaborates these grounds for error, and we will notice his points in the order presented. The first is as follows: "(1) The court erred in ruling out the testimony of Weaver, Stinson, and others, in relation to the value of the land and timber. The statute of limitations was not pleaded, and failure to demur was a waiver."

As the case is presented to us, we do not think that the court below erred in excluding said testimony. It was not only not shown that the witnesses knew the value of the land and timber at the required time, but it was actually shown that they did not know such value.

It is true, the witnesses were acquainted with the land, and with the neighborhood in which the land was situated, but they did not know the value of the land at the time material to the issues in this case. It is possible that, if their testimony had been the best that could have been procured, it would have been admissible; but there was *231 no claim, or even pretense, that it was the *best that could have been procured. It does not appear but there were many persons who knew the value of said lands whose testimony could have been procured. When testimony is offered which, from its nature or character, appears not to be the best the case admits of, it is the duty of the party offering it to show affirmatively that the evidence he is attempting to introduce is the best evidence that can be procured; and if it is then excluded, it devolves upon such party to show affirmatively to the appellate court that the trial court erred.

This action was commenced in a justice's court, and appealed to the district court, where the judgment complained of was rendered. Now, we do not think that it is necessary in a justice's court that the statute of limitations should be specially pleaded, or that the question should be raised by demurrer; but the question may be raised by objecting to evidence introduced on the trial for the purpose of proving a claim barred by the statute. And, when a case is appealed from a justice's court to the district court, it should be tried in the district court, so far at least as the statute of limitations is concerned, in the same manner as it would be tried (if tried) in the justice's court. See sections 71-74, Justices' Act, (Gen. St. 791,) and section 122, Justices' Act, as amended, (Laws 1870, p. 184, § 7.)

We now come to the next portion of the plaintiff's brief, which claims that the court below erred in its instructions. The plaintiff claims that the court erred in the third, sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth, tenth, and thirteenth instructions which were given, and in refusing to give the first and second instructions asked by plaintiff in error.

The exceptions to said instructions given, as shown in the record, were as follows: "All these instructions excepted to by the defendant. To the giving of the third paragraph of the foregoing instructions the defendant then and there excepted; also the sixth and seventh instructions." The plaintiff in error does not now complain of the third paragraph or instruction; and as to the eighth, *232 ninth, tenth, and *thirteenth instructions, there was no sufficient exception. See Ferguson v. Graves, 12 Kan. *39, *44, and cases there cited. Whether there was a sufficient exception taken to the giving of either the sixth or seventh instruction is doubtful. But suppose there was, then were such instructions erroneous?

As to the sixth instruction the plaintiff in error in his brief says: "In the sixth instruction the court errs in saying the word 'soon' means in a reasonable time. This leaves the jury to accept a wrong definition, and shifts the responsibility the law imposes upon the court." The instruction reads as follows: "(6) If there is no time specified for the performance of an act, or if it is specified that it is to be performed soon, the law implies that it is to be performed within a reasonable time." There is certainly no error in this sufficient to reverse the judgment.

The seventh instruction reads as follows: "(7) If you believe from the evidence that, at the time the defendant executed and delivered his deed to plaintiff for the Lyon county land, there was an agreement that the plaintiff was not at that time to convey to defendant the Wabaunsee county land mentioned in plaintiff's reply, then and in that event a demand by the defendant, and a refusal by the plaintiff, prior to the commencement of this action, would be necessary in order to entitle the defendant to recover the value of the land by him deeded to the plaintiff, unless the plaintiff had placed himself in a condition that he could not convey said land to defendant." Upon which the plaintiff in error in his brief says: "As to the seventh general instruction, it should have been given with the proviso that Shepard had a title at the time he was to convey. The conveyance was to be 'soon.'"

We should hardly think that such a proviso should be inserted. Shepard did not agree to execute to Sanford anything more than a quitclaim deed for the Wabaunsee county land. There is no evidence that Shepard ever pretended that his title was perfect, and it was not necessary that he should have had a perfect title. It is not claimed that there was any fraud in the transaction; and, in the absence of fraud, it was not necessary that Shepard should have had a <sup>*233</sup> good title. *The transaction that called forth this instruction seems to have been an exchange of lands held by the parties, respectively, under tax titles. Sanford transferred his title to the Lyon county land to Shepard, and Shepard, in consideration therefor, paid him $400, and agreed that he would "soon" transfer his title to the Wabaunsee county land to Sanford by a quitclaim deed. It seems, however, that afterwards, but before Shepard transferred his said title to Sanford, it was ascertained that Shepard's title to said Wabaunsee county land was not very good, and therefore Sanford now wants to recover from Shepard the value of said Lyon county land, less said $400. But Shepard wants Sanford to take said quitclaim deed for said Wabaunsee county land. And this is really all that Sanford is entitled to.

The refusal to give the first instruction asked for by plaintiff in error raises the same question as the giving of said sixth instruction, and hence we need not say anything further with reference thereto.

The second instruction asked for by plaintiff in error, and refused, is as follows: "(2) As to the demand for the timber on the defendant's land under the contract adduced on the trial, if the jury find that the timber was to be first demanded, that the demand was not made for the whole or any part of said timber, the value of the recovery would be the true value of so much of said timber as may be proven to be taken away from the defendant by the plaintiff without such demand." The only reference in the brief of plaintiff in error to this instruction is as follows: "Likewise in refusing the second special instruction, as to the demand for timber." Was said refusal an error? And, if so, why? Was there any evidence to found such an instruction upon? If the court erred in refusing to give it, the error is certainly not apparent; and the plaintiff in error has not taken the trouble to point out the error to us, or to state in what it consists.

The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

(All the justices concurring.)

*234 *WILLIAM B. McCAUSLIN and others v. THOMAS MCGUIRE.

January Term, 1875.

1. Tax Deed: Subscribing Witnesses. It is not necessary to the validity of a tax deed, or to make it prima facie evidence of title, that it be witnessed by more than one attesting witness. And quære, is it necessary that it be witnessed at all?
2. Tax Sale: Purchase by County: Payment. Where land has been bid off at a tax sale, by the county treasurer, for the county, it is not necessary that anything be paid at the time for the land.
3. Tax Deed: Presumption: Payment. Where a tax deed for land so bid off to the county recites that "the said county treasurer did, on the sixth day of October, 1862, duly assign the certificates of the sale of the property as aforesaid, and all the right, title, and interest of the said county to said property, to Thomas McGuire," etc., without stating that McGuire, or any one for him, paid anything for said assignment, or for the property, held, that it is not necessary that such a statement should be made, as it will be presumed that the certificate was duly assigned, and that the assignee paid the amount required by law at the time of said assignment.<sup>1</sup>
4. —: Certificate of Acknowledgment. Where an officer, taking the acknowledgment of a deed, certifies "that before me, a register of deeds," etc., and then signs his name, "L. J. T., Register of Deeds," held, that the certificate is sufficient, although the officer has not inserted his name in the body of his certificate.
5. —: Land Sold to County: Deed to Assignee. Where land has been bid off, at a tax sale, by the county treasurer, for the county, and the tax sale certificate has been assigned to an individual, a valid tax deed may be made to such individual on said tax sale certificate.
6. —: Form of. A tax deed need not be in the exact form prescribed by the statute, but the form should be so varied that the deed will in every case state the exact truth.

Action for partition of real property, brought by William B. McCauslin, Charles F. McCauslin, John Gregg, John W. Corwine, George

<sup>1</sup> A tax deed is prima facie evidence of everything, from the valuation of the land up to the execution of the deed, and that includes assignments of the sale certificate. Gardenhire v. Mitchell, 21 Kan. 87; Board of Regents v. Linscott, 80 Kan. 240; S. C. 1 Pac. Rep. 81. See Magill v. Martin, ante, *67; Morrill v. Douglass, post, *293.

Corwine, Christian Blaser, Ellen E. McCauslin, Harriet F. Millar, George B. Millar, and Frank Millar, as plaintiffs, who claimed that they were the owners of the undivided one-half of a certain quarter *235 section of land. The *plaintiffs admitted that McGuire, the defendant, was the owner of the other one-half interest, but he claimed title in fee to the entire tract. The district court, at the May term, 1873, found in favor of the defendant, "that the defendant was the legal owner in fee-simple of all of said land, and that the plaintiffs had no interest in nor title to any part of said land," and gave judgment accordingly.

The tax deed under which defendant claims title is not duly witnessed, and is therefore not prima facie evidence, and was not admissible in evidence without proof aliunde that all the tax proceedings prior to its execution were legal and regular. Comp. Laws 1862, p. 878, § 10. It has only one subscribing witness. The statute referred to (which was in force at the time) requires the deed to be "duly witnessed," and then gives a form for tax deeds, the blanks in which cannot be logically or grammatically filled without the insertion of at least two names as attesting "witnesses." The reasons for requiring "attesting witnesses" are to give additional certainty that the execution is genuine, and to multiply the evidence by which that genuineness can be proved. Neither of these objects, nor any object whatever, is attained by having the officer who certifies the acknowledgment sign his name as a witness also. The whole object to be attained by his signature and witnessing is attained when he signs it officially; and there is no more sense nor reason in his signing again as a witness than there would be in the same person signing his name twice, as a witness to a will, in order to satisfy the statutory demand for two witnesses. Hence we claim that, upon a rational construction of the statute, the deed is not witnessed at all. But, whether the officer is a competent attesting witness or not, the deed fails *236 to comply with the statute, which requires *"witnesses." It is a well-settled principle that the courts cannot dispense with the regulations prescribed by statute to be observed in the execution of statutory power. Young v. Dowling, 15 Ill. 481; Atkins v. Kinnan, 20 Wend. 240, 249; Bloom v. Burdick, 1 Hill, 130, 140; Sharp v. Speir, 4 Hill, 76, 86; Jackson v. Esty, 7 Wend. 148; Blackw. Tax Titles, 493.

The deed does not show that any consideration was ever paid for the sale certificate, or the assignment thereof. It is a substantial requirement of the statutory form of tax deed that it shall show the amount paid into the county treasury by the tax-lien purchaser. Such payment is the real and substantial foundation of his lien or title. The statute forfeits the title of the owner of the land, for the non-payment of the taxes, to any person who pays them in the manner prescribed, and the statute requires such payment to be shown in the tax deed. The recital in this deed, that the county treasurer bid the land off for the county, does not show nor imply any payment, because the statute did not authorize the county treasurer to pay anything as a bidder for the county. The statute (Comp. Laws, 867, § 44) provides that any person may become the purchaser of the certificate by paying into the county treasury the cost of redemption at that time; and this court decided, in Guittard Tp. v. Marshall Co., 4 Kan. *388, and other cases, that "any person" means some other person than the county. The omission to state in this deed that any such payment was made, leads to an absurdity in the latter part of the deed, where the county clerk says that he conveys the land in consideration of "said sum of $18.61 taxes," etc., "to the treasurer, paid as aforesaid." No payment to the treasurer having been stated or referred to anywhere else in the deed, the conveyance is left without a semblance of consideration; and, for aught that appears from the deed, the taxes, penalty, and charges still remain due and unpaid upon the land.

The deed says this land was sold on the seventh of May, 1862, *237 which, by reference to a calendar, is found to be Wednesday; and there is no averment in the deed that it was sold at any sale, or adjourned sale, begun and held on the first Tuesday in May. It is true that the insertion of the word "at" in a certain place would cause it to make such averment. But the court would have to exercise equity powers in order to reform the deed in that manner, which the court is not authorized to do, because courts of equity, even, are not allowed to cure defects in the execution of statutory powers. Young v. Dowling, 15 Ill. 481.

The name of the officer taking the acknowledgment is not given in the body of the certificate of acknowledgment. The statutory form, by leaving a blank for that name, requires it to be there inserted. A tax deed is not substantially in the form required by statute when it omits any averment therein required. The phraseology may be changed in many respects without substantially changing the form, provided equivalent averments are inserted; but, when the fact required to be inserted is omitted, it loses a part of the substance. If courts can dispense with one requirement they can, with equal propriety, dispense with another which they may think the legislature has unwisely or unnecessarily required; and thus, by gradual steps, assume the entire legislative powers upon the subject.

The deed purports to be based upon a sale certificate first issued to the county in a case where the land could not be sold for the taxes, penalty, and charges thereon. Comp. Laws, 867, § 42. The only statute in force at the date of this deed providing for or authorizing the issuance of a tax deed was section 10, p. 877, Comp. Laws, which provides that a tax deed may be issued only in cases in which the land is sold for taxes. This land was not and could not be sold, or else the county treasurer had no authority to bid it off for the county, as stated in the deed. Such bidding off by the treasurer is not a sale within the meaning of said section 10. The county does not, by such bidding off, acquire any new lien on or title to the land. It can never become entitled to a tax deed thereon, nor acquire any rights *238 as an occupying claimant *thereunder. Neither the certificate nor the land is any part of the general county property, the custody of which is given to the county board, and neither of them can be sold by the county. It is true that Comp. Laws, p. 867, § 44, provides a way by which the county, with the other corporations, may receive the taxes due them, respectively, by allowing "any person" (other than the county) to purchase the certificate, and thereby become entitled to the amount of the taxes when paid by the owner of the land; but such purchaser never becomes entitled to a deed thereon. But it may be said that the certificate issued to the county, and acquired by "any person" as a purchaser, is by law required to state that at a certain date the holder thereof will be entitled to a deed thereon. Let us see if that is true. Section 44 requires the treasurer to make to the county a certificate "similar" to that specified in section 43. If "similar" there means "technically and exactly like," then it requires the treasurer to certify, not only that the county will at a certain time become entitled to a deed, but also that the county paid the amount of tax, penalty, and charges thereon, both of which are untrue. The only reasonable construction of the term "similar certificate" is a certificate certifying the facts,—just as a certificate to a purchaser at the sale recites the facts. The facts required in a certificate to the county are that the land, describing it, could not be sold for the amount of taxes, penalty, and charges thereon, and was bid off by the county treasurer for the county for such amount, naming it. The statute nowhere prescribes a form for, nor provides for a deed upon a certificate to the county. Had the legislature intended that a tax deed should ever be issued on such a certificate, it would have provided a form of deed applicable to such case; or, at all events, would not have required all tax deeds to be in a form not applicable to such a case.

The middle portion of the deed (being about one-third of it) bears hardly any resemblance to the statutory form. It does not say that any person offered to pay the taxes, nor that the property was *239 stricken off at any price, nor that the *payment of any sum was made to the treasurer, nor that the amount of taxes, penalty, and charges was ever paid by anybody; neither does it give a description of property sold where the statutory form requires it,—the second description of land in said deed being in a connection which gives it no coherency or meaning except as an averment that no less quantity was bid for. But, even if it is held that this deed may depart from the statutory form enough to suit the peculiar facts in the case, the deed still fails to be good, because it does not set forth sufficient facts upon which to found a conveyance. It does not say that the land could not be sold at any regular sale for the tax, penalty, and charges thereon, as required by section 42, Comp. Laws, 1862, p. 867; nor that any person ever paid, or offered to pay, a sum equal to the cost of redemption at that time, as required by section 44; nor does it say what county treasurer bid the land off; nor does it describe the land bid off by the treasurer other than by a reference to the land subject to taxation.

The evidence in the case shows that the plaintiffs and one Abel Whitney were tenants in common of this land before and up to January 21, 1865, at which time the defendant purchased Whitney's title, and received from Whitney a conveyance of the undivided one-half of said land; that at the same time, and as a part of the same transaction, defendant got from Whitney the certificate on which the tax deed in question was subsequently made to defendant. Now, we claim that upon this evidence the legal presumption is that Whitney held that certificate for the joint benefit of himself and the plaintiffs, and that defendant, by receiving it as a part of his muniments of title, took only the rights that Whitney had, and the defendant cannot by means of that certificate, or of a tax deed subsequently taken thereon, acquire a title to the land to the exclusion of his co-tenants, the plaintiffs. One tenant in common before partition cannot purchase in an outstanding title or incumbrance on the joint estate for his exclusive benefit, and use it against his co-tenants. The *240 *purchase inures to the common benefit of all the co-tenants; the purchaser being entitled to contribution only. Brown v. Homan, 1 Neb. 448; Maul v. Rider, 51 Pa. St. 377; Rothwell v. Dewees, 2 Black. 613; Titaworth v. Stout, 49 Ill. 78; Keele v. Cunningham, 2 Heisk. 288; Van Horne v. Fonda, 5 Johns. Ch. 406; Mead v. Small, 2 Greenl. 207; *Farmer v. John W. Day and Ross Burns, for defendant in error.

The clause, "such deed, duly witnessed and acknowledged," which occurs in section 10, c. 198, Comp. Laws 1862, p. 877, is borrowed from the tax law of Wisconsin. The general law of that state provides that no deed for the conveyance of any land, or interest therein, shall be valid unless the same be executed in the presence of two witnesses. In this state our tax law does not designate the number of witnesses, nor does any law of this state require an instrument of conveyance to be witnessed. At common law attesting witnesses are not necessary to the validity of a deed. Where the statutes make no provision as to the number of witnesses, the common-law rule applies, and a deed that is acknowledged before a proper officer needs no witness. Gray v. Ulrich, 8 Kan. *112, 121; Phil. Ev. 413-421; 2 Bl. Comm. 307, note 21; 4 Greenl. Cruise, Real Prop. 31; Dougherty v. Randall, 3 Mich. 581. This deed is duly acknowledged, and this court has decided that "we do not think, where a deed is acknowledge, any witnesses are necessary. Stebbins v. Guthrie, 4 Kan. *369. And see Shoat v. Walker, 6 Kan. *72.

It is claimed that "the deed does not show that any consideration was ever paid for the sale certificate, or the assignment thereof." The tax deed shows that the land was subject to taxation for the year 1861, and that the taxes assessed on said land for that year remained due and unpaid on the first Tuesday of May, 1862, (the time fixed by law for the sale of the same for delinquent taxes,) and that at the time aforesaid the treasurer of said county of Jefferson exposed the same to public sale at the county-seat in said county, in conformity to all the requirements of the statute in such case made and provided, for *241 the payment of the taxes then due thereon, and that no person bid therefor the amount of such tax, penalty, and charges so due and unpaid, and that the land was bid off by the county treasurer for the county of Jefferson for the sum of $7.57; that sum being the whole amount of taxes, interest, and costs then due and remaining unpaid on said property. The tax deed thus far shows a compliance with the statute. Section 42, Comp. Laws, 867. Section 44 of the same act made it the duty of the county treasurer, where land was bid off for the county, to make a certificate to the county similar to those given to individual purchasers; and also provides that said certificate shall be subject to purchase by any person offering to pay therefor a sum equal to the cost of redemption at that time, and the county treasurer should assign the same to the purchaser, the same being made assignable by the county treasurer in like manner as those given to other purchasers,—the same as an individual. This tax deed further recites that the treasurer duly assigned the sale certificate, and all the right, title, and interest, of the said county to said property, to Thomas McGuire. It further recites that "two years having elapsed since the date of said sale, and said property has not been redeemed therefrom as provided by law, now, therefore,

* * * for and in consideration of the said sum of $18.61, taxes, interest, and costs due on said land for the year 1861, to the treasurer paid as aforesaid," etc. We think this shows a consideration paid to the county. It is true that the deed does not recite that McGuire paid to the treasurer $18.61 at the time the certificate was purchased by him, and the transfer made by the treasurer, but it recites the fact that the treasurer duly assigned the certificate. An officer duly doing a thing, means regularly, properly. If regularly and properly done, he must have received the amount of taxes, interest, and penalty then due; and the clerk certifies that the sum of $18.61, taxes, interest, and costs, was so due on said land, and was so paid by Thomas Mc-

Guire to the treasurer as aforesaid, who is, in a former part *242 of said deed, described as "the county treasurer of the county of Jefferson." Bowman v. Cockrill, 6 Kan. *326.

It is claimed that the deed is void because the land was sold on the seventh of May, 1862, which is found by reference to a calendar to be Wednesday, and that there is no averment in the deed that it was sold at any sale or adjourned sale begun and held the first Tuesday in May. It makes no difference whether the sale was made on Wednesday, or on any other day of the week. It is plain to be seen that the word at, before the "an adjourned sale of," in the form of the deed given in the statute, has been inadvertently left out or omitted from the deed in question by the draughtsman. It cannot be seriously claimed that this slight omission invalidates this deed. It is simply a clerical omission, not a substantial defect. Bowman v. Cockrill, 1 Kan. *324; Taylor v. Miles, 5 Kan. *498, *510; Davis v. McFarrell, 4 Mich. 140, 154; Groesbeck v. Seeley, 18 Mich. 829; Wright v. Dunham, Id. 414.

It is claimed the deed is void because the name of the officer taking the acknowledgment is not given in the body of the certificate of acknowledgment. The acknowledgment forms no part of the deed, but, even if it did, the certificate of acknowledgment to this deed is in substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute.

It is claimed that the deed is void for the reason that the land was bid off by the county treasurer for the county, and for that reason the deed could not be made on a certificate issued to the county, and transferred by the county treasurer. The argument of counsel on this proposition is ingenious. If this theory, contended for by counsel, can be sustained, then the owner of lands sold and bid in by the county for delinquent taxes can never lose the legal title to his land by reason of such sale, nor the purchaser from the county thereafter ever acquire a legal title thereto. This would be a strange anomaly indeed. But we do not understand the law to mean this. We think of a person purchasing at a tax sale, and holding a certificate of purchase, and a person holding a transferred certificate of a tax sale.

*248 sale from the county, stand in the same relation. If the land is not redeemed in the time prescribed by law, the holder of the certificate is entitled to a deed in either case; and, if the proceedings and deed are regular, the deed passes the title absolutely. Section 42, Comp. Laws, 867, provides that when the land cannot be sold for the amount of tax, penalty, etc., it shall be bid off by the county treasurer for the county, for such amount. Section 44 provides that the treasurer shall make a certificate to the county similar to that made to an individual, which certificate shall be assignable by the county treasurer in like manner as those given to other purchasers. The county here is called a purchaser; the only difference being that the county purchases on credit, and pays when it sells the certificate, while other purchasers at the sale pay when they make the purchase. Where there is a purchase or a purchaser, there must be a sale and a seller. Section 10, Comp. Laws, 877, provides that if any land sold for taxes shall not be redeemed, etc., the county clerk shall, on presentation to him of the certificate of sale, execute, in the name of the county, a deed of the land unredeemed, which means that the deed shall be made to the holder of the tax-sale certificate, whether the certificate was issued to him as the purchaser, or to the county, and then assigned to him.

Again, it is claimed the deed does not follow the form given in the statute. There is no form prescribed by law for this particular conveyance; but we think the form of the deed is substantially good, and the law fully complied with. In this particular kind of a case the deed certainly would not be good if it were made precisely in the form laid down in the statute. It is necessary to change the form of the deed to suit the circumstances of each case; the law only requiring that the deed shall be substantially, not exactly, in the form given in the statute. Bowman v. Cockrill, 6 Kan. *311, *324; Comp. Laws, 878, § 10.

It is scarcely necessary in this action to discuss the seventh point argued by counsel for plaintiff.

*244 *VALENTINE, J. This was an action brought by plaintiffs in error against McGuire, for the partition of a certain quarter section of real estate. The plaintiffs in error claim to own an undivided half of said real estate. The defendant in error claims to own the whole of it. The plaintiffs' title is as follows: Patent for the land from the United States to David Eckert, dated October 1, 1858; deed of general warranty for the land, from Eckert to Morris S. Knight, dated August 9, 1857; deed for an undivided half of the land from Knight to two of the plaintiffs, dated August 7, 1857. The defendant's title is as follows: Said patent, and said deed from Eckert to Knight; sheriff's deed conveying the interest of Morris S. Knight in said land (being the other undivided half of said land) to Abel Whitney, dated November 12, 1863; deed for an undivided half of said land from Whitney to the defendant in error, dated January 25, 1865; tax deed for the whole of said land from the county clerk of Jefferson county to the defendant in error, dated April 29, 1866. All the questions involved in this case are with reference to the validity and effect of said tax deed. Said tax deed reads as follows:

"Know all men by these presents, that whereas, the following described real property, viz., the S. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 31, in township 9, of range 18, containing 160 acres, situated in the county of Jefferson and state of Kansas, was subject to taxation for the year 1861; and whereas, the taxes assessed upon said real property for the year 1861 aforesaid remained due and unpaid at the date of the sale hereinafter named; and whereas, the treasurer of said county did, on the seventh day of May, 1862, by virtue of the authority in him vested by law, (an adjourned sale of,) the sale begun and held on the first Tuesday of May, 1862, expose to public sale at the county-seat in said county, in substantial conformity with all the requisitions of the statute in such cases made and provided, the real property above described, for the payment of the taxes, interests, and costs then due and remaining unpaid on said property; and whereas, at the time \*245 and place afore\* said, no person bid the amount of tax, penalty, and charges on said land, the said land was bid off by the county treasurer for the county of Jefferson for said amount, to-wit, the sum of seven dollars and fifty-seven cents,—being the whole amount of taxes, interests, and costs then due and remaining unpaid on said property for the S. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 31, in township 9, of range 18, containing 160 acres, which was the least quantity bid for; and whereas, the said county treasurer did, on the sixth day of October, 1862, duly assign the certificate of the sale of the property as aforesaid, and all the right, title, and interest of the said county to said property, to Thomas McGuire, of the county of Jefferson and state of Kansas; and whereas, two years have elapsed since the date of said sale, and said property has not been redeemed therefrom as provided by law: now, therefore, I, Terry Critchfield, county clerk of the county aforesaid, for and in consideration of the said sum of \$18.61, taxes, interest, and costs due on said lands for the year 1861, to the treasurer paid as aforesaid, and by virtue of the statute in such case made and provided, have granted, bargained, and sold, and by these presents do grant, bargain, and sell, unto the said Thomas McGuire, his heirs and assigns, the real property last hereinbefore described, to have and to hold unto him, the said Thomas McGuire, his heirs and assigns, forever; subject, however, to all rights of redemption as provided by law.

"In witness whereof, I, Terry Critchfield, county clerk, as aforesaid, by virtue of the authority aforesaid, have hereunto subscribed my name, and affixed my official seal, on this twenty-seventh day of April, 1866.

[County Seal.]

"TERRY CRITCHFIELD, County Clerk.

"L. J. TROWER, Witness."

"State of Kansas, Jefferson County—ss.: I hereby certify that, before me, a register of deeds in and for said county, personally appeared the above Terry Critchfield, clerk of said county, personally known to me to be the clerk of said county at the date of the execution of the above conveyance, and to be the identical person whose name is affixed to and who executed the above conveyance as clerk of said county, and acknowledged the execution of the same to be his voluntary act and deed, as clerk of said county, for the purpose therein expressed. Witness my hand and official seal this twenty-eighth of April, 1866.

[Seal.]

"L. J. TROWER, Register of Deeds."

*246 *This deed was recorded in the county register's office, April 28, 1866. There is nothing in the record of this case, as brought to this court, which shows when this action was commenced. But as the action was not tried until May 28, 1873, and as the court then found generally in favor of the defendant and against the plaintiffs, and rendered judgment in favor of the defendant and against the plaintiffs, thereby sustaining the regularity and validity of said tax deed, we should presume, in favor of the findings and judgment of the court below, that this action was not commenced until after more than two years had elapsed after the recording of said tax deed, and therefore that the two-years statute of limitations had run in favor of said tax deed before this action was commenced. Therefore we cannot declare the tax deed void unless it is void upon its face, or unless it is affected with some incurable irregularity not shown upon its face. The plaintiffs claim that it is void upon its face for about six supposed irregularities. We shall mention them in their order.

1. It is claimed that the deed is not duly witnessed. This deed was witnessed by one witness, and only one. He was the same person who took the acknowledgment of the execution of the deed. The only reasons for claiming that said deed was not duly witnessed are as follows: In section 10 of the tax law then in force (Comp. Laws, 878) there was a clause which reads as follows: "And such deed, [a tax deed,] duly witnessed and acknowledged, shall be prima facie evidence of the regularity of such proceedings from the valuation of the land by the assessor, inclusive, up to the execution of the deed, and may be recorded with like effect as other conveyances of land." And in the same section, at the bottom of the form given for tax deeds, where witnesses usually sign their names, the word "Witnesses" is printed. It will be perceived that the statute quoted does not expressly require that a tax deed shall be witnessed; nor does the statute state how it shall be witnessed,—whether by one, two, or a dozen witnesses. The statute simply says that "such deed duly *247 *witnessed," etc., "may be recorded with like effect as other conveyances." Now, what does "duly witnessed" mean? We think it means "witnessed according to law." And how does the law require that a deed of conveyance should be witnessed? It in fact does not require that a deed of conveyance shall be witnessed at all. The common law never did require that deeds of conveyance should be witnessed by attesting witnesses. Jac. Law Dict. "Deed," ii, 8; 2 Bl. Comm. 307, and note 21; Com. Digest, "Fait," B, 4; 4 Greenl. Cruise, Real Prop. 31, c. 2, § 77 et seq., and notes; 4 Kent, Comm. 458; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 572; 2 Hil. Real Prop. 208, § 153. And no statute can be found in this state that requires any such thing. Tax deeds were unknown to the common law, and our statutes do not require that they shall be witnessed in any different manner from other deeds, but leave the matter entirely optional with the parties executing and receiving them. The statutes above quoted were borrowed almost literally from Wisconsin, where attesting witnesses were necessary to all deeds; and this accounts for the words "witnessed" and "witnesses" being used. In this state the certificate of the officer taking the acknowledgment of a deed, with his signature and seal if he has one, is considered a sufficient attestation of the deed; and with such a certificate the deed may be read without other proof. We think the deed in this case was duly witnessed; that it is valid, (if it is in other respects sufficient;) and that it is prima facie evidence of title.

2. It is claimed that the deed does not show that any consideration was paid for the tax-sale certificate, or the assignment thereof. The property was bid off at the tax sale by the county treasurer for Jefferson county of Jefferson, and the county was not required by any law to pay anything therefor. The deed recites that the certificate of sale was duly assigned to the defendant; and this it does in almost the exact language given in the form prescribed by the statute. The assignment we think was sufficient. It will be presumed that the purchase money, and all that was necessary, was paid when the certificate was "duly assigned." The certificate, with all the rights, title, and interest of Jefferson county to the land in question, could not have been "duly assigned" to the defendant, as is stated in the deed, if the purchase money was not paid.

3. The sale seems to have been on May 7, 1862, which was Wednesday. But the deed plainly enough shows that the sale was "an adjourned sale of the sale begun and held on the first Tuesday of May, 1862."

4. The name of the officer taking the acknowledgment is not given in the body of the certificate. That is not material. The officer certifies "that before me, a register of deeds," etc., and then signs his name, "L. J. Trower, Register of Deeds." There can be no misunderstanding as to whom the pronoun "me" refers. It personates unmistakably the person signing the certificate, and, with its connection, clearly expresses his official character.

5. The property was bid off by the county treasurer for the county, and the certificate of sale was issued to the county, and afterwards assigned by the county treasurer to the defendant. It is claimed that no tax deed could be made on such a sale or such a certificate. Everything seems to have been done in accordance with the law as the law existed at the time the same was done. We think a valid tax deed may be made on such a sale and such a certificate, when the certificate, and the interest of the county, has been duly assigned, in this case. A valid tax deed may be made under the laws of Kansas to the assignee of a county, the legal holder of the tax-sale certificate. Sprague v. Pitt, McCabon, 212; S. C. 1 Kan. (Dassler's Ed.) 610.

6. It is claimed that the middle portion of said tax deed is not in the statutory form. This is true; but still it is in the proper form to express the facts as they exist in this case, and as they must exist under the law in all such cases. The form of this deed is varied from the statutory form only far enough to express the facts in the case.

In the case of Bowman v. Cockrill, 6 Kan. *311, *324, *325, we held that a tax deed need not be in the exact form prescribed by the statute; and in two later cases, Norton v. Friend, 13 Kan. *532, *249 and Magill v. Martin, ante, *67, we have held that the form of the tax deed must be so varied in all cases where the facts and the statutory form do not agree, that the deed will state the facts as they really are. The deed must state the exact truth, and must always show a legal sale, or the deed will be void.

7. We hardly think that the question desired to be raised under the seventh heading of plaintiffs' brief is in the case. The question is whether one of two or more tenants in common can procure a valid tax title to land held by himself and his co-tenants. It seems from the tax deed that the property in controversy was taxed for the year 1861. It was sold May 7, 1862, for the taxes of 1861, to the county of Jefferson. On October 6, 1862, the tax-sale certificate, and the interest of Jefferson county in and to the land, were transferred to the defendant, Thomas McGuire. And the tax deed is prima facie evidence of all of these recitals. If there was any evidence in conflict with these recitals, the court below may have believed these recitals, and disbelieved the other evidence in conflict therewith. The court below found generally in favor of the defendant and against the plaintiffs, and therefore it would seem that the court did find that these recitals were true, notwithstanding there may possibly have been some evidence tending to contradict them. If there was any evidence tending to contradict these recitals, it was slight parol evidence. If these recitals are true, neither Butts nor Whitney ever owned said tax-sale certificate. But even if Butts did own the certificate, if Whitney never owned it, the point attempted to be raised is really not in the case. But, even if Whitney at one time owned the certificate, still the point does not seem to be in the case. The assignment of the tax-sale certificate seems to have been made on October 6, 1862, yet Whitney did not have any other interest in the land until he got such interest under his sheriff's deed, on November 12, 1863. It would therefore seem that he obtained his right to said land under his tax-sale certificate about thirteen months before he obtained any right under the sheriff's deed. If the true facts are that Whitney *250 had said tax-sale certificate as*signed to him, and then afterwards bought the undivided half of said land at sheriff's sale, we suppose it will not be claimed that he had no right to take a tax deed to himself for the land on his tax-sale certificate, or to assign his tax-sale certificate to the defendant so that the defendant could take a tax deed upon the land. What the real facts are we cannot tell. But, if there was really any mere irregularity in the assignment of said tax-sale certificate, we should not, for that reason alone, and against all the presumptions in favor of the tax deed, which has had more than three times the necessary length of time for the statute of limitations to run in its favor, and against all the presumptions in favor of the findings and judgment of the court below, declare the tax deed void, and reverse the judgment of the district court. It is admitted that there never was any unity of title between Whitney and McGuire on the one side, and the plaintiffs on the other side, for they all held under different titles. Was there any unity or possession? and, if not, was Whitney or McGuire deprived of the privilege of acquiring a tax title? We do not think it is necessary to answer these questions.

The judgment of the court below is affirmed.
(All the justices concurring.)

ROBERT A. COLLIER and others v. J. HENRY BLAKE and others.<sup>1</sup>

January Term, 1875.

1. Trusts and Trustees: Title Held in Trust: Death of Trustee: Duty of District Court. Where the title to real estate in Kansas is held by a person who holds it as a sole trustee of an express trust, and such person dies, the trust immediately vests in the district court of the county in which the real estate is situated; and it is the duty of such court, upon the application of some person interested in the trust, to forthwith appoint a successor to said trustee, and the trust will then vest in the newly-appointed trustee.
- *251 *2. Evidence: Will Made and Probated in Foreign State: Competency. Where the rights of all the parties to certain real estate are derived from certain deeds of trust made to one W. T., and these deeds of trust refer to a certain will of one I. T., and also to a certain record of a certain court in Kentucky where said will was probated, as showing the nature and character of the trust created by said deeds, held, that it was not error for the court below to allow said will and said record to be introduced in evidence, although the will had never been probated in Kansas.
3. Trusts and Trustees: Power of Trustee to Sell and Convey Lands Held in Trust, when Cestui que Trust cannot Convey. Where a certain will contained, among other provisions, the following, to-wit: "I give to my son Anderson one-fourth part of my estate, out of which one thousand dollars is to be deducted, as stated in this will, for the use of Miss E. D. It is understood that whatever falls to him shall not be subject to any debts owing by him at this time, or may be owing hereafter, but my son Anderson is to have the proceeds of whatever sum may fall to him; but the principal is to be in the hands of a faithful trustee, who shall take charge of said estate, whatever it may be, and hold the same for the use and benefit of my said son Anderson; and for the purpose of carrying out this gift I make and appoint my son Wilkinson trustee for my son Anderson, during his life-time; and at the death of my son Anderson one-fourth part of the amount of said estate is to be given to my grandson William T., and one-fourth to my granddaughter Mary Emily T., and the balance to be equally divided between the other five grandchildren, Josephine S., Genevieve T., Alonzo T., Clifton T., and Irene T;” and where, under this will, and under the order of the proper court, the said trustee invested the said trust fund coming into his hands by virtue of said will in real estate in Johnson county, Kansas, taking deeds of conveyance to himself therefor, which deeds conveyed said real estate to himself, in fee-simple, in trust for said Anderson and said grandchildren, according to said will: held, that said Anderson and said grandchildren did not take or have, by virtue of said will and said deeds, any such vested legal interest in said real estate that they could, by their deeds of conveyance to a third person, (but without any order or decree of any court therefor,) defeat or terminate said trust; but, on the contrary, the trustee, notwithstanding their deeds, would continue to hold the legal title to said real estate, with the power, under the direction of the proper court, to execute said trust, and could, by order or decree of the proper court, sell and convey said real estate, and invest the trust fund in other property.

Blake, as trustee, commenced an action in the district court *252 of Johnson county against Anderson Turpin, Robert A. Collier, William Turpin, Josephine Sparks, Hiram Sparks, Irene Smith, O. M. Smith, Alonzo H. Turpin, William Henry Collier, Emma Burgess, and Sabina Turpin, to set aside and annul a certain quitclaim deed executed by Anderson Turpin to his children, and certain quitclaim deeds made by said children to said Robert A. Collier; to require said Robert to account to said Blake, as trustee of said Anderson Turpin, and for an order to sell the lands held by said Blake as such trustee. The action was tried at the November term, 1872, of the district court. Findings and judgment in favor of the plaintiff, according to the prayer of his petition. Robert A. Collier and William H. Collier, two of the defendants, bring the case here on error, joining their co-defendants and the said Blake as defendants in error.

Clough & Wheat and J. D. Shafer, for plaintiffs in error.

Holmes & Dean and F. M. Black for defendants in error.

VALENTINE, J. On May 14, 1855, Isaac Turpin, of Jessamine county, Kentucky, made his last will and testament, and in the same year died. On March 3, 1856, this will was probated in the county court of said Jessamine county. The will, among other provisions, contains the following, to-wit: “Next, I give to my son Anderson Turpin one-fourth part of my estate, out of which one thousand dollars is to be deducted, as stated in this will, for the use of Miss Eliza Dearinger. It is understood that whatever falls to him shall not be subject to any debts owing by him at this time, or may be owing hereafter, but my son Anderson is to have the proceeds of whatever sum may fall to him; but the principal is to be in the hands of a faithful trustee, who shall take charge of said estate, whatever it may be, and hold the same for the use and benefit of my said son Anderson Turpin; and for *the purpose of carrying out this gift I make and appoint my son Wilkinson Turpin trustee for my said son Anderson, during his life-time; and at the death of my son Anderson one-fourth part of the amount of said estate is to be given to my grandson William Turpin, and one-fourth to my granddaughter Mary Emily Turpin, and the balance to be equally divided between the other five grandchildren, Josephine Sparks, Genevieve Turpin, Alonzo Turpin, Clifton Turpin, and Irene Turpin."

All the above-mentioned grandchildren were the children of said Anderson Turpin. The trustee accepted said trust, and on settlement of the estate there came into his hands, as such trustee, a considerable amount of money. The trustee invested portions of this fund in the lands and lots in controversy, and took conveyances thereof to himself: one dated the eighth of March, 1859, from one Collins; one dated the sixth of June, 1860, from one Hill; and one dated the sixteenth of December, 1858, from one William C. Turpin. The substantial portions of said first-mentioned deed, so far as it is necessary to state them in this opinion, read as follows: Said Collins "do hereby grant, bargain, and sell unto said Wilkinson Turpin, trustee of said Anderson Turpin and his children, in fee-simple, the land, [described in the deed,] to have and to hold the said tract of land unto the said Wilkinson Turpin, as trustee for the said Anderson Turpin and his children, in fee-simple, forever, together with all the appurtenances thereunto belonging. And it is understood that the consideration of money for said tract of land is derived from the estate of Isaac Turpin, deceased, and that the said Wilkinson Turpin holds said land as trustee of the said Anderson Turpin and his children, as designated under the last will and testament of the said Isaac Turpin, deceased, of record in the clerk's office of the Jessamine county court for the state of Kentucky; and that the said fund has been applied and invested for the purchase of said land by the said Wilkinson Turpin in pursuance of the judgment of the circuit court for the county of Jessamine, state of Kentucky, rendered in a suit of equity of the said Wilkinson Turpin and Jane Turpin, his wife, against the said Anderson Turpin and others," etc. The other deeds to the said trustee are of like tenor and effect.

*254 The district court finds that there was thus invested *in land of such trust fund the sum of $5,000. Anderson Turpin lived upon this property, or at least a part thereof, from 1860 to June 1863, when he was compelled to leave the same, since which time he has neither occupied the property, nor received any benefits therefrom. On August 5, 1870, Wilkinson Turpin, the trustee, died, and on the fifteenth of November, 1870, the district court of Johnson county, Kansas, on the application of Anderson Turpin, appointed J. Henry Blake, the plaintiff below, the successor in said trust, with all the powers possessed by the original trustee, which appointment he accepted.

Three of the children of Anderson Turpin mentioned in the will, to-wit, Mary, Emily, and Clifton, died before the commencement of this suit. The defendant R. A. Collier married Genevieve Turpin, she also being dead at the commencement of this suit; and the defendants William Henry Collier and Emma Burgess are her children. At or about the time Anderson Turpin was compelled to leave said premises, to-wit, in 1863, he, as well as the trustee, authorized defendant R. A. Collier to take charge of the property as their agent, and to rent the same, which he did; and on the eighth of June, 1865, the said trustee, Wilkinson Turpin, by letter of attorney, constituted and appointed said Collier, at his request, agent, and thereby authorized Collier, in the name of the said Wilkinson Turpin, as trustee, to take possession of and rent out all the property in controversy. On the fourth of August, 1865, Anderson Turpin made a deed of quitclaim of said premises to his children, William Turpin, Josephine Sparks, Irene Smith, Alonzo Turpin, and Genevieve Collier, she then being alive. On the seventh of October, 1865, Alonzo Turpin, and on the seventh of June, 1865, Sparks and wife, and on the twenty-fifth of February, 1865, Irene Smith and husband, made to defendant Collier their respective deeds of quitclaim to said property. On the twenty-third of January, 1865, defendant R. A. Collier caused to be made to him two tax deeds, both together covering the property, except house and lot, in controversy, which tax deeds recite that the lands were sold *255 on the seventh of January, *1862, for taxes of 1860, to Johnson county, and certificates assigned by Johnson county, one to one Gregg, and the other to one Ocheltree, and by them assigned to Collier on the twenty-fourth of December, 1864. There is evidence not only that Collier was agent when he took these tax deeds, but also that he had received and then had money from Anderson Turpin to pay the taxes with. It is also found by the court that Collier himself procured the deed from Anderson Turpin to his children to be made through urgent solicitations, and for the purpose that Collier himself might obtain the title, and that such deed was procured without consideration. The cause was tried on an amended petition, answer, and reply. The petition sets out the will, trusteeship, investment of funds in these lands, and the terms of the trust, death of the old trustee, and appointment of the new trustee; that the property produces nothing; and attacks the deed from Anderson as conveying nothing, and as having been fraudulently procured, and asks that the property be sold, and the principal sum be set apart at interest, and the balance, if anything, be paid to Anderson. The answer of defendant Collier claims a different construction to be put upon the trust; sets up the deed from Anderson Turpin to his children, and deeds from part of these to Collier, and claims title thereunder; sets up the tax deeds, and claims title under them; and also sets out the power of attorney from the trustee, and claims that taxes paid by him amount to as much or more than rents received, and sets up the one, two, three, and five year statutes of limitations. The reply denies all new matter, and states the agency of Collier, and sets out fully the fraud complained of in procuring the deed from Anderson Turpin. The action was tried before the court without a jury, and the court made separate findings of fact and of law.

We shall consider only the material and substantial questions involved in this case, and shall pass over the others without noticing them. The appointment of J. Henry Blake was valid. "Upon the death of a sole or surviving trustee of an express trust, the *256 same shall vest in the court having *jurisdiction thereof, and such court shall forthwith appoint a successor, in whom the trust shall vest." Gen. St. 1098, § 10. The district court of Johnson county unquestionably had jurisdiction to make the appointment, and the proceedings with reference thereto were unquestionably regular. Wilkinson Turpin was the trustee of an express trust. The deeds to him from Collins, Hill, and William C. Turpin made him so, and they referred to the will of Isaac Turpin, which explained the nature, extent, and character of the trust, and which also made him the trustee of an express trust. Said deeds and said will are the common muniments of title of all the parties; all the parties hold under them; and the rights of all the parties are derived from them, and are to be determined by their terms. Hence all that we have to do, in order to determine the rights of the parties, is to construe said instruments. All the parties admit the existence of said instruments; all admit the character of their contents; all admit their validity; and hence it makes no difference whether the will was ever probated in Kansas or not.

The sections of the statute referred to by the plaintiffs in error, with regard to probating wills, have no application to this case. None of the parties in this case are holding adversely to the will, but all are holding under it. Said sections probably apply only to property in this state upon which the will may operate, at the time of the death of the testator, so as to transfer the property in a different manner from what the law, aside from the will, would transfer it. But, whether this is so or not, the deeds to Wilkinson Turpin, under which all the parties claim, referred to said will as showing the nature of the trust of which Wilkinson Turpin was the trustee, and referred to said will as being of record in the office of the clerk of the county court of Jessamine county, Kentucky, where said will was probated, and hence it was not error for the court below to allow proof of said will, or proof of the said record of the same, to be introduced on the trial of the case, although there was no proof that said will *257 had ever been probated in Kansas. Even if *said will and said record were void, as against the heirs of Isaac Turpin, deceased, still they are valid as against any party claiming under said deeds, as they show the kind of trust created by said deeds, its nature and extent.

What, then, were and are the rights of the parties under said deeds and said will? The rights of J. Henry Blake are the same as the rights of Wilkinson Turpin, the original trustee, would be if he were still living and still the trustee. Gen. St. 1098, § 10. And hence it must follow that at least the whole legal estate in the property in controversy is now in said Blake. We think the whole estate, legal and equitable, in said property is in Blake. He has the whole power, under the instructions and supervision of the court, to take care of it, to use it, and to dispose of it. Neither Anderson Turpin, nor any one of Anderson Turpin's children, has any interest in the real estate or real estate. They have an interest in the trust fund, which is for the time being invested in real estate. They had that interest in the fund before it was invested in real estate; they have it now; and they will continue to have such interest in said fund, even if the real estate be sold, and the fund invested in something else. Remotely they have an interest in whatever the fund may be invested in; but they have no such direct interest in the thing in which the fund may be invested as to constitute an estate when the fund is invested in real estate. The right of Anderson Turpin, under the will, is to have only the proceeds of the fund,—the increase thereof. He is not to have any of the principal of the fund; and he has never had any power to sell it or incumber it. The principal of the fund is to remain a permanent fund for the benefit of Anderson Turpin's children. They are to have the fund after Anderson Turpin's death. But their interest in the fund does not constitute an estate in the property in which the fund may for the time being be invested; or, at most, such interest can amount only to a contingent remainder therein. It cannot amount to any vested estate. Their in-

*258 terest will not prevent the trustee from selling the property by order of the court, freed from all right, title, or interest which they may have therein. And if the property is unproductive, so that no proceeds are procured therefrom for the benefit of Anderson Turpin, it ought to be so sold. They may therefore never have any estate in the property. If Anderson Turpin should die while the title to the property is still vested in the trustee, his children would then have the right to have the title conveyed to them, if practicable, according to their respective interests in the trust fund; but their right, at most, can only amount to a contingent remainder. Neither Anderson Turpin nor his children had, at the time they executed said quitclaim deeds, any interest in the property in controversy which they could convey. Hence the quitclaim deed from Anderson Turpin to his children, and the quitclaim deeds from his children to Collier, were void. Even if procured and executed in good faith, still they were void as conveyances; and, being void as conveyances, Anderson Turpin and his children could not defeat or terminate the trust by making them. They alone had no power, in any manner, to terminate the trust. Usually, where all the beneficiaries of a trust unite, none of them are laboring under disability, they may, with the consent of the court, terminate the trust. But when they attempt to terminate the trust in contravention of the object of the trust, they certainly cannot do so unless they have the consent of the court, and the consent of the court should generally not be given in such cases. In the present case it would be in violation of the object of the trust to terminate the same before the death of Anderson Turpin. It was clearly the intention of Isaac Turpin, when he created the trust, that Anderson Turpin should have the benefit of the increase of the trust fund during his life-time, and that the trust should not during that time, be terminated, diverted, incumbered, diminished or materially impaired. But whatever interest Anderson Turpin may have had in said property, still he was prohibited by statute from disposing of the same. The statute in force when said deeds creating the trust, and when said quitclaim deeds, were made, reads as follows:
